

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists, by Jim Walsh

From Hobbies Magazine, 1942-1976

Digitally scanned and processed by David Giovannoni, from original magazines in the collections of Tim Brooks, David Giovannoni, and the Library of Congress.

Presented by the National Recording Preservation Board
Compiled and edited by Mason Vander Lugt, mlug@loc.gov

Introduction .....	1
Editor's note .....	1
Subject index .....	3
Date index .....	9

Introduction

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists was written by Ulysses "Jim" Walsh for Hobbies magazine between 1942 and 1985. Walsh's early interest in the popular music of the acoustic era (1888-1925) was unusual when collectors of historical records focused primarily on classical and jazz, and these articles remain important sources in the history of commercial sound recording. Walsh's personal papers and record collection can be found in the Motion Picture, Broadcasting, and Recorded Sound (MBRS) division of the Library of Congress.

Editor's Note

Hobbies featured several other regular columns and articles about record collecting and music. We chose to omit those from this volume to focus on Walsh's vision and keep the resulting file at a manageable size. Some installments of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists are written by guest contributors rather than Walsh, and these have been included. Inversely, Walsh wrote a few articles for Hobbies apart from the Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists series, and these have been omitted. We believe the edition at hand faithfully represents Walsh's vision for a body of literature about the pioneer recording artists and the acoustic era of recording history.

This edition also omits the final nine years of the column, which are not yet public domain. These may be found in some libraries.

Jim Walsh and his pet cat "Professor" Plum Duff Walsh, at Walsh's Vinton, Virginia home, ca. 1976

Biographical subject index (arranged alphabetically by name)

George Alexander	Sept.-Oct. 1956
American Quartet (Premier Quartet)	Feb.-Mar. 1970
Vernon Archibald	Apr.-May 1972
Sam Ash	Mar. 1971
John Yorke Atlee	Dec. 1959
George Atwood	Apr.-May 1970
Harriet Atwood	Apr.-May 1970
Gene Austin	Feb.-Mar. 1957
Harry Anthony	July-Sept. 1957
George Wilton Ballard	Apr. 1960
Joe Belmont	Mar. 1948
Albert Benzler	Jan. 1954
Al Bernard	Mar.-Dec. 1974
John Bieling	July-Aug. 1942
Ralph Bingham	Apr. 1964
James Brockman	Oct. 1967
Albert Edmond Brown	June-July 1952
Harry C. Browne	Jan. 1958
Henry Burr	Apr.-June 1943 ; June 1956
Albert Campbell	Sept.-Oct. 1942
Arthur C. Clough	June-July 1968 ; May 1969
Arthur Collins	Nov. 1942 - Jan. 1943
Dolly Connolly	June-July 1973
Frank Coombs	May 1951
Frank Croxton	Mar.-Apr. 1961
Frank Crumit	Sept.-Dec. 1953
Charles D'Almaine	Nov. 1957 – Jan. 1958 ; Nov. 1959
Vernon Dalhart	May-Dec. 1960
Edgar L. Davenport	Aug.-Sept. 1967 ; Dec. 1967
Peter Dawson	Jan.-June 1962
Vaughn De Leath	Apr. 1958
Guido Deiro	Aug.-Sept. 1954
Pietro Deiro	Aug.-Sept. 1954
Will F. Denny	Oct.-Nov. 1961
Audley F. Dudley	Feb. 1953
George N. Dudley	Feb. 1953
S.H. Dudley	Jan.-Feb. 1944 ; May 1946 ; Sept. 1947
Rosetta Duncan	Sept. 1955
Vivian Duncan	Sept. 1955
Fred Duprez	June-July 1950

Marguerite Farrell	Mar. 1960
Edward M. Favor	Mar. 1942
Arthur Fields	June-Aug. 1953
W. Francis Firth	June-July 1952
Frederic C. Freemantel	July 1948
Pietro Frosini	Oct.-Nov. 1954
George J. Gaskin	Oct. 1944
Art Gillham	Sept. 1957
Gilbert Girard	Feb. 1948
Billy Golden	June 1944
Gene Green	June-July 1957
Arthur Hall	Dec. 1972
William J. Halley	July-Sept. 1975
Ernest Hare	Mar.-Aug. 1959
Byron G. Harlan	Feb.-Mar. 1943
Marion Harris	Aug.-Sept. 1963
Charles Harrison	Oct. 1951 ; Mar. 1952
James F. Harrison	July-Sept. 1945
Charles Hart	Dec. 1958 - Jan. 1959
Morton Harvey	Nov.-Dec. 1955
Murray K. Hill	May 1956
Ferdinand Himmelreich	Nov. 1969
Harvey Hindermeyer	Aug. 1957
Homestead Trio	Feb. 1973
William F. Hooley	Mar. 1944
Russell Hunting	Nov. 1944 - Feb. 1945
May Irwin	June-July 1963
Lewis James	Oct. 1955
Harold Jarvis	May-July 1961
George W. Johnson	Sept. 1944 ; Jan.-Feb. 1971
Ada Jones	June 1946 – Jan. 1947 ; June-July 1954 ; June 1972
Billy Jones	Mar.-Aug. 1959
Mary Jordan	Nov.-Dec. 1956
Richard Jose	Mar.-May 1950
Theo Karle	Sept. 1972
Dan Kelly	Dec. 1959
Grace Kerns	May-Aug. 1964
John J. Kimmel	Feb. 1958
Harry Lauder	Aug. 1950
Silas Leachman	July-Aug. 1955
Jules Levy	Feb. 1959

Harry Macdonough	Nov.-Dec. 1943
Addison Dashiell Madeira	Oct.-Dec. 1976
Manhattan Quartet	Dec. 1972
Estella Louise Mann	Apr. 1952
Frederic Martin	June-July 1952
Harry Mayo	June 1958
Edward Warren Meeker	Feb.-Apr. 1946
John H. Meyer	Aug. 1972
Polk Miller	Jan. 1960
Reed Miller	Mar. 1958
Corrine Morgan	July-Sept. 1971
Elida Morris	Jan.-Apr. 1963
Theodore Morse	Apr.-May 1973
Eddie Morton	Sept.-Nov. 1952
Lambert Murphy	Sept.-Oct. 1959
Billy Murray	Apr.-June 1942
J.W. Myers	July 1944
Marie Narelle	Feb.-Mar. 1964
Joe Natus	Oct.-Nov. 1961
"No Girl" Quartet	Feb. 1973
George O'Connor	Jan.-Mar. 1955
Geoffrey O'Hara	Feb. 1960
Will Oakland	Nov. 1949
Chauncey Olcott	Aug.-Sept. 1970
Vess L. Ossman	Sept.-Nov. 1948 ; Jan.-Feb. 1949
Taurino Parvis	July-Aug. 1956 ; Nov. 1959
Peerless Quartet	Dec. 1969
Joseph A. Phillips	Oct.-Nov. 1972
Steve Porter	July 1943 ; Oct. 1943
Premier Quartet (American Quartet)	Feb.-Mar. 1970
Alexander Prince	Mar. 1953
Charles Adams Prince	Dec. 1952 - Jan. 1953
Dan W. Quinn	Mar.-May 1945
Bob Roberts	Apr. 1944
George Robey	Jan. 1957
Walter B. Rogers	Feb. 1959
Manuel Romain	July 1951
Eugene C. Rose	Oct.-Nov. 1947
John Ryan	Dec. 1972
Josie Sadler	May-June 1963
Walter Scanlan	Nov.-Dec. 1951

Monroe "Mike" Silver	Mar. 1972
Ed Smalle	May-June 1955 ; May 1969
Albert Spalding	Feb.-Mar. 1954
Elizabeth Spencer	Aug.-Sept. 1951
Grace Spencer	Apr.-May 1948
Len Spencer	Mar-Aug. 1947 ; July-Oct. 1958
Cal Stewart	Jan.-Apr. 1951
Aileen Stanley	Oct. 1963 - Jan. 1964
Frank C. Stanley	Mar.-Oct. 1949
Elise Stevenson	Feb. 1961
Harry Tally	June 1958
"That Girl" Quartet	Jan. 1973
W.H. Thompson	May 1951
Helen Trix	Apr.-May 1954
Alan Turner	Oct. 1975 - Mar. 1976
Walter Van Brunt	Nov. 1951 - Jan. 1952
Fred Van Eps	Jan.-Apr. 1956
Clarice Vance	Apr.-May 1963
Victor male chorus	July 1970
Berrick Von Norden	Feb.-Mar. 1964
Ray Walker	Nov. 1958
Arthur Walsh	June 1969
John Barnes Wells	May-Aug. 1964
Percy Wenrich	June-July 1973
Reinald Werrenrath	Aug. 1948
Elizabeth Wheeler	Aug.-Sept. 1961
Frederick Wheeler	July-Sept. 1945
William Wheeler	Aug.-Sept. 1961
Edna White	May-July 1966
Joe White	Mar. 1973
Billy Whitlock	Feb. 1950
Edwin M. Whitney	Oct. 1957
Rudy Wiedoft	Nov.-Dec. 1973
Bert Williams	Sept.-Nov. 1950
Billy Williams	May 1958
Nat M. Wills	June 1951
Daniel Wyper	Mar. 1953
Peter Wyper	Mar. 1953
Beulah Gaylord Young	Oct. 1951 ; Mar. 1952
John Young	July-Sept. 1945

Subject index – non-biographical

Title	Date
"The only recording of Edison's Voice"	Jan.-Feb. 1972
24 best Columbia records	Apr. - May 1967
1900 account of the phonograph	Aug.-Oct. 1966
A matter of identification (Victor Male Chorus)	July 1970
A meeting with Tiny Tim	Sept.-Oct. 1969
Ada Jones sings in Marion Virginia	June 1972
An evening in Thomas A. Edison's laboratory	March - June 1975
Artists who sang in choruses of Edison Amberol cylinders	Aug. 1969
Artists who used more than one name	May 1944 ; revised Nov. 1962
Assisting artists in Edison cylinders	Apr.-May 1971
Aviation songs	Jan.-Feb. 1974
Baseball recordings	Dec. 1971 ; July 1972
Catalog of Edison cylinders	Jan. 1970
Catalogs, Jottings from	April 1955
Collectors vote on the supreme fifteen	Oct. 1945 - Jan. 1946
Cowboy song recordings	Apr.-Sept. 1976
Dating - How to tell when Victor records were made	Oct.-Dec. 1968 ; Feb.-Apr. 1969
Directory of births and deaths	Dec 1961 ; Revised July 1962
Early Victor Photos and Catalogs	Jan. - May 1968
Early Zon-o-phone record catalogs	Jan. 1966 ; Mar.-Apr. 1966
Edison Concert cylinders - March 1901 catalog	Nov. 1966 - Jan. 1967
Edison's Obscure cylinder makers	Aug. - Sept. 1973
English "Supreme Fifteen"	Feb. - Mar. 1967
H.H. Annand visits	Sept. 1964 - Jan. 1965
How it felt to make records in the early days	Aug. - Sept. 1962
John Bieling parties	Feb. 1947 ; Jan. 1948 ; June 1948 ; Dec. 1948 ; Dec. 1950
Jottings from Phonoscope	Dec. 1962
Making doubles out of singles	July 1969
McKinley record controversy	Oct.-Nov. 1971
Notes from early Victor catalogs	Dec. 1949 - Jan. 1950
Notes from early Victor catalogs	Dec. 1949 - Jan. 1950
Performers who remade two-minute Edison cylinders	Sept. - Oct. 1965
Performers who remade two-minute Edison cylinders	Sept. - Oct. 1965
Phonograph, 75 th Anniversary	Aug. 1952
Phonograph, Early days of...	Apr.-May 1953
Phonograph, More history	Dec. 1954
Phonoscope, jottings from	Dec. 1962
Pioneer recording groups	Oct. 1962

Pseudonyms – Real names of Edison Cylinder Performers	June 1970
Quiz on the phonograph's early days	Apr.-July 1965
Real names of Edison Cylinder Performers	June 1970
Record Catalogs, Jottings from	April 1955
Record makers give a concert in Pulaski VA	Apr.-May 1957
Re-coupled Victor records	June-July 1967
Review of first ten years of column	May 1952
Royalty and recorded sound	Oct. 1973
Saxophone artists	Nov.-Dec. 1973
Seven bygone Edison singers	Oct.-Dec. 1970
Shannon Four (& Ada Jones) give concert in Roanoke VA	June-July 1954
Some minor artists	Aug. 1944
Some mysterious Edison Diamond Discs	Aug. 1965
Song writers who made records	Jan. 1961
The cheapest talking machine	Dec. 1947
The Eldridge R. Johnson Museum and some Berliner, Victor and Edison history	Aug. - Sept. 1968
The greatest quartet basso	Nov. 1967
The "supreme fifteen"	June 1945
Three memorable days in and near Washington (D.C.)	Feb.-Mar. 1965
Tribute to "The Peerless Roger" (Walsh's pet cat)	Feb. 1966
Tribute to Peter Dawson Walsh (Walsh's pet cat)	Jan. 1969
Victor double-faced records that were remade	Nov.-Dec. 1965
Victor record sales	June 1971
Women's recording groups	Jan. 1973

Date Index

1942

Jan.	Introduction
Feb.	N/A
March	Edward M. Favor
Apr.-June	Billy Murray
July-Aug.	John Bieling
Sept.-Oct.	Albert Campbell
Nov.-Dec.	Arthur Collins

1943

Jan.	Arthur Collins (concluded)
Feb.-March	Byron G. Harlan
Apr.-June	Henry Burr
July	Steve Porter
Aug.-Sept.	N/A
Oct.	Steve Porter (concluded)
Nov.-Dec.	Harry Macdonough

1944

Jan.-Feb.	S.H. Dudley
March	William F. Hooley
April	Bob Roberts
May	"Artists who used more than one name"
June	Billy Golden
July	J.W. Myers
Aug.	"Some Minor Artists"
Sept.	George W. Johnson
Oct.	George J. Gaskin
Nov. – Dec.	Russell Hunting

1945

Jan.-Feb.	Russell Hunting (concluded)
Mar.-May	Dan W. Quinn
June	"The Supreme Fifteen"
July-Sept.	Harry Anthony, James F. Harrison (John Young & Frederick Wheeler)
Oct. – Dec.	Collectors Vote on the Supreme Fifteen

1946

Jan.	Collectors vote on Supreme Fifteen (cont.)
Feb.-Apr.	Edward Warren Meeker
May	More About S.H. Dudley
June-Dec.	Ada Jones

1947

Jan.	Ada Jones (concluded)
Feb.	"John Bieling Gives a Party"
Mar. – Aug.	Len Spencer
Sept.	Sad News about S.H. Dudley
Oct. – Nov.	Eugene C. Rose
Dec.	"The Cheapest Talking Machine"

1948

Jan.	"Another John Bieling Party"
Feb.	Gilbert Girard
Mar.	Joe Belmont
Apr.-May	Grace Spencer
June	"Death of John Bieling"
July	Frederic C. Freemantel
Aug.	Reinald Werrenrath
Sept. – Nov.	Vess L. Ossman
Dec.	"Another Memorable John Bieling Day"

1949

Jan.-Feb.	Vess L. Ossman (concluded)
Mar.-Oct.	Frank C. Stanley
Nov.	Will Oakland
Dec.	Notes from Early Victor Catalogs

1950

Jan.	"Notes from Early Victor Catalogs" (concluded)
Feb.	Billy Whitlock

Mar.-May	Richard Jose
June-July	Fred Duprez
Aug.	Harry Lauder
Sept.-Nov.	Bert Williams
Dec.	"The Best John Bieling Day"

1951

Jan.-Apr.	Cal Stewart
May	Frank Coombs & W.H. Thompson
June	Nat M. Wills
July	Manuel Romain
Aug. – Sept.	Elizabeth Spencer
Oct.	Charles Harrison & Beulah Gaylord Young
Nov. – Dec.	Walter Van Brunt (Walter Scanlan)

1952

Jan.	Walter Van Brunt (concluded)
March	Charles Harrison & Beulah Gaylord Young (revised correction)
April	Estella Louise Mann
May	Review of First Ten Years of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists
June-July	Albert Edmond Brown, Frederic Martin & W. Francis Firth
Aug.	The Phonograph's 75 th Anniversary
Sept. – Nov.	Eddie Morton
Dec.	Charles Adams Prince

1953

Jan.	Charles A. Prince (concluded)
Feb.	George N. & Audley F. Dudley
March	Peter & Daniel Wyper, Alexander Prince
Apr.-May	"Early Days of the Phonograph"
June-Aug.	Arthur Fields
Sept.-Dec.	Frank Crumit

1954

Jan.	Albert Benzler
Feb. –Mar.	Albert Spalding
Apr.-May	Helen Trix
June-July	"Ada Jones & The Shannon Four Give a Concert in Roanoke VA"
Aug.-Sept.	Guido & Pietro Deiro

Oct.-Nov.	Pietro Frosini
Dec.	"More About the History of the Phonograph"

1955

Jan.-Mar.	George O'Connor
April	"Jottings from Old Record Catalogs"
May-June	Ed Smalle
July-Aug.	Silas Leachman
Sept.	Vivian & Rosetta Duncan
Oct.	Lewis James
Nov.-Dec.	Morton Harvey

1956

Jan.-Apr.	Fred Van Eps
May	Murry K. Hill
June	"Henry Burr, the Champion Duet Singer"
July-Aug.	Taurino Parvis
Sept.-Oct.	George Alexander
Nov.-Dec.	Mary Jordan

1957

Jan.	George Robey
Feb. – Mar.	Gene Austin
Apr. – May	"The Record Makers Give a Concert in Pulaski VA"
June-July	Gene Green
Aug.	Harvey Hindermeyer
Sept.	Art Gillham
Oct.	Edwin M. Whitney
Nov. – Dec.	Charles D'Almaine

1958

Jan.	Charles D'Almaine (concluded) ; Harry C. Browne
Feb.	John J. Kimmel
March	Reed Miller
April	Vaughn De Leath
May	Billy Williams
June	Harry Tally, Harry Mayo
July – Oct.	"Len Spencer as his Daughter Recalls Him"

Nov.	"Ray Walker Recalls Entertaining Troops"
Dec.	Charles Hart

1959

Jan.	Charles Hart (concluded)
Feb.	Walter B. Rogers, Jules Levy
Mar.-Aug.	Billy Jones, Ernest Hare
Sept. – Oct.	Lambert Murphy
Nov.	"More About Charles D'Almaine & Taurino Parvis"
Dec.	John Yorke Atlee, Dan Kelly

1960

Jan.	Polk Miller
Feb.	Geoffrey O'Hara
March	Marguerite Farrell
April	George Wilton Ballard
May-Dec.	Vernon Dalhart

1961

Jan.	"Song Writers who Made Records"
Feb.	Elise Stevenson
Mar.-Apr.	Frank Croxton
May-July	Harold Jarvis
Aug.-Sept.	Elizabeth & William Wheeler
Oct.-Nov.	Joe Natus, Will F. Denny
Dec.	"Directory of Births & Deaths"

1962

Jan.-June	Peter Dawson
July	"Revised Births & Deaths"
Aug.-Sept.	"How it Felt to Make Records in the Early Days"
Oct.	"Pioneer Recording Groups"
Nov.	"Artists who Used More Than One Name" (revision)
Dec.	"More Jottings from 'The Phonoscope'"

1963

Jan. – Apr.	Elida Morris
Apr.-May	Clarice Vance
May-June	Josie Sadler
June-July	May Irwin
Aug.-Sept.	Marion Harris
Oct.-Dec.	Aileen Stanley

1964

Jan.	Aileen Stanley
Feb. - Mar.	Marie Narelle and Berrick Von Norden
April	Ralph Bingham
May-Aug.	Grace Kerns & John Barnes Wells
Sept. – Dec.	Hands Across the Seas! Major H.H. Annand of Hillingdon, Middlesex, England Visits Jim Walsh, of Vinton, VA

1965

Jan.	"Hands Across the Seas!" (conc.)
Feb. - Mar.	Three Memorable Days In and Near Washington (DC)
Apr.-July	A Quiz on the Phonograph's Early Days
Aug.	Some Mysterious Edison Diamond Discs
Sept. - Oct.	Performers who Remade Two-Minute Edison Cylinders
Nov. - Dec.	Victor Double-Faced Records that were Remade

1966

Jan., Mar.-Apr.	Early Zon-O-Phone Record Catalogs
Feb.	A Last Loving Tribute to "The Peerless Roger" (Walsh's pet cat)
May-July	Edna White (pts. 2-3 written by Frederick Summerill)
Aug.-Oct.	A 1900 Account of the Phonograph
Nov.-Dec.	A March 1901 Catalog of Edison "Concert" Cylinders

1967

Jan.	A March 1901 Catalog of Edison "Concert" Cylinders (cont.)
Feb.-Mar.	The English "Supreme Fifteen"
Apr.-May	The 24 Best Columbia Records
June-July	Re-coupled Victor Records
Aug.-Sept.	Edgar L. Davenport
Oct.	James Brockman
Nov.	The Greatest Quartet Basso
Dec.	Edgar L. Davenport

1968

Jan.-May	Early Victor Photographs and Catalogs
June-July	Arthur C. Clough
Aug.-Sept.	The Eldridge R. Johnson Museum and Some Berliner, Victor and Edison History
Oct.-Dec.	How to Tell when Victor Records were made

1969

Jan.	A Last Loving Tribute to Peter Dawson Walsh (a pet cat)
Feb.-Apr.	How to Tell when Victor Records Were Made (Cont.)
May	Arthur Clough, Lawyer / Death of Edwin Smalle
June	Arthur Walsh
July	Making Doubles out of Singles
Aug.	Artists Who Sang in Choruses of Edison Amberol Cylinders
Sept.-Oct.	A Meeting with Tiny Tim
Nov.	Ferdinand Himmelreich: "The Blind Pianist"
Dec.	History of the Peerless Quartet

1970

Jan.	A Monumental Catalog of Edison Cylinders
Feb.-Mar .	The (Premier) American Quartet
Apr.-May	Harriet & George Atwood <sup>1</sup>
June	Real Names of Edison Cylinder Performers
July	A Matter of Identification
Aug.-Sept.	Chauncey Olcott
Oct.-Dec.	Seven Bygone Edison Singers

1971

Jan.-Feb .	In Justice to George Washington Johnson
March	Sam Ash
Apr.-May	Assisting Artists in Edison Cylinders
June	Victor Record Sales (From 1901 to 1942)
July-Sept.	Corinne Morgan
Oct.-Nov.	My Last Words Concerning the Controversial McKinley Record
Dec.	Baseball Recordings

---

<sup>1</sup> "pt. 1" in text, but article is not continued

1972

Jan.-Feb.	The Facts About "The Only Recording of Mr. Edison's Voice"
March	Monroe "Mike" Silver
Apr.-May	Vernon Archibald
June	Ada Jones Sings in Marion, Virginia
July	More About Baseball Recordings and The National Baseball Museum
Aug.	John H. Meyer
Sept.	Theo Karle
Oct.-Nov.	Joseph A. Phillips
Dec.	Arthur Hall, John Ryan and the Manhattan Quartet

1973

Jan.	"That Girl" Quartet and Other Women's Groups
Feb.	The Homestead Trio and "No Girl" Quartet
March	Joe White, "The Silver-Masked Tenor"
Apr.-May	Theodore Morse, A Centenary Tribute
June-July	Dolly Connolly and Percy Wenrich
Aug.-Sept.	Edison's Obscure Cylinder Makers
Oct.	Royalty and Recorded Sound
Nov.-Dec.	Rudy Wiedoft and Other Saxophone Players

1974

Jan.-Feb.	"Come Take a Trip in my Airship" (Seventy Years of Aviation Songs)
Mar.-Dec.	Al Bernard

1975

Jan.-Feb.	Al Bernard (concluded)
Mar.-June	An Evening in Thomas A. Edison's Laboratory
July-Sept.	William J. Halley (Judge William Joseph Hanley, Sr.)
Oct.-Dec.	Alan Turner

1976

Jan.-Mar.	Alan Turner (concluded)
Apr.-Sept.	"Cowboy Song" Recordings
Oct.-Dec.	Addison Dashiell Madeira

Note – articles published 1977 and later were not included in this edition for copyright reasons.

1977

Jan.-Mar.	An Enchanted Evening at Thomas A. Edison's Laboratory
Apr.-June	Indian Songs on Edison Cylinders
July-Sept.	More About The Dann Trio and Rudy Wiedoft
Oct.-Dec.	Recordings of Songs about "Alice"

1978

Jan.	Recordings of Songs about "Alice"
Feb.-June	Edison Miscellany
July-Aug.	The 1910 Catalog of 500 Slow-Selling Edison Cylinders
Sept.-Dec.	The Tollefson Trio

1979

Jan.-Feb.	The World's Greatest Whistler (Guido Giladini)
Mar.-Apr.	Records and Songs about Red-Heads
May-Aug.	Charley Case
Sept.-Nov.	Advertising in Early Records
Dec.	Fewer Biographical Sketches (A Letter to Readers)

1980

Jan.-Mar.	The Preacher and the Bear
Apr.-May	"Ghost Voice" Recordings
June-Aug.	"Movie Songs" on Records
Sept.-Nov.	"Funny Paper" Phonographs & Records
Dec.	May(m) Kelso

1981

Jan.	May(m) Kelso (concluded)
Feb.-Apr.	Six Honest Serving Men
May-Sept.	Thomas Chalmers, American Baritone
Oct.-Dec.	Len Spencer's 1894 Cylinder Catalog

1982

Jan.	Len Spencer's 1894 Cylinder Catalog (concluded)
Feb.-Nov.	Thomas A. Edison's Colorful Correspondence
Dec.	"Alexander's" Musical History

1983

Jan.-Feb.	"Alexander's" Musical History (concluded)
Mar.-June	"Oh! You Circus day" Songs & Skits About the Legendary "Big Top"
July-Oct.	Songs with Titles Taken from Books
Nov.-Dec.	Parodies on Bygone Popular Songs

1984

Jan.-Aug.	Parodies on Bygone Popular Songs (concluded)
Sept., Nov-Dec.	Ways in Which Comedians Changed the Words of Songs

1985

Jan.-Mar.	Some "Classic" Columbia Couplings
Apr.-May	Victor Records of Historical and Personal Interest

singing here, especially for a man of fifty-five, although the ending is bad. Personally, however, I don't care for Mr. Hyde; neither his voice nor his style appeals to me. As the lyrical Dr. Jekyll Battistini is unique, when he becomes Mr. Hyde he is very near to being just another roughneck baritone.

"Zampa" was issued here a long time ago as 92004 and is something of a rarity. "Macbeth" is now issued in America for the first time. IRCC #202 — 12 inch. Price $2.25.

A NOTE ON THE 5000 SERIES

There seems to be some confusion regarding the black label records of Victor's early 5000 series. Part of a later series of domestically recorded black label Victors was also numbered in a 5000 series, but this group of records has nothing to do with the 5000 series we are trying to complete, which was composed of records pressed from imported matrices. Unless it has the "angel back" imprint of The Gramophone & Typewriter Co., Ltd., no black label Victor has any connection with THE 5000 series. At least, that is what is indicated by all the evidence we now have. — Stephen Fasset.

SPECIAL COLLECTORS' ISSUES

Re-issues and Original Recordings of HOT JAZZ CLASSICS on Blue Note, Solo Art, H.R.S., UHCA, Commodore, Delta, Signature, and Collectors' Item releases.
Catalogues on request.

FOR SALE BY
ROBERT B. SALES
608 Marion E. Taylor Bldg.
Louisville, Ky.

WANTED

BOOKS: Biographies of famous musicians, especially singers.
CATALOGS: Victors before 1930; Columbias before 1930; Foreign catalogs of any year, Aeolian-Vocalion; Brunswick; Okeh; Odeon; Pathe; BERLINER; BETTINI; ZONOPHONE and many other makes. ALSO pamphlets; monthly supplements; advertisements of phonographs, gramophones, talking machines, cylinder and disc records before 1905.

RECORDS: Plancon; Zonophones; Bettinis; G&T's; Victor 5018. Any record by Edouard Lankow. Lillian Blauvelt Columbias: 30124 Romeo, A-5078 Barber of Seville, A-5119 Ouvre/When Celia Sings, A-5120 Rodellinda/Norwegian Song.

EDISON GRAND OPERA CYLINDERS.
RECORDS & CATALOGS BOUGHT AND SOLD. SEND ME YOUR WANT LIST.
Will exchange DeLucia 91,020 for another record of the same series.
Books about singers.

STEPHEN FASSETT
944 Monroe Lane, Woodmere, L.I., N.Y.

"THE CONEY ISLAND CROWD"

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

HOBBIES' DECISION to publish articles, now and then for collectors of old-time "popular" records is particularly gratifying to me since I was more or less the pioneer prophet of this now well-established cult. Shortly after the record collectors' section had been originated by my Chicago friend, Bert Wehling, I wrote in the December, 1935, issue: "... The many men and the fewer women who made reputations as recorders of popular songs and humorous sketches from, say, 1895 to 1920, were as brilliant a group as the Red Seal galaxy. . . . If Caruso, Melba and Plancon are immortal, so, in their equally expert way, should be Billy Murray, Ada Jones and Len Spencer. . . . I am sure the merits of the 'once-despised' 'popular' artists. . . . will yet be recognized, and the true record collector will be as proud of his early Dan Quinns, Henry Burrs, Frank Stanleys and Arthur Collinses as he is now of his rare Albanis, de Reszkes, Suzanne Adamses or Joseph Jeffers-sons."

This prediction met with several derisive hoots, but there are indications that interest in the type of record which peculiarly fascinates me has grown with remarkable rapidity during the past two or three years. "The Coney Island Crowd," as a heading for this article seems appropriate because Victor Black Label artists years ago fell into the habit of so terming themselves because of a chance remark of a recording official.

One interesting fact to which I would call attention is the fact that the collector of recorded Americana as a rule delves farther back into phonograph history than does either the Red Seal specialist or the hot jazz and swing devotee. The recorded productions by operatic and concert songbirds worthy of mention before the 1902 Red Seal series are so rare as to be almost non-existent as far as the average collector is concerned, and the jazz era seems to have officially begun with issuance of the first Original Dixieland Jazz Band discs in 1917.

But 1917 sounds shockingly nouveau riche and ultra-modern to those who look for genuinely ancient "populars." To the true believer, phonograph history begins as far back as 1889 or 1890 when the Columbia Company, then having headquarters in Washington, D. C., began issuing a few records for home use (before that time the unfortunately fragile wax cylinders had been supplied only to traveling exhibitors and slot machine parlors) and engaged the great Leonard Garfield Spencer, then a youth of about twenty to sing for them. Len, who became acquainted with Columbia because his parents operated a Washington business college and sent him to the phonograph company's studios for blank dictating machine cylinders, would sing into the horns of half a dozen phonographs placed on top of a piano and be given ten cents for each accepted record. He eventually came to enjoy a world-wide fame and a handsome income, and remained a favorite until his death in 1914.

Columbia at that time had no commercial record competition from Edison, and as long as it retained its Washington headquarters its list of artists was rather limited. One popular contributor to its catalog was John York Att Lee, a civil service employe by day and a remarkable whistler by night. He nearly drove his neighbors frantic by making records of "Listen to the Mocking Bird" at his home evening after evening. (There were no master records then, so the same selection had to be done over and over.) Another prolific recorder was W. O. Beckenbaugh, "the Leather-Lunged Auctioneer," who turned out many cylinders of his work-day auctioning spiels. Billy Golden, an obscure minstrel, soon began to do his "Turkey in the Straw" coon skit, and Cal Stewart came along with "Uncle Josh." And of course there were frequent engagements of Sousa's and the United States Marine Bands, as well as of a group of fairly well-known instrumentalists.

I have never seen a record by Att Lee (his piano accompaniments were played by Fred Gaisberg, then a boy in his teens, who later went to England and became one of the Gramophone Company's recording officials), but am hoping to be spared to discover one. Beckenbaugh is represented in my collection by only one record — a seven-inch Berliner disc.

There isn't room to write more this

A Rare Fiddle Event

A guaranteed "STRAD" for sale
Violin by Antonio Stradivarius, Cremona, 1701. Guaranteed by Gand & Bernadel, Paris, 1883. Price $2,000.00.
For full particulars of this and other bargains write to
ELLIS HOUGHTON
Exporter of Fine old Violins
42 New Bridge St.
Newcastle-on-Tyne, England

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS
by great artists of the past can be bought at
YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price
of each lot after the sale. Write for lists. mh24

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

36 N. E. First St. Miami, Florida

month about those very earliest days, but perhaps if connoisseurs of "old populars" rally around and make their interest known we shall be able to get more space later on and run down a great many interesting "angles."

Meanwhile, if any collector in the vicinity of San Francisco should run across a wax cylinder by "Mrs. Thomas A. Edison," let him not be deceived. Mrs. Edison never sang for records, but in the mid-Nineties the demand for cylinders was so great in the East that the Edison plant at Orange, N. J., could not supply the West. The Edison distributor in San Francisco consequently recorded his own cylinders and hit on the bright idea of engaging some girl with a soprano voice to sing as "Mrs. Edison" in the accurate assumption that records by the great inventor's wife would sell well and that what they didn't know in New Jersey wouldn't hurt them.

Frank Gloldt of Chicago will be interested to know they even had his idol, Billy Murray, sing "The Holy City" in Frisco. But of that more later!

CLASSICAL RECORDS WANTED

WANTED:—Classical records, catalogues.—The Half Price Record Shop, 101 West 53rd Street, New York City. je12633

WANTED:—Authentic cylinder records, Jenny Lind, Campanini, other famous people; playing on wrong machine destroys records, inquire. Zonophone, Zonofono, other early recordings celebrities. Catalogs, phonograph literature before 1905. Highest prices.—Cully, Eleven Broad, New York. my6004

TOP PRICES paid for vocal operatic and concert records needed in our Monthly Record Auctions. Send for list.—Dixie Record Club, 36 N. E. First St., Miami, Fla. je6633

RECORDS FOR SALE

INTERNATIONAL RECORD COLLECTORS' Club, 318 Reservoir Ave., Bridgeport, Conn. New pressings of historical phonograph records for sale. First and Autographed editions. Lists sent by request. ap6006

RARE RECORD AUCTIONS monthly including Monarchs DeLuxe, Black & Silver. List free.—Albatross Bookshop, Columbus & Jones, San Francisco, Calif. f6004

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS, 10c. Catalogue.—Paramount, YA-358 East Market, Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania. ja155

HOT JAZZ RECORDS—Collectors' items. Semi-monthly mail auctions. The fascinating way to build your collection. Send for current list.—Records, 417 20th St., Manhattan Beach, Calif. ja1531

FOR CYLINDER RECORDS of all descriptions, phonographs, horns, reproducers, parts, etc. write for information. We can also supply the new Woodmay crystal pick ups, to play either Edison cylinder, or Edison diamond disc records through the radio. Send us your reproducer, any model, and $5.50.—Woodmay Phon & Record Co., 77 Maywood St., Roxbury, Boston, Massachusetts. ja1013

CLASSICAL RECORDS, reasonable. Send stamped envelope for lists.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City, N. J. aj2066

THE JUNK PILE

By ROBERT B. SALES

JOHNNY, stick a new needle in the vic and throw that beat-up platter out the window; Professor Bob will proceed to call the class to order for this month's lecture on how to be a hep-cat.

At the last meeting of dear old Jive U. we discussed the bibliography of Jazz. We are now ready to delve slightly into the field of records, and my discourse today will deal with the special label items issued for the collector of Le Hot.

Of course, in the period before Jazz became a hobby, and was merely a way of playing music, (1917-1935) jazz records were made by commercial firms as a part of their regular output, and were designed for sale to the general public. With the advent of the record collector, along came certain hardy and jazz-loving souls who issued hot jazz recordings for the collector alone, and Uncle Bob is gonna taint the Junk Pile with a little commercialism and pay a well-deserved tribute to these boys.

First and foremost of the special label groups is the Commodore Music Shop of New York City. This enterprising firm, headed by Milt Gabler, a man with a real appreciation for jazz, has issued an impressive catalog of re-issues of rare and famous hot records, and was the first company, if my memory serves me rightly, to issue original jazz records made by pick-up bands, assembled especially for recording purposes by Bro. Gabler. At this time Commodore leads the field in extensiveness of output, both in the re-issue line and in original releases.

Second only in point of time and length of catalog to Commodore is the Hot Record Shop, also of New York. Headed by Steve Smith, a collector of pioneer days, the H.R.S. was not far behind in re-issuing rare items for the delectation of us hot fans. Of late H.R.S. has been venturing into the original recording line, and has released some twelve-inch recordings that rank among the best in jam session work.

Solo-Art recordings (which were mentioned at great length in my September JUNK PILE) are issued by Dan Qualey of New York City. Solo-Art issues nothing but piano solos—boogie woogie at that—and more power to 'em says Bob. Somehow or other Dan manages to get twelve-inch playing time out of a ten-inch platter, and that, as we quaintly express it, ain't hay.

Blue Note, another N.Y.C. company, also specializes in piano solos of the blues and boogie variety, and in small combos of noted instrumentalists. They have issued such out-of-the-way stuff as boogie solos by Meade Lux Lewis on (wal I swan) the celeste and harpsichord.

Bob Thiele of Long Island fathered a short-lived label yclept Signature Records, which put out some eight discs, including one boogie reissue. I haven't heard them, but from all reports the last releases, four sides by Bud Jacobson's Jungle Kings, are really, to quote M. Pannassie, "les noix." The stock and masters of Signature Records have been taken over by Commodore.

Ben Lincoln of Milwaukee, Wis., has issued two records by Mel Henke under the Collectors' Item label. All four sides are piano solos. We have not been advised as to the present or future status of this label, but want to put in our bid for its use if Ben decides to quit the game.

The magazine JAZZ INFORMATION (see December's JUNK PILE) has entered the re-issue business, and has announced ten records (all of which are re-recordings, or dubbings as they are commonly mis-called) for present and future release under its Limited Edition label.

Heywood Hale Broun, Jr. went down to New Orleans and recorded a pick-up band of old-timers playing traditional jazz numbers. He issued these in an album of four records under the Delta label. I had the pleasure of listening to these before they were issued. The album was released through H.R.S.

I believe I've covered the private labels in full. No omissions were intended—if I have left out anyone, just write and I'll catch you later.

Now that these enterprising indi-

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: Early American Music in single sheets and bound volumes. Also Early American Books on Music and Musical instruments.—Edward Morrill & Son, 144 Kingston St., Boston, Mass. ja12885

SWISS MUSIC BOXES—All sizes. Cylinder and disc types for sale. Also paper and wooden roll hand organs, street barrel organs, hurdy gurdys, extra Regina and Stella disc repairs.—Lloyd G. Kelley, 907 Franklin St., Melrose, Mass. ja126921

WANTED:—To communicate with private collectors or dealers who have: old music boxes of European manufacture; musical snuff boxes; musical watches; miniature musical harps, musical fans; or any other objects having music works.—Box R.M., c-o Hobbies. f2

"THE DREAMS BENEATH DESIGN"
96 pages — 63 illustrations.
Story of the history and background of the designs of HOOKED RUGS, from the time of the earliest, crude examples to those of the present day, including the whole story of Edward Sands Frost, the now famous tin pedlar who was the first commercial designer in this field . . . $2.00.
HOBBIES MAGAZINE
2810 S. Michigan Ave. Chicago, Ill.

"The Coney Island Crowd"

EDWARD M. FAVOR

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

NO doubt about it, the family name of the comedian who steps out of the Coney Island Crowd for consideration this month gives me an opportunity to make an outrageous pun by saying I am writing about him partly as a favor to Steve Fasset!

Steve, who began to get interested in old-time popular song singers and comedians not so long ago, took good-natured umbrage when I remarked to him that when I was six or seven years old, Ed Favor was my favorite singer, on the strength of his Edison cylinder, "I Think I Hear a Woodpecker Tapping At My Family Tree," until I heard my first Billy Murray record and then Mr. Favor departed to the purgatory of discarded idols. How, the connoisseur from Woodmere wanted to know, could I possibly have developed such bad taste at the age of six as to prefer B. M. to E. F.? "Nothing Murray has ever done has amused me half so much as Favor's record of 'How Can They Tell That I'm Irish,'" he declared.

When it comes to preferring Edward Favor to Billy Murray, I'm afraid our friend Steve is in considerable of a minority, but his hero has claims of his own to favorable consideration. The salient facts of his earlier career may be copied verbatim from an Edison Blue Amberol record catalog of April, 1941:

"EDWARD M. FAVOR. This well known comic opera comedian was born in New York City. He first sprang into prominence as a principal under the management of the late J. M. Hill. The long run of E. E. Rice's '1942' at Wallack's Theater, New York, made him famous as a Broadway comedian. He has starred in musical comedies with his wife, Edith Sinclair, and the team is a well-known 'head-liner' in vaudeville. He has been principal comedian with Klaw and Erlanger, the Shuberts and other prominent managers. Mr. Favor was the first professional to sing in a phonograph. His record was put on exhibition in the lobby of the Park Theater, Boston, during the long run there of 'Ship Ahoy!' and attracted wide-spread attention."

As far as I know, all the statements made above are true, except for there being doubt as to whether Favor was the first "professional" to make records. I have seen the same distinction claimed for Billy Golden, the blackface comedian, and my old friend, the late Dan W. Quinn.

However that may be, by the middle

Nineties, Favor was well established as one of the most popular recording artists. He made them at a dollar a "round" between periods of filling vaudeville engagements.

Billy Murray recalls that the first time he ever saw a record made was in 1896 at the headquarters of Bocigalupi Brothers, Edison wholesale distributors, in San Francisco. When he entered the "studio" Favor, who was also appearing at the Orpheum Theater, was singing into eight cylinder phonographs lined up before him and keeping his hands cupped behind his ears to determine whether "the tone was hitting the horns straight in the center." Incidentally, although the wax cylinders remained the most popular form of record for 30 years after Edison invented the phonograph in 1877, they are no longer manufactured anywhere in the world, except for dictating machine use.

Oh yes, they are! Angus Joss of Joliet, Ill., still makes a batch of them occasionally for home recording use with old-fashioned machines.

Favor had a high, piping, typically Irish voice, and his records were restricted chiefly to Irish songs and nonsense ditties, the latter usually in the form of limericks. Probably his most popular record was "Fol-the-Rol-Lol," an English importation, which he sang for all the pioneer companies. As an Edison cylinder it was No. 9142 in two-minute size. Its popularity was proved by the fact that when Edison began making four-minute Amberol records in 1908, "Fol-the-Rol-Lol" was No. 14 in the first list. Said the catalog:

"As a two-minute record this has always been a famous seller because of the excruciatingly funny situations described in the verses and the strikingly 'different' chorus. It is nonsense, of course, but the cleverest kind of nonsense that is an A-1 mirth-maker. The present record," the catalog proudly added, "gives 18 verses while the old-style record gives only 8."

Favor was what I term a "lone wolf" in that he seldom or never teamed up with other singers. He had the assistance of the American Quartet in Victor record No. 16728, "The Dublin Rag," but that was an exception to the rule. He sang impartially for all companies, and I hope I shall yet be privileged to obtain a copy of an opus of his listed in an old United States cylinder record catalog. The cylinder contained two songs:

Edward M. Favor, comedian, who recorded in the '90's. He died in 1936 at the age of 80.

(a) "Will You Please Pass the Salt?" and (b) "Now We Can Both Laugh Together." What an irresistible combination!

The high-voiced comedian was such a pioneer that his vogue waned before double-faced records were introduced, and he made only a few after 1908. His last two records, issued on Edison Blue Amberol cylinders just before the World War, were "My Best Girl and Me" from the musical comedy, "My Best Girl," and "If They'd Only Move Old Ireland Over Here," from Blanche Ring's great success, "When Claudia Smiles." He continued active in theatrical work until only a few years before his death, at the age of 80, in the spring of 1936, and made a great hit with his impersonation of Amos Gashwiler, the country storekeeper, in the Broadway production of "Merton of the Movies."

Reproduced with this article is a photograph of Favor taken March 19, 1904, at the height of his career. It was presented by him to Walter A. Forbush, for more than a generation a Columbia recording engineer, and was given to me by Mr. Forbush.

Next month I expect to fill numerous requests that I write about Billy Murray — a job which it will probably take at least two months' columns to do properly!

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS
by great artists of the past can be bought at
YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price
of each lot after the sale. Write for lists. mh24

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

36 N. E. First St. Miami, Florida

important to jazz as Jelly Roll is made out to be, but — de mortuis nil nisi bonum.

An error which can hardly be ascribed to the authors, since the source is to be found in Hot Discography and the mistake was further propagated by Commodore, is to be found on pages 169-170. In conversation with Jimmy McPartland recently, he informed me that Teschemacher made no records with the Wolverines. Furthermore, Dick Voyow assembled an entirely different group of musicians for the recordings of "A Good Man Is Hard to Find," "Dear Old Southland," and "He, She and Me," and Dick was the only "original" Wolverine to play on them — no McPartland, no Glenn Miller. The clarinetist was most probably Bercov, in answer to the query propounded by the book.

In closing, may I simply state that The Jazz Record Book is a most welcome addition to my own book-shelf, for its wealth of historical data. To a new collector, it should serve as a second Hot Discography, and I sincerely hope that its commercial success will be such as to spur its authors on to further publications in their (our) metier.

"The Coney Island Crowd"

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

TRYING to do justice to Billy Murray, subject of this month's Coney Island Crowd Sketch, is like trying to compress the Encyclopaedia Britannica into a Little Blue Book. This column could devote itself for a year to narrating the remarkable achievements and describing the fascinating personality of the most famous and best loved of all pioneer phonograph singers, and still barely scratch the surface.

There is no 100 percent unanimity in any field of human endeavor, but among all collectors of old-time popular song and comic skit records there appears to be overwhelming agreement that Billy not only is far and away the greatest American comedian recorded music has known but that, of all phonograph singers, he is the most likely to be classic and eagerly collected humorist of the next generation.

Already, some dealers in second-hand discs and cylinders have gained the impression that Murray records are in a class to themselves and are — confound them! — holding supplies of his productions back in the hope of obtaining an extra "premium."

Not only that, but Billy is the only old-time recording artist possessed of such perennial vitality of appeal that he is still in demand as both a radio and recording performer and, in the opinion of many of his admirers, is today, after more than 40 years before the public, doing the best singing of his career.

This oddly modest and self-deprecating genius was born in Philadelphia. His father, Patrick Murray, a blacksmith, and his mother, Julia Kelleher Murray, both came to the United States from County Kerry, Ireland. From his father, Billy, a man of less than medium height, probably inherits his remarkable vitality and strength, which have been enhanced by a lifelong passion for walking, baseball and other forms of athletics, and a routine of clean living.

When Billy was a baby his parents moved to Denver. He became something of a "problem child," who narrowly escaped drowning on a number of occasions and once was mired in a bog and remained three hours, with the sand creeping up to his neck, before he was rescued. A little later he ran away from home and school, hoping to become a jockey, and stayed at Overland Park near Denver a month as an "exercise boy" before being found by his mother and taken home.

The second time little William Thomas Murray ran away was to become an actor. Harry Leavitt, notorious road show impresario, blew into Denver with a production called Leavitt's High Rollers. When it left town Billy went with it. Business wasn't too good and, from Salt Lake City on, the troupe "bummed" its way to its various one-night stands, walking, riding in freight trains or perched on top of baggage cars. Leavitt never gave his half-grown performers money but would sometimes buy them clothing, which they swapped among themselves. Three other members of the troupe were Matt Keefe of Leadville, Colo., later famous as a yodeler, Billy Brown of Pueblo and Harry O'Brien of Denver. With Murray, they formed a male quartet which left Leavitt and obtained a few engagements.

Billy sang in honky-tonks, medicine shows and small-time vaudeville, frequently with Keefe as his partner. One day they showed up in San Francisco and decided to get a job, singing for those new-fangled phonographs. They went to the headquarters of Bocigalupi Brothers, Edison's West Coast distributors, and saw Ed Favor singing into a row of cylinder instruments, perched on a piano. Murray and Keefe were gladly given a trial and a hearing of their first record, a duet version of "The Lass From the County Mayo," showed their voices recorded well.

For some time Billy did a raft of phonograph work. In his "brothy" boy's voice he not only sang "coon songs" and sentimental ballads, but such "classics" as "The Holy City." The demand for Edison cylinders was so great in the East that the factory at Orange was unable to supply them to Western dealers, and the Bocigalupi issued their own recordings, which, however, were unknown at the Main Edison plant. The consequence was that Billy Murray, before the twentieth century arrived, was a well-known phonograph singer on the West Coast, in Hawaii and even in China and Japan, whereas nobody east of the Rockies had heard of him.

It appeared for a time, though, as if the youngster in his teens wouldn't live long to do any sort of singing. What near-drowning and quicksand hadn't accomplished, an apparent combination of tuberculosis and Bright's disease seemed likely to do. Frequently, after singing at a honky-tonk, he was so weak it was almost impossible for him to creep to his lodging house where a kind-hearted elderly landlady would wrap him up warmly and tuck him in bed. Eventually, deciding that if he were going to die he would meet death with his boots on, he resorted to a regimen of cold baths and — imagine it! — mountain climbing. The treatment worked and within a few years he was, what he still is, a miracle of endurance.

The Alaska gold rush came along and Billy decided to go to the Frozen North. Something happened to keep him from taking the boat, and he was later glad of it when he learned the vessel had sunk, drowning everybody on board. Then Al G. Fields' minstrels visited California, and "Mr. William Murray, eccentric singer and dancer," became a member of the troupe, singing "Under the Bamboo Tree" and "Bill Bailey, Won't You Please Come Home?" It was Fields who pronounced William Thomas Murray to be "one hell of a name for a comedian" and shortened Wm. Thos. to Billy.

When the troupe went East, in 1903, Billy Murray's greatest recording career was about to begin in earnest. In next month's "Coney Island Crowd" the story of his many years as the biggest-selling recording artist of all time will be told.

(To Be Continued.)

ANCIENT EUROPEAN MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

An organological study of the musical instruments in the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston. Covers the years 1460 to about 1850. Gives history, typology, acoustical properties, construction details and tunings of all the instruments, plus appendices and indices and bibliography. 536 pages, 89 illustrations. Send $10.00 for your copy to

HOBBIES MAGAZINE
2810 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois

"The Coney Island Crowd"

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

IN 1903, a black-haired, slenderly-built, but not tall young fellow showed up at the headquarters of the different phonograph companies in and near New York. He had letters of introduction testifying that his Edison cylinders, made in San Francisco, had been a genuine hit and that he was a "natural" recording artist.

There were plenty of good voices in those days, but only a few recorded well, so Edison, Victor, Columbia, Zonophone, Leeds and the other phonograph companies were glad to give Billy Murray a trial. For Victor, his first record seems to have been a Victor Herbert song, "Absinthe Frappe." One of his earliest for Columbia and Edison was "Meet Me in St. Louis, Louise," a panegyric of the World's Fair of 1904. "It Takes the Irish to Beat the Dutch" and "Ain't It Funny What a Difference Just a Few Hours Make?" were others which he sang impartially for all comers.

Although "Ragtime Bob" Roberts warned him to stay away from Columbia, saying, "I do all the comic business around here!" Bob soon relented and joined Billy in duet work. So did the high and mighty Len Spencer, who had an ambition to become Billy's business manager — an ambition he never quite attained.

The Murray records at once became phenomenal sellers for that day, when the number of phonographs in use was only a fraction of what it would be later. Everybody said Billy Murray's records were the only ones so clear you could catch every word on first hearing. This was partly because there was a certain "ping" to his voice that cut sharp into the wax and he was also smart enough to nasalize certain syllables — exactly as printers use Italic type — to make important words and phrases stand out. (Incidentally, this nasal quality of Murray records is unpleasant, if they are not played exactly at the right speed. An old record by him, at from 72 to 75 revolutions a minute, sounds all wrong electrically reproduced at 78 or 80.)

By 1905, Victor was advertising that Billy's record of "The Yankee Doodle Boy" was the biggest seller in its history. By June, 1906, "You're a Grand Old Flag," another George M. Cohan song, took first place. "Cheyenne" came along in the latter year and was another record-breaker. (It was considered a marvel of recording because of the realism of its cowboy yells and sounds of horses' hoofs.) "Everybody Works But Father" set the nation laughing. Any record by Murray was sure of moving across the counter in great quantities.

Billy Murray

In 1907, Murray began making duets with Ada Jones, most popular of all women recording artists, and the popularity of both singers bounded to new heights. Three years later, Billy made his best selling record — one which may have been the biggest seller of all time. It was "Casey Jones," sung by him for both Victor and Edison, in both cases with the assistance of the newly organized American Quartet, consisting, besides himself, of John Bieling, first tenor; Steve Porter, baritone; and William F. Hooley, bass. This organization, with various changes of personnel made necessary because of death or retirement, continued to make records until 1925. The Heidelberg Quintet was identical, except that Will Oakland, the counter-tenor, was added as "top tenor."

Some time around this period, The Record Maker Troupe (better known later as the Eight Famous Victor Artists) was organized. In its pioneer days it consisted of Henry Burr, who was its business manager, Murray, Albert Campbell, John Meyer, Arthur Collins, Byron G. Harlan, Vess Ossman ("The Banjo King") and Teddy Morse, song writer and pianist. It was an established favorite in vaudeville and on the concert stage for many years.

So the years passed pleasantly enough. Billy recorded, yelled himself hoarse at baseball games, and frequently went on trips with the New York Yankees. On spring training trips he sometimes played right field for the Yanks. In 1909, he signed a "joint contract" by which he recorded only for Victor and Edison. In 1920, he signed up exclusively with Victor — an arrangement which held good until 1928.

By that time radio microphones had made possible the rise of such "crooners" as Gene Austin, Jack Smith and Bing Crosby and Billy was obliged to realize that, for the time, his vogue had waned, and he was no longer the comedian who entertained, through his records, "a larger audience than any other singer who has ever lived," to quote the old Victor catalogs.

Hobbies in Wartime

From an editorial in the Dayton, Ohio, Journal

With headlines marching across American breakfast tables in type increasingly blacker and bigger, with the message of those headlines etching little crow's feet around American eyes, an harassed citizenry is turning more and more to hobbies as relaxation.

They are finding in stamp collecting, woodworking, or any of the thousand and one other avocations their needed relaxation. For a brief moment they can turn from war and production lines to something of the simple joy of craftsmanship, or the gratification of the possessive instinct.

In the case of collections, the reason for the hobby is obvious: Gratification of the ages-old instinct of possession. The item, as in cases of elephants or matchbox covers, may be valueless in the eyes of the world; nevertheless to the collector each piece has a highly personalized value * * *

This all has a very important bearing upon America's war effort. The tense worker is the one who will make the mistakes; mistakes that may be costly in terms of lives these days. And if he can ease his tenseness, and at the same time gratify his creative instincts, he may have made more than a minor contribution to the war effort.

HOBBIES SAVED HIS LIFE

Hobbies serve in another way! The glamor of railroads intrigued John F. Boose of La Grange, Ill., at an early age. As a result, he has a collection of 5,000 photographs of engines. He states that his knowledge of trains and train schedules, which he credited to his hobby, was once instrumental in saving his life. It was in 1935 when he was driving a hearse on a foggy morning in Indiana. He noticed freight trains standing on the siding in two towns and explained to his driving companion that this was because a certain fast train was due to pass. A detour was required that led to a crossing without gates. Mr. Boose stopped in the fog to investigate before crossing and a moment later the flyer zipped by. Mr. Boose surprised his companion by naming the engine, its speed, and its time schedule; whereas there might have been an unhappy ending.

Billy Murray, Ulysses Walsh and Jimmy Martindale

"The Coney Island Crowd"

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

Billy Murray

AS FAR AS long established phonograph artists, such as Billy Murray, were concerned, 1925 brought two great changes: the advent of electrical recording and the rise of "crooners."

Many tenor voices, such as Billy's, suffered severely from the pioneer electric recording. It gave them a husky, raspy edge of a spurious baritone quality. One of Billy's early electric records was his only duet with Henry Burr, "I Wonder Where My Baby is Tonight." After hearing it I wondered if he had lost his voice completely. It sounded like anybody but the man whom I had idolized since my early boyhood.

Tommy Lyman, Gene Austin, Jack Smith, Bing Crosby (who came along somewhat later), Art Gillham and the others set a new style of singing with whispering effects which couldn't have been recorded except through a microphone. All at once the public became wild about this sort of vocalization, and the old school of singing began to be ignored.

Billy suspected the end was near late in 1925 when he returned from a tour with the Eight Famous Victor Artists and was told by Eddie King, the Victor recording manager, to sing "Roll 'Em, Girls" in crooner fashion.

"Heck," or words to that effect, he retorted, "I'm no crooner!" Nevertheless, Eddie insisted, and Billy did his best. Once more his admirers wondered what had happened to his voice.

By 1928 the crooner vogue had so taken the field that Billy, after 25 years of singing for Victor, was washed up with that company, aside from singing an occasional refrain to a dance record or taking part in a minstrel sketch. The exclusive contract he had enjoyed for eight years was not renewed, and he was once more a free lance. In England they were just beginning to rave over his duets, such as "Bridget O'Flynn," with Aileen Stanley, but that was too late to do him any good over here. Meanwhile, theatres were being wired throughout the nation for sound, and Henry Burr, manager of the Eight Famous Victor Artists, decided it was no longer profitable to keep that brilliant troupe on the road.

Billy was not through as a recording artist, though. His old friends at Edison were glad to get him back, even if Edison's days in the record business were numbered and were to end a year later. He and Walter Scanlan struck up a partnership and did a great deal of work for Edison, Brunswick, Pathe, Crown and a few other minor companies. They made a duet, "Oh Baby! What a Night!" for Victor in 1929. Their recording activities did not end until 1932, when the depression was at its worst.

For a year or so Murray and Scanlan did well as radio singers. When Walter decided to open a talent booking agency, Billy kept active in several ways. He sang old-time popular songs for the movies in such productions as the "Bouncing Ball" comedies. He even imitated animals for the talkies and became well known as a radio actor, playing character parts in the Parker Family series and other popular air shows.

Unable to content himself with being a retired and respected resident of Freeport, Long Island, he nevertheless doubted that his services would ever again be in demand as a recording artist. His enthusiastic admirers, however, refused to admit any such thing. He still had a voice and a sense of humor. Those who had their hearts particularly set on a comeback for their idol included Jimmy Martindale of Brooklyn, who probably has the largest collection of Billy Murray records in the world, besides being Billy's most intimate friend, and myself, runner-up to Jimmy in the Murray collecting business. Frank Glodd of Chicago, who collects virtually nothing but Murray records, probably is third.

Our faith was rewarded when, in the spring of 1940, Len Joy, in charge of Victor's New York recording studios, asked Billy to make a record of "It's the Same Old Shillelagh." This, issued on a Bluebird record, was so successful that Len decided there would be a good demand for others by the one-time most popular singer of all time. In October, 1940, Jimmy

(Continued on page 23)

I WANT TO BUY

RECORDS (either disc or cylinder, but VOCAL only) in good condition of the following old popular songs:

"At a Georgia Campmeeting"
"Everyone is in Slumberland but You and Me"
"I'd Leave My Happy Home for You"
"Just One Girl"
"Let Me See You Smile"
"Making Eyes"
"My Gal's a High Born Lady"
"My Hannah Lady, Whose Black Baby is You?"
"Put Me Off at Buffalo"

I ALSO want old record catalogs and monthly supplements, phonograph magazines such as The Phonogram or the Talking Machine World, portraits of old-time popular recording artists, and any literature dealing with talking machines. AM ALSO always interested in obtaining books ABOUT (not by) CHARLES DICKENS. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. mhp

WRITE, giving prices to

JIM WALSH

316 West Watauga Avenue
Johnson City, Tennessee

I Wish to Announce

that, due to my induction into the United States Army on April 9, 1942, I am forced to suspend all activities in the record business for the duration of the war. If physically possible, I plan to resume my dealing in jazz recordings upon my return from military service. May I take this opportunity of thanking each and every individual who has ordered records from me during the two year period in which I have been in business. My association with a great many of you has ripened into a warm friendship which I shall long cherish. All offers, solicitations, and quotations contained in previous advertisements are hereby cancelled. jex

ROBERT B. SALES

607 Marion E. Taylor Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

For some devotees of the circus, the greatest thrill is witnessing the first performance of a new season when new paint and new costumes are everywhere. That is why Joe E. Ward, Texas civil engineer, always finds it convenient to be in New York City when Fred Bradna's whistle inaugurates the initial performance of the Madison Square Garden season. And Joe is always in the middle of proceedings, for he has an odd hobby of collecting comedy wardrobe, which he drapes on his own figure and joins the joeys in their arena antics. Last year, he took part in so many performances as an amateur clown that his name appeared in the route book roster of the show.

Another who gets itchy feet when spring rolls around is Frank (Doc) Stuart, Oklahoma poster-plant operator, who once did a cycle of seasons as a circus press agent. And Doc takes a plane to Cole Brothers Circus opening as regularly as the years come and go. Stuart's hobby is collecting interesting tales about troupers he has known through the years, which he puts into his striking stories.

When the show is on the lot, it is not unusual to find Harrison Waite, Texas banker, sitting in the door of the red ticket wagon. For the red wagon is the show's office, and while Mr. Waite likes circuses generally, his particular and peculiar delight is seeing firsthand how the multitudinous details of keeping a circus running are carried out from the executive desk.

Across the midway is the sideshow and there other circus fans loiter — often forgetting to pass through the marquee to see the big show. W. Fulton White, Maine realtor, is one of them. The freaks and midgets in particular appeal to him. His collection of circusions is devoted to miniature figures of animals and sideshow freaks. And you should see those realistic hand-carved Ubangi savages and Siamese twins in his exhibit.

The menagerie catches the eye of other circus fans. John Sheppard, retired Chicago miller, spends long hours in the animal tent. For Sheppard's hobby is carving animal figures with simple hand tools, and he has a miniature menagerie which runs into hundreds of animals, carved in numerous lifelike positions.

Out in the circus backyard, nearly every day there are circus fans on hand, gathering items for their collections from their personal friends of the show world, or indulging in their favorite diversions.

In the blacksmith tent, one may find all the horseshoers on their knees, scrutinizing the remarkable circus blacksmith shop in miniature, carved by Jerry Booker, son of a Fort Sill, Okla., army officer, who spent three years taking measurements and building the tiny forges, anvils and other equipment, including the wagon into which all the hundreds of pieces pack.

If there is a contortionist on the program, at his trunk in the dressing room, you will find Burns M. Kattenburg, if the show is within 100 miles of his Ohio home. Kattenburg has a remarkable collection of photographs and information about bend-ers, along with properties used by various famous contortionists of other days.

Clown alley always attracts several fellows for whom clowning is a sideline to their collecting hobby. Harper Joy, the Washington investment banker, spends his annual vacation clowning. Albert Marx, Texas coffee salesman, never misses a chance to gather additional wardrobe to fill his mammoth trunk, and you'll often find him explaining one of his new gags to a veteran joey in the dressing tent, or in the shade of a baggage wagon.

Other circus hobbyists' fervor runs to oddities in the collector's realm. Stan Rogers, an art director for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, spends his spare time devoting his artistic skill to drawing maps showing the routes of various circuses each season, or placing dots on other maps showing every city and town in the United States in which a circus played last year, or drawing up charts giving facts and figures about all the principal circuses in the country for a century.

Karl Kae Knecht, cartoonist for the Evansville, Ind., Courier, never fails to draw a circus cartoon for his paper when the big show comes to town; and a comic little figure of an elephant always accompanies his signature on his daily cartoon dealing with politics, current events and Evansville topics. Knecht is such an ardent circus hobbyist that when Evansville zoo bought an elephant, it was named Kae in his honor.

Benjamin F. Perkins, Massachusetts manufacturer, has a big hobby, indeed. For collecting calliopes, both the steam and the air varieties, is his diversion. He has a host of these instruments which he furnishes for parades and one is used for radio broadcasts advertising his products.

And circus historians, like Colonel C. G. Sturtevant, retired army officer, and C. E. Duple, Indiana musician, find inspiration for their well-kept records of every phase of circus lore talking to veteran hostlers, canvasmen, eight-horse drivers — in fact any old-timer they find on the lot, whose reminiscences provide valuable circus history.

Thus the circus, from front door to the cook-house, from the moment the first wagon rolls down the runs until the show train speeds away into the night, has a special significance and allure for circus collectors, whose hobbies are as numerous as the 1,001 animals — count 'em — advertised on the gaudy posters.

"THE CONEY ISLAND CROWD"

(Continued from page 21)

and I went with Billy to the recording studio, where he sang "There Must Have Been Egyptians Long Ago" and "When Paddy McGinty Plays the Harp." This went over even bigger.

For several months afterward, Billy had regular recording engagements — and never was he told to "croon." Then tragedy apparently struck. The veteran comedian had a long siege of streptococcal sore throat and, when he went to make four records in August last year, was so hoarse his efforts were a flat failure. It looked as if his singing days might be over.

After several throat specialists had been consulted, however, the trouble began to clear up, and Billy was asked to become a featured guest artist on the National Barn Dance. He has since spent about half his time in Chicago, where the program originates, and has made one of the biggest hits of any guest the Barn Dance has had in years. My hunch is that popular clamor will result in his becoming a permanent addition to the cast.

For several months after his streptococcal experience, Billy refused to try to make more records. "Wait till my voice is back where it used to be!" he insisted. As this is written, however, he is preparing to resume regular recording engagements and some of his new Bluebird records probably will be on sale before this is printed.

I have devoted three months' space to writing about Billy Murray, but I could not express my admiration and love for this truly great artist and lovable man in 30 months. As a very small boy I played his records incessantly and he was almost never out of my mind. I even dreamed about him. The greatest evening of my life was the one on which I saw him appear with the Eight.

Years later, my cup was filled to overflowing when he and Jimmy Martindale came to Johnson City, Tenn., to visit me. That was in October, 1938. Two years later to the month I spent a happy fortnight with Billy, running around New York, what time I wasn't eating and sleeping at his beautiful home in Freeport. A lifetime of devotion could not repay him for the happiness he has brought into my life. To me he is truly one of the great men of his time, who will be recognized a generation from now as even greater than he appears to his admirers today.

through the underbrush, that the singer's talents are most vividly displayed. Dating back to 1911, this is perhaps her outstanding record, and like most of hers, it is extremely well recorded, giving a thrilling impression of a gorgeous voice. IRCC #73 belongs to that select group of old vocal records whose attributes include, aside from mere historical importance, actual qualities of performance that cannot be matched in our day.

(Twelve-inch disc. IRCC #73)

* * *

Priorities Interrupt IRCC'S Repressing Activities

William H. Seltsam, founder and secretary of The International Record Collectors Club, has been informed that owing to the shellac shortage, RCA-Victor will no longer be able to press records for IRCC. This not unexpected news will come as a sad blow to the numerous collectors who for the past ten years have been privileged to buy at reasonable prices repressings and re-recordings of out-of-print records of the greatest historical and musical importance that would have been well-nigh impossible to obtain had it not been for IRCC. Fortunately, all the records announced to date have been pressed and many back issues are in stock. When present editions are exhausted, no more pressings and re-recordings of out-of-the-war — or until a satisfactory substitute for shellac is found.

* * *

Two Recommended Books

MEMORIES OF OPERA by Giulio Gatti-Casazza (Scribners).

JOHN MCCORMACK — The Story of a Singer — by L. A. G. Strong (Macmillan).

Both of these books were published late in 1941. Both cover the period when many of the great singers whose records we now seek were alive and flourishing. Gatti's memories naturally go back further and centralize around different parts of the world of music than do most of McCormack's, and viewed as a pair the two books supplement and complement one another admirably.

As director of Italy's famous La Scala opera house and then, beginning in 1907, of our own Metropolitan for twenty-seven years, Gatti came into contact with a host of fine artists and the opinions of this dignified, self-respecting Italian gentleman can be read with pleasure and profit. His account of Tamagno, for instance, is in itself enough to make you curse fate for not having had you born into an earlier generation.

L. A. G. Strong is a novelist, a music lover and a friendly but by no means abject admirer of the subject of his story. So often it is a case of either a dead biography of a living person or a living biography of a dead person. This time, however, we have a book that is as alive as John McCormack himself. Much of the story is told in the singer's own words, which is to say that humor and keen observations are everywhere. There are appendices listing and commenting upon some of the records of many of McCormack's contemporaries, including a list of most of McCormack's own worthwhile recordings. What with these and the many references to records in the main body of the text, collectors should give this book a place of honor on their shelves.

Paul Reimers Dead

The death of that delightful concert singer, Paul Reimers, on April 14th, was sad news for the many collectors who admire his splendid records. Mr. Reimers once commented upon a program of his records for me as part of my Great Singers Series of broadcasts over station WQXR, New York City, and my association with this charming man left me with such pleasant memories of him that I feel impelled to write for next month's issue a short article about the man, his career and his records.

"The Coney Island Crowd"

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

JOHN BIELING I

IN writing biographical sketches of artists who have long since retired or died, it is, unfortunately, easy to make purely inadvertent mistakes. Information obtained at second, third or fourth hand, even though coming from apparently the most trustworthy sources, sometimes turns out to be wrong.

I am therefore glad that in writing about John Bieling I have his own written statements to guide me. As one of the oldest living recording artists, this ethereal-voiced tenor furnishes as good a subject for a biographical sketch as could be wished for.

Newcomers to the field of recording collecting may ask, "Who is John Bieling?" but no old-timer will. Veterans recall him as one of the most famous singers-into-a-horn of the Golden Age, 30 to 40 years ago, and as the mainstay first tenor of the male voiced foursomes which sang under the names of the Haydn and American Quartets for Victor and as the Edison and Premier Quartets on cylinders.

Most old-timers also believe Mr. Bieling was the only phonograph singer to win fame throughout the English-speaking world without ever making a solo disc or cylinder, but this is not precisely true. The tenor remembers making a few solos for the old United States Phonograph Company, including one called "Japanese Baby" but pronounced "Japan-easy." He recorded, too, many duets with the late Harry MacDonough; a few around 1900 for Edison with May Kelso, contralto; and a handful in 1911 with Walter Van Brunt, who is known nowadays as Walter Scanlan; but otherwise his career seems to have been restricted to quartet work.

All these long-standing admirers of the singer described by MacDonough as having "a voice in a million, to stand up under the work it did," and by Billy Murray as "The Canary" ("because," Billy said, "he never blasted!") will be glad to know he is in good health and enjoying life at his Hempstead, Long Island, home, although he reached his 73rd birthday on March 18 this year.

And now let's let Mr. Bieling tell his own story:

"The very first quartet that ever made a recording on any kind of record was the Manhanset Quartet, which was composed of John Bieling, first tenor; George Gaskin, second tenor; Joe Riley, baritone; and Jim Cherry, bass. Cherry sang only a couple of recording dates with us before being replaced by Walter Snow, who remained with the quartet for some time.

THE HAYDN QUARTET

Comprised of John H. Bieling, Harry MacDonough, S. H. Dudley, and William F. Hootley. Their records are now collectors' items.

"When I speak of first record making I mean, of course, for commercial purposes; they were made by the United States Phonograph Company in Newark, N. J., and the man who did the recording was Victor Emerson, later recording expert for the Columbia Company and, in 1916, founder of the Emerson Phonograph Company. The recording was done with Edison machines, run by storage batteries placed on shelves. They were grouped so that the horns into which we sang would focus as nearly as possible to a center on the opposite side of the rack. There were usually seven horns into which we sang. The cylinders, of course, were wax ones, made by the Edison Company.

"In those days—the '90's and the early 1900's—there were dozens of record companies, some of which lasted only a few weeks. The Manhanset Quartet and its successor sang for most or all of these, including United States around 1893 or 1894; Columbia; Berliner, the first discs (these had so much surface noise and were so terrible in general, we were ashamed to take the money from the inventor, Emile Berliner, who was then recording in a garret); Zonophone discs, with John English in charge of recording; Reed and Miller; Isaac Norcross (who made "Jumbo" six-inch cylinders for Howley and Haviland in the Attila Building on 37th Street, New York); and Leeds and Catlin, who started with cylinders and afterwards made discs.

"At that time Edison had not yet started to record for a commercial purpose; however, when they saw the possibilities of a great demand for records, they began to organize a talent bureau. Around 1896, the Manhanset Quartet broke up, Gaskin going exclusively with Columbia at 28th Street and Broadway. Jim Cherry was then on the road, Riley returned to his steamfitting company, and yours truly went back to his stained-glass trade. Of course, the demand for records was slowly creeping along; then it suddenly took a jump upward and there was a call for various kinds of talent."

"When I first went into the record business, there were only the following artists recording: Gaskin, solos and quartets; Dan Quinn, comic songs; Len Spencer, 'coon songs'; Vess Ossman, banjo; and a monologist whose name I have forgotten. (This may have been George Graham, a street-corner medicine spieler who made some of his monologs as a side line.) Neither the Edison nor the Victor companies had yet arrived on the scene. I forgot to mention that the Manhanset did make a trial date for Walter Miller, who was doing the experimenting for Edison (Miller, who died about a year ago, remained with the Edison organization to the end of his life, although the company's phonograph activities ended in 1929), but of course when Gaskin signed up with Columbia, that busted up the Manhanset outfit.

"Then it was that Sam Rous (known on records as S. H. Dudley), William F. Hooley, a fellow named Jim Reynard and Roger Harding organized a quartet and started to sing for Edison. This quartet was using the selections that the Manhanset had used for the United States Phonograph Company.

"The new quartet didn't seem to click with Mr. Miller, and he suggested that they get Bieling for Roger Harding and Jere Mahoney for Reynard. That then became the Edison Quartet which lasted for quite a while, until good old Jere Mahoney got a bad dose of inflammatory rheumatism, and he never sang with us again. He was replaced by John MacDonald (whose records appeared under the name of Harry MacDonough) and he was an excellent asset to the organization. This aggregation became Haydn, American and, of course, Edison Quartets."

(To be continued)

CLASSICAL RECORDS WANTED

EXCHANGING: Thousands rare vocal instrumental—1895-1935. Want cornet trombone early—Bing Crosby, Paul Whiteman, others.—Ernest Fox, 418½ East Islay St., St. Barbara, Calif. jly1001

MISCELLANEOUS

COLLECTORS send for list of obsolete operatic and specialty records.—Symphony Music Shop, 251 Huntington Ave., Boston, Mass. jly2061

REGINA MUSIC BOX with 47 disc, $75.00. Swiss type music box, 8 tunes, $50.00. Both in good condition.—T. Kelleher, 925 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, Mass. jly1521

SHEET MUSIC WANTED

ANTIQUE AUTOMOBILE COVERS — Sheet music relating to old automobile days with picture covers. Describe fully with price.—James Melton, Box 8, Westport, Conn. d16672

WANTED—SHEET MUSIC before 1910. Must concern the telephone in some manner. No other music wanted. State title, copyright year, and your price.—C. H. Swower, 1497 South 4th St., Columbus, Ohio. jly169

RECORDS FOR SALE

HOT JAZZ RECORDS — Collectors' items. Semi-monthly mail auctions. The fascinating way to build your collection. Send for current list.—Records, P. O. Box 511, Manhattan Beach, Calif. au6055

CLASSICAL RECORDS — Reasonable. Send stamped envelope for lists.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City, N. J. s112065

RECORDS, SHEET MUSIC—List, 10c.—Fore's, (Dept. O), 3151 High, Denver, Colo. ja12513

PHONOGRAPH RECORD ALBUMS—Sturdy construction, loose leaf Tally Ring binders, hold 12 records. Covered in beautiful simulated leather. Black, Brown, Green or Red. 12-inch $2.25, 10-inch $1.75. Send for booklet.—Matchless Album Co., Dept. H, Long Branch, N. J. jly1002

WOODYMAY RECORD CO., 77 Maywood St., Roxbury, Boston, Mass. Specializing in Edison cylinder and diamond disc records. Send us your Edison reproducers and $6.50. We will ship you a Woodymay Pickup, that is the collectors' joy. jly1002

ANCIENT EUROPEAN MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

An organological study of the musical instruments in the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston. Covers the years 1460 to about 1850. Gives history, typology, acoustical properties, construction details and tunings of all the instruments plus appendices and indices and bibliography. 536 pages, 89 illustrations. Send $10.00 for your copy to:—

HOBBIES MAGAZINE
2810 South Michigan Avenue - Chicago, Illinois

WANTED

BOOKS: Biographies of famous singers.

CATALOGS: BERLINER, BETTINI, EDISON, ZONOPHONE, ODEON, Okeh, BRUNSWICK Aeolian-Vocalion, PATHE, VICTOR & COLUMBIA before 1930 only. Foreign catalogs of any years. Supplements to catalogs of all makes. Advertisements of phonographs, gramophones, talking machines of all types as well as cylinder and disc records. Complete runs of supplements (listing and describing records) of recent years—Victor, Columbia, etc. of recent years.

PHOTOGRAPHS: Old time singers.

RECORDS: Red Seal single faced Victors bearing MONARCH and DE LUXE labels. "PATTI" and TAMAGNO records. MELBA records, but in 94,000 and 95,000 series only. BETTINI cylinders. EDISON GRAND OPERA CYLINDERS. COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS. PATHE 14" center start discs by Albers, Note, etc.—must be operatic. ZONOPHONE records by Plancon, Caruso, Calve and others. Any record by Edouard Lankow, Lillian Blauvelt Columbias: 30124 Romeo, A-5078 Barber of Seville, A-5119 Ouvrez/When Celia Sings, A-5120 Rodellinda/Norwegian Song.

EDISON GRAND OPERA CYLINDERS such as are listed in this month's issue; also cylinders by SARAH BERNHARDT.

BERLINER GRAMOPHONE discs by CHAUNCEY DEPEW, ADA REHAN, JESSIE BARTLETT DAVIS, JOSEPH JEFFERSON, DWIGHT MOODY, Rev. TALMAGE, MAGGIE MITCHELL, Mme. JANAUSCHEK, ROBERT INGERSOLL, W. H. CRANE, MARSHALL P. WILDER and other celebrities of the nineties.

PLEASE DO NOT ASK FOR OR OFFER POPULAR RECORDS OR MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. I AM INTERESTED ONLY IN RECORDS BY THE GREAT OPERA AND CONCERT (CLASSICAL) SINGERS & FAMOUS SPEAKERS.

NO LISTS OF RECORDS WANTED OR FOR SALE AVAILABLE.

STEPHEN FASSETT

944 Monroe Lane
Woodmere, L. I., N. Y.

out every chance you get and rescue from the melting pot as many records of the great singers of the past as you possibly can. Could there be a better way of paying homage to the great ones of the past, or of doing yourself a favor?

Plans for complete numerical lists of the Columbia-Fonotipia Series -- Help Wanted!!

Back in 1908 or thereabouts, when Columbia was beginning its policy of pressing records from the imported masters of the allied Fonotipia and Odeon companies, the labels for the domestic editions were printed with the original Fonotipia and Odeon numbers only. These Columbia-Fonotipias, as they are known to collectors, were all double-faced and apparently it was not until after the labels were printed that the Columbia officials realized what a nuisance it would be to classify them under the original numbers, which would naturally be different on both sides of the discs; so new double-faced numbers (same on both sides) were assigned, to keep the catalog clear and understandable. Instead of printing new labels, Columbia merely rubber-stamped the new numbers onto the labels in red ink. Thus we have the "B" and "T" series of Columbia-Fonotipia "Double-Disc" records. Now, I have in my possession a couple of commercial catalogs which list most of these records by their double-faced "T" and "B" numbers only, but it seems to me that a numerical list of this series would have much more value to HOBBIES' readers if it included the original numbers as well. Therefore I am asking collectors to examine their Columbia-Fonotipias and send me both the double and single numbers, so that a complete list can be published in a future issue of HOBBIES. Here is what I believe to be the simplest method of writing down the information. Suppose you have F5, which happens to be Anselmi singing arias from "Don Giovanni" (62167) and "Don Pasquale" (62183), just send me a card saying: F5: Don Giovanni — 62167; Don Pasquale — 62183. That's all; it's not even necessary to give the name of the artist. If all of you who have Columbia-Fonotipias will list them for me in this way we'll soon be able to enjoy the combined fruit of our individual labors. So please help if you can.

"EVERYDAY THINGS IN AMERICAN LIFE"

1607 - 1776

353 pages — Illustrated

Contents: Shelters and first houses; The fireplace, center of the home; In Dutch New York; Penn's Quaker City; Handwork at Ephrata; At Moravian Bethlehem; Scotch-Irish in the mountains; Georgian mansions; 18th Century furniture; Pewter; Silversmiths and silverware; Colonial glass; etc. . . . $3.00.

HOBBIES MAGAZINE
2810 S. Michigan Ave. Chicago, Ill.

"The Coney Island Crowd"

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

Pioneer Phonograph Singers

John Bieling, II.

LAST month's installment relating to the career of John Bieling, as told by himself, left off with Harry Macdonough replacing Jere Mahoney as second tenor of the Edison Quartet. That must have occurred in 1899, since Macdonough's first recording engagement with Edison was in October, 1898.

Now we pick up Mr. Bieling's recollections:

"Later on, Macdonough went with the Victor Company in charge of their New York laboratory. The name, 'American Quartet,' which had been used in Victor's earliest days, was revived in 1910, and Billy Murray became second tenor in Macdonough's place. Steve Porter took the baritone part, succeeding S. H. Dudley, who had become Victor catalog editor. The American Quartet thus was the same as the Haydn, with the exception of these changes. It comprised Murray, Bieling, Porter and Hooley. However, the Haydn remained for several years longer, because we sang under that name exclusively for Victor. This Quartet sang together as the Haydn for about 18 years — not a bad record for continued harmony and good fellowship.

"Now, while I am still on the subject of recording, I might add that I believe that I am the oldest living person who recorded commercially. Gaskin, Spencer, Ossman and Quinn, who died about two years ago, are all gone. Dan Quinn, had he still lived, would have out-ranked me by about two weeks. After he passed away, that left me all alone to sit and think of the good old days we all had together and the fine fellowship we used to enjoy in each other's company.

"You no doubt know that Macdonough and Hooley are dead. I don't know for sure whether old Sam Rous (Dudley) is also gone. He went to France many years ago. He was almost blind when he left. He was a few years older than I, so that would make him around 76 or 77, if he is still alive. I would give much to see him again, if only for an hour, just to reminisce."

At this point I shall cease quoting from the handsome, brown-eyed gentleman of Hempstead who looks so much younger than his years, and carry on the story of the male quartets in which he was so valuable a member.

The Haydn, obviously named in memory of the great Austrian composer, was for many years the premier male voice ensemble in the United States. Its popularity spread throughout the world, wherever English was understood, and became so great that in the spring of 1902 the singers were obliged to take several months off and go to England, where they made scads of records for the Gramophone and other English companies. I have been fortunate enough to obtain a few of their Gramophone records in excellent condition.

They continued singing as the Edison Quartet for several years more, but eventually, as the Haydn, became exclusive to Victor, when Macdonough and Dudley became directors of Victor recording departments. About 1912, the spelling of the quartet's name was changed to "Hayden," to conform with the way the general public had always insisted on pronouncing it. The idea of calling it the "High-dn" Quartet never did go well with the average record buyer.

When the American became an offshoot of the Hayden, it was able to record (under the name of the Premier Quartet) for Edison as well as Victor, owing to the fact that Billy Murray, star of the American, had a joint Victor-Edison contract. The Hayden, however, continued to be exclusive to Victor until it disbanded in 1914, after pressure of department duties made it more and more difficult for Macdonough and Dudley to find time to sing.

I believe the Hayden's last two records, issued in April, 1914, were "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" and "Cross the Great Divide I'll Wait For You." From the standpoint of balance and harmony, they were two of the organization's finest. Many Hayden records stayed in the Victor catalog until 1925, the year that saw the death of the horn process of recording, and two or three stuck it out a few years later. "In the Sweet By and By" and "Lead, Kindly Light" were the last to go, being listed in the 1930 catalog. They had been recorded nearly 30 years before.

Prior to this there was, for several years, a tendency to replace Hayden records with newly-recorded versions, but bearing the same catalog numbers, by the Peerless, Criterion and Shannon Quartets. This was not because of any fault in the Hayden's singing but because later recording methods allowed of technical improvements or the original Hayden masters had been damaged from much handling.

Just when Mr. Bieling had trouble with his voice and dropped out of the American Quartet is a matter of uncertainty. He believes it was 1914; but the actual time may have been 1918 or 1919, for his photo was carried in the catalog as the quartet's top tenor until the latter date. Incidentally, it is not generally known that the Heidleberg Quintet was exactly the same ensemble as the American Quartet, except that Will Oakland, the counter-tenor, was added as the star.

Bill Hooley, the remarkable basso, died around 1919 and was replaced by Donald Chalmers, who was also the bass of the Criterion Quartet and the Harmony Four. Upon Mr. Bieling's resignation, John Young, concert tenor, who was also a Criterion Quartet member, succeeded to his place. (The Criterion became the Roxy Quartet, which sang so long at the Roxy Theater in New York.) Murray and Steve Porter remained as the two original American Quartet members.

After Murray became an exclusive

Victor artist in 1921, Edison continued to use the Premier Quartet name for a year or two, but the singers were Porter, Billy Jones, Charles Hart and Harry Donaghy, who sang for other companies as the Harmonizers. The American Quartet made records occasionally for Victor until mid-1925. By that time, however, more changes had been made and the quartet was the same as the Peerless, except that Murray took Henry Burr's place as the "lead."

Sam Rous, mentioned so affectionately by Mr. Bieling, is probably still alive. He recovered his eyesight after going to France and became one of the most fascinating letter writers I have ever known. In 1933 he and his wife returned to this country and went to live in California, where they still were at last report. I hope they are living and will be well and happy for many years to come.

That last most emphatically goes, too, for John Bieling, who must be glad to know how many people today admire him for the fine work he did for so many years and are wishing him the best of luck, now and always!

"Talking Machine" Lore

C.D. Collins of Georges Mills, N.H., owned one of the first "talking machines" in New England. It was called "Berliner's Gramophone," and had a horn for concerts and ear tubes for private use. In recalling memories of this era, Mr. Collins says, "I have to laugh even now when I think how this machine astonished the old folks. They were very much surprised to hear a machine talk." Among the records which Mr. Collins used to listen to in the early days of the "talking machine" was one sent free to advertise the machine. It started off by saying: "I am known to everyone as Berliner's Gramophone, and as a 'talking machine.' I'm standing quite alone." Mr. Collins exhibited his "talking machine" at church socials charging 5c per person. He had six tubes; thus, he took in 30c per record. The proceeds, of course, went to the church. In one town, the minister, who had an eye for business, teamed up with Mr. Collins and gave a lecture while Mr. Collins furnished the "Gramophone Concert."

This George II inlaid walnut spinet, made by Charles Slade, London, in 1734, brought $475 at an auction conducted recently by the Parke-Bernet Galleries, Inc., New York, N. Y. It bears the inscription, "Carolus Slade, Londini, Fecit 1734." Its length is six feet, three inches, and height 18½ inches.

—Courtesy Parke-Bernet Galleries, Inc.

The Latin Point of View

— An Extract from a letter by Frank Garcia Montes —

NOTE: A Cuban, Frank Garcia Montes is one of the world's outstanding record collectors. His collection was begun long before the first World War and is still increasing both in quality and quantity. A man of comprehensive culture and musicianship, Dr. Montes has heard an enormous amount of opera on both sides of the Atlantic, and thus his attitude toward record collecting is much broader and more inclusive than that of collectors with more limited experience. The following was prompted by a question of mine regarding Rosina Storchio whose records fail, in my opinion, to reflect the greatness mentioned with such appreciation by Gatti Casazza in his "Memories of Opera."

"All that Gatti has said of Rosina Storchio in his book is true. I had the privilege of hearing her, past her prime, when she sang here (Havana) in 1921. She was then 45 years old but she looked as if she were 60. On days when no opera was given, she liked to go to wrestling matches, which were new to her, accompanied by Schipa, his wife Antoinette (now divorced), Titta Ruffo and myself. She walked very slowly and with some trouble and Schipa and I helped her along. Yet when she was acting she looked young and moved about the stage with agility. She did not have much voice left then, but in certain passages she rose to great heights. The expression, the accent given to the music, and her acting left everybody spellbound. All this is what made her a great artist, not beauty of voice nor the production of it. Singers of this kind have to be heard and seen at the same time; therefore the records alone will not make anybody enthusiastic.

"I have all the Fonotipia records she made in 1905, all the others she made for that company in 1908, as well as one of her G&T "Siberia" records of 1904. Her best records are "Boheme" (Leoncavallo)—Mimi perison la bandinetta and Ei domani from "Fra Diavolo." Her voice sounds prettier in the "Siberia" G&T, but none of her records is a convincing proof of her art. She did not excel in the arias and duets where singers with beautiful voices or great technical ability did. Her big moments were achieved in small phrases or in scenes that nobody else could make much of. I am speaking, of course, of the singer as I heard her. In "Manon" the Je suis encore toute etourdie and Voyons Manon were sung well enough, but in the St. Sulpice duet, when she began the phrase N'est-ce plus ma main, the audience was completely won and when the phrase C'est ne plus Manon came, everything and everybody else were forgotten and only Storchio was there. The same thing happened when she sang "Traviata." The big arias received but little enthusiasm, but in the second act, at the phrase Amami Alfredo, the public was at her feet and nobody else counted, only Storchio. It is noteworthy that in both operas she was singing with an artist who could have held his own among the giants of the past, that master of bel canto, Tito Schipa.

"I believe that the reputation of certain singers in Italy and in all Latin American countries cannot be judged by their records alone, because they were more actor-singers than true exponents of bel canto. In opera, Latins prefer a singer who is capable of conveying great enthusiasm to his public by impassioned singing or acting, to one who concentrates only on perfect voice production. The latter type, they feel, should sing only in concert, and I think they are right."

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

Albert Campbell

THE subject of this sketch was not only one of the first men to make a career of singing for phonograph records, he is also one of the most distinguished of that specialized brotherhood and belongs in anybody's list of the dozen greatest pioneer recording artists. Moreover, he is one of the most amiable and genial gentlemen I have ever known, and my several meetings with him remain among the imperishable memories of my one visit to New York, a couple of years ago.

As a rule, I would take anyone named Campbell to be of Scotch descent, but this tenor with the remarkably sweet "lyric" voice comes from a line of Irishmen. He was born in the Greenpoint section of Brooklyn on August 17, 1872. Although music always had an irresistible attraction for him, as a boy and very young man he was employed in the Corning Glass Works. At the same bench worked a cousin with whom Al frequently discussed his theatrical aspirations.

Finally, the cousin said: "Oh, Al, to --- with this glass business! Let's go on the stage!"

They did. The youngsters signed up with a number of traveling troupes, and Al sang "leading roles" in "The Chimes of Normandy" and other musical comedies and light operas popular in the late '80's and early '90's. Most of their trouping ended in disaster, however, and they came to know from sad experience what it meant to tramp back home over the railroad tracks.

By this time, though, Thomas Edison's new-fangled invention, the phonograph, was becoming a popular means of nickel-in-the-slot entertainment, and fragile wax cylinders were actually being heard in some homes. Returning to New York, young Mr. Campbell associated himself with three other fellows — Steve Porter, who became as great a recording celebrity as Al himself, James K. Reynard (mentioned in the sketches about John Bieling as being a member of the first quartet to make Edison cylinders) and Will C. (Bill) Jones. They called themselves the Diamond Comedy Four and began making records for the song publishing firm operated by Edward B. Marks and Joe Stern. In his book, "They All Sang," Marks, recalling those long-gone days, said:

"It was a 'plug' that Joe Stern and I saw the phonograph... We opened our own recording studio in a loft at 21 East Twentieth Street, a couple doors west of our publishing office.

"The first offering for the month was a series of records by the Diamond Quartet: A. C. Campbell, S. C. Porter, J. K. Reynard and Will C. Jones. They did an 'Imitation Medley' with 'imitations of the' nightingale, pigs, baby cry, crows, etc., concluding with a most amusing cat fight.' Their other numbers included 'The Cornfield Medley' with 'steamboat imitation, bells, whistles, banjos, etc.'"

Since the manufacturers of blank cylinders didn't look with favor upon the Marks-Stern enterprise, which was designed to "plug" exclusively the songs the firm published, the business of singing in the loft at 75 cents or a dollar a "round" didn't last long. But Al Campbell wasn't worried. He had discovered he had a natural recording voice, and by 1896 he was making solo five and one-half inch discs for Emile Berliner, then experimenting with records which had an abominably noisy surface and compared most unfavorably with the more popular cylinders. Mr. Campbell presented me with one of the Berliners by himself, "The Boy Guessed Right," during my New York stay.

Concurrently, he was also doing what was probably the first recorded advertising job. A man named Ike

Al Campbell as he appeared in 1892
Norcross for a time made "Jumbo" cylinders, six inches long. His recording studios were on 37th Street.

Among other things, these cylinders praised Quaker Oats and were distributed as advertising novelties by the breakfast food company. At the beginning an announcer would say, "Good morning, madam. Mr. Albert Campbell will now entertain you with a song." After Al had sung "The School Playground" or some other ditty of the day, the record would be concluded with a suave, "Thank you, madam. Remember, Quaker Oats are good for children."

The Columbia company had also moved from Washington and was making cylinders at 27th Street and Broadway. When it began making discs in 1902, separate studios on 26th Street were used. Edison, too, got into the commercial recording business around 1896, and two or three years later Campbell was one of the strong favorites of its catalog. An Edison list dated November 20, 1899, mentions two Campbell records, No. 7296, "For All Eternity," and 7297, "Mandy Lee." Both songs are well known today. The tenor is prominently shown in the front row of a group of 40 popular Edison recording artists, photographed in 1900. He is smiling quizzically and looking very boyish. Oddly, although the Victor company was directly "descended" from Berliner's early disc activities, Campbell does not appear to have sung for "His Master's Voice" until around 1907.

Although Al made many solo records, both in the earliest days when he sang by "rounds" and later when permanent "masters" came into use, he was destined to be best known as the first tenor of male quartets. In the beginning days, Columbia especially went in for this type of record, which usually appeared under the title of "The Columbia Quartet." Campbell was always a member of the ensemble, and was associated at various times with such other singers as Porter; Joe Belmont, best known as a whistler and today proprietor of a bird store in Radio City; George Gaskin; "Big Tom" Daniels and Henry Burr. One of the quartets consisted of Campbell, Daniels, Porter and Burr.

Then the late Stanley Grinstead ("Frank C. Stanley") organized the Peerless Quartet, and Al Campbell's greatest days began.

(To be Continued)

Notes on Old Ballads

THE word ballad is of Italian origin (ballate), and meant originally a dance-song, being derived from the middle Latin "ballare," corresponding to the Greek "ballizein," to dance. The ballad is a kind of a poem which it is very difficult to characterize. In the course of centuries it has undergone various transformations, and the name has been transferred to pieces which in extent, subject, and character have no longer anything in common with the primitive ballad. The confusion of ideas was rendered still worse from the circumstance that poems of exactly the same nature were styled sometimes romances, sometimes ballads, sometimes epic or lyric-epic, or poetic narratives; so that it was left to the caprice of the poet which of these generic names he would give to his production.

As early as the 12th century, the Italians gave the title of ballads to short, purely lyrical pieces, allied to the sonnet or still more to the madrigal, and which generally had love-sorrows for their subject. Dante has such "ballate." Akin to these are those French ballads which Moliere set himself against, and which fell into disuse. The earliest ballads, as the word is now understood, are those of England and Scotland, beginning about the 14th century. Such were these "Reliques of ancient English Poetry," which Selden collected, Pepys preserved, and Percy published. Ritson, the great English poetical antiquary, says that few are older than the reign of James I. The more ancient songs of the people perished by having been printed in single sheets, and by their humbler purchasers having no other library to preserve them than the walls on which they pasted them. Those we have consist of a succeeding race of ballads chiefly revived or written by Richard Johnson, the author of the romance of the Seven Champions, and Delony, the writer of Jack of Newbury's life. One Martin Parker was a most notorious ballad-scribbler in the reign of Charles I and Cromwell.

The home of the real ballad was the North of England and the South of Scotland. The martial spirit constantly kept up and exercised near the frontier of the two kingdoms inspired the inhabitants of the adjacent counties on both sides with the powers of poetry. The old minstrel ballads are in the northern dialect and abound with antique words and phrases. They are extremely incorrect and run into the utmost license of metre. They have also a romantic wildness and are in the true spirit of chivalry. The later type of the Stuart period are written in exacter measure, have a low or subordinate correctness, sometimes bordering on the insipid, yet often well adapted to the pathetic. These are generally in the southern dialect and exhibit a more modern phraseology, and are commonly descriptive of more modern manners.

The manner in which the older ballads have come down to us baffles any attempt at chronological arrangement. Some are derived solely from tradition in districts where they have been orally transmitted from generation to generation, time out of mind; some from broadsides that have escaped the march of time, yet in spite of their age these broadsides can never be relied upon as clues to the date of authorship; others have come from manuscripts, written at different periods, and presenting different versions of the same original.

"London Lackpenny" is curious for its record of the street cries and trades of London toward the close of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th century. The subject of which it treats was a frequent theme with the poets of the period.

"Sir Patrick Spens" was long admitted to be one of the earliest specimens of Scottish ballad poetry extant, but during the 19th century there was a considerable amount of discussion on the subject. It is now understood by many, on what is supposed to be reliable evidence, to have been written by Elizabeth Halkett, Lady Wardlaw, authoress of the ballad of "Hardyknute," the antiquity of which was also questioned for a time; but this point is still open to dispute. The ballad details the circumstances of the expedition to Norway, which sailed, by command to Alexander III, in 1281, for the purpose of conveying thither Margaret, his daughter, who was espoused to Eric, King of Norway. On the return of the fleet the catastrophe of the ballad occurred, and among others, Sir Patrick Spens, the presumed head of the expedition was drowned.

By Raymond J. Walker

(To be Continued)

to the Edison discs, but as they were pressed on a very hard material they had a sort of whistling surface noise that was disturbing. But I liked many of their artists and their band records had a very brilliant quality. But all in all, Victor was really the class of the field."

After reading the foregoing, I wonder how many HOBBIES readers will share with me the feeling that Mr. Harding should have hung on to his records, or at least to those of such notably unsurpassable vocal quality as to be premanently immune to obsolescence. A large part of his collection could gradually have been replaced with modern recordings, infinitely superior to the old, mechanically, and artistically as good or better. But to the hundreds of records which, from a standpoint of vocal performance, were the cream of the crop he should have remained loyal, as they were examples of great singing that could not be equalled in our day. This, mind you, is looking at the question from a purely realistic viewpoint, excluding the often important factor of sentiment. To this select group of recordings Mr. Harding, a man who is obviously thorough in all things, could have listened today with more satisfaction than ever before, owing to the vastly superior reproduction now available to all who will take the trouble to search it out from the mass of poor equipment that is still discouragingly prevalent. And then, to take care of a musical taste that had expanded far beyond the narrow limits of the phonograph as it was before the competition of the radio opened up vast new tone worlds (almost killing it in the process) Mr. Harding would have found a tremendously comprehensive repertoire of an extent undreamed of thirty years ago. The cult of beautiful singing on old records could no longer have filled his entire musical horizon, as it once did and as it still does with many readers of this page, but at least it would have provided him with a continuously beautiful sunset to his musical days.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Albert Campbell -- II

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

WHEN Frank C. Stanley brought the Peerless Quartet into being he put together a male voice foursome that many lovers of old records consider the greatest ever assembled. In the beginning it consisted of Stanley as leader (he nearly always sang the solo parts in spite of being the basso); Albert Campbell, first tenor; Henry Burr, then a boy who had not reached the age of 21, second tenor; and Arthur Collins, baritone. All four singers were famous soloists, and all are usually listed as among the most popular and outstanding recordings of their day. My own private list of "the twelve greatest" includes them all.

The quartet began singing together in, or about 1905, and continued unchanged until Stanley's death in December, 1910. It was known as the Peerless on most records, but made a few as "The Invincible Four," and as long as Stanley lived was "The Columbia Quartet" on that company's records. It began calling itself the Peerless also on Columbia, however, after Burr assumed the management and obtained John H. Meyer, a prominent New York church basso, to take Stanley's place. Thereafter nearly all the solo work was done by Burr, but Campbell's sweet harmony was one of the chief charms of the quartet's work.

A most accomplished business man, as well as a consummate artist, Burr obtained regular recording engagements for the Peerless with all American recording companies. To give greater variety, he and Campbell began making in 1909, a long series of recorded duets, and in 1916 came the Sterling Trio, which was the same as the quartet except that Collins, the baritone, was not used. Collins was replaced by Frank Croxton in 1917, and the personnel then remained unchanged until 1925. But that is getting ahead of the story.

Because of the delicate lyric quality of his voice, Mr. Campbell decided around 1908 to do no more solo work but to confine himself to ensemble singing. In the meantime, though, his Columbia records of "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," "Dreaming" and "School Days" had sold enormously, as had his Victor of "Love Me and the World is Mine." As far as I know, his only solo work after 1908 consisted of a few records made for a short-lived phonograph company organized by Burr in 1915 — while Henry was still making dozens of records a month for other companies as a free-lance. Burr's company made seven-inch Par-O-Ket and ten-inch Phonotype records, of vertical cut, like Edison and Pathé discs. Not many machines of that day would play them and they were soon discontinued. Mr. Campbell gave me a copy of his rendition of "Kate O'Don-

Genesis

In the beginning were the cylinders to entertain the world. The true collector will not be without them, for they will prove to be more glamorous than discs.

WOODYMAY RECORD CO.

77 Maywood Street
Roxbury, Boston, Mass.

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR SALE. "Imperial Symphonion" Music Box with 15 No. 10 discs. Perfect running order. Price $25. — W. P. Kesel, 50 - 7th St., Valley Stream, L. I., N. Y. o1521

WANTED. Don't sacrifice your old classical and operatic phonograph records for junk! Highest prices paid for old cylinders or discs. Send list to—G. H. Smith, 843 Middle St., Portsmouth, N. H. mh7024

SHEET MUSIC WANTED

ANTIQUE AUTOMOBILE COVERS — Sheet music relating to old automobile days with picture covers. Describe fully with price.—James Melton, Box 8, Westport, Conn. d1672

WANTED. SHEET MUSIC before 1910. Must concern the telephone in some manner. No other music wanted. State title, copyright year, and your price.—C. H. Swoyer, 1497 South 4th St., Columbus, O. n3373

RECORDS FOR SALE

COLLECTORS send for list of rare operatic and specialty records. — Symphony Music Shop, 251 Huntington Avenue, Boston, Mass. n2081

RECORDS, SHEET MUSIC—List, 10c. —Fore's, (Dept. O), 3151 High, Denver, Colo. jal2513

OLD CYLINDER RECORDS, 20 for $1.00. — E. Sheppard, Catskill, N. Y. o156

DISPOSING OF OVER 2000 rare, old records at auction. Complete list, 50c (refunded with purchase). — E. O. Brown, 133 Kendalia, San Antonio, Tex. n2032

STELLA MUSIC DISKS, one hundred and sixty, all different, in lot or ten for seven dollars. — Hill Top Hotel, Harpers Ferry, W. Va. o1511

WOODYMAY RECORD CO., 77 Maywood St., Roxbury, Boston, Mass. In the time of our grandparents cylinder records were the medium of home entertainment and the records issued in their heyday now prove to be most interesting. For real Americana, the collector should turn to cylinders. Electrically reproduced with the Woodymay Pickup, cylinders outshine all discs made before 1920. o1003

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

● WANTED TO BUY—3c per word for 1 month; 6 months for the price of four; 12 months for the price of seven.

● FOR SALE—5c per word for 1 month; 6 months for the price of four; 12 months for the price of seven.

ohue" on a Par-O-Ket after I recalled his singing that song on the one occasion when I heard Burr's concert troupe, the Eight Victor Artists, in person.

Late in 1920, the Peerless, which had made thousands of records during its long "sing for everybody" career, signed up exclusively with Victor and for the next five years Al Campbell's singing career was less strenuous, since it was confined to his duets with Burr and work with the Sterling and Peerless ensembles for Victor alone — in addition, of course, to the long concert tours made by the immortal Eight. His associates in the latter troupe recall him with great affection as "one of the finest little fellows in the world — a chap you could always get along with, who always said plainly what he thought about anything and let it go at that."

In 1925 Burr decided to change the Peerless personnel, and Campbell, Meyer and Croxton gave way to Carl Mathieu, Stanley Baughman and James Stanley — a group which stayed together about three years before changing theatrical conditions caused the disbanding of the troupe. Although regretting to leave the Peerless, Al was glad enough of the opportunity to spend more time at his home in Flushing. He struck up a partnership with Jack Kaufman, brother of Irving Kaufman, of recording and radio fame, and they did well for two years or so, making duet records for most of the minor and some of the larger recording firms. Then Kaufman decided to return to vaudeville with his brother, and the Campbell — Kaufman team "split." Al received a good offer from one of the large minstrel companies to travel with it as a special attraction and spent two or three seasons as a featured ballad singer on the road.

At length, again tired of traveling, he returned to New York, where today he is the prosperous operator of a talent booking agency. Last winter, he tells me, he headed a Gay Nineties unit, featuring a male trio with himself as tenor soloist, which was kept busy, playing all the R.K.O. and Loew vaudeville houses in New York, Brooklyn, and vicinity. He still has the same sweet, high tenor voice which endeared him to millions of buyers of records and, as I said in the article published last month, is one of the most genial and entertaining of companions. I should also have paid tribute to his memory of everything concerned with the old recording days. It is almost miraculous in its accuracy and capacity to assemble masses of more or less related detail.

Today Al Campbell is in good health and enjoying life, although he has passed 70. In appearance, he is a small fellow — probably not more than five feet and six inches in height — with twinkling Irish-blue eyes, and a thick mass of black hair, only lightly touched with gray. It has been just within the last half dozen years that any gray has crept in at all. He has the suppleness of an acrobat and, in the words of one of his cronies, "Al Campbell can turn handsprings all over the place today, any time he wants to."

On the last day of my New York stay, Al took me to meet three notable recording artists — Aileen Stanley (whom we didn't find in her office), John Meyer and the late Billy Jones, of the famous Jones-Hare radio team. We parted at the door of Jack Caidin's second-hand record store and as we shook hands, Al smilingly asked: "Did you ever hear any Zon-o-phone records by Frank Howard?"

"Yes," I replied, "and I never have been able to find out who he was."

"Frank Howard," my friend returned, "was a fellow named Albert Campbell, singing in disguise. I used that name only for Zon-o-phone and I never made records under any other assumed name."

It was characteristic of Al Campbell that at the last moment he should tell me something I badly wanted to know. He is, and always will be, one of my "favorite people," and I am hoping that I shall yet be privileged to have many more meetings and meals at Lindy's with the veteran tenor to whom I am wishing all the luck in the world — and then some!

Notes on OLD BALLADS

By R. J. WALKER

The "Water O' Wearie's Well" is the Scotch version of the tradition preserved in the English ballad of "The Outlandish Knight." The story is also common to Denmark and Germany, with variations of the catastrophe. The locality assigned to the tradition by Chambers is a wild part of the coast of Carrick. Carlton Castle is pointed out as the residence of the false knight, and Gamesloup, a high rock overlooking the sea, as the place where the Scotch Bluebeard was in the habit of drowning his wives. The heroine of the ballad is said to have been a member of the family of Kennedy of Colzean, later represented by the Earls of Cassilis. Dixon, in his collection for the Percy Society, transfers the scene to Balwearie Castle, in Fifeshire.

"Robin Hood and Allen-a-Dale" was originally published by Ritson from a black-letter copy in the collection of Major Pearson. It exhibits Robin Hood in one of his most attractive aspects, affording help to a distressed lover. Percy printed "Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne." Percy also published "The Dragon of Wantley," a humorous song which is to old metrical romances and ballads of chivalry, what "Don Quixote" is to prose narratives of that kind — a lively satire on their extravagant fictions. It was probably written early in the 17th century. Percy obtained his version from one in Roman letters in the Pepys collection.

"Barbara Allen's Cruelty" is given by Percy, with some corrections, from an old black-letter copy entitled, "Barbara Allen's Cruelty, or the young man's tragedy." Brewer says this ballad was by Allen Ramsay (1724) but Pepys has a lady friend who signs herself "Barbara Allen." The tale is that Sir John Grehme was dying out of love of Barbara Allen. Barbara went to see him, and, drawing aside the curtain, said, "Young man, I think ye're dyan." She then left him; but had not gone above a mile or so when she heard the death-bell "knellin." She had a change of heart and went home and died of grief.

There are many other ballads and there have been many collections of both English and Scotch ballads. In these collections the ballads most often appearing are versions of "Adam Bell," "The Douglas Tragedy," "Edom o' Gordon," "Fair Rosamond," "Gil Morice," "Hardyknute," "King Arthur's Death," "The Nut-Brown Maid," "Patient Grissell," "Sweet William's Ghost," and "The Wee Wee Man."

Few men of letters have not read the collections which have been made of those charming "Chansionettes," to which French poetry owes a great share of its fame among foreigners. These treasures of wit and gaiety, which for many years have been in the mouths of Frenchmen, are rapidly being forgotten and are being buried in the dust of libraries. Then there are the old French "Vaudevilles," formerly sung at meals by the company. They were originally invented by a fuller of Vaud de Vire, or the valley of the river Vire, and were sung by his men to amuse themselves as they spread their cloths on the banks of the river. At first these gay playful effusions were called the songs of Vau de Vire, till they became known as "Vaudevilles."

"EVERYDAY THINGS IN AMERICAN LIFE"

1607 - 1776

353 Pages — Illustrated

Contents: Shelters and first houses; The fireplace center of the home; In Dutch New York; Penn's Quaker City; Handwork at Ephrata; At Moravian Bethlehem; Scotch-Irish in the mountains; Georgian mansions; 18th Century furniture; Pewter, Silversmiths and silverware; Colonial glass; etc. . . $3.00.

HOBBIES MAGAZINE

2810 S. Michigan Ave.,

Chicago, Illinois

From Societa Italian di Fonotipia—Milan, Italy." On the back is a purple label, the same size as the one on the front, which reads in gold letters: "At great expense we have secured the right to offer to the American public recordings made in Europe by the Societa Italiana di Fonotipia, an organization formed to perpetuate the performances of celebrated artists. This record is pressed in the United States by the General Phonograph Corporation, makers of the famous Okeh record—the record of quality—etc., etc. The facsimile signature on the label is that of the original artist."

Perhaps the record is not at all unusual, but it is the only one like it I have ever seen.

Very truly yours,
Maynard Pappenfort.

—o—

Dear Mr. Pappenfort:

Thank you very much for taking the trouble to send in the correction of my misstatement in the "Outline for a De Gogorza Discography." I hope other collectors owning black seal Victors by De Gogorza (under this, his own name) will list them for us.

The famous Societa Italiana di Fonotipia of Milan, Italy, flourished in Europe for many years, issuing a great many fine records. It began, I believe, in 1904 but of its more recent history I can tell you little. It was part of a big combine which included, in Europe, Odeon and Parlophone. About 1908, American Columbia began issuing Fonotipia records, a numerical list of which will soon be printed in this magazine, but after five or six years this policy was abandoned and the records dropped from the catalog. However, about 1921, The General Phonograph Corporation, makers of the Okeh record, secured a license to manufacture and distribute in the U. S. A. Fonotipia and Odeon records, of which your Stracciari is one. The actual date of recording of many of these discs was 10 years or more prior to their appearance under the Okeh seal, but mechanically they were so fine that I doubt if the public ever suspected they were not the latest thing. Incidentally, the Okeh pressings were far smoother and clearer, in my opinion, than the earlier ones by Columbia—or the Fonotipia society itself. Other Odeon and Fonotipia artists who appeared on Okeh records included: Amato, McCormack, Hempel, Erb, Ivogun, Jadlowker, Slezak, Destinn, Didur, Kubelik, Dux, Bonci, Corradetti, Piccaver, D'Albert, Zenatello, Jeritz, Piccaluga, Russ, Tauber, Lauri-Volpi. An extremely distinguished roster, yet for some reason these records, which included some magnificent performances, never achieved the circulation here that they deserved. This is not to say that, judged purely as collectors' items, they are rarities of the first water. But on the other hand, they are none too easy to find and I, for one, wish I had a lot more of them.

Sincerely yours,
Stephen Fasset.

The Twentieth Century Graphophone

Extract from a Letter by Angus Joss

"In your 'Historical Records' section of the September HOBBIES, you refer to the Twentieth Century Graphophone, stating that you had never seen one and knew of no collector who had a machine of this kind. I have owned a model B. C. of this type for a number of years and recently bought a B. F. model. I have only one of the six and one-eighth inch cylinders for which the Twentieth Century Graphophone was especially designed and unfortunately it is not in good condition. I know of only three others in the United States and there is a reason for their scarcity. One collector has two of the records in good condition.

"The model B. C. is probably the most unique machine ever manufactured. It was designed for large volume and had a four-inch diaphragm. A long transmission containing a leather shoe rides over a slowly revolving amber reel, thus creating a tension on the diaphragm and giving a deeper tone than any other phonograph of the period. Although I have experimented with this model extensively, I have never been able to get any real volume out of it, although I understand that when working properly it could be heard half a mile away."

Mr. Joss adds that in his opinion the Twentieth Century cylinders were discontinued by Columbia in 1908, their unusual length apparently making them particularly liable to breakage and hence impractical for public use. And so the subject rests—temporarily, I hope.

Pasquale Amato Dead

Next month I hope to offer a brief survey of the recordings of this famous baritone who died in August.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Arthur Collins, I

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

SOME months ago, in writing of John Bieling, I mentioned the difficulty I experienced in obtaining, at third or fourth hand, reliable information concerning the men and women who made records many years ago.

When I decided to sketch the career of Arthur Collins, who is the favorite pioneer recording comedian of a large number of collectors—including, to name only a few, Charlie Sniffin of New York, John L. Norton, Sr., of Massachusetts, and Cecil C. Smith of Minnesota—I found it particularly vexatious to obtain the facts.

For instance, an English publication, the Talking Machine News, in its June, 1907, issue, said Mr. Collins was "born on the bosom of the broad Atlantic in the memorable gale of '68, aboard his father's clipper, 'The Walter Pharo,' long engaged in Atlantic coast trade." On the other hand, a 1914 Edison cylinder record catalog said the comedian was born in Philadelphia, of Quaker descent.

What to do? Since Mr. Collins is usually ranked as one of the half dozen most popular singers of the phonograph, I wanted to be as accurate as possible. Finally, I wrote to the singer's widow, who before her marriage was Miss Anna Leah Cennolly, and asked her to help me. In reply, I received two charming letters, full of facts I needed, and this biographical tribute to a great artist may therefore be depended upon as authentic, the more especially since much of it will be in Mrs. Collins' own words. Incidentally, her opening remarks place her in the long-memoried class of Albert Campbell, who, when he first met me in New York, apologized for not having replied to a letter I had written to him 10 years before, but which he had mislaid. Says Mrs. Collins:

Harlan and Collins, popular artists of their day. Their records are now collectors' items.

"Before answering the questions in regard to Arthur's birthplace, etc., would like to tell you that it was only about two weeks ago I was going over some of the old papers, letters, etc., in my file here, and came across your letter to Arthur, dated August 29, 1931. We had read the letter many times, and Arthur said 'he must be a fine young man' and he did want to answer it, but as he was not so well . . . we never got to it . . . I always wanted to reply to that nice letter and now that you have given me the opportunity, I will do so to the best of my ability, and do all I can to give you the correct dates in regard to Arthur's life."

The singer's widow says that his full name was Arthur Francis Collins. His given names were after those of his father and mother.

"Arthur," Mrs. Collins continues, "was born on February 7, 1864, in the home of his grandfather, the Reverend Joseph Perry (chaplain in the U.S. Navy) on Gerard Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa. His father was Captain Arthur Collins, a devout Quaker. When Arthur was about 14 his father retired from the sea and bought a home in Barnegat, N. J., where he opened a big country store. Arthur often told of his trips during vacation on his father's three-masted schooner and how he furling his first sail at 12 years of age and also how he was 'lashed to the mast' several times during hurricanes and tropical storms off the Florida coast on the way from South America."

Mrs. Collins doesn't mention it, but the Edison publication, "Along Broadway," told in 1919 of how on one occasion Arthur fell overboard, came within an inch or two of drowning, but managed to tie a coil of halyard which his father threw him around his waist, was drawn to deck and given a sound thrashing for getting his clothes wet! This is reminiscent of Billy Murray's youthful experiences of getting caught in quicksand and almost drowning a couple of times. The early paths of the destined great appear to be beset with dangers!

But let us return to Mrs. Collins' narrative:

"Arthur never took to commercial life, so he joined the life-saving station on the Jersey coast and could tell many wonderful stories of rescues of people shipwrecked off the coast. At 17 he sang at church festivals and concerts and people began to know he had a wonderful voice. His folks sent him to Philadelphia to study voice culture and he had a good training with Brilla and other teachers. While walking one day past the Opera House, he noticed a sign, 'Singers Wanted,' and he turned in at the stage door, went over to a man seated at the piano and said, 'I have a voice and would like to sing for you.' He had no music with him but said he would sing 'The Bridge.' When he finished everyone applauded and he was told to come round the next day for rehearsal.

"It was the Old King Company, which was a failure on the road. He then joined a company, starring Fay Templeton, which was another failure. He then sang in summer operas out in St. Louis, and played parts. Next he went with Francis Wilson in 'Merry Monarch' and was with him for ten years.

"Then we met. We sang together, but when he became famous I 'backed upstage,' as one singer in a family was enough. No one ever appreciated Arthur's beautiful voice more than I did. We were married in 1895 by a curate of St. Timothy's Episcopal Church, West 57th Street, New York City. We had one son, Arthur Perry Collins. He was in the World War, and he and his son were called in the last draft."

Arthur, who was the oldest of 10 children — eight sons and two daughters, of whom six are still living — eventually decided, Mrs. Collins relates, that he wanted to retire from the stage and settle down to private life, so he studied shorthand, typewriting and bookkeeping, and went to work for a cigar company.

Fortunately for him, however, "in about six months his right arm became lame and painful, so he had to give the job up. When he recovered he went with the De Wolf Hopper Company. While with them, he received a letter from the Edison Phonograph Company, asking him to come to Orange, N. J., and make a trial.

"He went at the earliest opportunity, and Mr. Edison was very much pleased. So Arthur began his phonograph career on May 16, 1898. He sang and announced for the Edison Company exclusively for five years. After that he sang for all the companies." (Author's note. — Mrs. Collins appears in error about her husband singing exclusively for Edison from 1898 to 1903. He made some of the early small Berliner discs, and I have many Victor, Columbia and Zonophone records made by him in 1901 and 1902.)

"About 1900 Byron G. Harlan joined the Edison company and it was then that the great singing team of Collins and Harlan started. The world knows the result. Their slogan was 'laugh and the world laughs with you.'"

Here I shall end this month's quotations from Mrs. Collins. It should be pointed out, however, that before the immortal team of Collins and Harlan came into being, Mr. Collins had a somewhat similar, but brief-lived, partnership with the late Joe Natus. I have several records by them, including "Whoa, Bill!" and "I Got Mine." (To be continued)

NOTE. Since "The Coney Island Crowd," a catchy but ambiguous title for this department, has given way to "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists," several collectors have asked me to explain the meaning of the former heading. That is easily done. A banquet was held by the Victor company a good many years ago at which officials, dealers and recording artists were present. One of the officials made a talk in which he urged the dealers to concentrate on selling Red Seal records and "wean people away from 'the Coney Island stuff.'"

While the recorders of popular music were feeling embarrassed and a bit hurt, Eldridge R. Johnson, president of Victor, arose and said he felt it due to "our Black Label artists" to point out that their records, selling in millions, made it possible to issue Red Seal records, "because the profits we make from them more than absorb our Red Seal losses."

In joking reference to the Coney Island phrase, the popular recorders fell into the habit of calling themselves "the Coney Island Crowd," a phrase which I adopted when my articles first began appearing in HOBBIES.—U. W.

Guy Saulsbury Spicer, Minn.

MUSIC
Regina music box, 12 discs	$25.00
Swiss music box, lg., perfect	50.00
Concert organ, 50 rolls	10.00
Edison 2 & 4 minute machine, 50 records	7.50
Musical alarm clock	12.50

LAMPS
Hanging lamp with 32 prisms, pretty	$ 7.50
Parlor lamps, $5.00 to	7.50
Carriage lamps, pr.	5.00
Street lamps	17.50
Red Overlay Hand lamp	8.50
Amber and frosted hanging lamp with prisms	15.00

HORSE AND BUGGY ITEMS
Surrey buggy	45.00
Driving harness	15.00
Buggy foot warmer	2.50
Sleighbells, $2.50 to	7.50
Flowing blue plate, 7 1/4 inch, Lavenport	3.00
Fine fur robe	35.00

SCANDINAVIAN ITEMS
Copper tea kettle	$ 5.00
Dowry chest, dated 1835	15.00
Wooden painted sewing box, attractive	6.00
Old carved pipe	3.50
Set of 6 fine matched chimebells	6.00
Swedish snuff box brass	2.00
Glass pint flask, flint, raised crown	7.50

MOUNTED ANIMALS AND BIRDS
Elk head	$25.00
Badger	10.00
Grouse	7.50
Pheasant	6.00
Pair wood duck	12.50
Pair deer horns	2.50
Pair elk horns	5.00

INDIAN RELICS
Grooved stone hammers	$ 2.00
Shirt covered with elk teeth and bone carvings	50.00
10 fine arrowheads	1.00

RELICS
Iron tea kettle	$2.50
Iron kettle with legs	2.00
Stilliard scale	2.00
French 75 brass shell	3.00

his singing in his later years was as hollow and dead as it had been brilliant and alive when he was in his prime.

"Getting back to the question of the records, I do not say that they falsify his essential qualities. The scale is there; so is the compass; so is the bold and vital sound of the tone, and there are clear suggestions of plenty of volume. The faults, such as an occasional bleating, a certain hint of throatiness and recurring suggestions of strain, may be magnified in the recordings, but certainly they were actually in the singing. The period in which these records were made was, as you know, a considerably later one than that in which various tricks were resorted to, to prevent blasting in the recording. It was that earlier period which falsified even the basic sound of many voices, making basses sound like tenors, baritones like tenors, and sopranos like nothing that was ever heard on earth."

Mr. Thompson's letter gives such a complete picture of Amato and his records that there is little for me to do beyond outlining the facts of his career and adding a few details concerning his recording activities. Amato was born in Naples, Italy, on March 21, 1878, and died in Jackson Heights, N. Y., on August 12, 1942. He made his debut at the Bellini Theatre in 1900, as Germont, and after that toured Italy, Germany, England, Egypt and South America. In Buenos Aires he met Toscanini and an engagement at La Scala was the result. He became a great favorite there, but when Toscanini and Gatti-Casazza came to New York Amato soon followed, making his Metropolitan debut, as Germont, on November 20, 1908. He established himself quickly as an exceptionally fine singing actor and appeared again and again in casts directed by Toscanini. Cursed with ill health from his early days, Amato was forced to retire from the Metropolitan in 1921 and although he appeared now and then in later years, as Mr. Thompson says, there was little of the old Amato voice to be heard. In recent years he had been professor of voice at the Louisiana State University. Those who want a more comprehensive story of Amato's career will have little trouble in finding it, in Musical America for September, for example.

In Italy, Amato sang for Fonotipia in 1907, 1908 and 1909 and some of these records were pressed in the U. S. A. in the Columbia-Fonotipia series. I'm not familiar with enough of them to express an opinion of their merit. His first Victors appeared in 1912 and while he recorded for a comparatively short period of a few years, his records sold well and, for the most part, kept their place in the catalog until the end of the acoustic period. Mr. Thompson's recommendations are invaluable, since they come from an authority who actually heard Amato in person many times. To my ears, it sometimes seems that Victor occasionally thinned the quality of Amato's vigorous baritone, and as sheer sound his recorded tones may not always please as much as those of other favorite baritones. But for all his vigor, Amato was not, like so many baritones, all brawn and no brains, and his dramatic intelligence and arresting personality make all of his recorded interpretations worthwhile. Listen, for instance, to his Rigoletto on 88340/41 (doubled on 6041). Of all the interpretations of the "Largo al factotum" in my collection, his is one of my very favorites, by reason of its irresistibly spontaneous comedy (88329 or 6039). Later in his career Amato made at least one record for Columbia, a little-known collectors' item that was listed on page 11 of the March, 1942, HOBBIES.

Many collectors may find themselves somewhat in disagreement with Mr. Thompson's condemnation of the recording of the earliest 1900's, since most of us who have studied them, comparing with later versions, feel that they are like the little girl with the curl in the middle of her forehead.... when they're good, they're very, very good and when they're bad they're horrid!

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

ARTHUR COLLINS II

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

ARTHUR Collins' success, when he began making records in 1898, was immediate and overwhelming, and he was destined to remain a favorite for more than 25 years.

From the very beginning he was especially identified with what were known as "coon songs"—catchy, syn-copated ditties which treated, humorously or with mock pathos the sentimental and economic problems of the nation's negroes. His facility with dialect made him perhaps the greatest of all interpreters of this type of composition, but Mrs. Collins says:

"Arthur never liked the term, 'coon singer.' Several papers out West billed him as 'The King of Ragtime Songs,' which he thought was better. He particularly loved to sing the old plantation-type of music, especially the Foster songs. 'Old Black Joe' was his masterpiece and audiences all over the country demanded it always."

Mrs. Collins' success was also due in part to other factors. There probably has never been a sweeter, more naturally musical baritone voice than his. It was beautifully trained and he never tired of practicing in his efforts to improve it. I have heard, I am sure, more than a thousand records in which the comedian took part and have yet to hear one in which the singing could be described as careless or bad. Always he gave the impression of complete competence and impeccable craftsmanship.

Then, too, Arthur Collins managed invariably to get into the wax the impression of a warm, lovable personality. The unctuous sound of his chuckles in dialect work is unfailingly charming. His negro heroes usually were in hard luck, but they bore up bravely and saw the funny side of their own misfortunes. The Victor catalogs used to phrase it well when they said: "Mr. Collins is one of the most successful singers of 'coon songs.' His success in this particular type of song is quite unique and is due in a large measure to the sympathetic, human way in which his own delightful personality reveals itself through his records. In addition he has a splendid voice and a wonderful faculty for making the words sound clear and understandable, which is no easy task in dialect songs."

An Edison monthly supplement issued late in 1899 shows clearly how the comedian climbed into popularity in little more than a year. In this one supplement alone the following new records are listed by him: 7317, "All Coons Look Alike to Me" (I have a copy of this); 7316, "Camp-in' on de Ole Swanee;" 7318, "De Possum Chase;" 7243, "I Ain't Seen No Messenger Boy;" 7278, "I'd Leave My Happy Home for You" (how Henry Hamblen, of Nashville, would like to find an unplayed copy of that!) and 7240, "I've Just Received a Telegram from Baby." Nearly all had accompaniments by Vess L. Ossman, "The Banjo King." Collins' name is also one of the most prominent in the 1902 and 1903 Edison cylinder record catalogs.

Mrs. Arthur Collins, wife of the late recording artist featured in this series. Mrs. Collins recalls the history of her husband's career in this series.

When the Collins and Harlan partnership began, early in the 20th century, phonograph history was made. Harlan had an exquisite tenor voice and was unsurpassable in his impersonations of amorous colored women as Collins was in taking the male role. Together they constituted what was probably the most popular team of comedians in the history of the phonograph. Only Billy Jones and Ernest Hare, who came along many years later, might have been able, at the height of their careers, to dispute the claim.

Although Collins and Harlan were preeminently identified with negro dialect work, their earliest association was largely in what might be called "rube stuff." Both were great in their impersonations of the stage conceptions of our bucolic element, and such duet records as "Closing Time in a Country Grocery," "The Farmer and the Dude," "The Cat and the Fly Paper" and "Two Rubes in a Tavern" were widely popular. The "coon songs" proved, however, to have the more lasting appeal. Soon the comedians were best known for their duet work, although Collins continued to record many solos, as did Harlan, who specialized in singing tearful ballads about lonely little children who usually died and went to heaven in the second verse.

Mrs. Collins expresses belief that Arthur's two-minute Edison cylinder No. 7404, "Mandy Lee," was the record which had the most lasting hold on the affections of his admirers. "He received letters from all over the world," she says, "thanking him for that record."

There is no doubt, however, that sales figures would show the crowning point of the comedian's career came in 1905, when he recorded "The Preacher and the Bear" for every American company. My belief is that more copies of this song have been sold than of any other record ever made by anybody. I have found that, in something like nine cases out of ten, when people learn I have a large collection of old-time records, they ask, "Have you got 'The Preacher and the Bear?'" and add, "That's the first record I can remember ever hearing. My grandfather used to have it on an old Edison machine."

It would be interesting if we could know how many millions of copies of that record, which told, to a catchy tune, about a colored preacher's going hunting on Sunday and being treed by a grizzly bear, have been sold. As new phonograph companies sprang up, Mr. Collins was called upon to record it for them. He made new records of it within two or three years of his retirement from professional singing. Victor, Columbia and Edison all had him remake their records in later years, presumably for the benefit of improved orchestration. On the one occasion I heard him sing on the stage, he was called on for it and gave it, with the assistance of the other eight Victor Artists in the chorus. No doubt he sang Joe Arzonias's comic masterpiece whenever and wherever he went.

Around 1905 or 1906, Collins and Harlan teamed forces with Billy Murray and Steve Porter, and the result was a male quartet which sang at many club dinners and other social events in New York. They also called themselves the Rambler Minstrel Company and made many black-face records in which Porter was the interlocutor, and either Murray or Collins took the star solo singing parts. Two or three years later the organization, which later became known as the Eight Famous Victor Artists, began to make concert tours, and Collins and Harlan were among the most popular members of the troupe. Both were large men, weighing well over 200 pounds each, and Murray, as master of ceremonies, sometimes introduced them as "the Half Ton Duo." They were also great favorites of Sam Rous, who wrote the Victor catalog record descriptions, and he had many pet names for them, such as "The Klassical Koon Komedie Kouple," "The Pleasant, Portly and Popular Comedians," "The Comedy Twins," "The Black-face Brothers," and so on.

From 1912 on, Mr. Collins was frequently referred to by his fellow troupers as "Old Joe, the Pirate." This affectionate title was applied in fun because of his large stature, his swarthy complexion and his early sea experiences. The "Joe" came from one of his most popular records, "When Uncle Joe Plays a Rag on His Old Banjo."

For more than 10 years the baritone was a member of the Peerless Quartet, in which he always took the lead when negro songs were sung. In 1917, however, he was succeeded by Frank Croxton, and shortly after the World War ended Collins and Harlan signed a contract with Edison by which they traveled extensively, doing "tone test" work and restricting their recording largely to the Edison Company. It was this engagement which resulted in Collins' receiving grave injuries that for a time endangered his life.

(To be Continued.)

CIRCUSIANA

(Continued from page 14)

too, are covered with autographed pictures, and two large tables with drawers hold hundreds of collection pieces "and other stuff that a circus fan would keep to pore over during the cold winter months when the shows are in quarters preparing for another season."

Among the many posters on the walls of Ken Amadon's circus room in Manchester, N. H., is a large poster bearing the words "Amadon Brothers Three-Ring Circus." The circus is mythical, of course, and the poster is hand-drawn, but it gives Mr. Amadon a thrill to imagine how his name might appear emblazoned on buildings should he have a real circus en tour.

On his desk is a model circus band wagon of the shell type, which went out of circulation with the old-time street parade. He has, near his desk, a record player, and a collection of records made by Merle Evans' Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus band, calliope selections, and other circusy marches and galops that have been recorded by various bands.

On a table in one corner he has model cages and baggage wagons on display, along with a model marquee. And among his relics of show days of the past is a broken piece of a quarter pole from the Sells-Floto circus, left on the lot after a rainy night in his home town back in 1931.

Nothing pleases such fans as Howland, Braathen, Hoy and Amadon more than to have another circus fan or troupier as his guest for an evening, and it is not unusual for such gatherings to last well into the wee hours of the morning, as the conversation "puts and takes down" big top after big top through the years.

Most circusiana collectors carry on correspondence with a dozen or so acquaintances, often in as many different states, in exchanging desired pieces of circusiana for their respective collections, and a circus room or den is almost a prerequisite for carrying on a well-ordered collection.

A circus room need not be large or elaborate. But the collector who covets his assemblage of pictures, posters, books and programs enjoys them best when he has them at finger tips, rather than stored in the attic or some other inaccessible place.

the student of phonograph lore, it is disappointing only in that it does not attempt to be a real history of the subject. For example, the steps leading from what was apparently the collapse, in America, of the Berliner Gramophone Company to the foundation of the Victor Talking Machine Company in 1901 are not fully traced or clarified. Nor can this reader find anything that sheds much light on the Zonophone mystery. But such omissions will trouble only those who, like myself, would be satisfied with nothing less than a complete encyclopedia of Gaisberg's experiences and impressions. In the hasty reading which time limitations made necessary, I occasionally had the feeling that not all the dates were accurately given, and it was disappointing to find a man like Gaisberg handing down the old untruth that Caruso was originally a baritone (actually he was at first a "short" tenor), but these are minor imperfections in a book that is anything but a mere collection of facts. As it stands, it is a fascinating and worthwhile volume, of special interest to collectors of historical records, and as such I cannot recommend it too warmly. I only wish we could be sure of having more slices from Mr. Gaisberg's gramophone cake — which is guaranteed never to grow stale.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Arthur Collins -- III

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

TRAGEDY entered Arthur Collins' life on the evening of October 20, 1921, at the Princess Theater, Medina, Ohio.

He and his partner, Byron G. Harlan, were doing "tone test" work for Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and, in the words of the Edison Diamond Disc catalogs, proving that Edison recording "re-created their voices with literal fidelity and in a way that baffles the keenest ear in the effort to detect the voice from the Edison record."

Probably many readers will remember these tests, the only ones of their kind ever given by any phonograph company, and so completely convincing that many collectors still consider the Edison acoustic records to have been the best ever made anywhere from the standpoint of absolute fidelity. The singers stood beside an "Official Laboratory Model" and blended their voices with the machine's tone. Only by watching the artists' lips could the audience tell when they stopped singing and the phonograph took up the job. At one point the audience was told the lights would be turned off and they were to try to guess when the change occurred in the dark. The singer left the stage, unsuspected by the audience, which invariably accepted the phonograph's voice as his own.

And this last stunt was what caused Collins' mishap. "Someone," his wife says, "had left a trap-door open on the stage and, in the dark scene, Arthur walked into it and was very badly hurt. It took him nearly two years to really recover, but he was never the same."

Friends of Collins and Harlan have given me a graphic description of what happened in the theater that night. They say that Harlan was supposed to stand beside the machine, while Collins walked off in the darkness. When the lights were turned on and no Collins was there, Harlan wondered what had happened but tried to keep the show going. When, after a short wait, Collins still didn't come Harlan asked that an investigation be made. The trap-door was found open, and poor Collins was seen climbing up an iron ladder which led from the basement to the stage. He was reeling dizzily, was fearfully bloody and was obviously out of his head, but the trooper's instinct that "the show must go on" was uppermost, and he was dazedly — almost instinctively — making his way back to the stage.

For the duration of Collins' illness the Collins-Harlan partnership was broken up, just as it was in 1912 when Harlan had an appalling attack of typhoid fever. Harlan made a few solo records and teamed up in comic sketches with such artists as Steve Porter, Billy Jones and Ernest Hare, making records mostly for the smaller companies.

By mid-1923, Arthur Collins had sufficiently recovered to leave his home in New Jersey, where he specialized in breeding fancy horses and cattle, and take to the road again. He and Mr. Harlan made a long tour of the West. A feature of their act was the introduction of recording apparatus on the stage, with selected members of the audience being allowed to try their voices at recording.

Collins and Harlan records — some new and some made years before — continued to appear in Edison supplements during 1923 and 1924. One of the funniest records they ever made, "I Want a Jazzy Kiss," came out in 1922. Their last Edisons, issued late in 1924, were "Go Long, Mule" (a solo by Collins) doubled with "Sister Hasn't Got a Chance Since Mother Bobbed Her Hair," and "Liver and Bacon," combined with "Any Way the Wind Blows My Sweetie Goes." Taking in their entire careers, perhaps their most popular duet was "Niggah Loves His Possum," a Paul Dresser song, which they first sang in 1906. Of their thousands of other records, such great hits as "Bake Dat Chicken Pie," "Auntie Skinner's Chicken Dinner," "Down On the Brandywine," "Down Among the Sugar Cane" and "Down in Jungle Town" may be mentioned. The last is one of a series of "jungle songs" written by the late Theodore Morse, which Collins and Harlan appeared particularly to enjoy singing.

Mr. Collins never did recover completely from his accident in the Ohio theater, so in 1926 he and Mrs. Collins moved from New Jersey to Tice, Fla. In her words, "Arthur enjoyed seven wonderful years here under the orange trees which he loved."

"On August 3, 1933," she continues, "we were sitting on a bench under the trees, talking about a recent trip I had just returned from, when he put his head on my shoulder and quietly passed away."

"I had been warned by my brother (Dr. Richard N. Connolly, chief of the Board of Health of Newark, N. J., for 45 years) that Arthur would go quickly when the time came, on account of the condition of his heart. That had prepared me for the great shock and the passing of a wonderful personality. He had given his best to the world of his great talent."

"His voice was wonderful and mellow up to the last. The people in Fort Myers will always remember his natural voice, as he sang for their clubs here but could not face a stage audience."

With that statement of Mrs. Collins' I am in full accord. Despite his having met with such a terrible accident, there is absolutely no trace of vocal impairment in Mr. Collins' last Edison records, which no hearer would suspect were made by a man of 60.

Mrs. Collins, still in good health, remains in the home she and the distinguished comedian purchased in Tice. She is usually referred to by her old friends of the phonograph days as "Tommy." "That name," she says, "was given to me by a prima donna in Wilson's company because I had eyes like an old sweetheart of hers named Tom. In later years Arthur always called me 'Dollie,' which I liked much better."

All the "Coney Island Crowd" I have met speak in terms of high admiration for the ability Mrs. Collins displayed through many years as an accomplished business woman. They believe the fact that Arthur Collins died in independent circumstances was due, at least in part, to this ing consensus of opinion on essential points.

(Continued on page 19)

The day is past when the individual expert can attempt to cover all American art. This is a day of specialists who know a single period or a few artists, but know them thoroughly. There are now a number of such experts in the museum field and outside. However, they have been handicapped by lack of research assistance, of laboratory facilities, and of public understanding of their work. Museums, on the other hand, have not known to whom to turn for reliable information. Research of the thorough kind that is needed cannot be done single-handed and the whole problem of authenticity has grown beyond the individual expert's control.

In February, 1942, the Whitney Museum of American Art proposed that the museums of the country, acting in cooperation, should sponsor a central agency for research in American art, in particular relation to problems of authenticity. At a meeting at the Whitney Museum on April 11, 1942, the matter was discussed by 15 directors and representatives of museums, and it was agreed that such an agency should be established under the name of the American Art Research Council. For the present the offices are in the Whitney Museum. The Museum's Director, Juliana Force, was appointed Chairman of the Council and the Museum's Research Curator, Lloyd Goodrich, and Curator, Hermon More, were appointed respectively director and associate director of the Council. An advisory committee was formed, comprised of curators and directors of many of the leading galleries of the country.

The Whitney Museum is contributing the offices, the clerical assistance, and the services of Mr. Goodrich and Mr. More, who will devote half their time to the Council. The Brooklyn Museum is contributing the services of its laboratory expert, Sheldon Keck, and the use of the museum's laboratory. Financial contributions have been made by many of the interested institutions.

With the co-operation of museums and of experts outside of museums, the Council will compile records of the works of leading American artists. These records will include photographs, X-rays if necessary, information as to medium, size, signature, date, history, owners, exhibitions, reproductions and auction sales. As a beginning, about 50 of the most prominent artists will be selected for recording. There are a number of important artists, particularly in the later 19th century, on whom no expert opinion is available. Many of these have been extensively forged. A vast mass of documentation exists on these artists, but it has never been systematically studied. The Council has selected some of the leading figures of this period and will do original research on them. It will start with works reproduced, exhibited, or sold at auction during the artists' lifetimes, or otherwise having unimpeachable histories, and will trace these pictures to their present owners, and secure photographs and other data on them. In this way the Council will build up a nucleus of reliable information on these artists, which can later be used for more specialized study.

Member museums will be asked to co-operate by supplying information and photographs of works by these selected artists in their collections or those lent to them at any time. In this way there will be built up a complete inventory of works by leading American artists in public collections. Later, the same information will be gathered from private collections. If a museum has on its staff an authority on any particular artist or period, the Council will request the museum to allow him to assist in gathering data. When a museum has assembled a noteworthy exhibition in the American field, it will be asked to make the research data available.

It is well known that the Frick Art Reference Library has been building a photographic collection for a good many years. No attempt will be made by the Council to duplicate their photographic records, but rather to gather material which will supplement them. The Council's field will be more limited, but it will cover that field intensively; and emphasis will be on research and authentication.

The Council will give opinions as to authenticity on American works of art of the period in which they are conducting research to any museums which submit them, including works which they own or are considering for acquisition. Opinions will not be given to anyone outside of the museum field. The Council will submit the works to the best qualified experts, and if desired will assist them with laboratory examination and X-rays.

The program for the first year will take into consideration the facilities available at present. The Council will not try to cover too much ground, but will undertake definite, limited projects which can be completed within the initial period and will form permanent contributions to the knowledge of American art. At the same time, the groundwork will be laid for any possible future expansion of the Council beyond its present connection with the Whitney Museum.

MUSIC

(Continued from page 13)

"business head" of his wife. Her letters have given me so much pleasure I am happy at the opportunity of sharing them with readers of HOBBIES, all of whom, I am sure, join me in thanking her and wishing for her many more years of happy life in the pleasant surroundings which she and her husband loved so well.

It has also been a pleasure to express my admiration of many years' standing for the brilliant phonograph career of Arthur Collins and to express the opinion that his fame will be enduring.

WANTED

American Primitive Paintings

I want them of every description and subject.
Please describe. Send snapshot if possible.

HARRY STONE

555 Madison Avenue

New York City

tlc

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Byron G. Harlan—I

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

FOR a comedian who was destined to become world-famed because of his inimitable impersonation of colored mamies and other negro women, Byron G. Harlan picked an odd place in which to be born. This splendid artist made his arrival in Lynn, Kans., at a time when it could be rightly described as a part of the Far West.

I don't know the exact day, month and year in which the tenor of the illustrious Collins-Harlan comedy duo came into the world, but when he died on September 11, 1936, the newspapers gave his age as 75. My own belief is that he was a few years younger than the published age, but Mrs. Arthur Collins says he was slightly older than her husband, who died in 1933 at the age of 69.

However that may be, although Harlan was born in Lynn somewhere around the early Civil War years, his parents didn't stay there. The elder Harlan, who had been running a brick-yard, traded it for five head of horses and two prairie schooners and soon afterward took up his abode in Canton, S. Dak.

The West really was wild in those days. On one occasion, when Byron, as a young man, was on a trading trip on which he swapped dogs to the Indians for moccasins, beads and blankets, a group of cowboys, bad men and Indians gathered around him and invited him to drink. When he declined, because he wasn't a drinking man, they began to shoot in a ring around him. Instead of being flustered, Harlan produced his own pistol, did some even fancier shooting and completely won the hearts of his would-be tormentors.

At the age of 20, Byron, who even then showed signs of the portly figure he was to develop in later years, decided he would go East, but stopped at Sioux Falls, where he became a hotel clerk. Occasionally he sang in the hotel "parlor" to the boarders, who told him, truthfully, that his voice was good enough for the stage.

Going to Chicago, the silver-voiced young tenor became a member of the cast of a four-act drama called "Lost in London." "I was the villain of the piece," he used to recall, adding, "I sang ballads between the acts." Then the company acquired a boat with a built-on stage and made regular trips up and down the Tallahassee River in Florida, where, according to the singer, "We played often to nobody but Seminole Indians and swamp squatters."

All this sounds like unpromising preparation for a career of making records, but no doubt Harlan's showboat travels aided him to learn the ways and wiles of the negroes, whom he was afterwards to imitate more accurately than he could have in any other way.

Eventually there was an end to the "Lost in London" troupe, so Harlan and a group of friends formed a company of their own and toured the East in sentimental dramas. In one he sang a pathetic ballad called "Please, Mr. Conductor, Don't Put Me Off the Train," a forerunner of the sad, sad "child ballads," which he specialized in recording during the early part of his approaching recording career. They stood at the farthest possible remove from the boisterous comedy in which he undoubtedly grew to feel most at home.

One night Walter Miller, Edison's recording manager, who had the reputation of "discovering" more afterwards-famous recording artists than any other recording director, heard the show. When it was over he invited Harlan to come to the Edison studios at Orange, N. J., for a "voice test."

This the tenor was glad enough to do. But he insisted upon having an orchestra accompany him, and always believed he was the first vocalist to record with such an accompaniment instead of the customary tin-panny piano.

Byron Harlan was an immediate success as a recording artist, but in his beginning days he was not known as a comedian. Instead, he was called upon to sing the sentimental ballads which delighted the hearts of thousands of listeners, while at the same time they made others feel more or less ill. It would be interesting to know how they affected the singer himself.

His work as a soloist continued for two or three years, but in 1901 or 1902 he struck up his recording partnership with Arthur Collins, whose life story has already been told in this department. At first they specialized in "rube," rather than black-face comedy. (Sam Rous, the Victor catalog editor, once explained Byron's facility for rustic humor by saying, "Harlan is just a natural-born rube, anyway.") Their first duet for Victor, which no doubt they also made for all the other companies of that day, was 1723, "First Rehearsal for the Huskin' Bee." Then came such master works as "Two Rubes in a Tavern," and other records mentioned in the Collins articles. Apparently the first Collins-Harlan "coon skit" made by Victor was "The Stuttering Coon," issued in 1904.

Since the Collins-Harlan partnership has already been the subject of several articles, there is little reason to discuss it extensively now. Throughout the years up to the World War, and for two or three years afterward, the comedians were in demand by every American phonograph company. They free-lanced, indefatigably, enthusiastically and impartially. Billy Murray has said that they and Henry Burr possessed an uncanny nose for business. "Start a recording company down in Tennessee today," he said, "and Collins and Harlan and Burr would smell it somehow and be down there tomorrow. And by the time they got through making records there wouldn't be any money left to pay any other talent that might come along later!"

In 1911, however, just after the team had made a smashing hit with their Victor and Columbia records of "Alexander's Ragtime Band," something tragic happened.

Mr. Harlan, who had married a few years before and been given by Thomas A. Edison a wedding present of a cylinder machine playing both two- and four-minute records, saw his wife and little daughter to the train on their way to a visit in the country. He gaily assured them he would "get along all right" in their absence.

Then he went home and became violently ill — so ill that he was delirious and raving for several days before neighbors, alarmed at not seeing him emerge in his normal manner, investigated and found him suffering from an attack of typhoid fever that, as Rous said, "would have killed 99 men out of a hundred."

For weeks — even months — little hope was held for the tenor's recovery, and it seemed almost certain that the famous Collins and Harlan duo, which had given so much pleasure to millions of record buyers and concert-goers, had been prematurely terminated.

(To be continued)

"EVERYDAY THINGS IN AMERICAN LIFE"

1607 - 1776

353 Pages — Illustrated

Contents: Shelters and first houses; The fireplace center of the home; In Dutch New York; Penn's Quaker City; Handwork at Ephrata; At Moravian Bethlehem; Scotch-Irish in the mountains; Georgian mansions; 18th Century furniture; Pewter; Silversmiths and silverware; Colonial glass; etc. . . . $3.00.

HOBBIES MAGAZINE
2810 S. Michigan Ave. Chicago, Illinois

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Byron G. Harlan — II

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

BYRON HARLAN'S recovery from the typhoid that laid him low in 1911 was a slow and painful process. When he was finally able to get about, after several months in bed, his weight of 200-plus had dropped to less than 100 pounds, and he bore no resemblance to the cheery gentleman whose impersonation of Santa Claus was for years a treat enjoyed by the children of Orange, N. J., as they assembled around the community Christmas tree.

Fortunately, as he regained his weight his voice returned, unimpaired. Meanwhile, Collins had got along as best he could in recording without his partner. On Victor he sang solos, with banjo accompaniments by his old friend, Vess Ossman, who had played with him in the '90's. Columbia teamed him with Albert Campbell, whose high tenor voice proved a good substitute for Harlan's.

The big comedian's naturally cheery, optimistic attitude returned in full force as he regained his health. Billy Murray likes to tell of the fun Harlan had when on tour with the Eight Famous Victor Artists. He would go with Billy and other members of the troupe into a restaurant and begin to spout orders to the waiter in a meaningless gibberish that sounded exactly like some foreign language. When the waiter couldn't understand what he was talking about he would pretend to be so provoked that the head waiter would be called. He couldn't make sense of the gabbling, either. And Byron would go on, pretending to be more and more irate, until Billy would grab him by his collar, push him through the front door and rush him up against the nearest lamp-post. Harlan would then stand, leaning against the post, shouting with laughter that could be heard for blocks.

On a different occasion he used his facility to imitate foreign tongues in another way. While rehearsing with Robert Gayler, Edison studio pianist, he began singing in mock operatic style, taking all sorts of ultra-high tones and playing every imaginable trick with the scale. For the fun of it Gayler accompanied him, or tried to, and had the bogus aria recorded. This was later played over for some of the company's executives, who were all excited over the belief that they had discovered one of the greatest operatic tenors of all time. Their disgust was great when they learned it was only Harlan up to one of his pranks. With his vast sense of humor, the tenor must have relished a remark made in the Edison publication, "Along Broadway." To me it remains as one of the funniest "cut lines" I have ever read. Beneath a photo of Harlan at work in his kitchen, the magazine commented: "Even great singers must have athletic exercise to keep fit. Mr. Harlan frying an egg."

Billy also recalled that Harlan, although an accomplished sight reader of music, had a wretched memory for the words. On one occasion he was in a theater singing "Two Little Baby Shoes" (one of his famous "sob songs") to the accompaniment of Albert Benzler's piano. To make sure of the words he had them printed in large letters on a piece of cardboard which was propped behind the piano. Suddenly Benzler decided to open the piano top. When he did so, the cardboard was pushed against the footlights and burst into flame. The horror-stricken tenor couldn't remember a word and stood helpless, until his cronies backstage quit laughing long enough to troop forth in a body and sing the chorus for him.

Although Mr. Harlan is best remembered as a comedian, his largest selling solo records were probably those in a more lyrical vein—simple songs of sentiment, such as "School Days," which stayed in the Victor catalog for 20 years, "Why Don't They Play With Me?" "Two Little Baby Shoes," "Where the Sunset Turns the Ocean's Blue to Gold" (a great favorite on both Edison cylinders and Columbia discs), "Would You Care?" and "When the Harvest Moon is Shining on the River."

In comedy, his most successful solos were those of the "rube" type. One of his very best was "They Gotta Quit Kickin' My Dawg Aroun'." Other excellent efforts of this genre were the classic "Wal, I Swan," "Way Down East Where I Belong," and, after the World War, "How Ya Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm?"

It also should be mentioned that Mr. Harlan did not confine himself in his duet work exclusively to his partnership with Arthur Collins. He and Steve Porter teamed up in many vaudeville skits of the "rube" variety, such as "The Old-Time Street Medicine Faker" and "Down on Jasper's Farm," and in the years before Frank Stanley adopted Henry Burr as his tenor protege, Harlan sang many standard duets with the great basso. They particularly specialized in patriotic songs, such as "Dixie" and "Marching Through Georgia." But their other repertoire ranged from records of "The Palms" to "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee." And—rarity of rarities! — I have a very old Columbia single-face in which the famous Irish sketch, "Backyard Conversation Between Two Jealous Irish Washerwomen," was recorded by Harlan and Len Spencer. A few years later this opus was associated entirely with Steve Porter, who re-recorded it and made it his own.

Just as Harlan's long illness made carrying on difficult for Collins, so the injuries the baritone sustained in an Ohio theater in 1921 provided his associate with a problem for a year or two. He made a few solo records for the minor companies and, since Cal Stewart was now dead, even recorded a number of "Uncle Josh" monologs. In some records he had the assistance of new-comers, such as Billy Jones and Ernest Hare. As has already been related, however, Collins and Harlan returned to recording and vaudeville tours in 1923, and continued together for almost two years more. Mr. Collins' failing health then compelled him to retire in Florida.

Mr. Harlan continued to live in Orange, where he was a valued friend and neighbor of Thomas Edison (Billy Murray used to introduce him to audiences as "the only member of our troupe who could call Mr. Edison 'Tom' without getting thrown out!") and he, too, lived his remaining years in virtual retirement. In 1931, Harry Mack, an announcer at radio station W O R, became enthusiastic about his still great abilities as a comedian, and wrote a series of programs in which he was featured; but they were soon dropped.

On September 11, 1936, Mr. Harlan died of a heart attack in the bath-tub at his home in Orange. The metropolitan newspapers were generous in their accounts of his career and his former celebrity as one of the greatest of recording artists. He was survived by his wife and daughter, Mrs. Frank Lucas, of Essex Falls, N. J., both of whom are still living.

The permanent appeal of the Collins and Harlan records is shown by the fact that hundreds of collectors consider them authentic Americana and enthusiastically acquire them as among the finest "period pieces" of their time. I make the prediction that "the portly, pleasant and popular Comedy Kings" will not be forgotten for generations to come — that somewhere in the land there will be machines playing "The Preacher and the Bear" and "Auntie Skinner's Chicken Dinner."

They should not be forgotten. They were truly accomplished artists who excelled in the difficult field of dialect and were never satisfied to make anything but an admirable job of whatever they undertook.

seph Schwarz, Urlus, Edyth Walker and Herman Weill!!!

Description of Label

The most common type of Opera Disc label (spelled Disc on the label, Disc in the catalog) has a black background. Titles, etc., are printed in black ink on a blue medallion, above which is the trade mark: a nude (almost) female figure playing a lyre, and the words "Musica G D." A vaguely flesh colored ink is used for the nude and for the words Opera Disc Company Incorporated which appear on the top curve of the label. Last spring, however, I picked up an interesting variation, on Sammarco's "O solo mio." Underneath a badly centered Opera Disc label of somewhat similar design to the one just described, dark maroon in color with gold lettering, there was visible the edge of another label, typically HMV salmon in color. When the top label was steamed off, the underneath label turned out to be not actually an HMV label, as I had thought, but a shameless imitation of one, both in color and in general layout. Even the famous "His Master's Voice" trademark is suggested: the dog is missing but the old-fashioned gramophone is there and at first glance it has fooled more than one collector! Across the top curve of this label are the familiar words "GRAMOPHONE RECORD." No mention of Opera Disc is made, but "Musica G D" does appear, very inconspicuously. It was with this label that the record was circulated in Germany, I surmise.

Contents of the Catalog

To save me time and trouble, a friend kindly photostated the most interesting pages of this catalog so that I might share them with our followers. These will be printed in this department, and we introduce our first installment in this issue. Because of the extreme familiarity of the titles, the Opera Disc records of many artists will not be listed here. For example, no less than three pagesides of Caruso solos, duos, trios, etc. will be skipped, as well as most of the records of Alda, Amato, Farrar, Gadske, Gluck, Goritz, Homer, Melba, Ruffo, and Schumann-Heink, all of whom are more or less liberally represented. Nor will the pages devoted to the instrumental numbers be given space.

AN APOLOGY is due Charles Merwin Sniffin, whose comment on his choice of Patti's "Pur dicesti" as a Remarkable Coloratura Record (cf. bottom of page 11 in the February issue) was submitted as "because of the marvelous trills" but inadvertently published as "because of the marvelous thrills."

For some time now it has been known that Leopoldo Signoretto, one of the great bel canto tenors of the 19th century, recorded for the International Zonophone Company. Not long ago Francisco Garcia Montes of Habana, Cuba, had the good fortune to find the first Signoretto Zonophone ever reported and Dr. Montes' many American friends rejoice with him at the discovery of a rarity which he is better equipped to appreciate than any of us. The aria is Solingo, errante e misero from "Ernani" and the number of the record, which has a black label with gold lettering, is X1814. Dr. Montes has not yet succeeded in locating many important details of Signoretto's life but has nevertheless gathered an impressive amount of information about his career. As early as 1877 he was singing "I Lombardi," "Il Trovatore," "Benvenuto Cellini," and "La Favorita" in Genoa. By 1888 he was active at the famous "La Scala" in Milan, receiving there warm admiration for his work in "La Juive." His repertoire was enormous and varied to an unusual degree. Signoretto was not gifted with a great voice but the use he made of it marked him as a great artist and a true master of the art of singing. The record found by Dr. Montes must have been made in the early nineteen hundreds and while the voice it reveals is not a beautiful one the scale is equalized, the outstanding qualities of the performance being the long phrasing, splendid breath control, and the aristocratic delivery of the recitative.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Henry Burr—I

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

IT is no exaggeration to say that millions of admirers mourned when they learned Henry Burr, known in his later years as "the Dean of Ballad Singers," had died on April 6, 1941, at the age of 56. It is also no exaggeration to say that collectors of Burr records have insisted for months that his brilliant career be recorded here.

There has been good reason for this insistence. Many believe the silvery-voiced tenor, who probably participated in more records than any other singer, to have been the greatest "popular" artist in the history of the phonograph. Many others place him on a par with, or just below, Billy Murray. Unmistakably, he was the most popular ballad singer recorded music has ever known, and towered above other artists in the sentimental branch of recording just as Murray was the greatest favorite among comedians.

Even as a small boy I recognized this fact. I imagined the whole world of music to lie beyond the folding doors of a large old-style Victrola, and depicted Billy Murray and Henry Burr standing guard on each side of the doors — the one representing comedy and the other sentiment. And that is likely to be the way in which Henry Burr in his later years.

WANTED

COLUMBIA
GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

Marcella Sembrich
Edouard de Reszke
Schumann-Heink
Campanari
Suzanne Adams
Antonio Scotti
Charles Gilibert

Ten-inch, single-faced records
with red and gold or black and
silver labels.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old advertisements of records and phonographs.

- FOR SALE -

RECORD CATALOGS
OF MANY COMPANIES
A LARGE ASSORTMENT
OF VICTOR SUPPLEMENTS

STEPHEN FASSETT

944 Monroe Lane

Woodmere, L. I., N. Y.

future historians will regard them—as the dominant figures of the early recording era.

The comedian and the ballad singer had somewhat similar starts in life. Billy cannot remember a time when he was not singing, and Burr was a child wonder at the age of five. On the other hand, while Murray never acquired formal musical training and to this day can't read a note, Burr had the benefit of careful vocal instruction and was a highly educated man of exceptionally wide cultural interests. Many of the songs he sang have been described as "tripe," or worse, but his voice was of so beautiful a quality and was so exquisitely managed that ultra-fastidious listeners who ordinarily despised popular music heard him with pleasure. I doubt if the art of tone production has ever been brought to a more nearly perfect standard than was attained by Burr, especially in his 30 to 45-year-old life span.

Henry Burr was born at St. Stephen, New Brunswick, Canada, on January 15, 1885. His real name was Harry H. McClaskey, and he was a son of Alfred McClaskey, a candy and tobacco dealer. Starting to sing as a very small boy, he gained fame as a child prodigy so rapidly that in 1898, at the age of 13, he was a boy soprano with the St. John, N. B., military band. A year later his father offered to give him "a fine gold watch" on condition that he refrain from singing during the voice changing period. Little Harry agreed, and duly received the watch.

Then, a year or so later, Giuseppe Campanari, a famous Metropolitan Opera star who was one of the first Victor Red Seal artists, came to Canada, met young McClaskey and discovered that he was gifted with a phenomenally beautiful voice. The great Italian insisted that Harry go to New York for musical training. He did. First he studied with the noted voice coach, John D. Meehan, and then with Miss Ellen Burr. He took the lady's last name when he began to sing for records.

While still a student, McClaskey became tenor soloist with the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church choir of New York. Soon afterward, as Henry Burr, he was making Columbia records. His recording career may have begun as early as 1902, when he was 17, or not have started until a year or two later. I have seen Columbia records by him whose master numbers indicated they were made in 1902, but they may have been remakes of numbers originally sung by someone else. His name does not appear in the 1902 or 1903 Edison catalogs, but, by 1905, he was well established under the alias of Irving Gillette. Edison never made records carrying the otherwise familiar name of Henry Burr. His first Victor record, of Behrend's song, "Daddy," was made in 1904. He also sang for all the other phonograph companies of that early day — Leeds, Criterion, Talk-o-phone, Zon-o-phone, Imperial, American—the list could be extended almost indefinitely. The young fellow who didn't become 21 until 1906 was an immediate and overwhelming success. As early as 1905, the Talking Machine News, of London, praising one of his renditions of gospel hymns (a type of record which he specialized in making in those days) remarked, "We count Mr. Burr one of the foremost recorders of today."

In later years Burr said he believed he was the first singer to receive a signed contract from the phonograph companies, instead of merely working by the "round" or special engagement. He was probably wrong in this belief, however, because Frederick Wheeler (better known as "James F. Harrison") told me he signed a contract with the old Universal Talking Machine Company as long ago as 1901, by which he received $1,400 per year.

Whatever his working arrangements with the recording firms, Burr long evinced a financial acumen that was the despair of less business-like competitors. It was odd that so thorough-going an artist should possess one of the most severely practical of business heads, but the tenor was famed among his associates for exactly that quality. He insisted upon remuneration that was in keeping with his popularity and high artistic standards, and he received it. For the first 16 years or so of his recording life he free-lanced, singing impartially for every company able to pay him — and his services were so much in demand they all managed to raise the money for one or two engagements, at least. In 1915, however, a financial disagreement caused "Irving Gillette" records to cease to appear on the Edison list, and he never sang for the great inventor's firm again.

Burr does not appear to have begun to sing under his real name until 1912 when a few Harry McClaskey records made their appearance on Victor and Columbia lists. They were generally of a slightly more pretentious nature than those with which the names of Burr and Gillette (he never used the latter for Victor, although Gillette records soon became fairly frequent on Columbia lists) were associated.

Here it may be mentioned that the tenor occasionally used at least two other names. He told Angus Joss, of Chicago, that one Pathe monthly supplement contained records by him under no less than five names—Burr, McClaskey, Gillette, A. L. Alexander (his grandfather's name) and Robert Bruce. (The latter name probably was chosen because during the first few years of his recording career he was particularly famed for his singing of old Scotch songs, such as "Scots Wha' Hae' Wi' Wallace Bled.") I do not recall any Pathe records by A. L. Alexander, but there was one of "Memories," by "Alfred Alexander," which was probably the one Burr was thinking of. Burr, incidentally, was a dear friend of Egbert Van Alstyne, composer of "Memories," and recorded that beautiful ballad for Columbia (using the name of McClaskey) from the original manuscript.

The friendship with Van Alstyne may have been caused by the resounding success of Burr's Victor and Edison records, in 1905, of "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," Van Alstyne's biggest ballad success, which a group of song writers voted some years ago to have been "the greatest song ever written in Tin Pan Alley," a tribute gratifying to the present writer since it happens to be his favorite sentimental ditty. It stayed in the Victor catalog 20 years and must have sold several million copies.

(To be continued)

RECORDS

100 EDISON cylinder records, fine variety $15. — P. Lewis, Chestnut St., Oneonta, New York. ap139

CLASSICAL RECORDS: — Reasonable. Send stamped envelope for lists. — El. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City, N. J. o12525

20 THOUSAND historical records. Opera, Instrumental, popular, blues and swing. Send "wanted" list to John Sclignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. je6024

WANTED: These old records in good condition. Some Sunny Day, Brox Sisters, Brunswick 2268. Lady Of The Evening, Fenton Orch., Brunswick 2353. Loveable Eyes, Oriole Terrace Orch., Brunswick 2280. Don't Bring Me Posies, Benson Orch., Victor 18931. Chin Chin Waltz, Princes Band, Columbia A5634. Too Much Mustard, A1307. Brunswick Record Catalogs 1916 1922 incl. A. E. Moredock, P. O. Box 645, Cumberland, Maryland. ap2405

MISCELLANEOUS

RECORDS, Sheet Music, Lists 10c. — Fore's, (Dept. O) 3151 High, Denver, Colorado. au6041

WANTED: Victor Supplements from 1904 through 1915; Victor catalogs before 1912, including May 1913. — Robert B. Julian, 5203 California St., Omaha, Nebr. s6253

WANTED: Book about the "Care and Repair of Music Boxes," by Charles Jacot. — R. Mosoriak, c/o. HOBBIES. app

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

● WANTED TO BUY—4c per word for 1 month; 6 months for the price of four; 12 months for the price of seven.

● FOR SALE—6c per word for 1 month; 6 months for the price of four; 12 months for the price of seven.

● In figuring the cost count each word and initial as a word. No checking copies furnished on classified. Cash must accompany order. Please TYPE your copy if possible, or WRITE LEGIBLY.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Henry Burr II

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

HENRY BURR'S association with the Peerless Quartet appears to have begun in 1906 or 1907, when he was hardly more than old enough to vote. His ensemble associates were all considerably older. Frank Stanley, the basso and manager, was 39 in 1907; Al Campbell, top tenor, was 35; and Arthur Collins, baritone, 43. Apparently, the Quartet had a predecessor called the Invincible Quartet, with the same personnel except that Byron Harlan was second tenor in place of Burr. In years to come, the Peerless made some records — mostly for Pathé — under the name of the Invincible Four, but they were relatively few.

In that early day, Burr's voice, despite his great popularity, was not altogether so fine and well controlled as it became when he reached full maturity. Possibly owing in part to the crude recording apparatus of the time, it occasionally sounded baritone and strident. His technique, however, continued to improve until it reached the point where people said he had "a perfect vocal chord" and further betterment was almost out of the question.

When the tenor first began to sing with the Peerless, he had no particular opportunity to shine or star. Stanley, as the manager, dominated the group and usually took the solo parts, despite his being a bass. In the large number of Stanley and Burr duets, he likewise also dominated. Obviously, he regarded the much younger singer as one of his proteges and felt that the leadership should rest in his capable and experienced hands. As long as Stanley lived, Burr was "kept down."

The great basso's life, however, was destined to be a short one. He died of pneumonia late in 1910, a few months after Burr had married Cecilia Niles, a concert singer, who survives him and is living in Chicago. They had no children, and Burr's stepdaughter by his wife's first marriage died some years ago.

Upon Stanley's passing, Burr, although the "young man" of the group, took charge of the Peerless and was ever afterwards its business manager. The Stanley and Burr duets were replaced by the beautiful tenor duos of Campbell and Burr, who undoubtedly became the most popular male combination singing sentimental songs that the phonograph has yet known. Their first Victor record as a pair came out in 1912, but as early as 1909 they had sung one Columbia disc together, No. A-573, "While the Old Mill Wheel Is Turning," oddly coupled with the "coon shout," "Sisseretta's Visit to the North," by the inimitable Billy Golden. also sang duets with some of Stanley's other proteges, such as Elise Stevenson, the soprano, who was Mrs. Woods in private life. Ill health put an end to her recording career.

The last Victor record made by the Peerless under Stanley's leadership was a single-faced, unaccompanied one, called "Sweetness." The first with John H. Meyer as bass was "Emmaline Lee." Soon afterward the Quartet recorded "In the Golden Afterwhile," a ballad written by Stanley shortly before his death. Meyer, who had been a member of the same church choir in which Burr sang, stayed with the Quartet until 1925. He was a florist before devoting his full time to recording work, and he returned to work with flowers, as chief designer for Thorley's in New York, when the record-making business became bad.

Burr's head was full of money-making ideas, most of them sound. It was he who managed the Record Maker Troupe, later known as the Eight Famous Victor Artists, which probably had more three-star talent concentrated in its membership than any other eight-man organization ever assembled. Ordinarily, the troupe played the smaller communities and medium-sized cities, but it made a memorable success when it appeared on Broadway in the later years of its existence. Wherever it went, it, in the words of Variety, "topped the show on all bills and stopped it on most."

One of the first Eights was composed of Burr, Campbell, Meyer and Collins as the Peerless Quartet (without Collins, the first three were the Sterling Trio); Byron Harlan, Billy Murray, as singer of comic songs and genial master of ceremonies; Vess Ossman, the veteran "Banjo King," and Teddy Morse, pianist and composer of many of the nation's favorite popular songs.

In May, 1915, Burr began to organize a phonograph company of his own. Like some even earlier recording artists, he dreamed of acquiring the manufacturer's slice of the profits, even though he continued to sing for every other company who wanted him. He called his firm the Paroquette Record Manufacturing Co., Inc., and made a seven-inch hill-and-dale cut, double-faced record, which was called the Par-o-ket. Mrs. Burr believes a 10-inch record called the Phonotype—played like the Par-o-ket, with a sapphire ball—was also made. Al Campbell still has the contract he signed to sing for Burr's organization, which, probably owing to the scarcity of machines equipped to play vertical cut records, was not a success and soon suspended operations.

A few years later, when Fred Van Eps succeeded Ossman as banjoist of the Eight, Burr and Van Eps owned a banjo factory, which secured large contracts from Lyons and Healy and some other music dealers. The tenor also invested heavily in real estate.

Like many other great artists, Burr was a man of curiously complex personality. He was a poor public speaker, dreaded personal appearances and usually spent the time before an evening's engagement alone in his hotel room, worrying about the condition of his voice. He was frequently the butt of his associate's practical jokes, as on the occasion when they formed a "secret society" called The Order of Beards, and pretended to blackball him when he demanded membership. At the same time he had a wonderful sense of humor and performed any number of stunts that never failed to make the other troupers shout with mirth. One of his specialties was giving an imitation of a pompous after-dinner speaker, suffering from a particularly virulent form of indigestion. Another was lying down on a depot platform just before the train was to leave, and giving a remarkably accurate impersonation of a "drunk." Just as a cop would come bustling up to take him into custody, he would

(Continued on page 21)

WANTED

COLUMBIA
GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

Marcella Sembrich
Edouard de Reszke
Schumann-Heink
Campanari

Suzanne Adams

Antonio Scotti

Charles Gilibert

Ten-inch, single-faced records
with red and gold or black and
silver labels.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old advertisements of records and phonographs.

- FOR SALE -

RECORD CATALOGS
OF MANY COMPANIES
A LARGE ASSORTMENT
OF VICTOR SUPPLEMENTS

STEPHEN FASSETT

944 Monroe Lane

Woodmere, L. I., N. Y.

1917 and a bell for 1918. California earlier used a cast numeral aluminum tag without the year being displayed.

In Ohio, the same tag was used during 1909 and 1910, and the year did not appear on it. In fact, many of the states, when they first started to use the tags, issued them on a perpetual basis without the year being displayed. Maine used a perpetual tag from 1905 until 1911; Massachusetts used a perpetual tag from 1903 until 1908; Oregon, from 1905 until 1911, etc. New York had a red and white porcelain enameled tag without the year; it is really a thing of beauty.

Gradually many of the states began to use a slogan or a figure to advertise their state or some commemorative occasion. Each year, New York state advertised its World's Fair. In 1938, Ohio advertised its centenary of the settling of the Northwest Territory. The ox-team and wagon design was embossed in the tag. Louisiana has used is pelican; Massachusetts a cod-fish, and Texas a star, as a part of the tag. Maine has advertised its vacation land, South Carolina has advertised its iodine. Possibly the most ambitious state is that of Georgia; it has used a decalcomania picture of a red-cheeked peach and on the tag there has been used millions of small glass beads which reflect light from the tag. Pennsylvania, Tennessee and a number of the states have used the outline of the state on their tags. Formerly, many of the states, used a special seal on the corner of the tag; the different designs were very distinctive.

When the tags got too wide with all of their different numbers the complicated systems of letters and numerals were used so that they could control the length of the tag. A number of states have used special insignia for trucks, trailers, truck capacity, legislative and judicial officers. Some of them have used a code to show the county in which the car is located.

Most states have continued to use both front and rear tags, although some states are only using one tag. Florida was one of the earliest to do this, and New York one of the latest.

Many colors have been used. Pennsylvania and New York, are among those states that alternate the background color from year to year. Some states have been unfortunate in using a poor type of enamel or varnish and their tags have deteriorated.

Our records for 1943 indicate that only seven states are issuing new tags. The majority of the states are using their already issued tags, with the addition of little metal or fibre clips to be attached to the corner of the tags to show that they have been renewed. One or two states are using fibre or composition, although it will certainly be a real test of the ability of such a tag to stand up, to last throughout the year and hold its enamel as it should. License tags stand tremendous punishment.

There are certain garages which have a complete run of their dealers' plates, and certain collectors who have gotten complete runs. On my own collection of antique automobiles I have tried to place the actual license tag for the original year of manufacture of the car. In my Museum I have used swinging panels, measuring six by nine feet in size, and I am trying to get together a complete run of tags from each state and province, and tags from all over the world. We have tags from the Philippines, Guam, Italy, Belgium, England, Germany, China, Mexico, Czechoslovakia, etc. Many of these, especially from the Mexican States, are made with mirror reflecting background and numerals and are very elaborate. Usually in foreign countries a number is assigned to the car when it is new, which stays with that car as long as it survives, being renewed by a sort of annual seal.

COLLECTORS' LUCK

(Continued from page 9)

Such a combination was known as a peg-lamp.

The early 1860's saw the widespread use of kerosene as a lamp fluid, to say nothing of those crowning achievements of lamp design — the glass chimney and the flat wick with notched wheel for regulating its height. It is this type of lamp that is now so highly desired for use in decorative lighting. Oil lamps in Dresden china, glass and brass are equally in demand. Little attention has been paid by collectors to the gas-light fixtures that also began to come in around 1860. It was not until the invention of the Welsbach burner in 1880 that such gas light came to replace oil in reading lamps. This in turn gave way to the electric bulb.

Today there is even a call for the G W T W oil parlor lamps, to say nothing of other late varieties such as student lamps. But I see no collector picking up the old gas fixtures, many of them as obsolete and rare as the Betty lamp. Many of the shapes are very pleasing, and some are enhanced by crystal ornaments. Look around your attic and see if you have an old gas fixture that could be made into an attractive lamp.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 15)

spring up and guffawingly board the train.

Moreover, no one could talk any more directly to the point on business manners. On one occasion, when he felt he was being given too many "dogs" (unsuccessful songs) to sing by the Victor Artist and Repertoire Department, he went to Eldridge R. Johnson, president of the company, with such a forceful complaint that Johnson himself ordered, "Give Henry good songs to record."

Most record buyers and concert-goers had the impression Burr was much older than his actual years. His long and active career as a recording artist was partly responsible for this tendency, and the fact that his hair turned gray in early life and was afterwards snow-white increased it. When the tenor was only 50 one former recording company official insisted on adding 20 years to his age, and told me in strong terms that "Henry Burr is 70 years old, if he's a day!" The gray hair and his massive figure—he was not tall but weighed considerably more than 200 pounds—added, however, to the effectiveness of such impersonations as that of the after-dinner speaker.

(To Be Continued)

HERE and THERE

... Growing demand for Temple University's hobby courses, Philadelphia, Pa., was reported recently by Charles E. Metzger, director of the evening extension division.

"Nervous tension has increased since America's entrance into the war," he said. "As one means of relieving this tension, men and women of all ages are going in strongly for hobbies."

—o—

Chief Ben De Jaeger of Moline, Ill., was pictured recently with a collection of "crooked" dice which he has assembled in nearly a quarter of a century. The collection contains one dice with two deuces, two fours and two sixes.

—o—

According to the Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution: "About 2,000 old manuscripts and scrolls were discovered by Quentin Roosevelt, grandson of the former President, who explored the Chinese interior and Tibet in search for relics of the ancient Nashi tribes. He believes the manuscripts may prove a missing link between present Asiatic civilization and that of 700 B. C."

—o—

A recent program of The Doll Collectors of America, Inc., was given over to the topic, "Some Famous Doll Houses." Mrs. Louis T. Golding was the program chairman.

—o—

The State Y.M.C.A. of Pennsylvania has issued a very interesting manual for grade-school girls in which hobby activities are given very interesting leads. The booklet is intelligently edited by Lela R. Ford.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Henry Burr—III

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

LATE in 1917, Burr, as manager, made several changes in the Eight Famous Victor Artists. He engaged the noted concert and oratorio basso, Frank Croxton, to replace Arthur Collins in the Peerless Quartet. Teddy Morse, as pianist, was replaced by Frank Banta; Vess Ossman, the banjoist, by his famous rival, Fred Van Eps, and Byron Harlan by Monroe Silver, the noted narrator of "Cohen" monologs. Burr, Campbell, Meyer and Murray remained as original members of the troupe.

The distinguished tenor's fortunes were at a high point during the next 10 years. He continued to make innumerable solo records for all American phonograph companies, except Edison and Brunswick (the latter of which was not organized until shortly before he signed an exclusive contract with Victor), and Sterling Trio, Peerless Quartet and Campbell and Burr duets continued to appear by the hundreds — all ingeniously arranged, beautifully harmonized and impeccably sung. By way of variety, Burr also made duets with Meyer and Croxton, in addition to Helen Clark and a good many other women singers. His list of Columbia duets was particularly noteworthy, and even included (under the name of Irving Gillette) a few comic specialties with Ada Jones. How he could possibly find time to do so much singing for records, in addition to taking long concert tours, is a thing I have never been able to understand. The sheer physical exertion must have been appalling.

Probably it was a relief when he negotiated an exclusive Victor contract for the Eight in 1920. More time was left for traveling engagements, and there obviously was much less work involved in singing for one phonograph company than for 18 or 20. But the hard work of those 16 years of free-lancing was reflected in Burr's participation in 12,000 or so records, or twice as many as any other singer has ever made.

Soon after radio began to show signs of popularity, Burr suspected it boded no good for the record business, and jumped aboard the band wagon. The Eight were starred for a year or so on the Goodrich Zippers program, and the tenor was also in charge for two and a half years of the Cities Service broadcast.

In 1925, when the record business, thanks to electrical recording was just emerging from the slump into which radio had sent it, Burr drastically reorganized the Peerless. Campbell, Meyer (he had made the Quartet's harmony arrangements and was a skilled pianist who sometimes played duets with Banta in concerts) and Croxton were replaced by three newcomers — Carl Mathieu, an excellent tenor and comedian, who was one of Ray Knight's original "Cuckoos"; Stanley Baughman, baritone, and James Stanley, bass. The Quartet stayed together in its latter form a couple of years, and ended its career, as it had begun, with a Stanley as its "foundation."

The Eight disbanded in 1928, after Victor decided not to renew the exclusive contract. Burr made a few more Victor, Columbia, Harmony and Brunswick records, but, realizing that his phonograph career was virtually at a close, despite the grip he still had on the affections of uncountable admirers, he accepted an appointment as program director of the newly organized Columbia Broadcasting Company. In the executive work, which was not much to his liking, he was assisted by L. M. Mountcastle, who had been the Eight's booking agent virtually throughout its existence.

When his work as program director ended, Burr returned to the radio field. He became one of the most popular members of the National Barn Dance troupe, broadcasting every Saturday evening on an NBC network from the stage of the Eighth Street theater in Chicago. The old-time Burr fans were overjoyed to hear him again, and he was soon one of the Barn Dance's greatest features, with his beautiful renditions of "Silver Threads Among the Gold" and "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" (songs with which he had long been especially identified); "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen" (one of his biggest selling Victor records) and others loved by the average middle-aged or elderly radio listener. Occasionally, too, he sang "Good Night, Little Girl, Good Night," which, made by him on a Columbia record, sold more than 3,000,000 copies — partly, perhaps, because it was issued as one side of a sample record distributed for a quarter instead of the usual 65 cent price. "Kathleen" was the last song he sang on the Barn Dance, about six weeks before his death.

Those five years with the radio show must, aside from great pain, which he suffered with increasing frequency, have been happy. He cultivated his hobbies of automobiling and collecting fine old clocks. He was frequently seen at baseball games, and anybody who praised "swing" music could always be sure of an argument from "the Dean of Ballad

(Continued on page 129)

WANTED

WANTED: Antique Musical instruments, brass horns, String instruments all types Clavichord, books. — Wm. J. Kugler, 727 Sherburne Ave., St. Paul, Minn. je1001

OLD MUSIC INSTRUMENTS and Sheet Music wanted. Only objects before 1800. — Albert Hess, Plainfield, Vermont. je106

RECORDS WANTED: Emma Trentini, Beddoe, Gerald Griffen, Vanhoose. — Johnston, 1120 North Hicks, Los Angeles, California. je106

FOR SALE

WOODEN FLUTE, $2.00; "Sweet Potato" marked, $2.00. Lap Organ, 184-. Original label and case, $15.00. Chautauqua Roller Organ, 20 rolls, $20.00. Old Violin, $10.00. — Tryphosa Bassett House, Den nisport, Mass. je1051

RARE OLD VIENNA VIOLIN, 1780, dog's head column. Enclose stamp for reply. — Little White House, Walpole, New Hampshire. je1211

AUTOGRAPHS: 44 Singers, Composers, Musicians, etc., the lot $5. We have installed our autograph collection in Hobbies Museum and have left over the above lot. — O. C. Lightner, c/o Hobbies Magazine. jex

REGINA MUSIC BOX (25) twenty-five discs. Plays by inserting penny in slot. Concert Roller Organ, (28) twenty-eight rolls. Real old Hopf Violin. Walnut head, five string Banjo. — B. D. Owens, Petoskey, Michigan. je1081

WANTED

COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

Marcella Sembrich

Edouard de Reszke

Schumann-Heink

Campanari

Suzanne Adams

Antonio Scotti

Charles Glibert

Ten-inch, single-faced records with red and gold or black and silver labels.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old advertisements of records and phonographs.

- FOR SALE -
RECORD CATALOGS
OF MANY COMPANIES
A LARGE ASSORTMENT
OF VICTOR SUPPLEMENTS

STEPHEN FASSETT
944 Monroe Lane
Woodmere, L. I., N. Y.

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists jly34

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Congress Building Miami, Florida

CIRCUS MUSIC OF OTHER DAYS

(Continued from page 29)

bell front altos were replaced by up-rights.

As the circus spread from one ring to three and the big top expanded to seat thousands instead of hundreds of spectators, the instrumentation of bands increased. Prior to the 80's, the average big show band consisted of 10 to 15 men, but this number was increased to from 20 to 30.

During the years when parades were a part of the daily routine of the circus, musicians were numerous among the personnel. Some five or six bands participated in the parade, riding atop tableau wagons. The regular circus band was divided into three or four units with performers filling in on drums and other instruments.

Clowns were required to double in brass, for a clown band always appeared in the parade lineup and frequently in the big show program as well. Other parade bands were recruited from among the ticket sellers, the ushers and other departments.

In 1895, Ringling Brothers Circus offered an innovation in circus music. Prior to that year, it had been customary for the regular circus band to play an hour's concert of overtures preceding each performance from a ring in the arena. The Ringling show had a 25-piece band directed by William F. Weldon. But the Ringling Brothers employed A. Liberati, famous cornet soloist and conductor, and 25 concert musicians, to augment the regular band.

The concert band then consisted of 50 pieces, including 22 reeds, three E-flat basses and three B-flat basses, in addition to the usual instrumentation of the regular band. The concert musicians did not play the performance, but participated only in the concert preceding the show.

The most famous of modern circus bands is the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey aggregation, directed for 25 consecutive seasons by Merle Evans. Evans uses 25 musicians and his 1943 instrumentation includes: Six B-flat cornets, two French horns, four B-flat clarinets, four B-flat slide trombones, one piccolo, two baritones or euphoniums, two brass BB-flat brasses or Sousaphones, one snare and trap drum, one brass drum and cymbal, and an air calliope.

Actually the Evans band is two bands, spelling each other. Each section is divided equally. One-half of each section plays while the other half rests. Only the reed and percussion instruments, as well as the air calliope, keep at it continually. And well it is that the band is so divided, for in addition to a 30-minute concert preceding the show, the band plays continuously for nearly three hours during a performance, during which it changes cues 160 to 175 times.

Circus music is distinctive from any other in that there is brassy ta-t-a-a, quick tempo, and a canvas sounding board that does things to big top tunes. But there is one instrument that is inseparably associated with the circus—the steam calliope!

Invented in 1854, the steam piano was first used on showboats and on railroad locomotives, but in 1857, Sands, Nathan & Company introduced it to the circus parade. Since that time, the steam piano has always brought up the rear of a street procession, and since the death of the parade, Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus has used a calliope in its grand entree of the performance.

Numerous other types of mechanical instruments mounted on wagons made their appearance with circuses soon after the invention of the calliope, most of them having been described here in a previous article. However, none survived.

The air calliope is an adaptation of the steam calliope principle. But whereas, a steam calliope cannot be tuned because of the constant expanding and contracting of the pipes caused by the steam used in producing the sound, the air calliope is used extensively as band accompaniment, adding volume and a distinctive circus tone to the music of the big tops.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 33)

Singers." Just before his final illness he composed words and music of a Prayer for Peace, which were sung on the first program after his death. He had previously done little in the creative musical way, but in 1921 he wrote the words of a song, "Stand Up and Sing for Your Father an Old-Time Tune," which humorously denounced jazz. Ray Perkins wrote the words, and the song was recorded for Victor by Billy Murray and the American Quartet.

It is pitiable that the life of so great an artist ended in tragedy. Almost no one who heard Burr's beautiful singing during his final months with the Barn Dance dreamed the truth — that he was suffering torments from cancer and knew the end of his life was near. He bore the agony as long as he could, however, and continued to make personal appearances in addition to filling his radio engagements. And his nine-room apartment on the "Gold Coast" of Chicago continued to be the scene of delightful, kind-hearted, open-handed hospitality.

Burr, as mentioned in the first article of this series, died on April 6, 1941. He was buried three days later at Kensico, N. Y. Monroe Silver, Frank Banta and Sammy Hermany, the xylophonist (who replaced Rudy Wiedoeft, the saxophonist, with the Eight, after Wiedoeft in turn had taken the place of Van Eps) were the only ones of his old associates who knew of his death in time to attend the funeral, or were able to be on hand. But grief at his untimely passing was general among all who had been associated with him.

If variety, as well as high quality, of achievement is a criterion of greatness, Harry McClaskey (or Henry Burr, if you prefer) was one of the truly great artists of his day. He was great both as singer and as executive. His records were so many and so good that in all probability he will become one of the legendary figures of the next generation. Few will question his right to rank among the half dozen greatest recording artists, and almost everyone will concede his right to a rating among the top two or three.

Books Received

Button Hand Book. By Florence Zacharie Ellis Nicholls, 114 Overlook Rd., Ithaca, New York. Price $2.85.

The hobby of button collecting moves forward with another book. This latest edition, "Button Hand Book," emphasizes again the broad field of research and study which the hobby affords. Mrs. Nicholls, like all other authors of button books, was confronted with the problem of choosing her specimens from thousands of desirable collectors' specimens, no small task, and she pictures and lists more than 1,000 buttons. Her 30 plates include the following classifications:

De Luxe . . . Cats' Heads . . . Cats . . . Children, Babies, Horses, Dogs, Monkeys, Stag . . . Cows, Bulls, Buffaloes and Water Buffaloes . . . Hands and Flowers . . . Heads, Famous Men and Women . . . Lovers, Musicians, Skater, Rare Duel . . . Liverpool Transfers and Enamel . . . Miscellaneous, Silver, Ivory, Historical . . . Paperweights, Two-Piece and Other Similar Glass . . . Pearls, Cameos, Carved, Australian . . . Rabbits and Dogs . . . Rats, Mice, Pied Piper, Puss in Boots and Beavers . . . Tapestry, Enamels, Glass, Lithographs, Mosaics, Porcelains, Silver . . . Wedgwood.

The compiler of these paragraphs has perused, intently, the cat buttons. Mr. and Mrs. Feline are pictured in various poses, about 80 of them, on three different plates, including such inimitables as "The Cat and the Fiddle," and "Dick Whittington's" cat. My special delight in the book was the cat illustrations, but others will choose the musicians or the hands and flowers for his or her own special interest.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Steve Porter — I

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

STEVE PORTER, a native son of Buffalo, N. Y., where he was born in 1864, was one of the most versatile of all phonograph recording artists and had one of the longest careers before the horn and "mike." His experience as a record maker began no later than 1897, and after electric recording came in, in 1925, he was called upon to re-make for Victor his famous Irish specialties of "Clancy's Wooden Wedding" and "Christmas Morning at Clancy's."

Few singers have had such wide variety of experience as fell to the lot of Steve. His early career was that of a typical vaudeville comedian, specializing in telling anecdotes in the guise of his favorite character, "Flanagan." These same monologs were soon to be used as the basis of an almost interminable and highly popular series of "comic talking records." When he had a chance to make records, he jumped at the opportunity.

In the article about Albert Campbell it was told how Campbell and Porter were members of the Diamond Comedy Four, a male quartet which made records in the '90's for Marks and Stern, the music publishers. That was probably the start of Porter's long career as an accomplished quartet baritone. It was also the beginning of his specialty of writing "descriptive" records, such as the "Steamboat" and "Cornfield" medleys, which were standard sellers for many years.

Not long afterward, Porter also began to discover other phonograph "talent." He met S. H. Dudley at the stage door of a theater and inaugurated him on his career as baritone of the Edison and Haydn Quartets. To anticipate a little, when the original American Quartet began making records for Victor in 1900 or 1901, it was composed of Campbell, Porter, Dudley and an Englishman named Lea. Steve was also baritone of the first Columbia Quartet.

Oddly enough, for a comedian with so strongly marked a strain of Irish humor, Porter's first solo cylinders and discs (the latter were the seven-inch type made for Emile Berliner) consisted almost entirely of hymns and sentimental ballads. It may come as something of a shock to imagine the originator of Flanagan singing "Holy, Holy, Holy" and "Rock of Ages," but he did. He also sang "On the Banks of the Wabash" and "Just Tell Them That You Saw Me," as well as many other popular ballads of the '90's. I haven't heard any of these records, but presumably they were done without his Irish accent. Charlie Hodgdon, of Salisbury, Mass., has been trying for years to find copies of them.

Porter ranks, I should say, next to Len Spencer as "the great originator" of the phonograph, and, by 1898, he had become a member of the great Len's "Spencer Trio," which made a great many comic sketches, such as "The Mocking Bird Medley" and "In Front of the Old Cabin Door." The Trio's personnel didn't exactly stay put, but always included Spencer and Porter. Other artists might be Billy Golden, the "coon shouter"; Joe Belmont, the whistler, or George Watson, the yodeler, depending on what type of selection was to be recorded.

Steve had so many ideas and was such a good business man that I imagine he was responsible for organization of the American Phonograph Company at some time around 1900, although I believe William F. Hooley was listed as the president, and S. H. Dudley as secretary. Porter was vice-president. This was a company formed by recording artists with the idea of selling cylinder records direct to the consumer. Among its novel ideas was one of having the Haydn Quartet make a record specially-to-order for the individual purchaser of any number not regularly listed in the catalog. There was also a long list of tenor solos by Harry Macdonough; a special series of street piano numbers by an Italian organ grinder, and even a fairly long list of "classical" baritone offerings by "Signor Francisco," who was really young Emilio deGogorza.

"Artists," as Byron Harlan once remarked in a letter to me, "need a manager, for they are seldom capable of managing themselves." The American Phonograph Company soon gave up the struggle of competing with the large, well-financed record companies, and the Haydn Quartet went to England, to make hundreds of records for companies there. Steve must have crossed over at about the same time.

The quartet came home after a few months spent in England, but the versatile Steve, ever avid for new experiences, remained. He not only made a great many records for the British phonograph firms, he also took a job as recording manager for the Nicole Company. Nicole was a Swiss music box manufacturer who decided to get a share of record making profits in England and other European companies. The records were single-faced, red in color and semi-flexible. Although considerably heavier, they somewhat resembled the Hit-of-the-Week "durium" discs, which were widely sold in this country around 1929 and 1930.

Just why the popular recording comedian, who then wore a bushy mustache which he discarded in later years, cast in his lot with Nicole is uncertain. Perhaps the introduction of gold moulded records with permanent "masters" had convinced him that the money-making days of recording artists were over in the United States. Edward B. Marks, in "They All Sang," tells of Steve's chagrin when he went to the Columbia studios, all primed to sing many "rounds" of his favorite numbers, only to learn that a couple of masters were enough and there would be no more warbling at a dollar

HEADQUARTERS

For Edison Cylinder and Diamond Disc
Phonographs, Records and Repair Parts Jlyp

WOODYMAY RECORD CO.

73 Roxbury St. Boston, Mass.

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS
by great artists of the past can be bought at
YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists Jly34

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Congress Building Miami, Florida

WANTED

COLUMBIA
GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

Marcella Sembrich
Edouard de Reszke
Schumann-Heink
Campanari
Suzanne Adams
Antonio Scotti
Charles Gilibert

Ten-inch, single-faced records
with red and gold or black and
silver labels.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old advertisements of records and phonographs.

- FOR SALE -

RECORD CATALOGS
OF MANY COMPANIES
A LARGE ASSORTMENT
OF VICTOR SUPPLEMENTS

STEPHEN FASSETT

944 Monroe Lane
Woodmere, L. I., N. Y.

or so a round. But, adds Marks, Steve got his revenge, for he never afterwards sang for Columbia for less than five dollars!

At any rate, while with Nicole, the genial Mr. Porter sang many English music hall songs, in addition to the currently popular American ditties. He even recorded English folk tunes such as "Varmer Giles." That's one I'd like to hear, to find out just how closely he approximated the English bucolic accent.

Nicole's recording activities didn't last long. Its master records were bought by the British Sonogram Company, an ill-fated concern whose activities had a life only of months, and Steve was without a job.

But not for long. He talked with officials of the "His Master's Voice" Company (the British equivalent of Victor) and was soon on his way to Calcutta, to be recording director for the H. M. V. plant in India.

After a few years in India, Steve felt the call of the homeland, so returned to the United States, primed with both old and new stories about Flanagan, Finnegan, O'Reilly, Clancy and McGuire, and ready and willing to give every recording company the benefit of his services. He received a cordial reception and, when the American Quartet was reorganized in 1910, with Billy Murray as the star, Porter became its baritone. The other members were John Bieling, first tenor, and William F. Hooley, bass.

In the very first year of the new quartet's existence, it made one of the biggest selling records of all time, "Casey Jones." After a few thousand copies of the first version had been pressed, however, the Victor officials decided the quartet's support of Murray, who sang the solo lead, was too weak, and dispatched telegrams to the "boys" to come back to Camden and do it over. Murray, Bieling and Hooley promptly arrived, but Porter didn't get his telegram and failed to show up. After a long wait, Walter B. Rogers, the Victor recording director, said, "Well, I can sing a little baritone in a pinch," and so pinch-hit for the absent Steve. Thus it came about the quartet version which sold several million copies was the only early American Quartet record in which Steve Porter was not heard.

(To be Continued)

OUR PATRIOTIC MUSIC

Foreword

By KENNETH ROSE

WHEN the drums of war beat out their compelling call to arms, and the rolling diapason of a nation's cry rises in just wrath and irresistible might to quicken the pulses of its people, neglected and forgotten loyalties become the treasured possessions of each citizen. The spiritual forces of all are quickened to an articulate urgency that only music, literature, and drama can adequately express. It is from such a compelling need that patriotic music is born, and practically all national ballads, regardless of their origin, have this common motivation.

Today in America we can look back upon a proud tradition of national song—a tradition that stems from the sacrifices and triumphs of the American Revolution, and extends to the present great conflict, World War II. Today millions are turning to the proven songs of the past for inspiration, fortitude, and solace; and today, as in the past, new and appreciated music is being written that will bring to unborn generations an equal measure of good. It is the purpose of this article to trace some of the background of our national music, to link it up with the events that brought about its composition or adoption, and to describe briefly a number of the most important songs and ballads.

It must not be thought that all patriotic music played or sung during a war period is necessarily a product of the conflict, or primarily the result of inspiration and formal composition. On the contrary tunes entirely unrelated to strife or national impulse have frequently been used, because of an inherent and spontaneous vitality that in some manner voiced a universal need; witness "I Wish I Was in Dixie's Land"; "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight;" and "Tipperary." Because these is no fixed precedent, our national song literature is rich in quality and adequate for all needs. We can justly claim a proud musical inheritance.

For purposes of convenience and clarity, it is advisable to divide this paper into three periods; first, that covering the Revolutionary War, the War with Tripoli, and the War of 1812; next that of the Mexican War and Civil War; and finally the period of the Spanish American War and World War I. Due to the fact that too little time has elapsed to give us a proper perspective, no attempt will be made to comment on music used in the present conflict.

Songs of the American Revolution 1768-1783

SECULAR and patriotic music, altho extremely rare, were not unknown in America during the middle of the 18th century. We find recorded a number of songs issued in broadsides and contemporary periodicals that warrant us in assuming that even then our people were not musically sterile. Music was rarely printed in these early days. It was customary to indicate the tune to be used; and one familiar to all and easily sung was of necessity selected.

For example, in the early Colonial period military heroes were memorialized in song and story. The seething patriotic impulses of the colonies found an outlet in impassioned verse, which was occasionally set to music. We note "Brave Wolfe," dedicated to the general who lost his life on the Fields of Abraham; "The Liberty Song," written by John Dickinson, which appeared in 1768; "The Liberty Tree," by Thomas Paine, written in 1775; Francis Hopkinson's "Liberty Call," of the same year; "Americans to Arms," an anonymous broadside of 1775; and "Breed's Hill" or "The Burning of Charleston," attributed to Joel Barlow.

Of these, the "Liberty Song" is far away the most important, in that it was our first patriotic song to be written and published. The publishers were Mein and Fleming of Boston, and the tune used was the familiar "Hearts of Oak." No copy of this edition has been located, and its discovery would be an event of historical importance.

And so, as we approach the American Revolution, which lasted from 1776-1783, we observe a certain preparatory musical background that must have affected the actual war years. It is true that this output of topical and war songs was limited, and that few, if any, music stores existed. Secular music publishing was not to be known until 1787, when Thomas Dobson of Philadelphia is-

KENNETH ROSE

Kenneth Rose, a frequent contributor to HOBBIES, is director of the violin department at Ward-Belmont School, Nashville, Tenn. As artist and teacher, he has won wide recognition in his professional field, and in recent years has devoted considerable attention to the subject of Musica Americana. His collection of American imprints, numbering over 15,000 items, is one of the largest in the South, and is especially strong in Confederate material. At present, in his leisure moments, Mr. Rose is busily engaged in compiling a history of music in Nashville, extending to the Civil War period.

Two Famous Contraltos Recently Dead

Sigrid Onegin and Maria Gay

On June 18, in Magliaso, Switzerland, Sigrid Onegin, famous German-Swedish contralto, died at the age of 52. This brilliantly gifted singer recorded extensively for Polydor in the early Twenties. Her first American records were listed in the 1923 Brunswick catalog and her first association with that company lasted through the early days of electrical recording. In 1928, Onegin became a Victor-Gramophone Company artist, recording in the U.S.A., England and Germany for some years.

Maria Gay Zenatello died in New York City on July 29. She was 64 years old. The voice and style of this famous Carmen may be studied on records made over a long period. Bauer lists black G&T and Favorite discs recorded in Paris, 1903-05. There was a series of Gramophone discs that originated in London, 1908, of which two numbers from "Carmen" were pressed here by Victor. To American collectors Maria Gay is best known through her Columbia records of 1911 and later. In November, 1930, a little known Victor electrical recording was released, a duet from Carmen, sung with her husband Zenatello, on 7314.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Steve Porter — II

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

THROUGHOUT its career, the American Quartet, although it sang many popular sentimental songs, specialized in ragtime and comedy numbers. With Billy Murray and Steve Porter as two of its members, that was no doubt inevitable. The Victor catalog declared that "in popular songs of the day and humorous specialties, they are unequaled," and anybody hearing their records of "That Mysterious Rag," "That Hypnotizing Man," "The Skeleton Rag," and dozens of others of the same genre must agree that when it came to intricate comedy singing the foursome had no serious competition.

On the other hand, I don't believe a better example of perfect quartet singing of the old school has ever been made than the Edison Diamond Disc of "Moonlight Bay," sung by the Premier (Edison name for American) Quartet.

Many of the biggest selling records of the 10-year period from 1910 to 1920 were made by the American. Early in the quartet's career, Steve dusted off the old favorite "Night Trip to Buffalo" sketch (as a cylinder, it was the first record I ever heard) and the American remade it, with a change whereby the Irish hero was going to the "Boof-a-lo convention," to be nominated by the Democrats for the Presidency. Coupled with the cowboy song, "Denver Town," it went well.

When "Oh, You Beautiful Doll" came along, the American recorded it. A month or so after it had been placed on the market, a famous poet wrote a letter in which he declared, "I can't bring myself to address you as either gentlemen or men," and indignantly inquired how "four such singers could bring yourselves to sing such appalling trash." The Quartet replied that the record had already sold more than a million copies and was still going strong; consequently, their sense of artistry was not too greatly outraged. In a sense, time has made a mockery of the poet, for, despite the silly words of "Beautiful Doll," its irresistible tune has already sent it well on its way to being an American folk classic.

I have already mentioned typical ragtime numbers as sung by the American. One of their big hits of 1913 was "Sailing Down the Chesapeake Bay." Another was "And the Green Grass Grew All Around." In 1914 there were such masterpieces as "Do You Take This Woman for Your Lawful Wife?" "Chinatown, My Chinatown" and "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary." Steve was still making comic talking records on occasion, but singing with the quartet took up most of his time and energy.

The ensemble held together in its original form until 1918 or 1919, when Bill Hooley died and Donald Chalmers became the bass "foundation." When Murray's joint Victor-Edison contract expired in 1919 and he decided to free-lance for a time, the American sang for virtually all the phonograph companies of the day. Sometimes it called itself the American Quartet; sometimes, the Premier; sometimes, the Premier-American, and, on one occasion at least, the Murray Quartet.

In 1920 a new male quartet, the Harmonizers, came into being, with Steve as its baritone. The other members were Charles Hart, Billy Jones and Harry Donaghy. It free-lanced exclusively, but lasted only a couple of years. Murray by this time had signed an exclusive Victor contract, and Porter was still the American

You can't play the Hit Tunes of the Sweet Caporals Parade without

THE CURIOUS HISTORY OF MUSIC BOXES

by Roy Mosoriak

which includes

"The Care and Repair of Music Boxes"

by Glenn P. Heckert

Why did Napoleon I give a musical watch to his favorite son-in-law, General Murat, with his own portrait on it? Who made a finger-ring that played dinner music? What came before the graphophone to bring music to "just people"? Who played the first polka on an automatic music box, and set the pace for rug-cutters and juke-boxes in our time? Why is it dangerous for a "man with a screwdriver" to unloosen music box parts? These and a thousand other questions are discussed in the provocative, lilting book, THE CURIOUS HISTORY, etc. Also has pictures! 242 pages, 133 halftones.

"... Have certainly been delighted with your new book. I think you did a grand job and certainly deserve a great deal of credit for gathering the very fine pictures and wonderful information that you assembled in this book. I know I will enjoy it for many years to come and will be referring to it many, many times for dates and information, as I have done already several times establishing the approximate dates of some of my old music boxes."—Lloyd G. Kelley, Mass.

"... Book received. As the daughter of an oldtime clock and watchmaker and one who repaired old music boxes, I expect much pleasure renewing some of my own childhood (more than 50 years ago) spent in father's fascinating shop."—B. H. P. D., New York.

"... Just a line to congratulate you on your book. It is comprehensive, attractive and most interesting. I am proud to have a copy in my library."—Margaret Chamberlain (Mrs. Paul M.), N. Y.

"... I am reading your book with enormous interest. It is beautifully done and I am sure nothing else of the sort exists. I shall treasure this book always."—Dorothy Stickney, N. Y.

"... Much patient search and research are represented in the book. To members of the clock, watch and jewelry trade who probably know little or nothing about music boxes, this book may offer the pleasures of mechanical 'discovery'."—National Jeweler Magazine.

SEND $5.00 FOR YOUR COPY TO

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING COMPANY, 2810 S. MICHIGAN AVE.
CHICAGO, 16, ILLINOIS

Quartet baritone. In 1924 Murray and Ed Smalle made a record of "What Does the Pussy Cat Mean When She Says Meow?" in which the versatile Steve did the voices of both the "dog" and "cat."

Meanwhile, Edison and some of the small companies, such as Grey Gull, continued to issue such monologs as "Flanagan's Real Estate Deal" and "Flanagan in a Restaurant." For Edison, Steve teamed up with Ernie Hare and made a new recording of Len Spencer's immortal comic sketch, "The Arkansas Traveler." He also made a number of sketches, of rural rather than Irish humor, with Billy Jones, just as he had done with Byron Harlan years before.

Here I may as well say that Steve Porter's recording activities were so vast and so varied it has been next to impossible to touch on them all. I have not, for instance, mentioned as yet the comic sketches, such as "The Joke-smiths," which he made with Len Spencer, or such rapid-fire dialogs as "Irish Wit," done with Murray's assistance. Nor have I spoken of the Rambler Minstrel Company, composed of himself, Murray, Collins and Harlan, which made many personal appearances as well as a series of recordings for all the companies. In at least one instance he introduced to record fans a performer otherwise entirely unknown to collectors—"Miss Emma Forbes," a sweet-voiced woman who assisted him in "Mrs. Hiram Offen Discharges Bridget O'Sullivan." Once or twice he helped Cal Stewart in "Uncle Josh" records.

During his later years, when he had turned gray but still had bushy black eyebrows, Steve was not dependent upon phonograph or theatrical work for his income. Many of his admirers will be surprised to learn that he became wealthy through an invention, but that is the truth. His mother-in-law was deaf, so ingenious Mr. Porter set out to aid her. He designed a hearing device which he called the Port-o-phone. It was named after himself, of course, although the name bears more than a little resemblance to the old Zon-o-phone phonograph name. It worked so well for the mother-in-law that he placed it on the market and was still selling it in large quantities at the time of his death.

Steve Porter's passing came suddenly. One spring day in 1936 he had left his New York office and was walking down the street when he had a heart attack. He fell, striking his head against the curb. The head injury would have been serious in itself, but he was dead from the seizure by the time a physician could be summoned. He was 72 years years of age. Billy Murray, Walter Scanlan and many others of his old phonograph friends sadly attended the services at Frank Campbell's funeral parlors.

From every standpoint Steve Porter was a great artist, as popular standards go. He was not merely a brilliant Irish comedian, he was such an accomplished singer that the American Quartet wouldn't have seemed the same without him. His recording career extended over 30 years, and he was as good when he appeared before the microphone for the last time as he was the first time he saw a recording horn. As the collecting of old "popular" records grows apace, so is his fame likely to increase and to become permanent and enduring.

Peace to his ashes!

RECORDS

WANTED CLASSICAL RECORDS:—Leonid Sobinoff, Sergei Lemeshoff, Boninsegna, Aino Ackte, Maria Labia.—Stephen Mullen, 50 Western Ave., Saugus, Mass. o167

WANTED: Don't sacrifice your old classical and operatic phonograph records for junk! Highest prices paid for old cylinders or discs. Send list to—G. H. Smith, 843 Middle St., Portsmouth, N. H. ap12698

RECORDS of all types bought. I pay express. Classics preferred.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Av., Jersey City, New Jersey. d6403

FOR SALE OR TRADE, Victor Columbia Classical Red Seal Records. Also Fonotipia, Pathe, Odeon. Prefer to trade for old Jazz records such as Oliver, Armstrong, Dodds, Simeon, Bix, Hines, Morton. Will buy any quantity old records.—J. O'Byrne de Witt, 51 Warren Street, Roxbury, 19, Mass. f60801

WANTED:—American Sheet Music Printed Before 1870. Either Loose Copies or Bound Volumes.—Sparkman, Box 947, Huntsville, Alabama. f6832

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Av., Jersey City, 6, New Jersey. o12525

PRINTED LISTS SENT FREE, we do not ask for stamps. Edison cylinder catalogs 1904-1913 Edison cylinder and disc magazines, leaflets. Edison cylinder popular records also classical 20c each. Edison diamond disc popular and classical records 35c each. Concert and Grand Opera 75c and $1.00 each. No Edison disc over $1.00 no matter how rare. The above prices have been the same for years and will remain so. We pay cost of shipping records and phonographs to you well packed.—Woodmay Record Co. Knights of the turntable, 73 Roxbury St., Boston, Mass. o1095

RECORDS, sheet music. State "Wants." (Enclose dime).—Fore's (Dept. O), 3151 High. Denver. 5, Col. s12234

WANTED: Old Coin operated music instruments; also Music Rolls for Seeburg Automatic rewind Pianos and orchestrons and for Wurlitzer Bijou Piano Orchestras.—A. C. Raney, Route 3, Box 371A, Whittier, Calif. mh6694

Parlor barrel organ, early 19th century, in the Steinert collection,

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Harry Macdonough I

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

"HARRY Macdonough" was the name under which the late J. S. Macdonald, one of the most talented and popular of all singers for the phonograph, was known throughout his entire recording career, but it was an alias which came to him unsought and eventually caused him serious embarrassment.

For a year or so before his death Mr. Macdonald wrote me occasional letters in which he related many highly interesting facts concerning his career—surely one of the most varied, colorful and important in the history of the talking machine. Beginning as a singer at 75 cents a "round," he eventually became, first with the Victor company and then with Columbia, among the most outstanding of recording organization officials.

But perhaps it would be well to let this great tenor tell as much of his story as possible in his own way. We shall begin then by saying that he was born in Canada, of Scotch descent, in 1868, and received a sufficiently good musical training to allow him to be an accomplished church soloist, although he never appeared in concert or upon the stage.

On October 17, 1898, at the age of 30, he filled a test engagement at the Edison laboratories in West Orange, N. J. Prior to that eventful afternoon, he had made only a few records—cylinders, of course—for the Michigan Electric Company in Detroit. "These records," he explained to me, "were not sold but merely used in their 'phonograph parlor' on the slot machines in use at that time."

Although Russell Hunting is usually identified with the once popular series of "Casey" monologs, a man by the name of John Kaiser was making them in Spanish-American war days for Edison. It was he who first interested Walter Miller, the pioneer company's recording manager, in young Macdonald's exquisite lyric voice.

"At my first session," said the singer, "I made 12 selections, for which I received $9.00. The regular rate at that time was $1 per song, but being a beginner I was supposed to be satisfied with anything they chose to pay me and, as a matter-of-fact, I was. That $9 seemed pretty big for the afternoon, and I had no complaint. However, shortly after that they paid me the regular rate of $1 per 'round,' as it was described in those days.

"Each morning or afternoon session consisted of 30 'rounds' of five or six songs, selected from the repertoire on the list in proportion to their selling qualities. Sometimes it would be 'The Holy City' ten times; 'Mid the Green Fields of Virginia' five times, with the other 15 divided up among the songs of which they needed additional masters.

"At that time they made five masters at each performance of a song and from each master they could make from 25 to 75 duplicates before the master wore out. 'The Holy City' was the outstanding seller and had to be done over more than any other selection. It paid my rent for many years."

I pause here to say that "The Holy City" was something of a burden throughout Mr. Macdonald's singing career—a tiresome burden, it must have been, despite its rent-paying qualities. It took two Victor single-faced records—No. 2815 and 2816—for him to sing it in its entirety—and another record by him, called "The Sabbath Morn," consisted of "part of 'The Holy City' with chimes." He also took the solo part of a Haydn Quartet rendition of Stephen Adams' famous composition. Evidence that the thing came to be an annoyance was given in the June, 1927, issue of the now defunct Phonograph Monthly Review, in an article by Mr. Macdonald, in which he said he was glad that the phonograph had progressed to the point that complete recordings of symphonies were being issued, and "The Holy City" is no longer the height of recorded art."

Walter Miller and a typographical error must share the responsibility for the young tenor's becoming known as Harry Macdonough. Miller, who apparently had a mild mania for naming tenors Harry, objected to Macdonald's first name of "John" as not being "romantic enough." "You're Harry Macdonald from now on," he said, but when the first cylinder by the new singer came out the last name was mistakenly given as "Macdonough."

"That didn't matter, because I was completely indifferent to what they called me. I thought then that record-making was a sort of lowdown business, anyway," the singer whimsically commented.

But then came embarrassment. By one of those stranger-than-fiction coincidences, there was at that time a veteran theatrical comedian who had been calling himself Harry Macdonough for many years. Despite the fact that he had appeared with Lillian Russell and other famous stars, the new "Harry Macdonough" had never heard of him before. The veteran, however, soon found out somebody was using his name on records by being annoyed with requests to sing ballads every time he made a stage appearance. When he began making an investigation, the chest-fallen Macdonald wrote him a letter of apology.

"That was the hardest thing I ever did," he told me, "for I felt that if I told him the truth, that I had never heard of him before I appropriated his name, I would only be adding insult to injury." A friendly understanding was affected, however, and the tenor and the comedian had no trouble with each other after that, except that, as a rule, each received the other's mail instead of his own.

Young Macdonald was now well started on his successful recording career. He continued to call himself Harry Macdonough, although he said he made a few records for a minor company whose name he couldn't recall, under the disguise of "Ralph Raymond."

The Edison Quartet was then composed of John Bieling, first tenor; Jere Mahoney, second tenor; S. H. Dudley, baritone, and William F. Hookey, bass. Mahoney became ill with inflammatory rheumatism, and Macdonough took his place. "The new combination," he said, "stuck together for about 20 years, being known as the Haydn Quartet when singing for the Berliner Gramophone Company, which later became the Victor Company."

After the formation of the Victor Talking Machine Company in 1901, the Quartet, as an ensemble and as individuals, signed a contract which permitted work to be continued for the Edison organization, although the bulk of its efforts were for Victor. Macdonough is also said to have made a few Columbia records, although I have never seen one. He likewise sang many records for the American Phonograph Company, a short-lived cylinder manufacturing concern operated by some of the prominent re-

(Continued on Page 129)

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists. app

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Congress Building Miami, Florida

WANTED

SMALL SWISS CYLINDER MUSIC BOXES Advise number of tunes, size, age and good condition. Price. np

EDNA WILKIE

P. O. Box 575 Dayton, Ohio

A message for you . . . from 1953

(Today, John Jones is just an average American, wrestling with all the doubts and worries and problems that beset every one of us right now. But let's skip ahead 10 years. Let's look at John Jones then—and listen to him . . .)

"SOMETIMES I feel so good it almost scares me. 'This house—I wouldn't swap a shingle off its roof for any other house on earth. This little valley, with the pond down in the hollow at the back, is the spot I like best in all the world.

"And they're mine. I own 'em. Nobody can take 'em away from me.

"I've got a little money coming in, regularly. Not much—but enough. And I tell you, when you can go to bed every night with nothing on your mind except the fun you're going to have tomorrow—that's as near Heaven as a man gets on this earth!

"It wasn't always so.

"Back in '43—that was our second year of war, when we were really getting into it—I needed cash. Taxes were tough, and then Ellen got sick.

Like most everybody else, I was buying War Bonds through the Payroll Plan—and I figured on cashing some of them in. But sick as she was, it was Ellen who talked me out of it.

" 'Don't do it, John!' she said. 'Please don't! For the first time in our lives, we're really saving money. It's wonderful to know that every single payday we have more money put aside! John, if we can only keep up this saving, think what it can mean! Maybe someday you won't have to work. Maybe we can own a home. And oh, how good it would feel to know that we need never worry about money when we're old!'

"Well, even after she got better, I stayed away from the weekly poker game—I was dropping a little cash at the hot spots now and then—gave up some of the things a man feels he has a right to. We made clothes do—cut out fancy foods. We didn't have as much fun for a while but we paid our taxes and the doctor and—we didn't touch the War Bonds.

"We didn't touch the War Bonds then, or any other time. And I know this: The world wouldn't be such a swell place today if we had!'

The Treasury Department acknowledges with appreciation the publication of this advertisement by

HOBBIES MAGAZINE

CORRECTION

Two months ago we published a warning regarding F. Russell, after evidence of a check written on a Boston bank which was returned marked "no account." In order that no injustice be done, we wish to clear Mr. Russell upon receipt of a letter from his bank stating that he has an account there. It is and shall remain the policy of HOBBIES to issue warnings when irrefutable evidence is submitted to us of this type. In our field nearly all our readers are buying, selling and trading, and checks that are sent out for merchandise and are returned marked "no account" naturally call for protection to other readers. We do not know what happened between Mr. Russell and the bank and certainly regret it if any injustice has been committed against Mr. Russell. We hope by this notice that our readers will cancel anything against him. The bank's advices, however, are still in our possession and it looks as if Mr. Russell has a humdinger of a lawsuit against his bank.

Old Mechanical Banks By Ina Hayward Bellows

The only authentic, comprehensive history of old mechanical banks . . . filled with illustrations of banks, each identified, described and appraised in value and rarity. A valuable handbook for collectors and dealers . . . $2.50.

Order your copy from HOBBIES
2810 S. Michigan Chicago, Illinois

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORD- ING ARTISTS

(Continued from Page 34)

cording artists, and went with the other members of the Quartet to England in 1902, where their fame had preceded them to such an extent that they reaped a rich harvest making records for the European companies.

Soon after their return, Macdonough, by this time unquestionably the most popular recording tenor of his day, signed an exclusive contract with Victor and became its assistant recording director, in charge of the New York studios. Here he not only continued to sing the latest ballads by the score and to take part in an almost incredible amount of ensemble work with Haydn and many other groups, but to supervise all Victor recording activities outside those at the Camden laboratories. There was plenty of work, but he seemed to thrive on it!

(To be continued)

MATCH COVERS

FOR SALE

MATCHBOOK COVERS, clean and flat, one hundred (all different) for One dollar postage paid. Oregon Hobby Club, 240-246 N. Commercial, Salem, Oregon. d128001

"ARMY AND NAVY" book match covers, 20 diff. for $1.00. 25 diff. Patriotic 50 cents. 50 Diff. Hotels $1.00 (Entire lot for $2.00 in War Stamps). Free Lists. — Jay Yeingst, 502, Parkway Road, Harrisburg, Pa. f122151

MATCH BOOK ALBUMS: Send now for your copy of booklet describing the old reliable "Matchless" Album, and other albums for various uses.—Matchless Album Co., Dept. H, Long Branch, N. J. mh6447

10 DIFFERENT N. Y. World's Fair 25c or War Stamp. — Fred Kappus, 230 St. James Place, Brooklyn, N. Y. ja6654

MATCHBOOK COVERS: Clean, all different, 110 for $1; 200, $2.25; 300, $3.75; 400, $5.50; 500, $7.50; Covers from Hollywood: 25, 50c; 40, $1; 60, $1.50; 80, $2.25; 100, $3.—E. B. Carswell, 6555 Barton, Hollywood, 38, Calif. f6888

UNUSED MATCH BOOKS. 125 different Standards, $1. 50 different Billboards $1. Free list. — H. F. Fansler, 5002 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Penn. s1021

MATCHBOOKS. Full, all different, new, unused, $1.25 hundred.—Joe Casselberry, 302 Lincoln, Lansdowne, Pa. mh6633

UNUSED MATCH BOOK covers. 100 all different, $1.00; 35 Royal Flash covers, $1.00. Free list.—Charles Edelman, 1311A East 84, Cleveland, Ohio. mh6825

FOR SALE: Matchbook Covers. Postal brings prices.—Matchbooks, 1808 College, Fort Worth, 4, Texas. ap6042

120 DIFFERENT COVERS flat. one dollar prepaid. George Irwin, 3415 Drexel, Dallas, 5, Texas. o12885

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

● WANTED TO BUY—4c per word for 1 month; 6 months for the price of four; 12 months for the price of seven.

● FOR SALE—6c per word for 1 month; 6 months for the price of four; 12 months for the price of seven.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Harry Macdonough, II

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

DURING THE early 1900's and, to a less extent during the decade from 1910 to 1920, Harry Macdonough's name remained one of the most familiar on Victor records, in spite of his being actively in charge of the company's New York recording laboratory.

He continued to make tenor solos of the popular ballads of the day; standard songs, such as "My Old Kentucky Home," "Home, Sweet Home" and "Then You'll Remember Me"; hymns, and favorite operatic arias, sung in English. His rank as the most popular tenor on records outside the Red Seal classification was not challenged until another Canadian known as Henry Burr came along and, around 1912, stepped firmly into the lead as the best loved singer of sentimental songs in all the phonograph's history.

Mr. Macdonough continued as the star of the Haydn Quartet until the pressure of executive duties reduced the amount of time he had for singing, and the Quartet disbanded in 1914. Nevertheless, he kept on as second tenor of the Orpheus Quartet, whose other members were Lambert Murphy, tenor, who called himself Raymond Dixon on many of his records; Reinald Werrenrath, also known as Edward Hamilton, baritone, and the omnipresent William F. Hooley, bass. It is worthy of note that Murphy and Werrenrath eventually became Red Seal singers, although they were no better than Macdonough and Hooley, who "stayed on the Blacks."

Then there was the Lyric Quartet which, when first founded in 1909, consisted of Macdonough as tenor, Frank C. Stanley as bass, Elise Stevenson, soprano, and Corinne Morgan, contralto. Stanley died in 1910, and the ladies, who were proteges of his, soon ceased to record. The Quartet then became Macdonough; Hooley, bass; Olive Kline, soprano, and Elsie Baker, contralto. It made records for a great many years.

The artists with whom Macdonough sang duets constitute almost the entire Victor "popular" list. He teamed up with Bieling, Dudley, Hooley, Stanley, a mysterious Miss Walton, who was probably Elise Stevenson, Miss Stevenson, Miss Morgan, Elizabeth Wheeler, Olive Kline (their 12-inch duet of the Miserere from "Trovatore" was long one of the most popular records in the Victor catalog), Miss Baker, and others entirely too numerous to mention. He and George P. Watson, the German yodler, even joined forces to record "The Bavarian Yodel." The Schubert Trio, which made one or two records of religious compositions around 1906, appears to have been composed of him, Stanley and Mrs. Wheeler. He was also the tenor of the Lyric Trio (the other members probably were Hooley and Elizabeth Spencer, with whom Macdonough made a few duets), which sang a few records, such as "When I Was a Lad," from "Pinafore," in 1901 and 1902. Few singers can have had a busier career. When one considers the vast amount of supervisory work the tenor was doing at the same time, amazement grows as to how he ever did it.

Yet Macdonough retained his keen sense of humor and always found time to "kid" other recording artists along and to relate the newest anecdote. He and Olive Kline used to engage in some tall story-telling matches, with each trying to top the other's yarn.

Macdonough's solo records became fewer in number after 1916. The last, No. 18516, "It's Never Too Late to be Sorry," came out in February, 1919, and had "Don't Cry, Little Girl, Don't Cry," by his arch rival, and good friend, Henry Burr, on the other side. His final appearance on records, however, appears to have come in February, 1920, when he sang the vocal refrain of a dance record, "Peggy," by Joseph C. Smith's orchestra.

Mr. Macdonough summed up his later phonograph years by saying: "My personal connection with the Victor Company continued until 1925. For many years I sang solos, duets, trios, quartet and ensemble records with the Victor Male Chorus, the Trinity Choir, the Victor Mixed Chorus and the Victor Light Opera Company. In fact, I was mixed up with almost every combination in the catalog, besides picking artists and selections for them to do.

"Eventually I was made Sales Manager of the Company and continued in this work until 1922 when I returned to the Artist Department with my dear friend, Calvin G. Child, who had been at the head of the Department since the formation of the Victor Company. On his retirement in October, 1923, I was made Manager of the Artist and Repertoire Department and continued there until October, 1925, when I left to become Director of Recording Studios of the Columbia Company."

The latter position was the one John S. Macdonald—the erstwhile "Harry Macdonough"—held when he succumbed to a heart attack on September 26, 1931, at the age of 63. His death was the cause of much comment in newspapers and trade publications generally, but it was ironic that the latter made some outstanding errors in writing of his achievements. The Radio and Talking Machine Weekly declared him to have been the tenor of "the original Peerless Quartet," while the Talking Machine World identified him as the leader of the American Quartet. Both were thinking of the Haydn, but got the name mixed up with the organizations led by Henry Burr and Billy Murray, respectively.

For several years before his death, Victor extensively remade Macdonough's records, having them recorded by newer singers, either because the original matrices had been damaged or to get the benefit of improved orchestration. The tenor's renditions, however, were regarded as models for other artists to pattern by, and the catalog continued to list many records in which he participated. It spoke truthfully when it said that Macdonough's "correct method of singing and the clearness of his diction have supplied excellent model records in various classes," and added, "he has many friends, being known to the music-loving public in every quarter of the globe."

Mr. Macdonough was survived by his wife and a son, "Jack," with whom I kept up a friendly correspondence for some time, but of whom I eventually lost track, although I heard he became engaged in business in South America.

As one looks back upon the remarkable 33-year career of Harry Macdonough in the phonograph world, it seems impossible to doubt that he was one of the most significant musical figures of his time. From a beginning as a singer for slot machine records to the most popular solo and quartet tenor of his day, through the enormous mass of his miscellaneous recording work, to becoming recording director, Victor sales manager, and, finally, Columbia's recording director—his record is one of great accomplishments. Why a man of such predominantly musical instincts should ever have been made a sales manager is more than I can understand, but the fact that he was only lends point to the great variety of his achievements.

over from Paris and he kept the transfer equipment in his home. Not even the officials of the American company were allowed to see it, with the result that the mystery surrounding this secret process, which surpassed all other methods of dubbing, has remained unsolved to this day.

Angus Joss, of Joliet, Ill., writes that there was an Actuelle machine that played both vertical and lateral cut records. The sound travelled over a rod from the needle to an amplifying cone, producing a mellow tone free from directional qualities. This machine, says Mr. Joss, "was a large and elaborate affair, equipped with an electric motor and housed in a huge cabinet with handsome trimmings." Which prompts me to suggest that if collectors owning unusual types of phonographs and gramophones would send us photographs we might find them satisfactory for reproducing on these pages.

WANTED

Old Songsters & Song Books

ANY QUANTITY
GIVE CONDITION AND PRICE FIRST LETTER
mhp

RUBIN SURASKY
2349 Eutaw Pl. Baltimore 17, Maryland

"400 Outstanding Women of the World and Costumology of Their Time"

By Minna M. Schmidt

583 pages — over 500 illustrations

PRICE $2.00

The outstanding women of 40 countries of the world are written up in this book in short biographical form with a portrait of each. tfr

Order from

HOBBIES BOOK DEPARTMENT
2810 S. Michigan Chicago, Illinois

SAVE YOUR HOBBIES

The wealth of information contained in every issue of HOBBIES is too valuable to be thrown around with the consequent danger of loss. File every copy of HOBBIES as soon as received in the handsome binder which we have for you and you will soon have a volume of information to which you can refer at any time. This binder is covered with buckram, with the title printed in gold. Its appearance will compare favorably with the handsomest bound books in your library. It will be sent to you postpaid on receipt of $2.20 with a guarantee of perfect satisfaction or money refunded.

Holds 12 Issues

HOBBIES MAGAZINE

2810 South Michigan Avenue
Chicago, Illinois

Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

S. H. Dudley, I

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

IN SOME ways, the recording careers of Harry Macdonough, second tenor of the Edison and Haydn Quartets, and S. H. Dudley, the baritone, were curiously parallel. Both began singing by the "round" and worked themselves up to high positions as Victor Talking Machine Company officials. And, as will be seen later, Dudley, like Macdonough, used for recording purposes a name that was also the property of someone else, with confusion and embarrassment resulting.

"S. H. Dudley was given the name of Samuel Holland Rous when he was born some 78 years ago. In 1931 he wrote me about some of the highlights of his interesting career, in which he said:

"I must have begun to acquire a taste for travel at the age of six months, when my father, resigning his professorship in Asbury College . . . left my native town of Greencastle, Ind., to become one of those poor peripatetic superintendents of county schools, who were always at the mercy of petty politics in the local school boards. . . . Before I was thirteen we had lived in Vevay, Irvington, Attica, Thorntown, Stockwell, Dayton, Frankfort, Rushville and Indianapolis . . .

"At age thirteen the future 'Dudley' was removed in his first year in high school to do his bit toward the family income . . . . When I was 20 I began to think of some way to utilize my very fair but untaught natural baritone voice — other than giving it free in church choirs. Chance brought me an opportunity to play 'small parts' in a company giving a summer season of operetta in Montreal, and I jumped at it.

"Little did I imagine that during the next 13 years I would sing roles in 72 different operas with 34 opera companies! Or that I would travel a quarter million miles in Pullmans, day coaches, freight trains, cabooses, carriages, burros and farm wagons — not to mention Shank's Mare—in the U. S., Canada and Mexico . . .

"After a few seasons of comic opera I drifted into the grand opera section and then the fun began! Several years with the Boston Ideal Opera Company were comparatively uneventful, but those of 'Grand Opera in English' with several companies (one of them featuring Emma Juch, who was among the very first Victor Red Seal artists) were not . . .

"I was with the first company to give Grand Opera in English in Mexico, and the first to present Wagner's works. Tannhauser, Flying Dutchman, Lohengrin and Walkure were given . . . . On April 29, 1891, we played at Guanajuato. The costumes and scenery had to be carried from the station three miles up a twisty canyon on a tram line; and when they arrived it was discovered that Faust costumes had been brought instead of the needed Tannhauser ones. It was then 11 o'clock and the audience, which had been waiting three hours, was restive, to put it mildly. So we played Tannhauser with Faust costumes and the curtain went down at 2:30 on a highly satisfied audience.

"Although only a bad baritone, I was occasionally called upon for bass and even tenor roles. During the Mexican tours I was forced to sing Sparafucile in Rigoletto. And do the Mexicans know their Rigoletto? I'll say so! Every time I dodged that low F in the first act (because I couldn't hit it) there were fervent hisses from all over the house! . . .

"Again, the time was November 14, 1890, and the place the Grand Opera House, Philadelphia. The Flying Dutchman was billed, with a large sale, and the money was badly needed. The singer booked for Daland became ill at five o'clock and no one else knew the important part. But a German who shall be nameless actually made a stab at it with the score in his left hand every minute he was on the stage. Imagine the feelings of the large audience, watching that fat German trying to sing the score from the book in English with a thick dialect, making appropriate gestures with his right hand! It was one of the funniest things I ever saw."

Dudley spent 13 years in opera and afterwards appeared in drama as one of Charles Frohman's forces. He and his wife, a Miss Holland (who, as Sofia Romani, had sung soprano roles with most of the opera companies in which her husband appeared) became sick and tired of trouping, and he began to look about for some business that would allow him to maintain a home.

"Then," says the genial baritone, "like manna from heaven came along my old friend, Steve Porter, waiting for me one night at the stage door.

"Hello, Sam. Do you want to sing second tenor in a male quartet job?"

"Steve, I'll sing anything from basso-profundo to soprano, if there is any real money in it!"

"Well, it was a job making male quartet records for Mr. Thomas Edison in West Orange, and we received $15 each for our afternoon's work. Simple old-fashioned stuff — Old Oaken Bucket; Hail, Jerusalem — but the singing position was decidedly cramping, as the crude methods of recording made it necessary for us to bump our heads close together.

"But it looked like easy money, and I asked Walter Miller (recording manager for Edison then and for 30 years afterward) if he wanted any solos. 'Let's have a specimen,' said Walter; so I picked up the first song that came to hand, which happened to be a refined ditty entitled 'The Chili Widow,' with a refrain like this:

'She was the Chili Widow, the widow who couldn't get warm—'

"When Walter heard the record he figuratively fell on my neck, as I happened to have a voice and an enunciation which just fitted the old-time recording process . . . In a year or so I was making at the rate of about $12,000 a year, which was real money in 1900!

"But, boy, it was hard work! We singers of that period would come home at night, with our voices all but gone; not daring to speak above a whisper to our families for fear of wasting those precious vocal cords. I have made as many as 85 records in one day. A bad cold usually cost a singer about $500.

"Those were the good old days when only about 25 duplicates could be made from one 'master,' the average being much smaller, and not only that but for a long time after the introduction of the 'concert' record — that huge cylinder which was supposed to be the last word in 'tone' — they were recorded one at a time and could not be duplicated. Think of that for a royalty; for every record sold the singer received 75 cents, the standard price at the time.

"But it was too good to last — a long comes Mr. Edison with his 'gold moulded' process, which enabled him to make a million records out of each master. That, of course, jumped the price of the singers' services, until it was fixed at $40 for each number. Then Victor began to bid for our services, along with other companies that were starting in the game, but in 1902 the business began to fall off because many new singers became available when recording improvements made it possible to use all kinds of voices. So our male quartet . . . began to look toward London as a promising field. In June, 1902, we sailed for the other side and during the summer made hundreds of records—quartets, solos by Macdonough, Hooley and Dudley, duets, etc. Plantation and darky numbers were particularly appreciated by the British."

(To be continued.)

PATRIOTIC MUSIC

Part III

By KENNETH ROSE

THE WAR OF 1812 THROUGH THE MEXICAN WAR — 1846

THE period from 1812-1815, the years of our second war with England, were rich in valor and replete with a new consciousness of the meaning of our national integrity. They yielded a rich harvest of musical expression. Nearly every major victory of the War of 1812 was celebrated in song, and the list is long and honorable.

THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER 1814

Our National Anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner," must always be given precedence over all other patriotic songs. Its story is so thrilling, its later history so engrossing, that it merits an analytical description all its own.

"The Star Spangled Banner" was born of shot and shell and of the tragedy of war. It was written by Francis Scott Key of Baltimore on board a British man-of-war, under circumstances that were intensely dramatic.

A leading physician of Maryland, a friend of Key, was captured and held prisoner by the British. In an effort to secure his release, Key, while operating under a flag of truce, met with the British admiral on the deck of the English flagship. Before all details could be arranged the British forces made a night attack on Fort McHenry, which was being defended by the Americans. After feverishly waiting the result of the night's bombardment, Key at the break of dawn discovered the dim outline of the flag still waving triumphantly over the ramparts of the fort. Despair yielded to ecstatic joy; and transported by the rapture of this soul-stirring sight, he hastily penned the verses that were to become known to us as "The Star Spangled Banner."

The next day, with his mission completed, Key had a Baltimore printer strike off the song on hand bills. This was on September 14, 1814. It appeared in a Baltimore paper the following week. The verses were set to the well known tune, "To Anacreon in Heaven."

"Anacreon in Heaven" is attributed to an English composer, John Stafford

Smith, who wrote it as a drinking song for the London Anacreonic Society. It had a great vogue with many similar organizations in England and reached the United States in the late 1780's. It had previously been used as the musical setting for "Adams and Liberty," "Freedom Triumphant," "The Pillar of Glory," "When Death's Gloomy Angel Was Bending His Bow," and for sundry Masonic purposes, before it was adapted by Key. Undoubtedly he was familiar with this tune and had it in mind when falling so naturally into the somewhat involved metre of the "Star Spangled Banner."

The first edition of our National Anthem was published by Thomas Carr in Baltimore in 1814 and is a rarity of major importance. Only eight or nine copies are known to exist today. These are all distinguished by the omission of the letter "R" in the word "patriotic," and by the fact that this was the first publication in any form of the song under the title of "The Star Spangled Banner." It had been known originally as "The Fall of Fort McHenry." It has run into many editions, and any printing before 1830 is a collector's treasure.

Other songs written during the War of 1812 of patriotic importance are "The Battle of the Wabash," containing a very early imprint of the "Star Spangled Banner;" "The Hunters of Kentucky;" "Decatur's Victory;" "Erie and Champlain;" "Hull's Victory;" "Lawrence the Brave;" "The Death of Commodore Perry;" and "Columbia, the Land of the Brave."

—o—

This national outpouring of song was so widespread that several periodicals carried song sheets as supplements. Those found in the Portfolio Magazine are collector's items and deserve a place in this list. Among the best known are "The Pillar of Glory;" "Rise Columbia, Brave and Free;" and "Charge the Can Merrily." Each has its place in history, and copies are not easily found.

AMERICA—1831

Although it can be truly said that "The Star Spangled Banner" is our greatest National Anthem, a recognition brought about by popular usage and confirmed by law, it may be stated as emphatically that "America" is beyond question our greatest National Hymn. Its stately and noble verse

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

S. H. Dudley, II

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

I CLOSED last month's installment with the Haydn Quartet going to London in June, 1902, and making hundreds of records for the European companies. Some of these—including two Dudley solos, "Up Came Johnny With His Camera" (a rather risqué offering for that day) and "The Whistling Bowery Boy"—have been sent to me by such English collectors as P. G. Hurst and John Barnett.

Now to resume the narrative in the singer's own words:

"Thoroughly tired out with four years of almost continuous singing, I decided to play hookey, and my wife and I went to France and Switzerland for a good rest. But there seemed to be 'no rest for the wicked,' for I soon got a cable from Cal Child, director of the Victor recording department, offering me the position of assistant director. As it had been about 17 years since I had held down what might be termed a steady job I hesitated, but finally accepted, reserving the right to sing for Edison. They had a very long list of Dudley records, which had to be remade from time to time, as slight improvements were made, and I did not like to handicap them.

"But a year later the Victor purchased my exclusive services—and some services they were, though I say it! In a few years I was far too busy to sing any more.

"All I had to do was to select each month 50 or 100 numbers for the monthly bulletin; see that artists were engaged to sing them; keep them in good humor; write the notes for the bulletins; compile the Victor's monumental Alphabetical Record Catalog; write and revise annually the Book of the Opera; write several hundred letters a month to record fans; test all the new records which were made, sometimes 500 a month; scout for new singers and novelties, etc. Mr. Child was by that time too busy with his huge list of celebrity singers to bother with the common or garden variety of records."

During all these active years, it should be mentioned, Mr. Dudley was noted for the rigorous manner in which he excluded objectionable material from Victor lists and refused to allow the trashier types of popular songs to be recorded.

"By 1919," he continues, "I decided that 13 years of opera and 17 of records was enough for one lifetime, so my wife and I jumped into our little Scripps-Booth. And since then we have kept going.

"We spent a winter in Hawaii, and while there a new volcano eruption broke out, and Mrs. 'Dudley' was kind enough to break through a crust of lava and sink to her waist! . . . We traveled over the old Spanish trail . . . were lost in the desert several times, fording one stream 14 times in one day; had a broken axle in the middle of a New Mexico desert; dodged Louisiana floods by loading the car on a leaky barge for a 20 mile bayou trip; were caught in a forest fire in Florida; stuck in the middle of Fish Creek, Arizona, all night, with mountain lions roaming about; mired in a 'dry' lake in Utah—no wonder Mrs. Rous said, 'I thought you retired from business to get a rest!'

"Then to Europe, where we have been ever since. We spend six months in our little apartment in Monaco and in the summer explore the mountain passes in our trusty Renault, now seven years old and going strong. . . . In 1927 a trip around the world broke the monotony—and another book could be written about some adventures while trying to see something of the virgin jungles of Sumatra."

Jim Walsh, Virginia, placing a record on an old-time Edison cylinder machine. In the background may be seen some of his autographed photos of recording artists and composers. Walsh, one of the outstanding authorities and record collectors of the country, besides his writing activities, broadcasts from WDBJ, Roanoke, Va., at 5:30 each Saturday afternoon. His program comes in at about 96 on the dial, and consists of playing old records and giving information about the old-time recording artists.

RECORDS

WANTED: Don't sacrifice your old classical and operatic phonograph records for junk! Highest prices paid for old cylinders or discs. Send list to—G. H. Smith, 843 Middle St., Portsmouth, N. H. ap12698

FOR SALE OR TRADE, Victor Columbia Classical Red Seal Records. Also Fonotipia, Pathe, Odeon. Prefer to trade for old Jazz records such as Oliver, Armstrong, Dodds, Simeon, Bix, Hines, Morton. Will buy any quantity old records.—J. O'Byrne de Witt, 51 Warren Street, Roxbury 19, Mass. f60801

WANTED: — American Sheet Music Printed before 1870. Either loose copies or bound volumes.—Sparkman, Box 947, Huntsville, Alabama. f6882

RECORDS. SHEET MUSIC, Lists 10c. —Fore's Music Exchange (Dept. O), 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. s12234

WANTED: Old Coin operated music instruments; also music rolls for Seeburg Automatic rewind pianos and orchestrons and for Wurlitzer Bijou Piano Orchestras.—A. C. Raney, Route 3, Box 731A, Whittier, California. mh6694

WANTED: IRCC and HRS Records. Send list, showing condition and prices, to E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco, 15, California. n12885

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. n12238

WANTED: Phonograph recordings of Mozart Sonata K545 in any of the following pressings: PD-516765, TI-1814, PE-1144 2/3, also any recordings of the Mozart Masses, either complete, or only such selections as were recorded by the Christschall Co., D. P. Ball, Room 401, Congress Bldg., Miami, Fla. f3045

FALKNER BROS. Record Shop, Antiques, 383 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass. mh3021

RECORDS of all types bought. I pay express. Classics preferred.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City, New Jersey. ja12235

EXCHANGE UNWANTED RECORDS for recordings desired. Classical, instrumental, vocal records; acoustic, electrical, domestic, imported. — American Record Collectors' Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y. ja12414

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR SALE: Rosewood melodeon, made by Cahart & Waltham, lyre base, perfect working order. Original finish $75.00.—Mrs. D. F. Groves, Wooddale, Ill. Phone, Bensenville 236 R1 f1011

FOR SALE: Sheet music, fine private collection. For particulars write—C. de Windt, 140 Beacon Street, Boston, Massachusetts. ap6023

WANTED: Music Boxes, every description. Meerschmied Pipes, Steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Meyer, Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. je6654

WANTED: SMALL, one or two tune music box. Must be in tune.—Mrs. H. C. Taylor, West Hills Pkwy., Lawrence, Kansas. f167

REGINA DISCS, 15½ in. Straus, etc. $1.75, $2. Zither, music box attachment.—Catherine Merrill, Glencoe, Minnesota. f109

FOR SALE—"Progressive Series of Piano Lessons" edited by Leopold Godowsky. Copyrighted 1913. Most of music, lessons, exercises, grades 1-3, never used. Sheet music alone worth more than price asked. Marvelous opportunity for serious music student or music hobbyist. Price $25.00 plus express.—Irma Braden, Sheldon, Illinois. f1205

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc-type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, 20 Lawson Rd., Egypt, Mass. ja122901

WANTED TO BUY: A record cabinet for Edison cylinder records; state condition and price. I also want to buy Edison two minute wax cylinder records. Send lists to—George M. Pate, 339 Linden Avenue, Centralia, Ill. f1441

And here I conclude my quotations from the man whom Harry Macdonough described as "the most interesting letter writer I have ever known."

These quotations, it should be remembered, were written more than a decade ago, several years before the beginning of the second World War. In 1933, Mr. and Mrs. Rous, having, as he expressed it, "no desire to leave our old bones in Europe," returned to this country and, before I lost track of them, were living happily in California, where he was also writing a book to be called, "One Hundred Ways of Making Money in a Depression." As far as I know, they are both still alive. I certainly hope they are. It would be a pleasure to resume communication, but I would hesitate to inflict correspondence upon Mr. Rous at his advanced age. If he is still living, he and Russell Hunting, who made the "Casey" monologs, must be about the oldest surviving recording artists. Both, I think, are 78.

It will be observed that the tone of these excerpts is one of buoyant happiness. That is all the more striking when it is remembered that for years after "Dudley's" retirement the phonograph world was full of rumors that he had gone blind and was "down and out." This was written to me by the late, S. E. Levy, of Shanghai, China, perhaps the world's foremost authority in his day on old-time records, and was also told to me, in all good faith, by Edwin M. Whitney, of the Whitney Brothers Quartet and for many years a studio director for the National Broadcasting Company. When I mentioned these reports to their subject, he replied, "I did have some trouble with eye strain—too much Victor proofreading, probably—but I can now see a beetle on the side of a mountain several miles away." As for the "down and out" idea, he said, "I once amused myself by figuring that if I had held on to the Victor stock I used to own, I would now be worth three million dollars. However, I sold it and invested in a comfortable annuity, and I can truthfully say I don't want to be a millionaire."

Despite his operatic training, most of Dudley's solo records were of a humorous nature, in which his skill as a whistler usually was given scope. He was noted for his rendition of "The Whistling Coon," which he made for Victor both as a solo

(Continued on page 23)

The Curious History of Music Boxes

$5 Postpaid - Insured
By Mosoriak & Heckert

"THE CURIOUS HISTORY OF MUSIC BOXES" covers the subject of music boxes comprehensively, illustrates typical ones, and for the first time pictures some of the rarest and costliest watches and tiny automats ever constructed by man. 242 pages, 133 large halftones.

In this edition we glimpse little known facts about famous people of the world. There is pictured, for instance, a Napoleonic watch. It was a fine musical watch that Napoleon had made as a gift to present to his son-in-law, General Murat (later "Prince" Murat), to celebrate his fete day as Emperor after the Battle of Marengo.

Napoleon was very conscious of the value of time and integrated military attack synchronously executed. He patronized the greatest watch-maker of all time, Abram-Louis Breguet of France. It is said that on a dare from Napoleon, the Breguet devised his Pendule Sympathique, a machine into which one set a pocket watch at night. During the hours of the night the Pendule Sympathique would automatically rate, regulate, reset and wind the watch in its care for accurate time-measuring the next day.

"By wireless (Mackay Radio)—London, England, to Lightner Publishing Co., Chicago, U. S. A. RUSH, thirteen copies Music Box Book, import license number 1373421." Signed Malcolm Gardner.

"Enclosed is order for one copy of 'The Curious History of Music Boxes' for one of our clients."

Zolotnitzky a LaVieille Russie, Inc., New York, (Goldsmiths of old Russia). (By appointment to Their Majesties, the Kings of Egypt and Sweden).

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM
HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.
2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

WANTED

Old Songsters & Song Books

ANY QUANTITY
GIVE CONDITION AND PRICE FIRST LETTER

RUBIN SURASKY
2349 Eutaw Pl. Baltimore 17, Maryland

FREDERIC REMINGTON Western prints. Please describe, price. — James Serven, Box 1777, Santa Ana, Calif. ap12293

BALTIMORE PRINTS WANTED: Describe, state price.—F. Buschman, 20 E. 24th St., Baltimore, Md. ap6422

WANTED: Old American paintings and prints; American portraits prior to 1820. Ship paintings by James Bard, J. Pringle; J. Walters. Prints by W. J. Bennett, Robert Havell, J. W. Hill, A. Doolittle. Send description and price.—C. K. Johnson, Hurley, N. Y. mh6276

PRINTS: Prodigal Son, singles or sets. Wanted, also prints any subject by Albert Alden or Doolittle. Chetwood Smith, 457 Stuart St., Boston, Mass. my12446

WANTED TO BUY Pictures by Currier & Ives, also other artists. Winter, Colleges, Railroad, Locomotives, View of Towns, Hunting, Fishing, Sporting, Ships, also Colored Books on Flowers and Birds of all kinds.—Laurin's Old Print Shop, 86 High Street, Saco, Maine. f6046

CURRIER & IVES PRINTS WANTED: Also other early American prints, paintings and miniatures. Please describe fully with price. Prompt reply.—House of Antiques, 28 Chandler, Detroit, 2, Mich. je12657

WANTED: DR. SYNTAX PRINTS. Please state titles and condition.—Louis Todd, 322 W. Washington St., Shelbyville, Ind. f146

WANTED: PICTURES published by Currier and Ives. Especially Winter Scenes. Large or small.—A. R. Davison, East Aurora, N. Y. jly6023

FOR SALE

MAGNUS ILLUSTRATED letter sheets. Write for free list. Colored Civil War patriotic song sheets, ten different $1.50.—E. N. Sampson, 420 Allyndale Drive, Stratford, Conn. mh2003

A FEW COPIES OF "Lee and His Generals" in color by G. B. Matthews. $4.00 each. — Mrs. Georgia F. Knight, Livingston, Tenn. my12429

CURRIER & IVES Specialist's Price List. Send 25 cents for latest list, to—Paul Voorhees, 41-28 Little Neck Parkway, Little Neck, L. I., New York. sl22901

COLOR PRINTS: Flowers, fruits, birds, costumes. Wholesale and retail. Wanted: Fine old lace paper Valentines. — K. Gregory, 222 E. 71st St., New York, N. Y. f128001

RUSSELLS, WESTERN ACTION, Colored Prints, 55c, five for $2.—DuBois, 236 West Second, Los Angeles, Calif. jly12276

ANTIQUE COLORED prints $1 each. Kurz and Allison Civil War lithographs. Large, fine condition. — Schwarz, 1806 Chestnut, Philadelphia, Pa. au1897

OLD VIEWS of cities and towns. Announcing an unusual collection of woodcuts, engravings and etchings, all hand colored, all warranted to be from fifty to one hundred years old, covering scenes in all parts of the United States and Alaska. These are neatly mounted and protected by cellophane. If you are interested in old prints of your city or village we may have it. Prices from $2 to $5.—Old Prints, 525 E. Argonne Drive, Kirkwood, Mo. je68481

CURRIER & IVES copies, beautifully colored, size 11x16", assorted scenes. 12 for $1.50, postpaid (marked reprints).—S. Fischel, 5234 Dorchester, Chicago. je6405

CURRIER & IVES: Fox Hunting, "The Death" (age spotted), $14.50. Large folio. "The First Test of the Season," poor condition, $25. Large folio, "The Retreat," Bufford, $15.—Providence Antiques, 732 Westminster, Providence, R. I. f1402

500 THOMAS NAST CARTOONS for $50, 10x14 in. and 14x20 in. — Hobby Service, Hanover, N. H. f109

AUTOGRAPHS

(Continued from page 14)

telegraph the head of the White House domestic menage, rather imperatively:

New York,
December 6, 1863.

Edward McManus, Executive Mansion:

Let me know immediately exactly how Mr. Lincoln and Tad die are.

Mrs. Lincoln.

Metropolitan Hotel.

To which not McManus, but the President, replied: "All doing well (!) Tad confidently expects you tonight. When will you come? A Lincoln."

It is worth noting that the Lincoln National Life Foundation has given in "Lincoln Lore" a master list of all Lincoln's letters.

—O—

CIRCUSIANA

(Continued from page 15)

Charles Bernard; "Ins and Outs of the Circus," John H. Glenroy; "Circus Memoirs," George Middleton; and "Show Life in America," William Lambert.

Readers should realize that this list does not include all of the fine books that have been written on circus subjects. These recommendations merely give the novice some basis on which to begin the building of a worthy collection of circus books. Some of these have long been out of print. Some were limited editions of from 100 to 300 copies, privately distributed. But others are current volumes that may be bought in most any book store.

One thing is certain. The circus fan who reads a dozen or so of the books listed in this article, will have a better understanding of the circus and its folk, and fans are indeed indebted to these authors for the many hours of fine entertainment they have contributed.

—O—

MUSIC

(Continued from page 21)

and as a duet with Billy Murray. His ballad duets with Harry Macdonough, such as "While the Leaves Came Drifting Down," were widely popular, and their record of "Red Wing," coupled with the Murray-Haydn Quartet rendition of another Indian song, "Rainbow," must have been one of the biggest sellers ever made.

Many of the Dudley records appeared on Victor under the name of Frank Kernell. They were considered of a less dignified nature than the regular Dudley repertoire, but, recalling such titles as "Not By a Dam Site," the baritone professed himself unable to believe that customers considered Dudley to be a particularly dignified personage, either!

Just as Macdonough had trouble with a comedian who called himself Harry Macdonough, so Dudley's mail frequently became confused with that of a Negro named S. H. Dudley, who had a minstrel show and also operated a chain of theaters. The confusion was frequently exasperating, but there seemed nothing in particular that could be done about it. Another coincidence is that the singer's middle name was Holland and as has already been mentioned, that was his wife's maiden name. And I might mention that the mail carrier who used to bring me Mr. Rous' letters, mailed in distant Monte Carlo, was named Samuel H. Rouse!

Considering the manner in which he made records for 18 years or so; wrote the Victor monthly supplements from 1902 or 1903 through 1916; originated the huge Victor catalog, which was generally held to be the best ever issued by any musical firm; wrote the Victor Book of the Opera and also labored so efficiently as assistant recording director for 17 years—considering all this, there can be little doubt that few men have done as much as S. H. Dudley did to make recorded music one of the most popular forms of home entertainment ever devised. He was truly a benefactor to his generation, and to the generations to come.

SAVE YOUR HOBBIES

The wealth of information contained in every issue of HOBBIES is too valuable to be thrown around with the consequent danger of loss. File every copy of HOBBIES as soon as received in the handsome binder which we have for you and you will soon have a volume of information to which you can refer at any time. This binder is covered with buckram, with the title printed in gold. Its appearance will compare favorably with the handsomest bound books in your library. It will be sent to you postpaid on receipt of $2.20 with a guarantee of perfect satisfaction or money refunded.

Holds 12 Issues

HOBBIES MAGAZINE

2810 S. Michigan Avenue
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

William F. Hooley

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

I REMEMBER with especial vividness two opinions expressed by Sam Rous ("S. H. Dudley"), Haydn Quartet baritone and Victor catalog editor, during our formerly extensive correspondence. "Billy Murray," Mr. Rous said, "is, and always has been, the king of comic song singers" and "Bill Hooley was the king of quartet bassos."

Since the three other members of the Haydn Quartet—Bieling, Dudley and Macdonough—have already been written about in this department, it seems only fair that Hooley should be next in line, although I have few details of his life as compared with those I have given of his associates.

Mr. Hooley probably was in his 60's when he died shortly after filling his last recording engagement at the Victor studios on August 1, 1918. Albert Campbell, perhaps with a pardonable touch of exaggeration, once said to me that "Bill Hooley was an old man when I first started making records back in the mid-Nineties." Probably to a stripling, hardly more than old enough to vote, the already well established bass did appear "old," even though he was just entering middle-age. However, photographs of the Haydn Quartet, taken before 1900, do not give the impression that Mr. Hooley was as young as his associates, and it is interesting to scan the photographs of the American Quartet, which appeared in Victor catalogs from 1912 to 1919. Billy Murray looks like a college boy; John Bieling and Steve Porter appear to be in their thirties or early forties, but "Bill" Hooley is bespectacled, rather cadaverous of feature and apparently in late middle age.

As previous articles have shown, Hooley was one of the original members of the Haydn (Edison) Quartet. This ensemble recorded first for Edison, in 1895 or 1896, then made disc records for Emile Berliner, and afterward became one of the most popular features the Victor catalog ever boasted. Some Zon-o-phone records also were made by the group, but it does not appear ever to have sung for Columbia, nor, as far as I know, did Hooley do any solo work for the latter company. He was president of the short-lived American Phonograph Company, already mentioned in these pages, by which the Haydn Quartet members established a recording business of their own.

An 1899 record catalog issued by Babson Brothers, of Chicago, listed a few cylinders by "the Original Lyric Trio," consisting of two now forgotten singers, John Havens, tenor, and Estelle L. Mann, soprano (who must have been one of the very first women to make records), in addition to Hooley. Victor issued a few Lyric Trio records in 1901 and 1902, but Harry Macdonough was the tenor, and the soprano probably was Elizabeth Spencer, whose later recording career was confined almost entirely to work for Edison.

Hooley's right to the honorary title of "King of the Quartet Bassos" rests on more substantial grounds than is generally realized. He was not only the "foundation" for the Haydn and American Quartets (and, by the way, Harry Macdonough remarked to me that "as a foundation for a quartet I have never known Bill Hooley's equal"), but he also became the bass of the Lyric Mixed Quartet, following the death of its original basso, Frank Stanley, organizer and leader of the Peerless Quartet. He was likewise the bass of the Orpheus Quartet (Macdonough, Murphy, Werrenrath and Hooley) and the Heidelberg Quintet, and was also a mainstay of the Victor Male and Mixed Choruses, the Victor Male Quartet, the Trinity Choir, the Victor Light Opera Company, and perhaps one or two other ensembles. In other words, whenever Victor wanted a competent bass to take part in all types of concerted work, Bill Hooley almost automatically got the call.

He was good as a soloist, too. Many collectors, such as Charlie Hodgdon, of Salisbury, Mass., who has a strong admiration for Hooley, treasure his records of "The Rolling Stone" and "When the Rainbow Shines Bright at Morn," sung with the help of a male chorus. I have always had a fondness for his eight-inch record of "Let Erin Remember the Days of Old." He also sang "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," "The Larboard Watch" and other numbers of the standard bass repertoire. Always his voice was deep, mellow and beautifully controlled.

I have never seen a full-length photograph of Bill Hooley, but his pictures unmistakably give the impression he was a small man with a big voice. Of his antecedents I know little or nothing, except that the old friends who survive him jokingly refer to him as "a flannel-mouthed Mick," meaning he was unmistakably Irish.

Billy Murray likes to tell of the time when the Empire Vaudeville Company, an organization of Edison artists specializing in recording comic skits, was making a record in which a fire was supposedly being extinguished. They tried the thing over and over, for an entire working day, with something going wrong every time. Finally, the skit was perfected to the point where it seemed an acceptable "take" might be made.

Everything went well until the record was nearly done. Hooley, as one of the imaginary firemen, had been assigned the line, "throw on more water!" But what he said, in a stentorian bellow, was "throw on more smoke!" The session broke up in hysterics, and that record wasn't made that day.

On another occasion, Billy, of unmistakable Irish descent, engaged in an argument with Alma Gluck and her husband, Efrem Zimbalist, both Jewish, as to the date on which a Jewish holiday would fall. Everybody who was called upon to settle the dispute gave a different date, and even the two distinguished Red Seal artists finally admitted they weren't sure.

Then somebody said, "Get Bill Hooley! He'll be able to tell you."

Zimbalist incredulously asked, "What does an Irishman like Hooley know about a Hebrew holiday?" but the answer was, "he knows everything about 'em!" and so it proved. Hooley was called out of another room and unhesitatingly gave a date which turned out to be correct.

The explanation was that, in addition to his recording work, he was also a highly paid church soloist. Part of his time was devoted to singing for a large Catholic church; another part to being bass soloist at a leading New York Jewish synagogue. Though Irish through and through, he knew his Jewish religious festivals!

Bill Hooley's solo work was not sufficient in quantity to give him a place among the very most popular singers of pioneer phonograph days, but there was nothing the matter with its quality. No matter whether he sang comic songs, ragtime, hymns, ballads or excerpts from opera, whatever he did was done as it should be. Throughout the years to come he will remain, for many loyal admirers, what Sam Rous termed him, "the King of Quartet Bassos."

Exclusively Edison
Woodymay Record Co.

Knights of the Turntable

Boston - 19 - Mass.

mhp

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

ONE OF THE most distinctive names ever used by a recording artist, undoubtedly was that of the genial comedian who, in the early 1900's, was known to his friends and record buyers generally as "Ragtime Bob" Roberts.

Probably most of his admirers thought the name was assumed, but it was actually his own. He was given the name of Robert Roberts when he was born in Cincinnati in 1879.

On January 22, 1930, when he had been out of the public eye for many years, the Cincinnati Enquirer published a photo and death notice of Roberts. Since it gives a bird's-eye view of his career, I shall quote it,

RECORDS

WANTED: Don't sacrifice your old classical and operatic phonograph records for junk! Highest prices paid for old cylinders or discs. Send list to—G. H. Smith, 843 Middle St., Portsmouth, N. H. ap12698

WANTED: Victor supplements, 1904 through 1915. Columbia supplements, August, September, 1923. Victor catalogues before 1912.—Robert B. Julian, 5203 California Street, Omaha, Nebraska. au6363

FINE RECORDS: Old and unusual records for sale or trade. Discs and cylinders bought. What do you want?—Deiano, 203 E. 11th St., Rolla, Mo. au6006

RECORDS. SHEET MUSIC, Lists 10c.—Fore's Music Exchange (Dept. O), 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. s12234

WANTED CLASSICAL RECORDS: Leonid Sobinoff, Sergei Lemeshoff, Boninsega, Aino Ackte, Maria Labia, Rosina Storcio, Eva Turner, Aristodemo Giorgini. —Stephen Mullen, 50 Western Ave., Saugus, Mass. my2002

WANTED: IRCC and HRS Records Send list, showing condition and prices, to E. P. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco, 15, California. n12885

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. —E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. n12283

OPERATIC RECORDS—Not an auction. Send for list.—H. P. Silverman, 216 Denham Bldg., Denver 2, Colo. ap1201

RECORDS of all types bought. I pay express. Classics preferred.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City, New Jersey. ja12235

FALKENER BROS. Record Shop, Antiques, 383 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass. s6042

FOR SALE: Edison Disc Records. Large stock unused, $1.25 each postpaid in continental U. S. Edison cylinder non-operatic unused. Send requests to Otto K. Paulus, First National Bldg., Salem, Oregon. ap1081

RARE-FIRST. Music Box recording; 10" disc, 7½ minutes of music played by, the Packard musical alarm watch; a Breguet et Fils musical watch; a musical letter-seal; a Piquet et Meylan musical watch; and a $5,000 music box (medley of songs). $5.00 postpaid well-packed and insured.—Roy Mosoriak, 624 Shroyer Road, Dayton, 9, Ohio. ap1813 then tell more of his phonograph activities:

"Death came suddenly to Robert Roberts, veteran vaudeville performer, at his home, 3671 Vine street, yesterday morning. Roberts was a member of a team which had impersonated 'Adolph and Otto' over WCKY. He went to the radio station Monday night as usual, but complained of pains in his chest, and was unable to give his performance.

"Roberts hurried to his home and took medicine, but a few minutes later his wife heard him fall over a chair. She called her daughter, Mrs. Horace Herring, 3693 Vine street, but Roberts died shortly after her arrival.

"For more than 25 years Roberts had been engaged in the show business. He made many phonograph records of Negro melodies and comic selections. Roberts was a son of the late Nicholas Roberts, veteran showman, who was proprietor of the Nick Roberts' Pantomime Company, and once had an interest in the old Standard Theater at Canal and Vine streets. Nick Roberts won national fame with his character 'Humpty Dumpty.' He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Katherine Roberts, and his daughter, Mrs.

Herring, who was married only a month ago.

"Born in Cincinnati 51 years ago, Roberts spent most of his life in this neighborhood, although he traveled extensively with shows. Physicians said his death was due to a heart attack." * * *

Although the Enquirer article touches only lightly on Roberts' recording experiences, it was as a singing comedian that he won his real fame. His voice was an excellent baritone, similar in quality to, but somewhat higher than, Arthur Collins', and he sang the same sort of music in which Collins excelled. One of his first big hits was "Ain't Dat a Shame?" made for Columbia in 1902. He began making Victor records about that time (Henry Hamblen will agree that one of his best is the catchy and amusing "Woodchuck Song" made in 1904), but his name does not appear in the 1903 Edison catalog.

Whenever the name of Bob Roberts is mentioned, I think of a bald-headed man walking rapidly. The reason must be that the comedian's photos, taken in his early 20's, show him to be prematurely bald, and the fact that his greatest record hit, made in 1906, was "He Walked Right In, Turned Around and Walked Right Out Again." The pace of this rapid-fire comic gem is so swift that it somehow gives the impression of the singer walking swiftly back and forth across the stage.

"Ragtime Bob" had a great run of

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED TO BUY: SYMPHONION music box and disc-type records.—Mosoriak, 624 Shroyer Road, Dayton, 9, Ohio. ap125

BAUER CATALOG OF HISTORICAL Records. Complete 35mm. Microfilm copy (296 Pages) $3.00.—A. L. Kalman, 4817 N. Fairfield, Chicago. ap1411

FOR SALE: Sheet music, fine private collection. For particulars write—C. de Windt, 140 Beacon Street, Boston, Massachusetts. ap6023

WANTED: Music Boxes, every description. Meerscham Pipes, Steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Meyer, Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. je6654

OUT-OF-PRINT RECORDINGS, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged. —American Record Collectors' Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City, 19. ja12414

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc-type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, 20 Lawson Rd., Egypt, Mass. ja122901

WANTED: Old sheet music, before 1900. Must be in fine condition. State title and authors. Also bound volumes old theatrical magazines. —S. Coslow, 9171 Hazen Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. ap1611

WANTED: Belliniana: Biographies, pictures, etc. of Vincenzo Bellini. Decca's complete recording of Bellini's opera Norma. —Marguerite Pickett, 1315 So. First, Louisville, Ky. ap188

FOR SALE: 125 15½ in. Regina Music Box discs in good condition, mostly classicals. Strauss, Mendelssohn, etc. $1.25 each. —Old Schoolhouse Antique Shop, Pavilion, New York. ap1441

WANTED

COLUMBIA
GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

Marcella Sembrich
Edouard de Reszke
Schumann-Heink
Campanari
Suzanne Adams
Antonio Scotti
Charles Gilibert

Ten-inch, single-faced records
with red and gold or black and
silver labels.

Zonophones by Eugenia Mantelli, especially the Carmen arias on 40075 / Columbia 40361 - La Juvla Cavatino, sung by Hesch.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old advertisements of records and phonographs.

Also want Edison Grand Opera Cylinders.

- FOR SALE -
RECORD CATALOGS
OF MANY COMPANIES
A LARGE ASSORTMENT
OF VICTOR SUPPLEMENTS
STEPHEN FASSETT
944 Monroe Lane
Woodmere, L. I., N. Y.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

hits around the 1905-1908 period. Many collectors will tell you his "I'd Rather Be on the Outside Lookin' In Than on the Inside Lookin' Out" is a scream. So is "Nothin' From Nothin' Leaves You," in which the composer, Ted Snyder, appears to have reduced the kindly process of being insulting to its lowest common denominator. It is a Negro song in which the dusky lady tells her no-'count husband exactly where he gets off.

Roberts seldom did duet work, but did make a few records with Billy Murray, whom he had warned, when Billy first came East, not to try to get engagements at Columbia, "because I do all the comedy around there." He and Al Campbell also made several humorous Irish skits concerning Patrolman Clancy. (That may have been the cause of Al's getting the nickname of "Clancy," by which Billy still addresses him.) Not all his work was of the comic song variety, for he sang a few plantation-type numbers, such as "Old Black Joe."

From 1908 to 1912 Roberts did little or no recording. I don't know just what he was occupied with in those days, but in 1912 he returned to the studios and came through with one of the biggest hits of his career, "Ragtime Cowboy Joe." His last Victor record, and one of his most amusing, was "Fables," in which he declares that "some folks call 'em fables, but they ain't nothin' but dog-gone lies!"

After that, Roberts disappears completely from the recording scene, as far as Victor, Columbia and Edison are concerned. Osborne H. Parker, of San Francisco, wrote to me a few years ago that he had found a Rex hill-and-dale record, apparently made in 1914, containing a duet by Roberts and Elida Morris—a combination I have never heard of on any other brand. It may be that the comedian was persuaded to sign up exclusively with this short-lived company, and found no niche for himself with the other companies when it ceased to operate.

However that may be, he dropped from sight so completely that, when I wrote to the late Frank Dorian, a Columbia company official, and asked him if he knew of Bob Roberts' whereabouts, he replied that "not even Bob's most intimate friends know what has become of him." Later he told me that Henry Burr had run into Roberts in St. Louis. That was a few months before the comedian, who had been living in his home in Cincinnati, died.

No collector who likes good comedy will make a mistake in going for the records of Bob Roberts, who was one of the great favorites from 30 to 40 years ago. He had few peers in putting over a ragtime or Negro song, and there is invariably a brisk, refreshing quality about his manner of singing. For years he has been one of my prime favorites, and I only wish his recording career, like his life, had not been so comparatively short.

—O—

CIRCUSIANA

(Continued from page 20)

ing much the same effect as electrically played bells of modern times. Circus fans generally, marveled at the nimble fingers and musicianship of these artists.

Hand bells have been employed in other capacities in the circus program. In Oriental spectacles, where the entire performing personnel of the circus dons costumes and parades around the hippodrome track, groups of bellringers at intervals in the line of march contribute to the musical sounds which fill the arena.

Bells are popular props in trained animal acts. Elephants have been trained to ring big dinner bells curled in their trunks as a part of such routines as call for the big pachyderms to simulate eating a meal. Monkeys are also often taught to ring bells as a part of their arctic antics.

Bells attached to leather straps are often used in the circus. Sometimes they are seen on the ankles of elephants. They are often made a part of the handsome leather rigging for liberty horses. They are worn around the neck by dogs and other small animals. And they are

(Continued on page 30)

The Curious History of Music Boxes

ETUDE MAGAZINE SAYS:

"Your reviewer doesn't know enough about music boxes to determine what the musicological and antiquarian significance of Roy Mosoriak's 'The Curious History of Music Boxes' really is. Moreover, he does not care, because the author obviously has gone to very great lengths to secure accurate and minute details that smell of scholarly research. What Mr. Mosoriak has done, in addition, is to bring together all sorts of facts about these mechanical instruments which have given lively pleasure to people who enjoy their tinkling sounds.

"The writer recollects an ornate Paillard box which was once the pride and joy of his great grandfather. It had to be wound with great care, but once set loose, its shiny brass cylinder could play melodies from 'Norma,' 'The Daughter of the Regiment,' 'I Puritani,' and other favorite operatic tunes. The possession of a fine music box was considered as much a mark of culture and social standing as the wax flowers under the glass dome or the singular set of mirrors which extended from a front window. This contrivance is known as a thorscope or 'busy body,' and with its aid one might keep track of the doings of the neighbors.

"The list of makers of music boxes is a long one. Most of them were watch or clock makers at the start. The writer was amazed to note the number of music box makers in England, the United States, Germany, Austria, and Italy, as he had thought that this was an industry confined to Switzerland and France, where indeed most of the fine boxes were made.

"Many of the smaller music boxes were concealed in watches, clocks, opera glasses, brooches, jewel boxes, fans, umbrella handles, smelling salts, bottles, walking sticks, seals, watch keys, rings, pistols, snuff boxes, chairs, and various domestic utensils.

"Automatic music has been traced to very ancient Grecian sources. The modern music box possibly began with the English invention (1676) of a device for striking the time in a clock. The musical mechanism of a steel comb with a series of steel reeds is attributed to Antide Janvier in 1776. The place of the invention was in the Vallee de Joux, Switzerland. From this start came a long series of the most complex mechanisms, playing music and operating puppets. One watch, for instance, had, on the case, a dog which barked in faint grunts the hours of day and night.

"Libraries and collectors will find this book a 'must item.' The work is finely illustrated."

$5 Postpaid - Insured
By Mosoriak & Heckert

"THE CURIOUS HISTORY OF MUSIC BOXES" covers the subject of music boxes comprehensively, illustrates typical ones, and for the first time pictures some of the rarest and costliest watches and tiny automats ever constructed by man. 242 pages, 133 large halftones.

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM
HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan

Chicago 16, Illinois

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Performers Who "Doubled Up"

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

ONE OF THE most fascinating features of collecting old "popular" records is tracking down the activities of artists—mostly singers—who made discs or cylinders under more than one name. I have had so many requests for information from collectors curious to learn more about performers whose records were issued under the "doubling up" method that I have decided to interrupt temporarily the continuity of the biographical sketches I have been writing and give an alphabetically arranged list of the "alias artists."

To the best of my knowledge, no other such list has ever before been compiled and published. I do not, however, maintain that my list is complete or 100 per cent accurate. In a few cases where I believe identification to be probable but not altogether certain I have placed (?) after the names. I have made no effort to include dance orchestras, for their activities are rather outside my range of interest, but a few Red Seal singers, who made "popular" records under assumed names have been included. I have also listed a handful of English artists whose records were popular in this country.

I shall be glad to learn of any "aliases" not listed here. Meanwhile, the late Billy Jones, who recorded for all companies impartially, appears assured of recognition as the champion user of assumed names. I should explain that, to conserve space, I have listed each performer only under the name by which he or she is best known, regardless of whether that is the individual's legal name and that, as a rule, I have not specified the record brands on which the assumed names were used. Now for the list:

ALEXANDER, GEORGE. This long-dead baritone, a native of Baltimore, probably never recorded under any other name, but his real name was Clifford Wiley.

AMERICAN QUARTET — Premier Quartet; Premier-American Quartet; Murray Quartet.

ASH, SAM—Will C. Robbins (?)

AUSTIN, GENE—Charles Keene.

BAKER, ELSIE—Edna Brown.

BALLARD, GEORGE WILTON—George Wilton.

BERNARD, AL—John Bennett; Jack Clare; "Skeeter" Simms; "Uncle Joe." Bernard and J. Russell Robinson were "the Dixie Stars" and he, Frank Kampain and Sam H. Sept were "the Record Boys."

BLUFF, HARRY—Billy Whitlock. (Bluff made comic sketches and bell and xylophone solos for English companies under both names.)

BURR, HENRY—Harry H. McClaskey (his real name); Irving Gillette; Alfred Alexander; Harry Barr; Shamus McClaskey. Mr. Burr told Angus Joss, of Joliet, Ill., that he made Pathé records under the name of Robert Bruce, but the only Bruce records I have heard were obviously by Lewis James.

CAMPBELL, ALBERT—Frank Howard. Campbell and Burr duets, made from American record company matrices, appeared in the Scala record catalog (England) as by "Bellwood and Burr."

COLUMBIA STELLAR QUARTET—Broadway Quartet.

CHALMERS, THOMAS—Lawrence E. Gilbert. (?)

DADMUN, ROYAL—Ralph Crane.

DALHART, VERNON—Mack Allen; Jeff Calhoun; Jimmy Cannon; Al Craver; Joseph Elliott; David Harris; Harry Harris; Fred King; Tobe Little; Bob White; Robert White.

DAWSON, PETER—Hector Grant.

DE GOGORZA, EMILIO—Carlos Francisco; E. Francisco; Ed Franklin; Herbert Goddard.

DEIRO, PIETRO—"Pietro."

DE KYZER, MARIE—Marie Kaiser (her real name).

DE LEATH, VAUGHN—Gloria Geer; Angelina De Marco.

DUDLEY, S. H. (Real name, Samuel Holland Rous)—Frank Kernell.

FIELDS, ARTHUR—Donald Baker; Arthur Baldwin; Andy Britt; Harry Crane; Walter H. Dale; George French; Arthur Mack; "Mr. X." A few Grey Gull records by Fields were listed as by "Bob Thomas," but this name was usually reserved for Ernest Hare. Fields also made many Grey Gulls as "Vel Veteran," but this name also was sometimes used for other singers.

FREER, MARCIA—Margaret A. Freer.

HALL, ARTHUR—Adolph J. Hahl.

HANSHAW, ANNETTE—Gay Ellis.

HARE, ERNEST—Wallace Daniels; David Harris; Henry Jones; Robert Judson; Frank Mann; "Radio Joe"; Ernie Spencer; Bob Thomas; Allen Turner (not Alan Turner, the English baritone!). Billy Jones and Ernest Hare of course made hundreds of records as "the Happiness Boys" and a few under such names as "the Romeo Boys."

HARRIS, DAVID—This was a "blanket name" used by National Music Lovers for various artists. I have come across Harris records by Vernon Dalhart, Ernest Hare and Billy Jones, and the name probably was used for still other artists.

HARRISON, CHARLES—Hugh Donovan; Billy Burton; Charles Hilton.

HART, CHARLES—Charles Cinway; Charles Warren.

HEIDELBERG QUINTETTE—This was the American Quartet plus Will Oakland.

HEMUS, PERCY—Charles Gordon.

HINDERMEYER, HARVEY—Harvey Wilson.

HUNTING, RUSSELL—Michael Casey.

JAMES, LEWIS—Robert Lewis; Robert Bruce.

JOCKERS BROTHERS (Al and Monroe)—Josephs Brothers.

JONES BILLY—Harry Blake; Billy De Rex; Eugene Harold; David Harris; Reese Jones; Willy Jones; John Kelly; Dennis O'Malley; William Reese; Victor Roberts; Bertram Smith; Bob Thompson; Joe White (this conflicts with the name of Joe White, the "Silver-Masked Tenor"); Billy West; William West; Carlton Williams; Frank Williams. Jones and Hare made Phantasia records (issued by the Lyraphone company of Newark, N. J.) as "Dooley and Shea" and (in Yiddish) mail-order company records as "Reed and Griffin." One Cameo record by them gave label credit to a mythical "Ruby Norton."

KAUFMAN, IRVING—George Beaver; George Bronson; Billy Clarke; Charles Dickson; Henry Irving; Happy Jim Parsons; Harry Smith. Kaufman and his brother, Jack, made a few duet records as "Dooley and Shea" and (in Yiddish) as Gus and Jay Goldstein. With Arthur Fields, they were "The Three Kauffields" on Emerson records.

KAUFMAN, JACK—Jack Dalton; Happy Martin; Jack Shea.

KLINE, OLIVE—Alice Green.

MARSH, LUCY ISABELLE—Anna Howard.

MARVIN, FRANKIE—Frankie Wallace.

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosorik & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on an important feature of this book, written by Glenn P. Heckert, one of the few expert music box repairers in the country today. The owner or prospective owner of any of these old music boxes must observe certain rules in their care, in order to preserve them for posterity and still have the pleasure of playing them. Mr. Heckert covers in detail the points to remember when buying a music box, and explains the proper way to care for it. The explicit step-by-step description of the repairing of a music box should enable any adept watchmaker to undertake this delicate repair job.

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

"... Obviously I was thrilled when you informed me, an ardent record collector with more than 16,000 discs in my recorded library, that you had made a phonograph record of musical watches and the 'Ruggles' music box. Your book on 'Curious History of Music Boxes,' now in my library, is certainly the outstanding contribution to reproduced sound, and represents a high-light in research, and is a marvel of efficiency and completeness, — invaluable to all sound-reproducing enthusiasts." — Geo. C. A. Hantelman, Secretary-manager, The Cleveland Engineering Society.

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM
HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

MARVIN, JOHNNY—"Honey Duke and His Uke."
 MEADOR, GEORGE—Grant Stephens.
 MEYER, JOHN H. — John Wilbur.
 MIDDLETON, ARTHUR—Edw. Allen.
 MILLER, BOB—Bob Ferguson.
 MILLER, REED—James Reed.
 MOELLER, HENRY—(in duets with John Meyer) Henry Fairbank.
 MORGAN, CORINNE—Grace Nelson.
 MUNN, FRANK—Paul Oliver.
 MURPHY, LAMBERT—Raymond Dixon.
 MURRAY, BILLY—William Murray; Cy Pitkin (on one Edison record); Dan Hughes. Murray and Walter Scanlan made duets as "Saunders and White" on some electrically recorded "off-brands."
 O'CONNELL, M. J.—Billy Watkins (?)
 O'MORE, COLIN—Arthur Burns.
 PEERLESS QUARTET — Columbia Quartet; Invincible Four; Prince's Male Quartet (English Columbia).
 PIKE, ERNEST—Herbert Payne.
 PORTER, STEVE—S. C. Porter.
 PRINCE, CHARLES A.—The veteran musical director for Columbia made bell and celesta solos under the name of Charles Adams.
 RADIO ACES—Gerald Macy and Ed Smalle.
 RADIO FRANKS—Frank Bessinger and Frank Wright.
 REA, VIRGINIA—Olive Palmer.
 RICE, GLADYS—Rachel Grant; Bettina Bergere.
 ROBISON, CARSON — Joe Billings; Charley Wells.
 RYAN, JOHN—Jack Rhan.
 SARTO, ANDREA—Edgar Stoddard.
 SHANNON FOUR—Shannon Quartet; the Revellers; the Merry Makers; the Singing Sophomores; Lyric Male Quartet.
 SPENCER, LEN—Garry Allen (on a few very old cylinders).
 STANLEY, FRANK C.—H. C. Parker (English Columbia).
 STEVENSON, ELISE—Miss Walton (?)
 STEWART, CAL—"Uncle Josh"
 STUART, HERBERT—I have been told

Stuart was Albert Wiederhold, but believe this baritone was probably Frank Croxton.
 TERRELL, LOUISE—Louise Ferrell.
 VAN BRUNT, WALTER—Walter Scanlan; Herbert Scott (on American-recorded discs issued by English Columbia).
 WADSWORTH, F. WHEELER—Fred W. Wadsworth.
 WELLS, JOHN BARNES—De Los Becker; William Barnes.
 WERRENATH, REINALD—Edward Hamilton. (Somebody else using the name of Edward Hamilton made Emerson and Puritan records. Werrenath used it only when singing for Victor, to which company he was under exclusive contract nearly all his recording career.)
 WHEELER, FREDERICK J. (his real name)—James F. Harrison.
 WHITE, JOE—Joseph M. White; J. Malachy White; the Silver-Masked Tenor.
 WILLIAMS, EVAN — Henry Evans; William T. Evans.
 YOUNG, JOHN (his real name)—Harry Anthony.
 So ends a list to which no doubt innumerable additions could be made. For instance, John Norton, Sr., of the Woody-may Record Company, tells me he has a Federal cylinder unmistakably sung by Arthur Collins, but listed as by "Hawley." As I have previously said, I'll be glad to receive additions which may be printed later. Meanwhile, I hope the present list will prove reasonably accurate and valuable for reference.

AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC. List 10c.
 —Fore's (Dept. O), 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. s12234

"STRADIUS" VIOLIN. Made, 1734.
 What's your offer?—James T. Dagley, LaFollette, Tenn. o6882

WANTED: Music Boxes, every description. Meerschmump Pipes, Steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Meyer, Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. je6654

OUT-OF-PRINT RECORDINGS, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged. — American Record Collectors' Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City, 19. ja12414

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc-type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, 20 Lawson Rd., Egypt, Mass. ja122901

FOR SALE: 20 15½ in. Regina discs.—Virginia Henderson, 8509 Octavia, Jennings 21, Mo. my187

SWISS MUSIC BOX plays 30 Viennese tunes — 3 cylinders in perfect condition, walnut inlaid case. $125.00. Address Mrs. O. B. James, Homewood Apts., Baltimore, Md. my1231

FOR SALE: Columbia graphophone, about 50 years old, 42 inch brass horn and stand, 26 - 5 inch cylinder records, four of them never used. A-1 running condition. Best offer takes lot. — Arthur C. Fritz, 818 Progress Ave., Hamilton, Ohio. my1003

WANTED TO BUY OR TRADE Operatic programs. Any date, any place. Also want to buy operatic records and photographs of singers.—H. A. Jansen, 105-14 217th Lane, Queens Village, 9, N. Y. o6273

WANTED: SWISS TYPE music boxes or other unusual mechanical music devices. Have for sale 40 Stella Disc records, 15½" in diameter.—Brown County Ridgecrafters, Nashville, Indiana. o6426

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

● WANTED TO BUY—4c per word for 1 month; 6 months for the price of four; 12 months for the price of seven.

● FOR SALE—6c per word for 1 month; 6 months for the price of four; 12 months for the price of seven.

● In figuring the cost count each word and initial as a word. No checking copies furnished on classified. Cash must accompany order. Please TYPE your copy if possible, or WRITE LEGIBLY.

Stroboscope

60-CYCLE STROBOSCOPE DISC for ascertaining the correct speed at which Edison Gold Moulded Standard, Amberol and Blue Amberol cylinders should revolve. DIRECTIONS FOR USE: Cut out the above disc and glue it on the end of the mandrel of your cylinder machine. (The mandrel is that part of the phonograph which rotates the cylinder.) Then place the machine under an electric light bulb operating on standard 60-cycle current in such a way that the light shines on the stroboscope disc. Play a cylinder in the usual way and adjust speed until the radial lines on the stroboscope appear stationary, at which point the record will be revolving at the correct speed of 160 r. p. m.—S. F.

WANTED

COLUMBIA
 GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

Marcella Sembrich
 Edouard de Reszke
 Schumann-Heink
 Campanari
 Suzanne Adams
 Antonio Scotti
 Charles Gilibert
 Ten-inch, single-faced records
 with red and gold or black and
 silver labels.

Zonophones by Eugenia Mantelli, especially the Carmen arias on 40075 / Columbia 40361 - La Juvie Cavatine, sung by Hesch.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old advertisements of records and phonographs.

Also want Edison Grand Opera Cylinders.

- FOR SALE -
 RECORD CATALOGS
 OF MANY COMPANIES
 A LARGE ASSORTMENT
 OF VICTOR SUPPLEMENTS
 STEPHEN FASSETT
 944 Monroe Lane
 Woodmere, L. I., N. Y.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

Please mention HOBBIES when
 replying to advertisements

RECORDS

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS wanted. Top prices paid for vocal operatic and concert. Write for free list.—Douglas P. Ball, 505A Congress Bldg., Miami, Fla. o6863

WANTED: Victor supplements, 1904 through 1915. Columbia supplements, August-September, 1923. Victor catalogues before 1912.—Robert B. Julian, 5203 California Street, Omaha, Nebraska. au6863

FINE RECORDS: Old and unusual records for sale or trade. Discs and cylinders bought. What do you want?—De-lano, 203 E. 11th St., Rolla, Mo. au6006

WANTED: Language recordings. See ad in Mart. — H. Hogan, 533 Belmont, Chicago 14, Illinois. my148

WANTED CLASSICAL RECORDS: Leonid Sobinoff, Sergei Lemeschhoff, Bon-Insega, Aino Akte, Maria Labia, Rosina Storcio, Eva Turner, Aristodemio Giorgini. — Stephen Mullen, 50 Western Ave., Saugus, Mass. my2002

WANTED: IRCC and HRS Records Send list, showing condition and prices, to E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco, 15, California. n12836

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. n12283

RECORDS of all types bought. I pay express. Classics preferred.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City, New Jersey. ja12235

FALKENER BROS. Record Shop, Antiques, 383 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass. s6042

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: MUSIC BOX, 18 in. long, inlaid case, 11 in. cylinder, 102 teeth, none missing, $22. Another with 8 tunes, 8 in. cylinder $18. No others, act quickly — Mansfield, Box 132, Rockland, Mass. my1471

A Record Tragedy of Not So Long Ago

About five years ago the well known Dutch collector, Leo Riemens, sent W. H. Seltsam a package of cylinders to be re-recorded onto discs and issued by IRCC. By far the rarest of the lot were two Pathe cylinders by Felia Litvinne and Jean Lassalle. As luck would have it, these were the only two that were broken in transit. It was ever thus.

—o—
Who Was

Enrico de Franceschi

Albert Wolf of New York has this baritone on Parlophone X1607, singing Lo vedremo from Ernani and Sei vendicata from Dinorah, and would like to know something about him.

FIGNER DISCOVERIES

I HAVE recently learned of the existence of two records by the celebrated Russian tenor Nicolai N. Figner that are not listed in Robert Bauer's Historical Records. Oddly enough, the same aria is recorded on both discs, one being 10 inches in size and the other 12. They are red G&T's recorded in St. Petersburg about 1903 and, needless to say, they are great rarities. The aria is Bianca al par di neve Alpina from The Huguenots. The 10-inch version, number 22594, is the property of Geoffrey Lyon of New York; the 12-inch version, number 022000, was reported by R. J. Nathan of Brooklyn.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

BILLY GOLDEN

By ULYSSES ("Jim") Walsh

"SHOEMAKER, stick to your last" is an admonition that has the sanction of immemorial usage, and Billy Golden is one recording artist who guided himself in strict accordance with its tenets. He is the only popular performer I can think of off-hand who never deviated in the slightest from the type of work with which he was first identified. It is possible that this brilliant black-faced comedian made a record or so that was not done in Negro dialect so perfect many hearers refused to believe he could be a white man, but I cannot recall any such.

Billy Golden, like "Ragtime Bob" Roberts, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio. I don't know the year of his birth, but deduce, from evidence to be presented later, that it was somewhere around 1856. When he was a small child his family moved to St. Louis, where he grew up and became a butcher boy at the Union market.

In 1874 Golden abandoned butchering for the black-face vaudeville act, with which he was ever afterwards identified. It seems logical to suppose he was at least 18 when he made the change, which would put his birth around the already mentioned year of 1856. However that may be, it seems odd to think that the man whose reproduced voice still has a familiar ring to millions of persons who have heard his records was in the show business 68 years ago.

After four years as a solo act, Golden formed a partnership with John Merritt, and they were known to variety fans by the team name of Merritt and Golden. Around this time, the stocky little comedian originated his famous "cane pat" as an accessory to buck-and-wing dancing. It was taken up by virtually every other song and dance comedian.

As the cylinder phonograph gradual-

Attention! Edison Disc Collectors

An early and very rare Edison Diamond Disc is 82503, on which is recorded Mi Chiamano Mimi (Bohème) by an unidentified soprano. It seems to be a choice between Lucrezia Bori, Maria Labia and Carmen Melis. If any collector has succeeded in making a positive identification, I'd very much like to hear from him. Comparing the disc with Bori's Edison cylinder or Victor disc of the aria might prove helpful.

More Wakefield Records

On page 16 of our March issue was listed Henrietta Wakefield's Habanera from Carmen, (on a 10-inch Oriole number 194), coupled with Hinky Dinky Parley Voo. The same coupling, reports R. J. Nathan of Brooklyn, is to be found on Olympic 19101. And J. W. C. Hesser, Iowa, writes of this singer's Flower Song from Faust on Olympic 19105 (same number on matrix). Just to thicken up the plot a bit more, John L. Norton, Sr., of Boston, informs me that Wakefield's Carmen aria (matrix 19102) also exists on a Nadsco Disc, coupled with Home to our mountains (Trovatore) sung by Louise Terrell and Charles Harrison. Mr. Norton feels that this was pressed from a Grey Gull master. This is all very confusing. Can anyone straighten us out?

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on an important feature of this book, written by Glenn P. Heckert, one of the few expert music box repairers in the country today. The owner or prospective owner of any of these old music boxes must observe certain rules in their care, in order to preserve them for posterity and still have the pleasure of playing them. Mr. Heckert covers in detail the points to remember when buying a music box, and explains the proper way to care for it. The explicit step-by-step description of the repairing of a music box should enable any adept watchmaker to undertake this delicate repair job.

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

"... Thank you for your work on music boxes. The book is marvelous and a valued addition to my collection of books on clocks, watches and allied matters."—William B. Dall, Long Island, New York.

"I have a copy of the book. I am greatly interested in it and think it will be a lasting contribution to interested ones who follow. So many musical instruments have run their course in the past and there are very few guides for those who wish to revive them."—W. B. Parkinson, Parkinson System, Iowa.

"Just a note to let you know how much I enjoyed the book. A very fine work. Fond of restoring antique mechanical contrivances, I arrived at music boxes by way of an old Gem Roller Organ, then an Edison Talking Machine. It is music boxes from here on out. The section on Repairing aided me a great deal. Thanks again for a most fascinating book."—J. H. Baird, Tulsa 5, Okla.

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM
HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.
2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

ly came into popularity it occurred to Golden that some of his comic sketches might be good recording material. The late Frank Dorian, who was associated with the Columbia company for some 40 years, said he believed Golden first made Columbia records around 1893, "and looked to be nearer 40 than 35." Mr. Dorian's opinion ties in very well with my guess about 1856.

If Billy Golden really was, and looked to be, about 40 when he first started recording, he must not have aged appreciably afterwards, for in 1919 Ray Cummings, an Edison supplement writer, said, "Golden tells me he has been in vaudeville for more years than you would think he had lived, to look at him."

The first "coon shouts," as they were called, sung by Billy, were an enormous success. As the Victor catalogs used to say, "no other Negro specialty records have ever approached the popularity of those by Billy Golden. They are so real the listener forgets all about Golden and hears only a jolly old darky with an infectious laugh." That statement is literally true. As perfect representations of "before de wah" darky types, it seems impossible that Golden's work could be excelled.

Five of the comedian's solo records are particularly outstanding. They all were sung hundreds of times by the "round" before master records came in, and were "Rabbit Hash," "Yaller Gal," "Bye Bye, My Honey,"

"Roll On de Ground" and, above all, "Turkey in the Straw." Nearly everybody has heard a Billy Golden record of the latter infectious masterpiece. He sang it for all the companies, and so many millions of copies were sold that it ranks as one of the four great phonograph humorous masterpieces of the pre-electric era. The others were Collins' "Preacher and the Bear; Murray's "Casey Jones," and Spencer's "Arkansaw Traveler."

Until around 1908 Billy did practically nothing but solo work, although he did record at least one Negro skit with George Graham, a patent medicine salesman who made records as a sideline, on a Berliner disc back in the '90's. But about the time double-faced records came in Golden associated himself with another, brilliant black-face comedian and his popularity rose to new heights.

His new partner was something of a man of mystery in one respect. His last name was Hughes, but the recording companies couldn't agree on his first one. Victor called him John Hughes; Columbia, William, and Edison, Joe. At any rate, "John William Joe" Hughes was born in Chicago and learned to be a house and sign painter and paper hanger before going with Haverly's Minstrels in 1882. Later he starred in a solo act on the Keith and Proctor vaudeville circuits.

Golden and Hughes were popular in vaudeville for many years, but it is by their records they are best remembered today. Who hasn't heard

"Clamy Green," "My Uncle's Farm," "Whistling Pete" "Bears' Oil" and the dozens of other hilariously—even uproariously—funny records they made as a team? Sales were enormous, and every once in a while Victor would print their photos in a monthly supplement to prove they actually were white men.

After eight years or so together, Mr. Hughes temporarily retired to follow his hobby of scientific farming at his home in Milford, Mass. Golden then worked for several years with two other accomplished comedians, Billy Heins (it would be interesting to know how many comedians have been named, or called themselves, Billy!) and Jim Marlowe.

Obviously, the man who made "Turkey in the Straw" world-famous was getting along in years. He must have been as much as 60 before the United States entered the World War, but

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, any kind. —C. A. Ramsey, Marengo, Ohio. n6061

HISTORIC Hound-head Violin, Vienna maker, for sale. — Little White House, Walpole, New Hampshire. je166

GIVE US YOUR PRICE on your duplicate vocal, classical and operatic records. We buy collections. Send full details.—Clark Music Co., Syracuse 2, N. Y. je169

AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC. List 10c. —Fore's (Dept. O), 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. s12234

"STRADIUS" VIOLIN. Made, 1734. What's your offer? —James T. Dagley, LaFollette, Tenn. o6882

WANTED: Music Boxes, every description. Meerscham Pipes, Steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Meyer, Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. je6654

OUT-OF-PRINT RECORDINGS, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged. — American Record Collectors' Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City, 19. ja12414

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc-type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, 20 Lawson Rd., Egypt, Mass. ja122901

SIX HAND CARVED Violins, double violin case, alligator hide; three old violins, also antiques and music boxes. Write.—Mrs. Viola Marti, Box 34, Pieron, Illinois. n6346

WANTED TO BUY OR TRADE Operatic programs. Any date, any place. Also want to buy operatic records and photographs of singers.—H. A. Jansen, 105-14 217th Lane, Queens Village, 9, N. Y. o6273

WANTED: SWISS TYPE music boxes or other unusual mechanical music devices. Have for sale 40 Stella Disc records, 15 1/2" in diameter.—Brown County Ridgecrafters, Nashville, Indiana. o6426

EDISON CYLINDER playing phonograph. Perfect running condition. 50 cylinder 4 minute records. Spirituals, comics, popular. Postpaid anywhere, $17.50 complete.—Robert Mabie, Camden, New York. je1441

PIPE ORGAN

WANTED! Pipe organ recordings. Classical-popular; foreign-domestic. Especially Reginald Foot. Al Carney, Quentin MacLean, L. G. Pattman, Reginald Dixon, Dunstedter, Fred Feibel, etc. Highest prices paid. Send titles to M. H. Doner, J. R. Watkins Company, Winona, Minn. jex

WANTED

COLUMBIA
GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

Marcella Sembrich
Edouard de Reszke
Schumann-Heink
Campanari
Suzanne Adams
Antonio Scotti
Charles Gilibert

Ten-inch, single-faced records
with red and gold or black and
silver labels.

Zonophones by Eugenia Mantelli, especially the Carmon arias on 40075 / Columbia 40361 - La
Juive Cavatine, sung by Hesch.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets
and old advertisements of records and phonographs.

Also want Edison Grand Opera Cylinders.

- FOR SALE -

RECORD CATALOGS
OF MANY COMPANIES
A LARGE ASSORTMENT
OF VICTOR SUPPLEMENTS
STEPHEN FASSETT

944 Monroe Lane
Woodmere, L. I., N. Y.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

RECORDS

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS wanted. Top prices paid for vocal operatic and concert.
Write for free list.—Douglas F. Ball,
505A Congress Bldg., Miami, Fla. o6863

WANTED: Victor supplements, 1904 through 1915. Columbia supplements, August, September, 1923. Victor catalogues before
1912.—Robert B. Julian, 5203 California
Street, Omaha, Nebraska. au6863

FINE RECORDS: Old and unusual records for sale or trade. Discs and cylinders bought. What do you want?—Delano, 203 E. 11th St., Rolla, Mo. au6006

JAZZ COLLECTORS Attention: All types of jazz and popular records, for exchange or sell, also auctions; enclose dime for lists. Refunded on first order.
—Ralph Damelio, Oyster Bay, New York. je1081

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS Bought.—E.
Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City, 6,
New Jersey. s4291

WANTED: IRCC and HRS Records
Send list, showing condition and prices.
to E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco, 15, California. n12385

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan
Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. n12283

RECORDS of all types bought. I pay express. Classics preferred.—E. Hirsch-mann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City, New Jersey. ja12235

FALKENER BROS. Record Shop, Antiques,
383 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass. s6042

he kept right on stepping with pep. His laugh was as uproarious and his style as funny as ever. Some people thought he erred on the side of boisterousness, and I well remember that, as a small boy, I was playing "Yaller Gal" on the Victrola one day when I saw the Methodist preacher approaching. Suspecting he wouldn't approve my taste in music, I snatched the record off, and by the time he neared the house the recorded voices of Anthony and Harrison were wailing, "Looking This Way," a tried-and-true Gospel hymn.

Billy made a new version of "Turkey in the Straw," with the assistance of the Empire Vaudeville Company, for Edison as late as 1917. (He played a pullman porter.) He and his associates also made several records dealing humorously with the World War. In 1921 he made "A Scene on the Old Plantation" for Edison. It was largely his old "Rabbit Hash" skit, revised to mention prohibition. And in 1922 he and J. W. J. Hughes were back together and did a couple of skits for Columbia. My brother saw him in vaudeville with some more old-timers a year or two later, and reported his agility at buck-and-winged was marvelous to behold.

I have heard Golden is dead, but don't know the year of his passing. If by any chance he is still alive he is a very old man. He was certainly one of the greatest of recording comedians, and I have lately been consumed with desire to find a cylinder record of his about which Johnny Norton, Jr., of Roxbury, Mass., told me. It is one of his almost forgotten efforts, called "A Mixed Ale Party." Johnny says the brown wax cylinder is "the craziest record ever made. Golden must have had plenty of ale, or else forgot the words. He starts out in the middle of a line, then stops, starts again and forgets himself half way in the record, and from then on he makes the stuff up himself!"

—o—

DOLLS

(Continued from page 21)

"The Mason and Taylor dolls were made only in one size, approximately 12 inches long. We made them once a year, for several consecutive years for the Christmas trade. We made some novelty dolls and a few negroes, and we also made the so-called "Witch and Wizard" doll which had an ingeniously contrived neck joint of metal gears which permitted the dolls to be 'beheaded' with a knife without the head coming off. A metal knife wrapped in paper accompanied each doll."

Mr. Taylor's reminiscences should serve to clear up much of the confusion that exists in the minds of collectors on the subject of the post-Ellis Springfield dolls. Most of this confusion has arisen because of the number of patents for doll parts granted to Springfield men, Martin, Sanders, Mason and Taylor and Johnson, between the years 1879 and 1882. It was at first thought that each of these patents represented a different doll-making enterprise and a different type of doll.

Mr. Taylor says that he has no recollection of any dolls having been made in Springfield other than the Joel Ellis and the Mason and Taylor dolls. This is confirmed by the finding by Mrs. Enid Pierce, a close student of existing Springfield dolls, of two Mason and Taylor dolls in their original wrappings, each of which wears around its waist a black paper band on which is printed the dates of all of the various patents. All Mason and Taylor dolls still show traces of having had a similar band around their waists.

The "Martin doll" which is the rarest of all the Springfield dolls—only very, very few of them have come to light—is unquestionably the first product of the Mason and Taylor enterprise. It is identical with the other Mason and Taylor dolls in materials, proportions and workmanship and must have been made on the same machines—which Mr. Taylor tells us were made by his father, Luke Taylor. They differ chiefly in having the hemispherical joints patented by Frank D. Martin of Springfield, April 29, 1879. This patent says: "The upper part or top end of the arms fitting into the socket of the shoulder is held in position by means of an elastic or spiral spring passing transversely through the top of the trunk from shoulder to shoulder." A "pattern doll" 17½ inches tall owned in Springfield, Vt., has the steel spring but the specimen owned by this writer, which is entirely in original condition, is 12 inches tall and has the elastic. Mason and Taylor controlled this patent as is shown by the fact that its date appears with the others on the paper waist-bands.

The Martin dolls have the metal feet and hands similar to the Ellis dolls and like those of the Ellis doll, the feet are black. These dolls have immovable papier mache heads, 6½ inches in circumference which is a half-inch more than the later Johnson head used on the later Mason and Taylor dolls. Mr. Henry Taylor has said that they "may have used some papier mache and china heads in the beginning." None with china heads have so far come to light.

In the 1943 Supplement to Doll Collectors of America's AMERICAN MADE DOLLS AND FIGURINES, there is pictured a colored Springfield doll owned by Mrs. Winifred Harding of Woodstock, Vt., which is described as representing "a native of India" and as having been "made in 1874 by the H. H. Mason Co." In the light of Mr. Taylor's first hand information, both maker and date of this doll now have to be revised. This is the doll shown on the left of our illustration.

There is no record to show that H. H. Mason ever had anything to do with the manufacture of dolls earlier than 1879, when, as a partner in the firm of Smith, Mason and Co., he brought the doll design to Luke Taylor with the question: "Can we make this doll?"

Mrs. Harding's doll has all the patented features of the Mason and Taylor doll—Sanders joint, Johnson head and the moveable neck joint patented by Mason and Taylor (probably invented by Luke Taylor.) On the black band around its waist is printed:

"Improved joint patented April 29, 1879."

This is the Martin patent date so the doll could not have been made any earlier and since it was the Sanders and not the Martin joint that was used on it, it must have been made later than that date. Moreover it was, clearly, made on the machines which had been made and installed by Luke Taylor. It would therefore seem to be one of the "novelty dolls" and one of the "negro dolls" which Mr. Taylor says were made by Mason and Taylor.

On the testimony of the sons of Springfield's two great doll makers (and two of the three sons, Hartley Ellis and Henry E. Taylor, actually worked on the dolls), it seems that all wooden dolls made at Springfield may be classified as either "Joel Ellis" or "Mason and Taylor." This certainly simplifies a complicated question and solves a heretofore dark mystery. The solution is a rather simple one too—going back to original sources while those who can speak with authority on the subject are still in our midst.

—o—

The World of Dolldom

Mrs. C. C. Clodfelter, North Carolina doll hobbyist, presented a military doll wedding at her home recently. The principals were Roberta, doll favorite in the Clodfelter household and another favorite member of the doll group, a doll dressed in a military uniform, and designated as Private Joseph Cheek. Mrs. Clodfelter often displays her dolls for local benefits.

—o—

Rose O'Neill, artist-creator of the Kewpie doll, died at her home in Springfield, Mo., on April 6.

The Kewpie doll, which originated in 1909, brought its creator a fortune estimated at more than $1,000,000.

In addition to the Kewpie doll, Miss O'Neill delighted a generation of both children and grown-ups with rhymed stories and sketches of the Kewpies.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

John W. Myers

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

The late John W. Myers, baritone, most popular recording artist of 40 years ago, as he appeared in 1898.

FORTY YEARS or more ago, the most popular singer making phonograph records in America probably was John W. Myers, the baritone, whose name was almost invariably given on records, with his initials only, as J. W. Myers. Today it has been so long since he made records that many collectors, hearing his name, would say:

"Myers? Oh yes, he's that cracker-jack bass who took Frank Stanley's place in the Peerless Quartet, wasn't he?" Others might confuse him with the Reverend J. A. Myers, the colored baritone who led the Fisk Jubilee Singers for so many years.

But J. W. Myers wasn't a colored minister and he wasn't John H. Meyer who bassoed so many years for the Peerless and is now chief designer for the Fifth Avenue florist, Thorley's, in New York. He was a singer with a voice and a style of his own, whose popularity in the early recording days was extremely great and whose cylinders and discs are coming to be cherished by many collectors.

In view of my own lack of intimate knowledge concerning the life of Mr. Myers, who has been dead for many years, I shall quote from an article published in the January, 1905, issue of the Talking Machine News, of London. Headed, "An American Baritone Who Makes Records," and subtitled "A Few Facts About Mr. J. W. Myers," the article says:

"A great deal of interest has been manifested in this country as to the personality of J. W. Myers, who has been introduced to tens of thousands through the talking machine. His voice is so resonant and rich in quality and his enunciation so distinct that his records are universally popular. Many persons who have listened to his records through the talking machine have felt the acquaintance grow and ripen as time went by and new selections sung by their favorite baritone were added to their collection, and yet they knew nothing of the man himself, whether young or old, tall or short, and were equally ignorant of his tastes, his history and his musical associations.

"It will come as a surprise to many to learn that J. W. Myers was born in Wales, of Welsh parents, and thus comes naturally by his heritage of song. He went to America at the age of 12 to earn his living, for from that time he was thrown on his own resources. Beginning in a humble capacity, he gradually worked his way up in various occupations, till he became a theatrical manager, a post he held for a number of years. In that position he made a wide circle of acquaintances among the profession. He always possessed a good voice and during his younger days was frequently called upon to contribute to the entertainment of his companions by singing in concerts and at private gatherings. While he was still a theatrical manager in New York he was engaged to sing for the phonograph companies, and his services were so much in demand that the various companies alternately gave him exclusive engagements to make records only for them.

"In 1895 he gave up his managerial position to go on the road with an opera company. He toured extensively over the United States, but tiring of the life after about a year, he gave it up and returned to New York, devoting himself exclusively to concert work and to singing for talkers. For the past two years he has given his services exclusively to the Columbia company for record making work and is still under contract to them.

"Mr. Myers has a fund of dry humor, and in his droll manner will get off the most laughable witticisms, without himself cracking a smile and with every appearance of being seriously in earnest. He is universally popular with the record makers and whenever he is booked to sing the experts are always pleased, because his voice is such a good one for recording, and his long experience at the work has given him an intimate knowledge of all the wrinkles that must be observed when singing into the machines. He gives very little trouble, makes exceedingly few false starts or breaks during a song, and accomplishes a maximum of work in a minimum of time.

"He has a characteristic mannerism whenever he does make a mistake during the singing of any of his songs. Instead of blustering and making a great fuss about the error, he simply stops singing and quietly walks away from the horn, and it frequently happens that the operator behind the machine has no intimation of trouble for some considerable time, when he will perhaps be startled to see Mr. Myers standing beside him.

"Mr. Myers is about 40 years of age, of average height, medium build but stocky in figure. He is married and has quite a family living in the vicinity of New York City. He is perhaps the best paid of all the regular staff of singers and musicians regularly retained by the great phonograph companies, and makes a comfortable living from this part of his work, which requires only a portion of his time, leaving the rest free for his numerous other engagements."

In the same magazine, for February 15, 1906, a writer signing himself "Sirius," writing on "The Influence of the Talking Machine," shows that Myers' records, like those of other American singers, were widely popular in England, by saying:

"The newsboys of London and New York whistle the same tunes, whether they are 'Navajo,' 'My Irish Molly O,' 'Bedelia' or 'In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree,' because the talker has made them known on both sides of the ocean. . . . If George Alexander or Henry Burr or J. W. Myers were to advertise a concert in the Albert Hall next month, nine-tenths of their audience would be talking machine users."

Mr. Myers' vogue continued until about the time double-faced records came out, some 35 years ago. He then dropped out of the recording picture for years, but made a brief comeback with Columbia in 1914 and 1915, and made one or two records for Pathe about the same time. His death occurred a few years later, but I have been unable to learn the date.

The article which I have quoted mentioned the baritone's habit of stopping when he made a mistake. On one occasion, however, he did not and the result became famous. While making a cylinder he sneezed stentorianly in the middle, but instead of "quietly walking away," he kept on singing and the record was issued, to the great glee of thousands of subsequent purchasers.

In making Columbia records—he also sang at one time or another for all the pioneer American companies—Myers usually spoke his own preliminary announcements. He had a characteristic way of slightly emphasizing the name of the song, then allowing his voice to drop when he gave his name, almost as if he were overcome by a sudden accession of modesty. As a very small boy his record of "Where the Silvery Colorado Winds Its Way" was a great favorite of mine, and I remember getting up early on the morning that I went to school for the first time in my life, to have time to play that and a few other favorite discs. I was also a great baseball fan, and pleased myself with imagining that J. W. was "Chief" Myers, the famous Indian Big League catcher.

As the photograph shows, Mr. Myers was short and stocky and, with his black mustache, looked something like a Tammany politician of the old school. His was a brilliant career, beginning in almost the earliest days of cylinder recording, and many collectors who still enjoy hearing his mellow voice wish it had been of considerably longer duration.

Recordings of Pipe Organ Music

By M. H. DONER

MY INTEREST in pipe organ recordings as a hobby includes both the concert or cathedral organ and the theater or cinema organ. No attempt was made to develop a library until 1942, a poor time to start such an undertaking! Apart from the standard Victor, Columbia and Musicraft albums of Schweitzer, Bonnet, Carl Weinrich, E. Power Biggs and Courboin and single discs, little else was available in the record shops. This fact initiated a diligent search through many thousands of used discs that had accumulated in record shops, second-hand stores and dealers in out-of-print records.

RECORDS

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS wanted. Top prices paid for vocal operatic and concert. Write for free list.—Douglas P. Ball, 505A Congress Bldg., Miami, Fla. o6863

WANTED: Victor supplements, 1904 through 1915. Columbia supplements, August, September, 1923. Victor catalogues before 1912.—Robert B. Julian, 5203 California Street, Omaha, Nebraska. au6863

FINE RECORDS: Old and unusual records for sale or trade. Discs and cylinders bought. What do you want?—Deiano, 203 E. 11th St., Rolla, Mo. au6006

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City, 6, New Jersey. s4291

WANTED: IRCC and HRS Records. Send list, showing condition and prices, to E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco, 15, California. n12885

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. n12283

RECORDS of all types bought. I pay express. Classics preferred.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City, New Jersey. ja12235

FALKNER BROS. Record Shop, Antiques, 383 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass. s6042

FOR SALE: Diamond disc console Edison phonograph and 65 thick Edison discs. Any reasonable offer accepted. Also, many prize red and purple seal Victors, Schuman-Heink, McCormack, etc. All letters answered.—Ann Lundy, 643 Edgewood, River Forest, Illinois. jly1822

The result of this search, conducted in the major cities throughout the United States, was indeed gratifying. It included the 74 Victor recordings of Jessie Crawford, 33 of Lew White and 13 by Eddie Dunstetter on the Brunswick label, and 14 by Milton Charles on Columbia. Besides, numerous other records on a wide variety of labels (Autograph, Banner, Broadway, Cameo, Diva, Harmony, Melotone, Conqueror, Domino, Edison, Gennett, Paramount, Romeo, Silver-tone, Regal, etc.) were found, bearing the names of such organists as Edmund Cromwell, Franklyn Ferris, Henri Keates, Jean de Payne, Lee Wilson, Richard Jordan, George Epstein, Marsch McCurdy, Howard Peterson, F. Feibel, Al Carney, others.

The Dunstetter series well recorded the delightful style of this one ace theater organist. Similarly, the long Crawford series prove why he was once called the "Poet of the Organ." While the very early records were acoustically made and further marred by the frequent use of accessory instruments as in the Lew White series, or a vocalist, nevertheless, they are interesting and serve to illustrate the varying styles of organ playing.

An investigation into the English-made recordings of cinema organists proved a veritable gold mine. Most of these were obtained from Canadian record dealers. The large series by Reginald Foort on Victor are gems, particularly the later numbers of the series that were recorded using the huge Moller organ. Other outstanding discs are those by Quentin MacLean on Columbia (who excels in such numbers as "Ballet Egyptien" by Luicini, selections by Ketelby, etc.), Reginald Dixon and Horace Finch on Rex, the incomparable Sidney Torch on Columbia and Decca and finally, H. Robinson Cleaver on Parlophone. All of these recordings have exceptionally high fidelity, presumably due to the non-absorbent walls of the studio. The organists themselves appear to have been given considerably more freedom in the performance of their numbers with the result that their recordings stand in sharp contrast to those of American production.

In the field of the classics, American concert organists have made excellent contributions to the recording of the music of the masters. The late recordings of Virgil Fox are noteworthy. But here again we must turn to England. Unfortunately, many of the fine recordings of such masters of the console as Marcel Dupre, Sir W. G. Alcock, G. D. Cunningham, R. Goss-Custard, and numerous others, are in the "cut-out" list and are very difficult to obtain. Their recordings reveal the organ at its best—those gigantic cathedral organs at Notre Dame, Lyons, France, etc.—and clearly prove the organ to be the "King of Instruments."

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, any kind.—C. A. Ramsey, Marengo, Ohio. n6061

AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC. List 10c.—Fore's (Dept. O), 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. s12234

"STRAUDIOUS" VIOLIN. Made, 1734. What's your offer?—James T. Dagley, LaFollette, Tenn. o6382

OUT-OF-PRINT RECORDINGS, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged. American Record Collectors' Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City, 19. ja12414

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, 20 Lawson Rd., Egypt, Mass. ja122901

SIX HAND CARVED VIOLINS, double violin case, alligator hide; three old violins, also antiques and music boxes. Write.—Mrs. Viola Marti, Box 34, Pieron, Illinois. n6346

WANTED to buy or trade operatic programs. Any date, any place. Also want to buy operatic records and photographs of singers.—H. A. Jansen, 105-14 217th Lane, Queens Village, 9, N. Y. o6273

WANTED: Swiss type music boxes or other unusual mechanical music devices. Have for sale 40 Stella Disc records, 15 1/2" in diameter.—Brown County Ridgecrafters, Nashville, Indiana. o6426

FOR SALE: Melodeon, small table type, original Jones and Burdett, prior to Estey. Three and one half octave. Needs tuning. Otherwise good condition. Write.—Helen Vaughan, Bethel, Conn. jly1471

FOR SALE: Over 100 music rolls for Angelus or Symphony. Ranging from William Tell to Under the Bamboo Tree. Fine condition. Rare lot. $25. fob.—Gary Thompson, Box 46, Asheville, North Carolina. jly1c

ALBUM 14. 12 in. Victor red seal, Caruso, Tetrassini, etc. $25. Cylinder Edison and 50 records $12.50.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. jly1021

MUSICAL revolving cake plate. White enamel. Plays wedding march, 15 to 20 minutes. Will hold cake weighing up to 30 lbs. Perfect cond. $22.50. Express extra.—Gertrude Robertson, 4615 N. E. Sandy Blvd., Portland, 13, Ore. jly1522

Eugenia Mantelli

U. S. A. Zonophone, circa 1906

- 10":
 11012 Carmen: Seguidilla ..... Bizet
 11017 Ninon ..... Tosti
 12568 Gioconda: Voce di donna (IRCC 5008) ..... Ponchielli
 12572 Favorita: Ah! l'alto ardor (w. Parvis) ..... Donizetti
 12573 Don Giovanni: La ci darem la mano (w. Parvis) .... Mozart 12574 Mignon: Duetto della Rondinella (w. Parvis) ..... Thomas 12575 Barbiere: Dunque io son (w. Parvis) ..... Rossini
 12587 Lucrezia Borgia: Il segreto (Brindisi) ..... Donizetti
 12613 Serenata ..... Braga
 12614 La Cenerentola: Nacqui all' affano ..... Rossini
 12615 La Cenerentola: Non piu mesta (IRCC 77) ..... Rossini
 12616 Carmen: Chanson Boheme (40075-A) ..... Bizet
 12617 Faust: La parlate d'amour (IRCC 5008) ..... Gounod
 12618 Cavalleria Rusticana: Ave Maria (intermezzo) .... Mascagni
 12620 Dopo ..... Tosti
 12621 Good Bye ..... Tosti
 12":
 13272 Los Ojos Negros ..... Alvarez
 13272 Me llaman la primorosa ..... Nieto y Caballero
 Titles reported, numbers wanted:
 Carmen: Habanera (40075-B) ..... Bizet
 Samson et Dalila: Mon coeur: ..... Saint-Saens
 Samson et Dalila: Printemps qui commence ..... Saint-Saens
 Gli Ugonotti: Canzone paggio ..... Meyerbeer
 Romeo et Juliet: Chanson Stephano ..... Gounod
 Pur dicesti o bocca bocca bella ..... Lotti

The above list of recordings by the great contralto Eugenia Mantelli was compiled by W. R. Moran, California, with the assistance of more collectors than I have space to mention, for his forthcoming revision of Robert Bauer's famous catalog, Histori- cal Records. If you can supply any of the missing numbers, please do so. The numbers at the left, of course, apply to the single-faced editions. More double-faced numbers, like those in parenthesis at the right, would be appreciated.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Miscellaneous Notes

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

OCCASIONALLY, I shall supplement my biographical sketches of pioneer recording artists by publishing notes I have made about other record makers who are not likely to be included in the full-length biographical series for some time, if at all. These brief references will serve to answer some of the inquiries which I frequently receive.

ARTISTS WHO "DOUBLED UP." A number of additions to the list published in the May, 1944, issue, of recording artists who used "nom de disques" have been received, mostly from Joseph Portgang, 18-year-old New York City record collector, and Bill Moran, of California. Incidentally, the original article contained a misprint in the paragraph devoted to Bill Jones. The reference should have read: "Jones and Hare made Phantasic records (issued by the Lyrphone company of Newark, N. J.) as 'Lyons and Hellman,' and mail-order company records as 'Reed and Griffin.' The confusion was caused by a line about Irving and Jack Kaufman making Yiddish records being inserted in error under the Billy Jones heading.

To the May list should be added the information that Henry Burr made Emerson records as Robert Rice; Arthur Fields, in addition to names previously listed, was called Jim Andrews and Robert Wood on Harmony records. Arthur Wynne and Charles Lewis on the Dandy brand, and Lee Knight, on Domino. Lewis James was Lou Haynes on Regal records; Jones and Hare appeared on Cameo as Gale and Fisher; Irving Kaufman as Frank Harris on Columbia records, "Buzzin' Bob" on the Banner brand and Marvin Young on Harmony, and Gladys Rice made Phantasic records as Victoria Marden. Bill Moran reminded me that Emilio de Gogorza also recorded for Victor as M. Fernand and Mons. Francisco, and that, although he made Zon-o-phone records as "Ed Franklin," not all Ed Franklin records are by de Gogorza! Apparently this was a stock name for Zono, just as "David Harris" was many years later for National Music Lovers and "Vel Veteran" for Grey Gull.

ASH, SAM. This sweet-voiced tenor, who made records for practically all American record companies except Victor, has been in Hollywood for several years, playing character roles in films, among them the latest Mae West and Laurel and Hardy productions.

D'ALMAINE, CHARLES. Fred Hager, who is still alive, appears to have been the first violinist to make solo records, back in the '90's. The next was Charles D'Almaine, who remained active 20 years or so and was at one time concert-master for the Victor and Edison orchestras. He was a chiropractor in his later years and lived in a house adjoining the Ocean Grove, N. J., post office. The Rev. Damian Smith, of St. Mary's Abbey, Newark, N. J., told me a year or so ago that D'Almaine had died about three years before. Old Edison catalogs list the violinist as having been born in Hull, England, but the Rev. Mr. Smith said former Edison officials insisted he was a French-Canadian.

FAVOR, MRS. EDWARD M. wife of the first pioneer recording artist to be the subject of one of my biographical sketches (in the February, 1942, issue) died in Brooklyn, November 27, 1942, aged 86. Edith Sinclair Favor had been on the stage since 1861 and had appeared with Lillian Russell, besides being often seen in vaudeville with her husband, with whom she made at least one Edison cylinder record.

HARRIS, MARION. who was very popular more than 20 years ago as a recording comedienne for, successively, Victor, Columbia and Brunswick, was burned to death on the night of April 23 in her room in the Hotel Le Marquis, New York. Her real name was Mary Ellen Harrison. She was a native of Kentucky and a grand-niece of President Benjamin Harrison. In private life, Miss Harris was Mrs. Leonard Urry, wife of a London theatrical agent, whom she married on a tour abroad. She had returned to the United States for treatment of a nervous condition. The New York papers and theatrical magazines gave her age as 38—an obvious mistake, since she was making Victor records in 1916—28 years ago. During all her career, she seems to have made only one duet record—"I Wonder Why," with Billy Murray, in 1917.

HEMUS, PERCY. This favorite baritone of the early recording days died December 22, 1943, aged 65, in the National Broadcasting company's first aid dispensary in New York, after being stricken with a heart attack a few minutes before he was to appear on a radio program. Mr. Hemus, a native of

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak &amp; Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

New Zealand, came to this country at the age of seven. He made Columbia records in 1906 under the name of Charles Gordon. After this, he sang for Victor under his real name for several years, and ended his recording career with Pathe.

HILL, MURRY K. Joseph T. Pope died in Chicago on October 22, 1942, at the advanced age of 77. This news will mean more to record collectors when they realize that Pope was "Murry K. Hill," who made comic monologs for practically every American recording company from 1909 to 1911. Hill was one of the funniest of comedians, with a wealth of breathless, original patter, splendidly displayed in such records as "A Bunch of Nonsense," "A Talk on Married Life," and "How Columbus Discovered America." He continued in Vaudeville until 1930.

HINDERMEYER, HARVEY. Mr. Hindermeier began making records around 1908. He usually sang sentimental ballads and concert numbers, although he recorded "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" for Columbia—a record I have just acquired from Albert R. (Jack) Via, Jr., of South Boston, Va. How many record collectors know that Hindermeier, who lives at Garden City, N. Y., was one of the first famous radio performers? He and Earl Tuckerman were "Goldy" and "Dusty," the "Gold Dust Twins," who unearthed and sang much early American folk music. Although Mr. Hindermeier is of Pennsylvania Dutch descent, he called himself Harvey Wilson during the first World War because many people thought Hindermeier sounded German!

KING, CHARLES E. died in London January 11, 1944, of pneumonia contracted aboard ship en route from New York to England to entertain soldiers. Mr. King went into vaudeville in his teens and he and his partner, Elizabeth Brice, were one of the most popular pairs in stage history. They made several Victor records in 1911 and later recorded for Columbia. He was very popular in "Broadway Melody" and other early talkies.

MORTON, EDDIE. one of my favorites among recording comedians, began making records in 1908. He had been a New York police officer and was known in vaudeville as "the Singing Policeman." Does anyone know where he is now? Jimmy Martindale, of Brooklyn, told me a few years ago he had heard Morton was in retirement, living on a farm in New England. Jimmy also said he had learned the real name of William J. Halley, a popular recording comedian from 1913-16, was William Hanley, and that Halley quit vaudeville to enter politics in New Jersey.

RUBSAM, EDWARD F. well known in the early 1900's for his Columbia records of orchestra bells and xylophone solos, died April 26, 1943, in Newark Memorial hospital, Newark, N. J. He was 71, and in recent years had been a member of the orchestras in the Proctor's and Paramount theaters, Newark.

TALLY, HARRY. I have been frequently asked if Harry Tally, the sweet-voiced tenor who made many records from 1903 through 1916, is still alive. I'm afraid not. Paul Denis, of the Billboard, tells me that Irving Cooper is the only surviving member of the Empire City Four, famous vaudeville quartet in which Tally starred. On the other hand, Joe Laurie, Jr., says Tally was living in California a few years and may still be there.

VAN BRUNT, WALTER, who began making records in 1908, when he was in his teens, has been known for many years as Walter Scanlan—the name under which he appeared in Victor Herbert light operas—and has done much radio work. For the past year he has been having some form of throat trouble and is now working in the National Broadcasting company production department.

WILLS, NAT M. It was a surprise to read in Variety that the widow of this great comedian is still alive and appearing at the Bluebird Inn, N. Y. Variety reported her as recovering after having been robbed and beaten by three unidentified men. Nat Wills, whose "No News, or What Killed the Dog," was one of the biggest selling records ever made, was born in Fredericksburg, Va., in 1873, and died in 1917. His recording career began in 1908.

PATRIOTIC MUSIC

(Continued)

By KENNETH ROSE

Marching Through Georgia—1865

NO SONG of the war has been so bitterly excoriated in the South as "Marching Through Georgia," and for understandable reasons that do not concern us here. Nevertheless it has throughout the rest of the nation been recognized as a true national ballad and its popularity is deep rooted. It commemorates Sherman's March to the Sea.

Henry C. Work, the writer of the song, was an Easterner. He was born in Middleton, Conn., in 1832. By inheritance, birth, and conviction he was an ardent Unionist, whose principles were strengthened by the imprisonment of his father for giving aid and comfort to a group of escaped slaves.

Work came to Chicago in 1855 and made an early association with George Root, who befriended him throughout his career. His compositions are many and varied, and include several deathless war ballads. Among them may be listed "Lilly Dale," "Kingdom Coming," "Babylon is Fallen," "Grafted into the Army," "Brave Boys are They," "Wake Nicodemus," "My Grandfather's Clock," and "Marching Through Georgia."

—o—

Music of the Confederacy

Music of the Confederacy may be defined as that published in a Confederate state during the period of the war. Over 6,000 titles are known. These include ballads, marches, polkas, schottisches, patriotic and minstrel numbers of American and English background. Many were written by Northerners and were by force of circumstances adopted by the South and made its very own.

Scores of martial tunes and sentimental ballads caught the fancy of soldiers and civilians alike. Among the best known are "I Wish I was in Dixie's Land," "The Conquered Banner," "All Quiet Along the Potomac Tonight," "Maryland, My Maryland," "My Wife and Child," "The Southern Marsellaise," "The Southern Cross," "Alabama," "Song of the South," "Here's Your Mule," "God Save the South," "The Bonnie Blue Flag," "Stonewall Jackson's Way," and "Lorena."

Of all these stirring tunes, only two may be defined as national ballads in the patriotic sense. In fact "Dixie," "Maryland, My Maryland," together with the Northern "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," stand head and shoulders over any other musical product of the war, and are the only ones that survive as authentic national music comparable with "Hail Columbia" and "The Star Spangled Banner."

—o—

I Wish I Was in Dixie's Land—1859

Next to the "Star Spangled Banner" this is the most important song in our patriotic literature. It was written in November, 1859, by Daniel Decatur Emmett, a well known minstrel comedian. Emmett, who was born in Mt. Vernon, Ohio, composed "Dixie" as a "Walk Around" for his minstrel company, with little thought that it would ever prove more than a routine minstrel tune. It was first sung in New Orleans just before the outbreak of the war, where it was introduced into a burlesque by Mrs. John Wood. Its immediate popularity was tremendous. So lilting and vital was its melody, so appropriate its sentiment to the Southern ideal, it soon spread over the entire Southland and became the rallying song of the Confederacy.

The derivation of the term "Dixie" has offered certain perplexities to historians. The most commonly accepted definition is that found on the title page of another Emmett tune, where it states that a certain Mr. Dixie of New York, a wealthy slave owner, was one who was at the same time considerate of his responsibility to his charges. Due to financial losses he sold many of his slaves into the deep South. There, far from home, their thoughts turned in nostalgic longing to the land of their homes and fondest memories, the "Dixie's Land" of their dreams.

Still another possible origin of the term is noted in the old custom of the Citizen's Bank of Louisiana, located in New Orleans, in issuing notes

HELP WANTED

I am planning to make a list of all acoustic Pathe Needle Cut, Actuelle and Perfect discs by the great opera and concert singers. I would appreciate the loan of catalogs, supplements and other material listing such records. Even if you have no catalogs or supplements to loan, you can help by sending me lists, giving type of label, name of singer, title or selection and number of record, of any discs of this category that you happen to have or to know about. Once my list is completed, the results will be published for the benefit of all.

Please cooperate!

Address all communications to:

STEPHEN FASSETT

944 Monroe Lane

Woodmere, N. Y.

11x

Your Favorite Baritones

AMATO
AMATO
ANCONA
BATTISTINI
DE GOGORZA
DE LUCA
RUFFO SAMMARCO
SCOTTI
STRACCIARI

I Due Foscari: O vecchio cor (V 88438)
I Due Foscari: O vecchio cor (V 88438)
Germania: Ferito Prigionier (V 88437)
Don Juan's Serenade (V 88168 or IRCC 13)
Zampa: Perche tremar (V 92004 or IRCC 202)
Barber: Largo al factotum (V 88181 or 6068)
Benvenuto Cellini: de l'art splendeur (V 6443)
Forza: Urna fatale (HRS)
Ernani: Lo vedremo (Opera Disc 76207)
Falstaff: L'onore, Ladri (V 88195 or IRCC 18)
Don Carlos: O Carlo, ascolta (Fonotopia 74186)

Robert J. Nathan
ANCONA
BAKLANOFF
BATTISTINI
LA PUMA
SAMMARCO
SAMMARCO
SCHWARZ
SCOTTI
STRACCIARI
ZANELLI

Otello: Era la notte (V 87015)
Otello: Era la notte/Credo (Col. 5270A)
Masked Ball: Alla vita (Gram. 052142)
Masked Ball: Eri tu (ZONO. 12533)
Masked Ball: Eri tu (Fono. 39270)
Rigoletto: Pari siamo (Fono. 74132)
Tannhauser: O du mein holder (Gram. 042539)
Sonnambula: Vi ravviso (V 81041)
Faust: Dio possente (V 72101)
Favorita: A tanto amor (V 74632)

E. F. Prescott
ANCONA
BATTISTINI
BATTISTINI
DE LUCA
GIRALDONI
RENAUD
RENAUD

Ernani: O de verd'anni (V 88062)
Puritani: Bel sogno (V 88352)
Werther: Ah, non mi ridestar (V 6045)
Benvenuto Cellini: De l'art splendeur (V 6443)
Otello: Era la notte (Fono. 39445 or HRS 1018)
Hamlet: Comme une pale fleur (HMV D857)
Herodiade: Vision fugitive (Eng. HMV D 851 or Fr. HMV W 115)
(Note: D851 & W115 differ from and are superior to V 92003)
Martha: Porter Song (V 87352 or 876)
Don Carlos: O Carlo, ascolta (Fono. 74186)
Favorita: A tanto amor (V 74632)

RUFFO
STRACCIARI
ZANELLI

Victor W. Quam
AMATO AMATO BATTISTINI
DE LUCA
DE LUCA
NAVARRO RIMINI
RUFFO
RUFFO WHITEHILL

Rigoletto: Povero Rigoletto (V 88340 or 6041)
Rigoletto: Cortigiani (V 88341 or 6041)
Ernani: Vieni meco (V 92008)
Beau soir (V 64934 or 902)
Benvenuto Cellini: De l'art splendeur (V 6443)
Maruxo: Romanza de Rufo (V 45129)
Jewels of the Madonna: Aprilla, o bella (Voc. 60012)
Africana: All'erta, Marinar (V 87223 or 817)
Andrea Chenier: Nemico della Patria (V 88626 or 6262)
Parsifal: Mein Vater (V 74406)

THE END

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

George Washington Johnson

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

GEORGE WASHINGTON JOHNSON holds a distinctive place among pioneer recording artists in at least three respects.

He was the first Negro to become widely known because of his recordings; he had the most limited repertoire of any famous record maker and, as far as I know, he was the only one of the "Old Brigade" to meet a violent end at the hands of the law.

The latter fact is especially ironic, since Johnson, judging him on the basis of his records, was one of the best-natured and most carefree of men. No doubt he was genial and light-hearted under normal conditions.

Frank Dorian, pioneer Columbia official who died in 1939, told me that Johnson was born in slavery (from his tendency to use broad A's, I suspect his owner's plantation was somewhere around the James river section of Virginia, where that type of accent is common), and when he attracted the Columbia company's attention in the early '90's was picking up a living by roaming the streets of Washington, "singing and whistling and passing the hat." Somebody in the Columbia organization, whose headquarters then were in Washington, decided Johnson's specialties would be good sellers on records and he was engaged to sing and whistle, making the old-fashioned brown wax cylinders by the "round."

Apparently, the burly Negro was able to perform just four numbers, and these he sang over and over (there being no master records then), day in and day out, to supply the demand. Laughing records have a world-wide appeal and even the natives of Africa (some of whom may have been his kinsmen) heard and enjoyed George W. Johnson's uproarious mirth.

The four numbers in his repertoire were the Laughing Song, his most famous specialty; the Whistling Coon, which was almost equally popular; the Laughing Coon and the Whistling Girl.

By 1896 these four records were a prominent feature of the Columbia cylinder catalog, in which it was said: "Mr. Johnson is the original laughing and whistling coon. His whistling is loud and clear and his laugh is simply irresistible."

He also took part in minstrel specialties. Another note said: "The Imperial Minstrels have been engaged exclusively to entertain Columbia patrons. A veritable carnival of mirth and melody, these records embrace the combined efforts of the Columbia Orchestra and The Greater New York Quartette, together with Len Spencer's humorisms and George W. Johnson's hearty laughter."

Occasionally, too, George was called on to assist other artists, such as the ubiquitous Mr. Spencer, who could write a sketch to fit anybody's personality. In 1906, for instance, Len made a record called "The Merry Postman," in which Johnson supplied the laughing "effects."

George Johnson seems to have been an artist with a proper pride in his work. In the Talking Machine News (a no longer published English periodical which I find invaluable in doing research for these biographical sketches) I came upon a brief article, entitled "Laughing for a Living—the Jolly John Nash of the States," which refers to Johnson. It appeared in the December 1, 1906, issue, as follows:

"One of the most unique characters in the talking machine world, says the 'Music Trades' (New York) is George Johnson, who is now working for all the companies, doing 'laughing songs.' Johnson is said to be the most infectious laughter in the country. He is described by the talking machine men as the original 'haw-haw' man, and practically every laughing song heard on the phonograph is sung by him. He even figures in some songs, which have only a few bars of laughing chorus or a laughing line. Johnson is a Negro who has been making a living by his exuberance for years. In the old days, it is said, he once sang the same song 56 times in one day, and his laugh had as much merriment in it at the conclusion as when he started.

"A talking machine man tells of Johnson that he was in a Western city one day in a gallery at the theater. A black comedian came out and did a laughing song. Johnson snorted after the first chorus. He moved about restlessly and at the end of the second verse shouted a protest.

"'You ain't singing dat song right!' he cried.

"'What's the reason I ain't?' declared the singer from the stage, angrily. 'P'raps you can sing it better!'

"'I sure can,' declared Johnson.

"'Well, come down then and try it.'

"Johnson left the gallery, slipped into the stage entrance and took up the dare. He scored his usual success."

(Parenthetically, I may remark that I doubt that Johnson shouted, "You ain't singing dat song right!" As I have already said, he used broad A's and his accent as a whole was rather cultured, sounding as if he had picked up a certain amount of education.)

When the phonograph companies quit having performers sing by the round, after the system of making master records was developed, the change must have been a painful one, financially, to Johnson with his restricted repertoire. He continued to sing for the phonograph companies, however, all through 1906 and perhaps a year or so later.

Then tragedy entered the laughing man's life. My statement that Johnson died at the hands of the law is based on an assertion in Fred Gaisberg's book, "The Music Goes Round." Gaisberg, who began his professional career as a piano player for Columbia in 1890 but later went to England, where he has been for many years a Gramophone company official, used to play the accompaniments for Johnson. He says that, some years after he went to England, he learned that Johnson had thrown his wife out of a window while he was in a state of drunken insanity. The woman died, and the Negro comedian was hanged for murder.

Perhaps it was because of this shocking occurrence that his records, once so popular, disappeared from the catalogs. Victor and Edison discontinued them all. Columbia dropped all the Johnson numbers except "The Whistling Coon," which it had Billy Murray remake in Johnson's place. Victor also listed the same number by Billy and S. H. Dudley.

Though gone, Johnson, however, was not entirely forgotten. In 1917 Edison revived "The Whistling Coon," with the late Edward Meeker doing the whistling. It was an elaborate sketch in which Meeker, as the "coon," gave his whistling specialty for the benefit of a group of service men, who joined him in the final chorus.

That same year, Edison also revived "The Laughing Song," with Meeker again doing the singing and whistling. Because of an Edison idiosyncrasy for holding records for years before issuing them, it was not put on the market until 1921. This is another elaborate sketch, in which the sponsors of an amateur minstrel show are at their wit's end because they can't find anybody to sing Johnson's Laughing Song. "It won't be a regular minstrel show," Billy Murray, as one of the amateurs, declares. Then somebody remembers Meeker's ability to sing the number and he is called down from "the billiards room" to oblige.

Taken as a whole, George Washington Johnson's life, which began in slavery and ended at the rope's end, was no laughing matter, but his records reflect an essentially simple, lovable personality and are well worth hearing today.

ILLUSTRATION

This photograph, taken in 1900, shows a group of pioneer Edison recording artists assembled at the Edison laboratories in Orange, New Jersey. Many of the 42 are now almost forgotten, and the majority must be dead. I have placed an asterisk in front of the names of those whom I definitely know have died, but some of the others probably also have passed on.

A great many other prominent recorders of the turn of the century are not shown here, since they were either under exclusive contract to another company or for some other reason were not present. Among the missing were Billy Murray, then doing recording work on the Pacific coast; Steve Porter, Billy Golden, Len Spencer, Minnie Emmett, Vess L. Ossman, George J. Gaskin, Cal Stewart and Russell Hunting. Others, such as Ada Jones, Bob Roberts, James F. Harrison and Henry Burr, though destined to be famous a little later, had not yet begun to make records.

The persons in the photograph are numbered as follows:

1. Joe Belmont, whistler, now proprietor of a bird store in Radio City, New York; 2. Nick Scholl, trombone; 3. A. Zimmerman, cornet; 4. L. W. Lipp, yodler; 5. Byron G. Harlan, tenor; 6. Frederick W. Hager, violin; 7. *Arthur F. Collins, baritone; 8. S. H. Dudley, baritone; 9. W. C. Densing, baritone; 10. M. Guarini, tenor; 11. *William Tuson, clarinet; 12. Will N. Steele, recitations; 13. Jim White, recitations; 14. *Walter H. Miller, manager of recording department; 15. *George Broderick, bass; 16. Frank Kennedy, Dutch comedian; 17. Al Sweet, cornet; 18. B. Russell Throckmorton, recitations; 19. Harvey N. Emmons, chimes and recording expert; 20. Ruby R. Brooks, banjo; 21. Samuel Siegel, mandolin; 22. *Albert Benzler, piano; 23. Senorita Godoy, Spanish songs; 24. *Joe Natus, tenor; 25. *William F. Hooley, bass; 26. May Kelso, contralto; 27. *J. J. Fisher, baritone; 28. *Will F. Denny, tenor; 29. John Bieling, tenor; 30. *Marguerite Newton (Mrs. George P. Watson), soprano; 31. Fred Bachman, piano; 32. *George Washington Johnson, "the Whistling Coon"; 33. A. D. Madeira, baritone; 34. Frank S. Mazzotta, piccolo; 35. *Frank P. Banta, piano (his son, Frank E. Banta, was for years a famous recording star and is now regularly heard as a pianist on NBC radio programs); 36. *Charles D'Almaine, violin; 37. George P. Watson, yodler; 38. *Dan W. Quinn, tenor; 39. *Harry Macdonough, tenor; 40. *Edward M. Favor, tenor; 41. Albert Charles Campbell, tenor; 42. Jere Mahoney, original second tenor of the Haydn Quartet.

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

Visit the
EDISON EXHIBIT
at WOODYMAY
73 Roxbury St., Boston, Mass.

Recording song-birds of yesteryear

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

George J. Gaskin

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

- 84 Boninsegna—Loreley: Lascia per che libera (1917) (G...)/Boninsegna & Bolis — Guarany: Sento una forza (1917) (G...)
- 85 Calve—Carmen: Card Scene/In questa tomba oscura (RR from Pathe discs)
- 86 Campanari — Masked Ball: Eri tu
(V85001) / Africana: Admastro (V-85027)
- 87 Nordica—Hunyada Laszlo: Ah rebeges (Col. 30144) / Serenade (Strauss)
(Eng. Col. 74029)
- 88 Delna, Marie—Vivandiere: Viens avec nous (RR) / Delna & Alvarez: Favorite: duo (RR) (Pathe)
- 89 Marchesi, Blanche—Dido: When I am laid in earth (G) (E)/Sicilian Cart
Driver's Song (G) (E) 1936
- 90 Eames — Chanson des Baisers (V88-
133)/Cavalleria: Voi lo sapete (V88-037)
- 91 Kurt — Walkure: Die Manner Sippe/
Kurt, Urlus, & Knupfer — Fidelio:
Euch werde (G...)
- 92 Galvany—Linda di Chamounix: O luce
(G53549)/Fado Portuguez
- 93 Schumann-Heink—Sapho: O ma lyre (V88212) / Prophete: Prison Scene, part 2 (V88094)
- 94 Plancon—Mignon: Del suo cor (V85-126)/(a) Le Lazzarone (b) Le Flibus-tier (V85066)
- 95 Nordica — Walkure: Ho-Yo-To-Ho (RR from unpublished Columbia test)
- 96 McCormack—Traviata: Dei miei bollenti/McCormack & Sammarco—Barber: Numero quindici
- 97 Marchesi, Blanche—L'Ete (G33593)
RR/Queen Anne Boleyn in Prison
Arr. Dolmetsch (1936) E
- 98 Adams, Suzanne—Romeo: Valse (V-5007)/Coquette (V5005) RR
(To be continued)

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan

Chicago 16, Illinois

THE NAME of "the Silver-voiced Irish Tenor," as George J. Gaskin styled himself, was a potent one in the very earliest days of the phonograph's career as a home entertainer. During the '90's his cylinder records were among the best sellers, but his vogue ended in the early 1900's, shortly after disc records were introduced. Today he has been dead so long and his records have so completely passed out of general circulation that I have been able to obtain only the most meager information about the man himself.

I do not know when and where Gaskin was born or how long he has been dead, although his former associates think it must have been about 25 years since his passing. My own collection contains only two disc records by him, both Columbias made around 1903, entitled "The Bassoon" and "Little Alabama Coon." The latter does not contain his name on the label but has a spoken introduction in which his name is given. I have no cylinders by him and probably only a few of the old fragile wax productions have survived. A year or two ago I read that a New York collector who goes in for cylinders regarded Gaskin's 1893 version of "The Side-walks of New York" as the oldest record he owned and treasured the nearly worn-out thing so much he seldom, if ever, played it.

A paragraph in an article by Fred Gaisberg, veteran official of the Gramophone Company of England, gives the definite impression that the pioneer tenor was a personality with idiosyncrasies of his own. Gaisberg, writing in the Gramophone for April, 1928, said:

"George J. Gaskin, who styled himself 'The Silver-voiced Irish Tenor,' possessed a repertoire that ranged from the sacred and soulful song to the popular vaudeville ditty. Recording at a fee of £2 per round, he earned an income of £5,000 a year. It was a positive education to observe the facility with which he could switch over from the religious emotion he displayed during 10 rounds of a hymn to 20 hilarious rounds of 'Maggie Murphy's Home.' Secrets will out, and we discovered that the success of this transformation was mainly due to a quiet glass of lager imbibed off-stage."

The period about which Gaisberg was writing was that of the early 1890's when Gaisberg, a native of Washington and then only in his teens, served as a piano accompanist for the pioneer Columbia company and grew to know intimately all the popular artists of that day. Later, Gaisberg became associated with Emile Berliner in promoting the sale of disc records and was sent to England, where he remained.

An even more picturesque account of George Gaskin's recording oddities was given to me by Albert Campbell, who recalled George as perhaps the only singer who chewed tobacco while making records. Gaskin explained to Campbell that he "chewed" because fine shavings from the recording apparatus were blown into the room and irritated his throat. Ridding himself of surplus juice was no problem. He simply let it fly accurately into the throat of the recording horn! That hardly seems a sanitary process or one conducive to artistic singing. Some critics insist, in fact, that Gaskin's voice was predominantly "tinny" and was suited only for work with crude recording apparatus. When methods improved he naturally, they say, was relegated to the background and soon passed out of the picture. However, there is no question that he pleased the record buying public of an earlier day.

The Columbia cylinder record catalog for 1896 contains proof of Gaskin's popularity in the form of 41 records, numbered consecutively from 2001 to 2041. Such hits of the time as "Sweet Marie," "Two Little Girls in Blue," "Plain Molly O," "My Pearl is a Bowery Girl," "Say Au Revoir But Not Goodbye," "The Fatal Wedding," "The Sunshine of Parade Alley," "She May Have Seen Better Days," and "I Don't Want to Play in Your Yard" are included. There are also "comics" like "Dr. Piecrust" and "And Her Golden Hair Was Hanging Down Her Back," and "standards" such as "Ben Bolt," but I don't find any trace of the hymns concerning which Gaisberg wrote.

In 1897 the list by Gaskin had dwindled to 14. Since there were no permanent "masters" in those days and the records had to be made by "rounds," Gaskin must not have been in Washington much of the time. He continued a favorite, however, for several years longer.

When Columbia introduced a permanent moulded master cylinder record in 1902, a group of then popular artists were photographed at the Bridgeport factory, where they had gone to look at the new miracle. I have a copy of the photo with Gaskin, portly and prosperous appearing.

RECORDS

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS wanted. Top prices paid for vocal operatic and concert. Write for free list.—Douglas P. Ball, 505A Congress Bldg., Miami, Fla. o6863

FALKENER BROS. Record Shop, Antiques, 383 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass. n2021

WANTED: IRCC and HRS Records. Send list, showing condition and prices, to E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco, 15, California. n128x5

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. n12288

RECORDS of all types bought. I pay express. Classics preferred.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City, New Jersey. ja12235

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. s12633

CLASSICAL RECORDS for sale. Send for list.—H. P. Silverman, 216 Denham Bldg., Denver 2, Colo. ja6023

FOR SALE: 200 CYLINDER Phonograph records, unassorted in lots of 50, "as is," 5c each, not prepaid. Several nice paperweights of around the 1910 period. Some are ground and polished on the bottom, fine for over small light. $1.35 each or 4 for $5. Not prepaid. A few smaller ones, 65c each.—Swap Shop, 3124 S. Wash. St., Marion, Ind. o1063

20 THOUSAND historical records. Opera, instrumental, popular, blues and swing. Send "wanted" list to—John Scignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. mh6825

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, any kind.—C. A. Ramsey, Marenco, Ohio. n6061

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main St. 12, Los Angeles, Calif. s12036

"STRAUDIUS" VIOLIN. Made, 1734. What's your offer?—James T. Dagley, LaFollette, Tenn. o6882

OUT-OF-PRINT RECORDINGS, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged. — American Record Collectors' Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City, 19. ja12414

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, 20 Lawson Rd., Egypt, Mass. ja122901

SIX HAND CARVED Violins, double violin case, alligator hide; three old violins, also antiques and music boxes. Write.—Mrs. Viola Marti, Box 34, Pieron, Illinois. n6846

WANTED to buy or trade operatic programs. Any date, any place. Also want to buy operatic records and photographs of singers.—H. A. Jansen, 105-14 217th Lane, Queens Village, 9, N. Y. o6273

WANTED: Swiss type music boxes or other unusual mechanical music devices. Have for sale 40 Stella Disc records, 15½" in diameter.—Brown County Ridgecrafters, Nashville, Indiana. o6426

WANTED: 13½" in Stella Swiss music box tune discs. — Catherine Dofelmier, 1219 18th North, Seattle, 2, Wash. r6652

WANTED: SWISS music box, with extra cylinder. Good condition.—Raymond P. Marsolek, 1082 Redondo Ave., Long Beach, California. mh6882

A MONEY-MAKER!

START HOME BUSINESS
Making Statuary, Art Goods, Planes, Novelties, Souvenirs, Concrete Pottery, Garden Furniture, Artificial Marble Flooring, Liquid Marble. Make your own flexible molds.

SEND NO MONEY

Cash in on amazing profits. Write today for full details, valuable Folder Free!

Creative Publ. Dept. HB Glencoe, Ill.

in the group. It was not a happy occasion, for the singers suspected that, with the "round" system abolished and only one satisfactory rendition of a song necessary, their earnings would greatly decrease. In some cases they did, but other artists, given generous royalty contracts, made far more money than the pioneers dreamed about.

After 1904 or so, Gaskin dropped completely from sight. He made no more records for many years, although a double-faced one by him was issued by Pathé around 1916. He must have died soon afterward.

Two amusing anecdotes, both concerning Gaskin as well as the famous Len Spencer, come to mind. In the early days the Columbia Company's "talent" would get paid off on Friday, and frequently a poker game was started that lasted till Monday morning.

Late one Sunday night, sleep, or the need for it, was getting the best of Spencer. He picked up a perfect hand that would entitle him to the "pot," but fell back in his chair, asleep, and dropped his cards to the table. The "boys" almost fainted at sight of what he held. Then Gaskin suggested that they reshuffle the cards, deal fresh hands and wake Spencer. This was done, and the great comedian sighed heavily as he looked drowsily around.

"Gosh, boys," he said, "I wish you had let me sleep. I dreamed I had just been dealt a perfect hand that would take everything in sight—and then you had to go and wake me up!"

On another occasion a game was in progress, when Gaskin, by prearrangement, got up and snapped off the light. Spencer was looking at his cards at the time. The others kept on talking as if they were still playing, and finally professed to become impatient with Len. "Hurry up! You're holding up the game!" they said.

Then up spoke Spencer, with terror in his voice. "My gosh, boys," he said. "I hate to tell you but I've gone suddenly blind! I can't see a thing!"

Some time afterward Len was threatened with blindness in one eye. Those who knew his fondness for practical jokes of every description have no doubt that he "got hunk" with Gaskin.

I should add, perhaps, that S. E. Levy, of Shanghai, China, who died in 1931 and was the foremost authority of his time on old records, believed "the Silver-Masked Tenor," who sang with the Goodrich Silvertown Orchestra during the early days of radio, was Gaskin making a comeback. Actually, however, the voice was that of my New York friend, Joseph M. White, who is still active. Gaskin today is one of the most obscure of formerly popular recording artists.

REFERENCE DIRECTORY

$6 a year for four lines

BOTTLES

Gardner, Chas. B., Box 27, New London, Conn. Buy flasks, documents, advertisements and pictures from Early American Glass Works. ap54

DOLLS

Handicraft Shop, Box 79, North Platte, Nebr. Historical Character dolls in plastic. Sacajawea, Buffalo Bill, and Sagebrush Folk. Write for list. n44

DOLL HOSPITALS

Humpty Dumpty Doll Hospital, Redondo Beach, Calif., "Rare antiques restored. Estimates cheerfully given." Emma C. Clear, "Dean of Doll Doctors." jly54

INDIAN RELICS

McKillop, Dan, Regina, Saskatchewan, Canada. Ancient Indian glacial arrows. f54

MATCH COVERS

Matchbooks, 1808 College, Fort Worth 4, Texas. Matchbook Covers. Large Stock. Finest selection of Armed Force Units all branches of the service. Postal brings price list. Approval lots to reliable collectors. ap54

NUMISMATICS

Beebe Coin Co., 1180 E. 63rd, Chicago 37, Ill. Large Retail Catalog coins, currency, supplies 10c. Copyrighted premium list 6c. Bargain lists free. s54
Max B. Mehl, 421 Mehl Bldg., Fort Worth, Tex. Largest coin firm in U. S. Est. 41 yrs. Everything in coins, etc. Send for free 60 pp. Ill. Coin Cat. You'll like it. ja54

New Netherlands Coin Co., 95 5th Ave., New York, N. Y. Coins for every type collection. ja54

SHAVING MUGS

W. Porter Ware, Sewanee, Tenn. Will buy barber mugs with names and illustrations. Also plain white mugs with labels glued on (thin glass covering). Antique shaving bowls wanted. Patented mugs, etc. s54

SALTS & PEPPERS MART

WANTED TO BUY or exchange, condiment sets, consisting of salt, pepper & mustard or with the vinegar and oil bottles in novelty shapes. Mrs. Madge Burns, 425 North St., Taft, Calif. mh6694

BASEBALL PLAYER, football players, rocking horse, red bulls, doorman, black cat, babies, Gibson girl, paratroopers, set 35c. Complete list 3c. — Sistershop, Northbranch, Kansas. o1831

SHAKERS: Original designs, cast in native gypsum. Please give second choice. 3 pair $1 prepaid. Raspberries, onions, iris, turtles, snakes, snails, sphinx, books, bookends, mountain and molehill. —Pike Products, Medicine Lodge, Kans. s1891

SHAKERS: Original designs cast in native gypsum. Please give 2nd choice. 3 pair $1 prepaid. Sunflowers, tulips, zinnias, iris, chrysanthemums, wild roses, roses, baseball and mitt, panthers, firecrackers, crowns, dominoes, checkers, pigeons. —Pike Products, Medicine Lodge, Kansas. o1832

HOBBYISTS ATTENTION!

Send for FREE Price List of Salts & Peppers—Horses, Dogs, Cats, Pigs, Elephants, Vases, Pitchers, Figures, Shoes, Flower Pots. f54

WEINSTEIN'S GIFT SHOPPE

229 S. Washington St. Peoria, Illinois

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Russell Hunting, Sr.

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

"GENIUS" IS A word that should be used with discriminating reserve, but it seems to me no less a term can accurately describe Russell Hunting, Sr., who died so recently as February 20, 1943, and is buried in Westchester, N. Y.

In the variety of his achievements as comedian, recording director and executive, Mr. Hunting stands virtually alone among Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists. Among other things, he is the only one I can think of who had a phonograph company named for himself and whose career included brilliant achievements in the United States, England and nearly every other civilized nation in the world. The man who first became known on wax cylinders as the maker of "Casey" monologues came to count American presidents and foreign rulers among his warm admirers and friends and to be a notable figure on a world-wide scale.

The "bare essentials" of this genuinely great man's career may be summed up briefly:

Russell Hunting, Sr., was born in West Roxbury, Mass., on May 8, 1864, so lacked only a few months of being 79 years of age when he died. On March 19, 1888, he married Mary Ann Lawrence, who was born in New York City on August 17, 1867, and who survives him. They had three children: Bessie Marie Hunting, who was born July 4, 1889, and died in September, 1889; Henry (Harry) Lawrence Hunting, born February 13, 1892, and Russell Emerson Hunting, Jr., born May 24, 1897. Mrs. Hunting now makes her home in Yonkers, N. Y., with her son, Harry, who has taken a great deal of trouble to help me with the material for this account of his father's life.

After becoming an actor at an extremely early age, Mr. Hunting began making phonograph records in the early '90's and, as the teller of the "Michael Casey" series of comic Irish sketches, was soon famous wherever records were heard. In 1898 he went to England, where he became recording manager of the pioneer Edison Bell company, operated by the picturesquely gruff and sardonic but warm-hearted "Laddie from Lancashire," James E. Hough. A few years later, he and another American, Louis Sterling, founded the Russell Hunting Record Co., Ltd., and did a large business.

Still later, Mr. Hunting became the director general of the recording departments of the Pathé Freres company, of Paris, France, and in that capacity traveled throughout the world. He came back to the United States in 1914 to establish the American branch of Pathé and remained here for several years before returning to Paris, where he supervised the French recording activities of Pathé, which by that time was Columbia-controlled. A few years ago, when his health failed, he returned to his native country.

Such a skeleton outline as the foregoing, however, cannot pretend to tell the real story of Russell Hunting, Sr., a story which is one of the most fascinating in the phonograph industry's history. Especially absorbing are the circumstances of the founding of the Russell Hunting Record company in the days when the cylinder record was more popular than the disc and, as "the working man's record," seemed likely to dominate the market for years to come. The rise and decline of Sterling and Hunting and their "Sterling" record is the essence of the decline and death of the cylinder record which has not been manufactured, except for dictating machine use, anywhere in the world since 1929.

As good a start as any in beginning a detailed story of Russell Hunting's life may be made by referring to the first issue of the Talking Machine News, which began publication in London in May, 1903, and continued to be issued for more than 30 years. It will be extensively quoted in this series.

On page 35 of that first issue is an article entitled "The Career of 'Casey' (Mr. Russell Hunting)," whom a sub-head calls, "A Man of Many Records." The article, written by Leonard W. Lillingston, founder and editor of the TMN, who died in 1911, begins:

"There are, of course, many masters of humorous dialogue, but only one 'Mike Casey.' The reason is not far to seek; Casey was not only one of the first to tell funny stories to the phonograph, but he was, in fact, one of the first to talk into the phonograph at all. It is not too much to say that the Casey records have echoed round the world, and that they have contributed to the gaiety of nations. Wherever the phonograph has gone, they have gone. And in what part of the globe at the present time, whether civilized or uncivilized, can it be said with certainty that the talking machine is unknown?"

"The author and originator of the famous Casey records is Mr. Russell Hunting, of the Edison Bell company. He was born at West Roxbury, a small township in the United States. He is in the prime of life, just 39 years old, and looking younger. You write him down a son of Theophrastus at a glance. As a matter of fact, before he was 21 he not only toured the States, but crossed the Herring Pond. His first professional appearance was with the celebrated American actor, Edwin Booth, at that time playing 'The Taming of the Shrew,' at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, New York. He was a member of the Boston Theatre Company for nine years, and for three years was its stage manager. By-the-way, it is an interesting fact that, whilst Mr. Hunting's records are chiefly humorous, he always appeared on the boards in serious parts. (Note by U. W.—I may add that Mr. Hunting wears a serious expression in practically all the photographs I have seen of him. I suspect that, like many other men noted for their humorous depictions, his disposition was naturally grave.)

"Mr. Hunting," continued the Talking Machine News, "is richly endowed as a record maker. In the first place his voice lends itself to reproduction as few others do, in the second he is thoroughly acquainted with the paces of every type of talking machine, and in the third he is a past master in the art of mimetic expression. I will cite only one instance of his voice capacity. He once laid a wager with a fellow-actor that he would make a whisper record which should be audible even among the gods at the Boston Theatre. The Boston Theatre is a large house, but he won his wager; his whisper record was distinctly heard even in the back row of the gallery."

"As to his mimetic ability, Edison himself declared that the Casey steamboat record was the best he had ever heard. There were no less than ten different characters in this record and eight mechanical effects, all of them pro-

HARRY DICHTER

5458 Montgomery Ave., Phila. 31, Penna.

Foremost Dealer in Early American Sheet Music

Particularly want, and will pay top prices for bound folios before and about 1890.

Also songsters, and song collections before 1850. ap45

Printed WANT LIST sent on request.

EDISON RECORDS

WOODYMAY RECORD CO.

Knights of the Turntable

Boston . . . . Mass. np

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists. ap54c

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Congress Building Miami, Florida

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

Small Walnut Esty Organ
Table Model Fruitwood
Music Box
Rosewood Melodeons
Musical Album

All above in good playing condition. Also large gold frame, lady portrait, signed, $35.00. Mantle 3 section gold mirror. Write for pictures. ap

RUTH GORKE

111 S. View Rd. Syracuse 9, N. Y.

duced by Mr. Hunting. First the bell on the forward deck clangs loudly, then the little bell on the look-out-house puts in its turn. 'Get in that gangplank there; hurrah now; pull her in, boys; pull her out!' shouts the mate in a voice which drowns even the snorts of the engine at work. Thump, thump go the bales of cotton and boxes of merchandise on deck. 'Look heah, honey, doan you forgit to send me a letter so I gets it at St. Louis,' shouts a Negro deck hand to his dusky sweetheart, waving him a last adieu from the land. Puff, puff, puff goes the engine, and sh-sh-sh sings the escape valve. The heavy chain rattles against the capstan, and as the sound dies away a dozen of the deck hands strike up the melody: 'Farewell, my love, farewell.'

'And Mr. Hunting would tell you, as he told me—for he makes no secret about it—that all that went to make that record was his own voice, a bell, a couple of bottles, and a piece of sandpaper. Only that and nothing more; or has he left one thing out, and that—a consummate knowledge of the art of record-making? I think so.'

The following quotations conclude the article by Leonard W. Lillingston, in the May, 1903, issue of the Talking Machine News, outlining the recording achievements, to that time, of Russell Hunting, Sr.:

'It is a dramatic entertainment of the highest order to listen to Mr. Hunting talking into the horn; now two Irishmen are engaged in a dispute; now a German and a Chinaman, now an Englishman and a Yankee. The peculiar idioms; the racy phrases; the characteristic inflections, each and all are faithfully rendered. I wonder how many records Mr. Hunting has made? He was under contract at one time to produce not far short of 7,000 for one phono firm alone, and that is a good while since. As for the records which he has assisted in making they must be long past counting. For he is concerned, on behalf of the Edison Bell Co., in making records not only all day long, but every day. He is their stage manager, and as our readers by this time know, there is a good deal of stage management in getting out a really successful record.

'That well-known Edison Bell record, "The Departure of the Troopship," which came into vogue during the war (the Boer War—U. W.), and which still retains a high measure of popularity, must have meant a deal of clever stage management. It was Mr. Hunting's fertile brain which gave it birth, he it was who superintended its production throughout. I will not recapitulate here the tale of the troopship's departure as told by the record. It has to be heard to be appreciated. It is said that during the war time and since, more than one auditor has been moved to tears on hearing it for the first time. I can well believe it. As the record tells its story, that leavetaking, never to be forgotten, is acted over again; and memories of the hero—husband, lover or brother—now sleeping his last, long sleep beneath the South African veldt, come to life again.

'It is but one step from the sublime to the practical side of things. The series of incidents in "The Departure of the Troopship" are enacted on the phonograph in two minutes and a fifteenth. You will understand by that what is meant by stage management in record making. For if on the one hand, a record like this, properly made, appeals to the most sacred feelings of the human heart, on the other hand if badly made it will be nothing less than farcical. There is, of course, another essential, it must be taken from the life. Mr. Hunting's method in the making of records of this description is to go down and study the scenes at first hand. He saturates himself so to speak with the atmosphere; he lives for a while in the drama which is being enacted. In this way only can the highest form of record be created.

'It goes without saying that the subject of this sketch took to the phono early. He did not, of course, acquire his present reputation directly he started handling the machine. He had to practice. Given his special qualifications, with incessant practice, and there you have the secret of his success.

'Until you come to record for the phonograph,' said he to me, 'you fail to realize how much hearing depends upon the eyes, as well as the ears. You watch a man's face, and you know what he has said, though he has spoken ever so indistinctly. That is the secret of the oral instruction of the deaf and dumb—teaching them to see speech instead of hear it. Some wonderful results have been obtained that way, as you know. When you talk into a phono, the first thing to realize is that you must talk as though you were speaking to a blind man, who depends entirely upon sound, unaided by sight.'

'Are there any words,' I asked, 'which present greater difficulties than others?'

'There are lots. But two only will serve to prove my point. Just notice how the ordinary man enunciates "truth" and "teeth." You know what he says, because you are watching his face. But let him talk into the trumpet. And what do you hear when you switch on the reproducer? "Truth" becomes merely an "oo" sound, teeth an "ee" sound; it is impossible to recognize them as words.'

'Mr. Hunting considers the English instrumentalist the finest in the world. By-the-way, the band records, produced under his superintendence, are made by the London Regimental Band, a particularly strong combination of well-known instrumentalists. Mr. Hunting has been four years with the Edison Bell Co. and Edisonia, Ltd., as superintendent of their Record Department.

'Here is the outline of a new Casey story to end up with,' said he, as I rose to go. 'I call it "Casey on the Bench." Casey fines a prisoner twenty shillings for picking pockets. The prisoner declares he has only fifteen shillings in the world. "Where did ye get it from?" asks Casey. The prisoner says he got it out of the pockets of the crowd, whilst he was waiting for his turn. "Put him back in the crowd, officer," says Casey, "sure he may get the other five shillings."

'Any more Casey stories?'

'Well, there's "Casey in the Barber's Shop." The barber asks him why he hasn't painted his pole for him, as he promised to do. "Deed," says Casey, "but I would have done it if I could. Haven't I been all over town this day, trying to buy some striped paint?"

'One more story.'

'By-the-way,' says Mr. Hunting, with a humorous twinkle of the eye, 'I had a laughable experience myself the other day. Man came up here, professional, offered to make Casey records. I asked him, did he know Russell Hunting. He said, "Yes, knew him quite well; as a matter of fact Hunting got all his ideas from him." I asked him if he knew whether he was in London. He said he believed he was. "Well," I said, "I'd like to get him up here to make me records; think you could manage it for me?" Said he thought he could; any way, he'd try. So I suppose I'll have that fellow Hunting along one of these days.'

I have quoted this rather long article in its entirety, not only because it throws an interesting light upon Russell Hunting, Sr.'s, younger days, but because of the incidental information it gives concerning recording practices in the pioneer era. When "Casey" was under contract to make 7,000 records for one company, he, of course, was working by the "round" and was not recording that many different titles.

CORRECTION

Our apologies to Louis Bullaro of San Francisco whose name should have appeared above his list of Favorite Baritones at the top of page 27 of the September issue.

MATCH COVERS

FOR SALE

UNUSED MATCH BOOK covers, 100 all different $1; 35 Royal Flash covers $1. Free list.—Charles Edelman, 1311A East 84, Cleveland 3, Ohio. ap6825

ROYAL FLASH SERVICE match covers, 10 cents each. Write for approvals. Free Lists of Army, Navy, CCC, Souvenirs, Sports, Hotels, Patriotic and Girls. 20 different Service covers $1.00. 100 different regular $1.00.—Yeingst, 502 Parkway Road, Harrisburg, Penna. f124561

MATCHBOOK COVERS, clean and flat, one hundred (all different) for One dollar, postage paid.—Oregon Hobby Club, 240-246 N. Commercial, Salem, Oregon. d128001

100 ALL DIFFERENT, unused match book covers $1; 20 U. S. Service $1. Free list.—Fred Kappus, 230 St. James Place, Brooklyn 16, N. Y. n1051

MATCH BOOK COVERS, clean, all different, general collection, 110 for $1; 200 $2.25; 300 $3.75; 500 $7.50; Hollywood only, world renown places, night life, studios, etc., 40 $1; 60 $1.50; 80 $2.25; 100 $3. Army, Navy, Hotels, Cafes, and Patriotics also. Non-advertising Music composers. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.—E. B. Carswell, 6555 Barton, Hollywood 38, California. f68631

MATCH BOOK ALBUMS are still available for mounting match covers without paste. Our "Master" Album at $2 and "Collector" at $1.25 are the best of their kind. Send for one or more now, stating whether for mixed or standard size covers.—Matchless Album Co., Dept. H, Long Branch, N. J. mh62511

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Russell Hunting, Sr. II

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

Russell Hunting, Sr., "Michael Casey," as photographed in Italy, about 1910.

AS HAS already been said in a preceding installment, Russell Hunting, Sr., began recording his "Casey" monologs in the early 1890's. By 1898, when he decided to go to England and become associated with the Edison Bell company, he was recognized wherever records were played as one of the leading American exponents of the art of talking, singing or playing into a horn.

For instance, his name was prominent among the recording celebrities who on May 1, 1898, signed an agreement to give their services exclusively to the Columbia company for the ensuing year, and on page 30 of that year's catalog his photograph was published, under the heading: "Talking Records. The Famous Casey Series as Recorded by the Originator, Russell Hunting."

Beneath the photograph is a list of the Casey records, preceded by the admonition: "Our patrons are warned against purchasing imitations of these famous records. The original Casey records are made by Mr. Russell Hunting and are so announced."

Here are the Casey records then available from Columbia: 9601, Casey Exhibiting the Panorama; 9602, Casey at Denby Murphy's Wake; 9603, Casey Joins the Masons; 9605, Casey Taking the Census; 9609, Casey as the Dude in a Street Car; 9615, Casey as Judge; 9616, Casey as Hotel Clerk; 9617, Casey Departing by Railroad; 9618, Casey at the Telephone (perhaps a forerunner of the later famous "Cohen at the Telephone"); 9619, Casey in Court; 9636, Casey's Political Speech; 9637, Casey Listening to a Hand Organ; 9641, Casey Addressing the G. A. R.; 9642, Casey's Description of the Discovery of America; 9644, Casey's Plans for Freeing Ireland; 9647, Casey and His Gang of Laborers; 9648, Casey Departing by Steamboat; 9649, Casey at the Bat (recitation); 9653, Casey's Visit to the Hospital; 9655, Casey Digging on the Klondike, and 9656, Casey as a Fortune Teller.

The Edison catalog dated October, 1899, contains a similar list of Casey records, concerning which it comments: "The Casey records are perhaps the best known and most popular of all talking records made for the phonograph." The name of the artist is not given, but "Bill" Hays, a veteran Edison recording expert, told John L. Norton, Sr., of the Woodymay Record Company, that the Edison list was made by "Jim" White, a friend of Hunting's, by special permission of the "Casey" originator.

Another evidence of Mr. Hunting's popularity in the late '90's is found in the 1899 catalog of the Talking Machine Company, then at 98-107 Madison Street, Chicago. Hunting, as one of the best known recording artists, was asked for his opinion of the Polyphone, a cylinder machine with two reproducers, and replied:

"I consider that it gives three times the volume of tone that could be originally attained from any other reproducing medium. The tone it produces is marvelous."

"I never realized how wonderful the talking machine was until I heard your Polyphone."

The testimonial is embellished with a photo of Mr. Hunting, wearing a derby hat, and a caricature of Casey. Beneath it is a testimonial from Len Spencer, another of the great pioneers.

Then "Michael Casey" went to England. By 1902, the Edison catalog contained only three Casey records, "At the Telephone," "Courting His Girl" and "Taking the Census," all listed as being by James H. White, the same "Jim" White, of whom more will be heard later. A year later, Mr. White had added "Casey and His Gang of Irish Laborers" to the series, and the same four records were still being marketed in 1907. By 1903, however, although they remained available, they had been remade by John Kaiser. The Kaiser series continued to be listed until the Edison company discontinued making two-minute wax records after a disastrous factory fire in 1914.

What happened to Mr. Hunting's original Casey series on the Columbia cylinders I don't know, but presumably, since he left for England before the master record was invented, the records were dropped from the catalog as soon as stocks became exhausted.

Meanwhile, as I have already shown, Mr. Hunting was doing very well in England, and his Edison Bell "Casey" records won the approval of so exalted a personage as King Edward VII himself. That same May, 1903, issue of the Talking Machine News from which I have already quoted, reveals that on a visit made by the King to Portugal, the Edison Bell Company supplied him with a special phonograph, playing the large concert-size records, to be used on the Royal yacht, the Victoria and Albert. Among the 48 concert records taken by the King were "Casey Riding a Bicycle," "Crossing the Channel," "As a Magistrate," "Taking the Census" and "As a C. I. V."—whatever the latter may be.

In the same number appears an interview with James E. Hough, Edison Bell manager, quoting him as saying: "By the way, perhaps you are not aware that we have on our staff perhaps the most prominent of all phonograph artists and experts? You have heard of the Casey records? Well, I can introduce you to Michael Casey himself."

"Whereupon," the reviewer continued, "I was introduced to Michael Casey, otherwise Mr. Russell Hunting. Mr. Hunting gave us a specimen record of a selection of the pipers and drummers of the second battalion of His Majesty's Scotch Guard. It was only a trial trip, for this record was but just made, but it promised well."

"Casey," incidentally, was not the only American to go to England as a recording expert. Steve Porter, famous also for Irish monologs, was in England for a time contemporaneously with Mr.

Hunting, and in the April, 1904, T. M. N., there was an interview with Louis Sterling, then the manager of the British Zonophone company. Mr. Sterling was quoted as saying the International Zonophone company had been founded three years before and that he had "come over from the United States about a year ago after studying the talking machine from a technical and commercial point of view."

Mr. Hunting continued to make records, not all of them concerning Casey. In the July, 1904, T. M. N., a reviewer, commenting on Edison Bell records for the month, says: "The first record we tried, 'The Crazy Musician' (6329), is in Russell Hunting's happiest vein. It represents a German giving imitations of a trombone, cornet, piccolo, etc., at a music hall, the performance being punctuated by the usual comments from the 'gods' in the gallery. The whole makes a record effective as well as technically good."

By October, 1904, Hunting was also making disc records for Zonophone. Two seven-inch ones were listed, "Casey at a Wake" and "Casey Taking the Census," of which the reviewer said: "These are capital Casey records and will be duly appreciated by the admirers of that popular entertainer, Russell Hunting." Mr. Hunting about this time also made some H. M. V. records, some of which were imported and sold in this country under Victor labels.

"The shape of things to come" was dimly foreshadowed by a paragraph in the November, 1904, Talking Machine News:

"Mr. Louis Sterling has resigned his position as manager of the British Zonophone Company. We understand that Mr. Sterling has not yet absolutely decided whether to launch out in another direction or to continue his services to the talking machine trade."

Changes were occurring, too, in the Edison Bell organization, with which Russell Hunting, Sr., had now been connected for six years. "Casey" was still on the job, and his old friend, Gilbert Girard, whose specialty was making records in which animals were imitated, had come to England and joined him in making a series of "descriptive records," some of them nursery rhymes with appropriate noises, but Tom and Arthur Hough, sons of the Edison Bell manager, had withdrawn from the parent firm, taking with them William Ditcham, noted as a player of the piano, bells and xylophone as well as a recording expert. They began marketing their own brand of cylinder, the Electric, whose title anticipated the development of electrical methods of recording two decades later. The cylinder continued to be more popular than the disc, but competition for the British record buyers' shillings was becoming more spirited.

More trade rivalry was ahead for Edison Bell and the National Phonograph Company, which distributed Thomas A. Edison's cylinders in England. I quote from the February, 1905, Talking Machine News:

"The Sterling Record Co., of which Mr. Louis S. Sterling is managing director, have taken extensive premises for the manufacture of gold moulded records at Bishops Road, Cambridge Heath, E. The factory will have a ground space of 24,000 square feet. Mr. Percy Smithurst will be the factory superintendent, with an able corps of assistants. The recording rooms and offices of the company will be at 81, City Road. The recording department will be under the management of Mr. Russell Hunting. . . . Mr. Charles Stroh, well known as the inventor and proprietor of the Stroh violin, has joined the board."

Thus it will be seen that Mr. Sterling had decided to stay in the record business and that "Casey" had left Edison Bell in order to join him.

From the April, 1905, T. M. N.:

"The Sterling Record Co. has changed its name to the Russell Hunting Record Co., Limited, but the new gold moulded record will be known as the Sterling Record. It is anticipated that a good catalog of records will be ready some time in May. The factory at Bishop's Road, Cambridge Heath, is fast approaching completion."

So it was that Russell Hunting became the first—and, as far as I can recall—the only recording artist to have a company named after himself!

The Russell Hunting Record Company published its first advertisement of Sterling records in May, 1905. Stars included the late Florrie Forde (who might be called "the English Ada Jones"), Hamilton Hill, and "a number of new 'Casey' records by the original Casey." Others on the list were Eli Hudson, the famous piccolo virtuoso; Charles Draper, one of the greatest clarinet players; Alfred Oakley, trombone; W. E. Bates, cornet; Victor Opferman, violin, the London Military Band and the Sterling Orchestra. "We are busily engaged," the company said, "on new descriptive band records similar to 'The Departure of the Troopship.'"

In the same issue, A. O. Limb, of the Edison Bell Company, commenting on King Edward's taste in records, said: "He enjoyed the Casey records in particular." The article was headed, "Teddy's Taste in Records," showing that the English king, like the American president, Theodore Roosevelt, was affectionately known to his countrymen as "Teddy."

The July, 1905, Talking Machine News, showed a photograph of the new record company's headquarters. The large building's front contained a sign saying in huge letters: Russell Hunting Record Co., Ltd. "Sterling Records" appeared in smaller letters. It was announced that the company had facilities for making 200,000 cylinders a week. In August the information was given that "every Sterling master is recorded by Russell Hunting (the Original Casey), the well known recording expert," and there was a mention in September of Hunting's Concert Band," the organization conducted by Mr. Hunting at the recent Talking Machine Trades dinner."

A Sterling record ad, of the month said: "Mr. Hunting has returned from his trip through the provinces. The result of his observations will be found in 'At New Brighton,' which has been composed by him especially for our Lancashire friends; and 'Down at Tyne-mouth,' written for our Northern friends. These two songs are sung by Miss Florrie Forde, with orchestral accompaniment." "One million Sterling records," a January, 1906, advertisement said, "have been sold in 22 weeks." In April, it was stated that dealers had been added in Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

The new company was getting on swimmingly, and its heads were alert to the value of publicity. In June, 1906, the T. M. N. carried a photo of a large balloon, containing 43,000 cubic feet of gas, in which Mr. Smithurst, the factory manager, and three other men had ascended 7,500 feet. As an effective advertising scheme, the balloon was lettered with the name of the Russell Hunting company and the aeronauts dropped coupons entitling the finders to obtain sample Sterling records without cost.

In spite of surface prosperity, however, the cylinder record was losing ground to the more convenient disc. This became especially true as the disc manufacturers lowered their prices. Then, in 1904, the German manufacturers of Odeon discs had introduced the double-faced record—another great forward step. The first Odeon advertisements appeared in August, 1906. The manufacturers, Ch. and J. Ullmann, Inc., emphasized that the records, 10½ inches in diameter, were made of blue "Empe-dite." This same material was used in "American" records, manufactured in the United States by arrangement with the Odeon organization.

The August 13 T. M. N. announced that the selling rights for Odeon and Fonotopia records (the latter was a famous Italian brand manufactured by a firm allied with the Ullmanns) had been transferred to the Russell Hunting concern. It was also revealed that "Mr. Louis Sterling is to be the managing director of the new Sterling and Hunting Company, Ltd. We understand the capital of the Russell Hunting Record Company will be increased by five thousand pounds, which will be devoted not only to the furthering of the business of the new company but to the old one besides. An entirely new building will be specially erected in City Road to house the two companies, so that they may be under one roof."

Truly, Sterling and Hunting were branching out!

(To be continued)

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. n12288

RECORDS of all types bought. I pay express. Classics preferred.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City, New Jersey. ja12235

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6 New Jersey. s12633

CLASSICAL RECORDS for sale. Send for list.—H. P. Silverman, 216 Denham Bldg., Denver 2, Colo. ja6023

OUT-OF-PRINT RECORDINGS, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City, 19. ja12414

SALE. 450 DUPLICATES; vocal operatic records. Private collector. Send for returnable list.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco 15, Calif. d2462

20 THOUSAND historical records. Opera, instrumental, popular, blues and swing. Send "wanted" list to—John Sicignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. mh6825

PATHE PHONOGRAPH Records and catalogs wanted.—Jamison R. Harrison, Bedford, Mass. d144

BING CROSBY. Private collector will buy a representative collection of Crosby recordings in good condition. Send me record numbers and price asked for entire lot.—Frank A. Ritz, 150 Sampson St., Garfield, N. J. d1051

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR SALE: Regina Music Box and cabinet, 60 steel records. Excellent condition.—Horace A. Soper, American Foundry, Bloomington, Illinois. d1411

EDISON FAMILY Phonograph, #2670, wax records slightly damaged.—E. R. Jefferies, Beach Haven, N. J. d1001

EDISON CYLINDER type phonograph and records, separate horn; without horn will ship for $10, with horn $3 extra. Edison with inside horn, 25 cylinder records $30. Old Graphophone with records and horn $10, $3 extra for shipping horn.—Laura E. Justi, 27 E. Chestnut Ave., Merchantville, N. J. d1492

FOR SALE: Meyer system wooden flute with silver keys, made by August Damm, Boston, about 1855. Good condition. Original case.—Mrs. R. A. Rhodes, 1107 S. Henderson, Fort Worth, Texas. d1081

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main St. 12, Los Angeles, Calif. s12036

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, 20 Lawson Rd., Egypt, Mass. ja122901

AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC. List 10c. Fore's, 3151 High, Denver, Colo. o12024

WANTED: 13½ in Stella Swiss music box tune discs.—Catherine Dofelmier, 1219 18th North, Seattle, 2, Wash. f6652

WANTED: SWISS music box, with extra cylinder. Good condition.—Raymond F. Marsolek, 1082 Redondo Ave., Long Beach, California. mh6882

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES in playing or damaged condition. Will pay highest market prices. Write—Lee Boddy, Iowa Falls, Iowa. my6003

FOR SALE: ROSEWOOD J. Estey cottage organ, flat top, refinished. Good playing condition. Will box.—A. E. Murrills, Portage, Wis. d1311

FOR SALE: EDISON Graphophone and seventy cylinder records. Make offer.—G. M. Frost, 328 N. Cannon Ave., Hagerstown, Maryland. d1521

COLLECTOR WANTS unusual vocal operatic records in excellent condition.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco 15, Calif. n12235

RECORDINGS. 500 Crosby, 500 Goodman, thousands every Nameband. Thousands greatest classic singers, 1900-1940. Clarke, Pryor, Sousa specialist. Itemize wants. Exchanges.—Josephine Mayer, St. Barbara, Calif. my6446

FOR SALE: "The Music of the Modern World," 27 parts, 2 missing. D. Appleton & Co., Publishers, 1895. Good condition with fine illustrations and music. Make offer.—The Beaver Hat, Middleberg, Va. d1002

SHEET MUSIC. "Serenade on Adria's Sea," Barcarolle, autographed by Jenny Lind. Daguerreotype picture on front. Collector's item. Good condition. Make offer. Stamp.—Edwin Timmerman, 2031 Cullen, Dallas, Texas. d1861

CYLINDER EDISON and 50 records $12.50.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer Minn. d106

WANTED TO BUY: Coin operated, nickel-in-the-slot Regina, with discs. Priced for resale.—Antique Inn, Mexico, Missouri. d126

REGINA FIFTEEN IN. steel records, good condition.—Walsh Antique Shop, 411 W. Lexington Ave., Elkhart, Ind. d169

LARGE MIRA Music Box, solid mahogany case, size 30x23x15. 68 steel music sheets, size 18½ in. All in perfect condition.—Bertha E. Magersuppe, Beaverbrook Heights, Danbury, Conn. d1001

Use Wanted-to-Buy Ads

If you, as a dealer, have difficulty getting enough gasoline to permit you to make buying trips to replenish your stock, run "wanted-to-buy" ads in HOBBIES. Besides going to regular subscribers and dealers, HOBBIES reaches the hundreds of scouts, runners and pickers who search their own neighborhoods and make it a practice to sell thru "wanted-to-buy" ads in HOBBIES. If the gasoline rationing is stringent where you live, this may be the means of regularly replenishing your stock.

The IRRC List

(continued)

Key to Abbreviations

- 1st—first edition
 Amer.—American
 Col.—Columbia
 E—Electrical recording
 Ed.—Edison
 Eng.—English
 Fono—Fonotopia
 G.—Gramophone
 RR—Re-Recording
 V—Victor
 Zono—Zonophone
- 196 Calve—Figard: Mon coeur soupire RR / Amadis de Gaule: Amour RR (Pathe 0288)
 197 Gay, Maria — Don Giovanni: Vedrai carino (G) / Carmen: Chanson Boheme (G) 1909
 198 Muratore—Manon: Ah, fuyez (Pathé 54001) / Romeo: Ah, leve-toi (54008) RR's
 199 Lankow, Edward—Juive: Si la rigueur (G.E.) / Magic Flute: Isis (G. E.) RR's
 200 Delna, Marie — Les Troyens: Chers Tyriens (Pathe) RR / Litvinne—Les Troyens: Adieu, fiere cite (Pathe) RR
 201 Galski & Reuss-Belce — Lohengrin: Act 2 duo (Mapleson cylinders) RR / Galski & Anthes—Lohengrin: Mein Held; Act 2 (Mapleson Cylinders) RR
 202 Battistini — Zampa: Perche tremar (V92004) / Macbeth: Pieta (G)
 203 Raisa, Rosa—Gioconda: Suicidio (G) E / Cavalleria: Voi lo sapete (G) E
 204 Lehmann, Lilli — Die Lorelei (Bungert (Odeon 50433) RR / Lehmann & Heibig—Crucifix (Faure) (Odeon 50-355) RR
 205 Clement—Manon, Ah, fuyez (Odeon 56001) RR / Romeo Ah, leve-toi (Od. 56000)
 206 Urlus, Jacques—Siegfried: Nothung (Pathé 60023) RR / Siegfried: Heiss ward (60028)
 207 Farrar — Legend of the Dogwood Tree/Little Christmas Donkey(1st's) E
 208 Gerhardt—Ich hab' ein kleines Lied erdacht (Bungert) (G2-43180) / Gerhardt a) wir sollten (Strauss)b) Neue Liebe (Rubinstein) (G2-43171)
 209 Cahier, Mme. Charles—Sym. No. 2: Urlicht/Ich bin der Welt (Mahler) RR from U.I. 30371/2
 210 De Lucia—Pagliacci: Vesti/No, Pagliaccio, non son (RR's from Phonotype)
 211 Easton, Florence—Auf dem Kirchhofe & Therese (Brahms) / Nussbaum & Widmung (Schumann)
 212 Easton—In dem Schatten & Auch kleine Dinge (Wolf)/Easton — Ich schwebe & Du meines Herzens Knelein (Strauss)
 213 Easton — Orpheus with his Lute (Sullivan)/Der Tod, das ist die kühle Nacht (Brahms). Note: #211, 212, & 213 RR's from off-the-air recordings made July 13, 1939.
 214 Kaschmann, Giu — Hamlet: Brindisi (G052038) / Ernani: O del verd'anni (G052032) RR's
 215 Farrar—Caro mio ben (G53430) / Liebe Augustin (V87134)
 216 Ternina—Tosca: Finale & Eames—ditto (Mapleson cylinders) RR / Ternina & De Reszke, Jean — Tristan: Part of Love Duo (Map. cyl.) RR
 217 McCormack—Sospiri, miei (V64333) / O del mio amato ben (G. D. A. 627)
 218 Boninsegna—Lucrezia Borgia: Com'e bello / Mefistofele: Spunta (Pathe's RR)
 219 Patti, Adelina — Manon Lescaut: Bourbonnaise (RR from 1895 cyl.) / Nordica—a) Tristan: Liebestod and Walkure: Ho-yo-to-ho (Map.) RR
 220 Renaud, Maurice — Carmen: Toreador/Damnation de Faust: Voici des roses (Pathe's) RR
 221 Walker, Edythe—Rheingold: Erda's Warning (G043093) / Tannhauser: Gebet (G) RR's
 222 Gulbranson, Ellen — Swedish Folksongs, Ack Warmeland / Om Dagen (RR's of 1914 orig's)
 223 Bellincioni—Otello: Ave Maria/Tra-viata: Ah fors (RR's of Pathe discs)

224 Kiurina, Berta—Norma: Casta Diva/ Part 2) (RR from 1919 Polyphone)

ADDITIONAL NUMBERED EDITIONS

- 5000 Rehan, Ada—Selections from Taming of the Shrew and The Country Girl. 10" RR from Berliner disc of 1899.
 5001 De Lucia, Fernando — Sulla bocca amorosa (V87048) / Serenamente (G2-52772) 5002 Melba—Huguenots: A ce mot (Map. cyl. RR) single-faced 5003 De Lucia, Fernando — Ideale (V-5027) / Era di maggio (V66003)
 5004 Muratore, Lucien — Monna Vanna: Elle est a moi / Fortunio Maison grise (Pathé RR) 5005 Lehmann, Lilli—Erikonig (RR from 12" original Odeon) Single 5006 Popular selection issued privately
 5007 Van Dyck, Ernest—Werther: Pourquoi / Walkure: Liebeslied (in Fr.) (Odeon RL)
 5008 Mantelli, Eugenia—Gioconda: Voce (Zono) RR / Faust: Parlate d'amor (Zono) RR
 5009 Bressier-Gianoli—Carmen: Chanson Boheme/Air des cartes (Odeon LR)
 5010 Allen, Viola & Skinner, Otis, with assisting cast supervised by Daniel Frohman — Merchant of Venice: Trial Scene (2 parts) E
 5011 Litvinne, Felia—Samson: Mon coeur/Favorite: O mon Fernand (Od. RL)
 5012 Destinn, Emmy — Wiegenlied (Mozart) (V87246) / Wiegenlied (Schubert) (V87214)
 5013 Why, Foster — Down Deep Within the Cellar(E)/I'm a roamer bold(E)
 5014 Allen, Viola—Excerpts from Twelfth Night/and Winter's Tale (E) 5015 Why, Foster — Le Caid: Air du Tambour-Major (E) Single 5016 Bernhardt, Sarah — Phedre: Oui, Prince (Ed35008) / Bouffons: Lesouffle (Ed35011) RR

THE END

UN-NUMBERED EDITIONS

Adini, Ada—Herodiade: Il est doux/Ackte — Si j'avais vos ailes (Od/Fono) Anselmi, Giuseppe — Gioconda: Cielo e

mar/Boheme: Che gelida (Fono 74-029/32)
 Barnum, P. T. — 10" RR from Edison cylinder made in 1890
 Bonci — Puritani: A te, o cara/Elisir: Una furtiva (Fono 39084/83)
 Barrientos — Fra Diavolo: Or son sola/Gia per la danza (Fono 39538/39)
 Clement — Dame Blanche: Grand air / Maurel—A year Ago (Odeon/Fono)
 De Lucia—Mignon: Addio, Mignon (G05-2111) / Galvany & Giorgini — Elisir: Chiedi all'aura (G054110)
 De Macchi, Maria — Lucrezia Borgia: Com'e bello/Poliuto: di quai (Fono 59135/36)
 Destinn — Bartered Bride: Marie's aria / Figaro: Heil'ge Quelle (Odeon)
 Destinn—Robert der Teufel: Two arias (Odeon/Fonotopia 64837/855)
 Krusceniski — Loreley: Da che tutta / Madam Butterfly: Un bel di (Fono 92939/40)
 Galvany—Lucia: Splendon le sacri faci (G)/Romeo: Valse (G053163)
 Kurz & Demuth—Magic Flute: Bei Mannern (G2-44495) / Krutz—Mignon: Styrienne (G)
 Lehmann, Lilli—Du bist die Ruh (Odeon 50432) / Intermezzo (Schumann) (Od. 50372)
 Lehmann, Lilli—Du bist die Ruh (Odeon / Freudvoll und Leidvoll (Schubert) 50390)
 Lehmann, Lilli—Josua: O hatt'ich Jubals Hart / Walkure: Du bist der Lenz (Odeon)
 Lehmann, Lilli — Auf dem Wasser zu singen/Freudvoll und Leidvoll (Bee-thoven) (Od.)
 Lehmann, Lilli — Robert der Teufel: Gnadenarie (Odeon 80009) single-faced.
 Litvinne, Felia—Cavalleria: Voi lo sapete (F39052) / Aida: Grace, piti e (F392-17)
 Litvinne, Felia — Lohengrin: Reve d'Elsa (F39182) / Africaine: Air du sommeil (F)
 Maurel, Victor — Mandolinata (F39245) / Rondel de l'Adieu (De Lara) (F39246)
 Nightingale, F.—10" RR from Edison cylinder of 1890.
 Storchio, Rosina—Don Pasquale: Quel guardo/So anch'io la virtu (F39490/01)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Russell Hunting, Sr. - III

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

RUSSELL Hunting, Sr., must have been an extremely busy man after Sterling and Hunting acquired the selling rights to Odeon and Fonotopia discs, in addition to carrying on their own cylinder record manufacturing business. In September, 1906, the company announced that "Odeon records are now recorded under the personal supervision of Mr. Russell Hunting, and the Sterling exclusive talking machine artists are now being added to the Odeon catalog." These included Harry Dearth, bass; Eli Hudson, piccolo; Scott Skinner, the Scotch violinist; Alan Turner, baritone, and such music hall favorites as Ella Retford and Fred Vernon. Odeon records by Emmy Destinn were offered at five shillings each.

The first advertisement of Fonotopia records in the same month listed discs by the Royal Italian Marines Band, of 90 performers: Destinn, the La Scala Chorus, Barrientos, Bonci, O. Luppi, Victor Maurel, Sammarco, Stracciari, Zenatello, "magnificent violin records by Jan Kubelik," and pianoforte solos by Madame Roger-Miclos. Fonotopias, like Odeons, were 10 1/2 inches in diameter. They cost six shillings each.

Besides these two famous brands, the new company had also acquired the selling rights to Linguaphone language courses in French, German, Italian and Spanish—then made on cylinders! John McCormack was listed as a Sterling artist in October, 1906. The record was "God Save Ireland." The then very young tenor was also making records for Edison Bell, Edison and Gramophone and receiving about $25 each for them. The days when his royalties would amount to several hundred thousand dollars a year were still some time distant.

Some idea of the progress the Russell Hunting Record Company had made was given in an advertisement in the October issue of the Talking Machine News. Headed "An Allegory to Begin With," the advertisement recited that the company began operations in February, 1905, with a capital of 5,000 pounds, but this had been increased to 25,000 pounds. It was selling 100,000 records a week and expected to double its output. Cash dividends of 16 per cent on the first year's investment and 150 per cent bonus in new shares had been declared. In March, 1907, the company announced that it was now supplying disc machines known as the "Discodisc," and in its April 1 issue the T. M. N. published a cut of "the new premises of the Russell Hunting Record Co., Ltd." Two men are shown standing on top of the roof. Their faces are indistinct, but one is wearing a derby hat and is probably Mr. Hunting. The other I take to be Mr. Sterling.

July, 1907, was an eventful month in the English cylinder record business. An advertisement told of "Victory of the Sterling Record. . . . Placed on the market in July, 1905. . . . Sales first year over two million records. Sales sec-

★
EDISON RECORDS
 ★
Woodymay Record Co.
 73 Roxbury Street - Boston (19) Mass.

and year over three million records. We will sell in the coming year over four million records."

The same issue carried, however, the announcement that the National Phonograph Company had reduced the price of its cylinders from a shilling and sixpence to one shilling.

Rumors that the American-controlled company, handling "the genuine Thomas A. Edison records," would cut its prices to meet competition offered by the lower-priced British brands had been current for more than a year. The Talking Machine News in its February, 1906, issue, had mentioned a report that a "well-known firm" would reduce its prices. Edison records were not mentioned by name, but the irascible Edison management, forever engaged in law suits and litigation, immediately sued the magazine for even touching upon the rumor. The suit, like most Edison-instituted legal action, came to nothing, but Edison refused to advertise in the T. M. N. for several years afterward.

The National company's reluctant decision to "engage in the shilling handicap" resulted in two of the most amusing advertisements I have ever read—so amusing to me that I feel I must pass them on to HOBBIES' readers. One indignant English dealer published the following commentary in the Talking Machine News:

"A Dealer's Lament and Appeal to a Sympathetic, Compliant and Generous Public. I wish to sell a large and extensive stock (for a dealer) of about 5,000 Edison Records. A general average mixed stock, old and new, ancient and modern, which must be sold without reserve, on or before August 8th next, at 1s. 6d. each, otherwise I shall suffer a most serious loss.

"A notice having been issued by the agents of the manufacturers without consulting me that after the said 8th

August all Edison Records will be reduced to one shilling each, until that day I have the gracious privilege (made under rigid legal penalties) to sell the same records at one-sixth each.

"Therein lies my opportunity and chance of salvation, and I now make a strong appeal (in which all my brother dealers join) to the Generous and Discriminating Public to Rush at Once to Our Relief. It does not matter whether they want the records or not. I can only rely on them to buy before the fatal day.

"But, whatever you do—Hurry Up! Buy now—Buy Quickly—Buy Freely—Before the Reduction. Waste No Time Or You May Save Your Money.

"And I faithfully promise that once clear of this depreciated stock I have finished with 'em. W. J. Winslow, Swindon and Reading."

The gleeful Mr. Hough, whose Edison Bell company had also been engaged in suing, and being sued by, the National organization, published an advertisement in the shape of a tombstone. It was headed: "To the Memory of One and Six" and added:

"He shuffled off

Existence here.

Still joyful, he roams

Another (hemis)phere

Where Cents of Duty Guard Him.

GONE BUT NOT FORGOTTEN

He suffered long through lacking the sense

To know he couldn't sell here for eighteen pence.

In the land of dollars he still may sell—

Import duty protects him from Edison Bell."

Despite Mr. Hough's apparent assumption that only a high tariff wall made it possible for Edison records to go on selling in the United States, there was a widespread impression that "the great inventor's own records" were bound to be better than others. This was as true in Britain as the United States, and when the price of Edison cylinders was cut by a third it presaged a knock-down and drag-out battle for control of the English market. New companies were about to appear in the field. Some already established ones now retired from competition or, like Pathé, foresaw the eventual triumph of the disc and gave up making cylinders, although Pathé continued to issue cylinders in France and most other European countries except England for several years longer.

In August, 1907, it was announced that Gilbert Girard, Mr. Hunting's animal-imitating American friend, "is now exclusively engaged by the Russell Hunting company for both cylinders and discs.

He made records 12 years ago in America, an engagement brought about by Mr. Russell Hunting, or 'Casey,' as Mr. Girard likes to call him."

A decade or more after this notice appeared, Messrs. Hunting and Girard again collaborated and produced many amusing disc records for Pathé.

That is anticipating, however. The October 1, 1907, Talking Machine News reported that the Russell Hunting Company by then had "recording facilities in France, Spain, Holland and Denmark.

We paid a visit to the recording department, where we found Mr. Russell Hunting. He had an excellent record to show by Mr. Albert Whelan. I have indeed no hesitation in saying that it is one of the best, if not actually the best, recitative records I have ever heard; every inflection of the voice is rendered with wonderful fidelity. It is taken from David Copperfield—the passage where the old man receives Em'ly's letter telling of her flight from home. Mr. Hunting, by the way, has dropped across a new idea for the recording of choruses. One used to hear one or two voices of the choruses only whilst the others might be said to merely give out a blare. By the new method, as I gathered, this is removed, and you have a pure, clear, full strong chorus. It is interesting to note that, with this month, the Russell Hunting Co. will have completed the whole of Gilbert & Sullivan's Pinafore on the cylinder. This, I was given to understand, is the first time this has been done by a cylinder company."

In the same issue there appeared an interview with William Ditcham, the recording expert who, it will be remembered, had joined the Hough brothers in leaving Edison Bell and setting up the company manufacturing Electric cylinders. A disastrous fire had helped put Electric out of business, and Ditcham had joined the Russell Hunting organization. He had just returned from an 11-months trip to South Africa where he had made cylinder records of native music, to be sold as part of the company's export trade.

(To be continued)

MISCELLANEOUS

MELODEONS FOR SALE: both octagon leg and folding melodeons. These are completely refinished and in good playing condition. Description and prices sent on request.—Joseph Leighton, 16 Montclair St., Springfield 4, Mass. ja1291

WANTED: Music boxes, every description. Meerscham pipes, steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Meyer, Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. jly12235

FOR SALE: Upright, spinet type, French piano, rosewood case, dated 1849, with maker's name.—John R. Vail, 57 E. Oak St., Chicago 11, Ill. ja1441

200 REGINA DISCS, 20%," $1.25, special price for lot.—Mrs. Ivanoff, 2000 Washington, Waukegan, Illinois. ja109

FOR SALE: Autophone with 6 records. Some notes not in tune $35; Clarion with one roll $15; Gem roller organ, 10 rolls $20. Records for Autophone, Herophone or Ariston, grind organs $1 to $2 each.—Fred S. Smith, 5640 Guilford Ave., Indianapolis, Indiana. ja1033

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main St. 12, Los Angeles, Calif. s12036

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, 20 Lawson Rd., Egypt, Mass. ja122901

AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC. List 10c. Fore's, 3151 High, Denver, Colo. o12024

WANTED: 13½ in Stella Swiss music box tune discs.—Catherine Dofelmier, 1219 18th North, Seattle, 2, Wash. f6662

WANTED: SWISS music box, with extra cylinder. Good condition.—Raymond P. Marsolek, 1082 Redondo Ave., Long Beach, California. mh6382

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES in playing or damaged condition. Will pay highest market prices. Write—Lee Boddy, Iowa Falls, Iowa. my6003

REGINA AND Criterian music boxes in first class condition. Stamp for reply.—Walsh Antique Shop, 411 W. Lexington Ave., Elkhart, Ind. ja1621

COLLECTOR WANTS unusual vocal operatic records in excellent condition.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco 15, Calif. n12235

RECORDINGS. 500 Crosby, 500 Goodman, thousands every Nameband. Thousands greatest classic singers, 1900-1940. Clarke, Pryor, Sousa specialist. Itemize wants. Exchanges.—Josephine Mayer, St. Barbara, Calif. my6446

EDISON BLUE Amberola cylinder phonograph and 40 records $6.—Norris Dullum, Colfax, N. D. ja148

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. n12283

RECORDS of all types bought. I pay express. Classics preferred.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City, New Jersey. ja12235

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. s12633

CLASSICAL RECORDS for sale. Send for list.—H. P. Silverman, 216 Denham Bldg., Denver 2, Colo. ja6023

OUT-OF-PRINT RECORDINGS, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City, 19. ja12414

FALKNER BROS. Record Shop, Antiques, 333 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass. ja106

20 THOUSAND historical records. Opera, instrumental, popular, blues and swing. Send "wanted" list to—John Sicignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. mh6325

SALE: 300 duplicates; vocal operatic records. Private collector. Send for returnable list.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco 15, Calif. f2462

FOR SALE: 25 tune discs for Regina music box, 15½", $1 ea., or $20 for lot.—Mary H. Bowlin, 707 24th St., South Bend, Indiana. ja1201

WANTED: O'KEH Red Label records by Gerald Griffin, also Emmet O'Mara.—Nicholas Kilroy, 1129 North Rowan, Los Angeles 33, California. ja108

FOR SALE: 50 15½" Regina discs $1.25 each.—Virginia Henderson, 3509 Octavia, Jennings 21, Mo. ja1001

12" Records:

- 24015 (reported as a "contralto"; music and singer unknown.
Might not be from this set.)
- 24017 Aida: Celeste Aida. Cosentino, tenor
- 24019 Aida: Ritorna vincitor. Teresa Chelotti, soprano
- 24021 Aida: O ciel azurri. Teresa Chelotti, soprano (labeled "Part 14, act 3, # 2")
- 24022 Aida: Fuggiam gli adori. E. Magliulo & O. Cosentino ("Part 18, act 3, # 6")
- 24023 Aida: Si, fuggiam. E. Magliulo, O. Cosentino, G. Novelli
- 24034 Aida: Scena del giudizio. V. Colombati, A. Brondi, & Cho.
- 24025 Aida: O terra addio! E. Magliulo, O. Cosentino, & V. Colombati
- 24032 (reported as a "trio with Soprano, Tenor & Bass"; music & singers unknown)
- 10" Records:
- 12644 Aida: Si corre voce. O. Cosentino & A. Brondi (Part 1, Act 1, # 1)
- 12671 Aida: Quest assisa. E. Magliulo & G. Novelli
- 12674 Aida: Rivedrai la foreste. G. Novelli & T. Chelotti (Part 15, Act 3, # 3)
- 12676 Aida: Nile duet (reported as soprano and tenor.
Which soprano I don't know. Tenor is undoubtedly Cosentino)
- 12677 Aida: L'aborrita rivale. Mme. V. Colombati (Part 2, Act 4, # 1) (Something wrong about that "Part 2" but that is the way it was reported)

JOHN McCORMACK ODEONS

In a list of over fifty titles of records made for Odeon by John McCormack, the following gaps appear. Can anyone fill them?

57509	57585	57589	84209	84228
57584	57586	57592	84227	84232

Also it has been reported that McCormack recorded Believe me, if all those endearing Young charms, for Odeon. Does anyone have the number for this?

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Russell Hunting, Sr. - III

(Continued from the January issue)

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

Also in October, 1907, the Premier Manufacturing Co., Ltd., announced that it would enter the cylinder competition with the Clarion record, to be sold for ninepence. The trade was becoming more and more of the cut-throat variety, with hardly any margin of profit. Clarion, however, stayed in business, manufacturing discs as well as cylinders, long after most cylinder companies had given up the struggle, and did not pass out of the arena until 1924 or later.

In December, 1907, a complete set of Pinafore was issued on Odeon discs, as it had been on Sterling cylinders. The album set, selling for 50 shillings, contained photos of the artists and a copy of "The Odeon Waltz," written by Johann Strauss. (The Waltz King.)

A month later the company advertised: "Still Another Advance! Mr. Russell Hunting, the world-famous recorder of Sterling Records, has perfected a new system of recording, which means a remarkable advance in the natural reproduction of records. If there is one record . . . in which this improvement is more marked, it is perhaps 'Cheer Up, Mary,' by Herbert Payne." ("Payne" was Ernest Pike, often described in those days as "King Edward's favorite tenor.")

March brought an advertisement which proclaimed that "three great tenors—Walter Hyde, John McCormack and Ernest Pike"—all were available on Sterling records at a shilling each. McCormack was now being described as "The British Caruso." The Sterling ad. referred to the young tenor's "Italian tone" and made the curious claim that "the only phonograph records by Mr. John McCormack which contain this Italian tone are Sterling Records."

In May, 1908, T. M. N. contained the announcement that "Sterling and Hunting, Ltd., are shortly moving to 59, City Road, where they have taken larger and more commodious premises, owing to the increased demand for Odeon and Fonotopia records and Odeon machines. They are no longer connected in any way with the Russell Hunting Record Co., Ltd."

Just what had happened is not altogether clear, but one thing is certain—1908 was a bad business year in England, and it hit the overcrowded record industry hard. The Neophone company, which anticipated Pathé in putting out a hill-and-dale disc played with a sapphire ball, had gone out of business. So had the short-lived British Sonogram Company. As for the cylinder makers, the mortality was fearful. One of those going under was the General Phonograph Company, manufacturing "White" cylinders. The head of this organization was "Jim" White, Mr. Hunting's old friend, who had been given special permission to make "Casey" records for Edison in the United States.

When the National Phonograph Company decided to establish a British branch, White was sent to London to take charge. He remained for several years but left the company after a circular issued by him (probably under American instructions) had involved the company in a law suit with Edison Bell. The circular, intended to frighten dealers from buying Edison Bell goods, was headed, "Misuse of the Name, Edison," and declared that any person handling records or phonographs containing Edison's name but not manufactured by the National Phonograph Company would be prosecuted. Since Hough and his associates had paid $200,000 for the right to use Edison patents and Thomas A. Edison himself had stipulated that his name must be used as part of the firm's name, this was more than they could stand and they accordingly brought successful court action. White, after leaving the American organization, founded his own record company, thus bringing more competition to an already overcrowded field.

No Sterling records advertisement appeared in July, 1908, and in August it was announced that Barnett Samuel and Sons (from whom the present English company making Decca records is "descended") had taken over the Odeon and Fonotopia sales agency.

Meanwhile, what of Russell Hunting, Sr.? Well, always resourceful, when the company bearing his name passed out of existence after a few years of great success, he formed an association which continued almost the remainder of his life. In October, 1908, the Talking Machine News said:

"Mr. Russell Hunting, who as everyone knows is now in charge of the recording department at Pathé Freres, with Mr. W. Ditcham as his assistant, has been over to Paris, conferring with the heads of the firm. Mr. Hunting is shortly bringing out a new 11-inch Pathé record. Orders for Pathé machines are, by-the-way, coming in faster than they can be filled. . . . Mr. Hunting was at Paris appointed Directeur General de l'Enregistrement de la Compagnie de Pathé Freres) Director General of the Recording Departments of Pathé Freres) throughout the world. Pathé's have recording rooms in Paris, London, Milan, Brussels, Amsterdam, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Odessa and Rostoff. It will be part of Mr. Hunting's duties to visit these cities in turn and he is immediately proceeding to reorganize them all and install an entirely different system of recording. As Pathé's have a large cylinder business, as well as disc, this, too, will be supervised, on the manufacturing side, by Mr. Hunting. He leaves for Vienna in a few days, going on from there to Amsterdam. Mr. Hunting is to be congratulated on his appointment, which he has won on his merits. His unique experience of the technical side of the trade on both sides of the Atlantic eminently fits him to fill the post with entire satisfaction to his firm and himself."

While Russell Hunting, Sr., was busily engaged in supervising Pathé recording activities throughout the world, his erstwhile partner, Louis Sterling, was also active. The December 1, 1908, Talking Machine News said: "The attractive and easily-remembered name of Rena Double-Record has been given to a new double-sided 10-inch disc just placed on the British market by Mr. Louis Sterling, managing director of the Rena Manufacturing Co., Ltd."

The Rena Company lasted several years before being consolidated with Columbia. Mr. Sterling must have been a convincing talker to persuade the Columbia firm to make the deal by which it allowed him to sell Columbia records under the Rena label for two shillings and sixpence, whereas the same records under their rightful Columbia title retailed for three shillings. The quality of the records was identical, but the couplings were different and the artists' names were changed in some instances. After the consolidation the records were known for a time as Columbia-Rena. Mr. Sterling has been associated with the English Columbia organization ever since and served for many years as its president.

To return to December, 1908: The T. M. N. published an advertisement by Holmes and Bowron, of 24 Shepherdess Walk, City Road, E. C., saying a court order had been entered for compulsory winding up of the Russell Hunting Record Company's affairs, and offering "the whole remaining stock of Sterling records at startling prices."

Yet, although Mr. Hunting was now wholly engaged in Pathé recording activities, his name continued to persist as that of a record company. The Talking Machine News said in January, 1909:

"The Sterling record, manufactured by Russell Hunting & Co., is the latest comer in the field. By a paradox, this cylinder is new and old at the same time. We, so to speak, were acquainted with its ancestor, and while the Sterling of the new company will retain the best of its old characteristics, it will, we are informed, have the extra advantage of being moulded under entirely new and improved methods."

The new firm advertised in the same issue that "we have no connection whatever with other parties handling the accumulated old stock of the late Com-

MUSIC BOXES

All Kinds For Sale - Repairs

LLOYD G. KELLEY

P. O. Box 342

Broadway and Rt. 3 Hanover, Mass.

d54

HARRY DICHTER

5458 Montgomery Ave., Phila. 31, Penna.

Foremost Dealer in Early American Sheet Music
Particularly want, and will pay top prices for bound folios before and about 1890.

Also songsters, and song collections before 1850.

Printed WANT LIST sent on request.

ap45

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS
by great artists of the past can be bought at
YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

ap54c

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Congress Building Miami, Florida

pany, which stock has been removed from our premises." By August, control of Russell Hunting & Co. had passed to Edison Bell, still making cylinders, in the face of ever fiercer competition from its old enemy, the National Phonograph Company, which had "scooped" the cylinder market in 1908 by bringing out a four-minute record. Within a few years, Edison Bell dropped cylinders altogether for discs, this step being hastened by a fire which virtually wiped out its cylinder moulding plant.

It is now possible to skip more than three years and come to July, 1912, when the Talking Machine News published its final word on the subject of Messrs. Sterling and Hunting's cylinder record venture. Under the heading, "The Last of a Famous Company," it said:

"In the matter of the Russell Hunting Record Co., Ltd., a further summary of liquidators' accounts covering the period from July 27th, 1911, to January 26th, 1912, has just been issued by the Board of Trade. . . . The position of affairs will be placed before creditors at a meeting to be convened in a few weeks' time, and we understand that the final wind-up of this company will then soon follow. Reflection carries us back to the palmy days of the 1905-6 season when, if memory serves us aright, the Russell Hunting Record Co., Ltd., was incorporated. The prime movers were Mr. Louis Sterling, now British manager of the Columbia Phonograph Co., Gen'l., and Mr. Russell Hunting, whose sphere of activity is mainly on the continent as chief recording director for Messrs. Pathé Freres, Ltd. As a cylinder record, the Sterling, as it was named, from the start made a pronounced success, and during the first two years of the company's existence handsome dividends were paid. Following the reduction of the Edison record from one-sixth to one-???, and the introduction of 9d. cylinder records, business declined so appreciably that the company was forced to consult their creditors."

The remainder of Russell Hunting, Sr.'s career has already been sufficiently touched upon in earlier installments of this series to make it unnecessary to go into extensive detail concerning his later years. In his capacity as director of Pathé recording he traveled all over the world for several years and was generally regarded as the greatest expert in his line. He must have been delighted when Emile Pathé, president of the French firm, decided to open an American branch in New York city in 1914. Pathé and Hunting then came to the United States, together, where Mr. Hunting settled down to supervise the making of the splendid hill-and-dale Pathé records. How the master records were first "taken" on cylinders, then transferred to discs, was one of the phonograph industry's most closely guarded secrets.

"Mighty Casey" was by no means forgotten, and Mr. Hunting recorded a number of monologs concerning his world famous Irish character. He was still recognized as a master of stage and sound effects, and when the United States entered the World War in 1917, he revived, and revised, his "Departure of the Troopship" specialty, which had been so popular on cylinder records during Boer war days. In its new form it was called, "Departure of the First U. S. Troops for France."

Under the heading: "A Truly Remarkable Record—A Phonographic Sensation," the American Pathé record supplement for September, 1917, thus describes the record, made by Mr. Hunting with the assistance of a chorus and band:

"As a distinct novelty of present day importance and interest, the descriptive episode, entitled 'Departure of the First U. S. Troops for France,' . . . stands pre-eminent in its vivid and powerful characterization, full of compelling human interest. In the hearing one does not listen to a reproduction, for immediately you feel the spirit and touch of living reality. You become emerged (sic) in the vast crowds of humanity who await the arrival of the troops. As they march down the avenue to the inspiring music of their regimental bands on the day of their departure for France, you become one of the spectators and see the mounted police forcing the crowd back and giving hurried orders here and there. Suddenly vast cheers break forth and sounds of a band playing 'Good-bye, Little Girl, Good-bye' is heard in the distance.

"Here they come! Banners wave, thousands of hands clap and the air resounds with cheers. Fathers, mothers and sweethearts bid farewell to their dear ones—you feel the fast beating of their hearts. Other regiments follow to renewed enthusiasm. Then down to the dock they and you proceed. The transport vessel's bell rings, hurrying the embarkation, and finally the gangplanks are hoisted. The ship's band bursts forth with 'The Star Spangled Banner'—the whistles blow, the engines start, and the huge ship departs while wild cheers and enthusiasm of the multitude prevail.

"Twilight comes and the moon glimmers on the water. The crowds still watch and fainter grows the sound of music—the last blow of the ship's whistle is heard as she leaves the shores of home and liberty—eyes moisten with tears and reluctantly the crowd slowly disperses. This record is an inspiration and a gigantic achievement in phonographic artistry, recorded by, and under the general direction of, Mr. Russell Hunting, Sr., who is a past master in such creative art."

Obviously, Old Master Hunting succeeded in crowding an amazing amount of detail into some two and a half minutes on a ten-inch record.

Mr. Hunting remained in the United States for several years, during which he renewed warm friendships with many of the nation's most distinguished citizens, among them President Warren G. Harding, as well as forming many others. In 1922, however, Pathé ceased to issue sapphire-cut records in this country, replacing them with the cheaper, and inferior, Actuelle and Perfect needle-cut discs, which first appeared in 1920. The company passed into Columbia control, and Mr. Hunting returned to Paris as head of Pathé's European recording activities. As has already been told, he remained there until a few years ago when he retired, advanced in years and in poor health, he came back to New York, where he remained until his death in 1943.

Although practically all the Hunting records sold in this country—his Pathés excepted—since the turn of the century were made abroad and are not so easily found as those by performers who remained in the United States, the Casey monologues are not forgotten, nor are they likely to be. (Incidentally, it is odd that the several imported Casey records issued in this country on Columbia discs do not bear Mr. Hunting's name, but the artist is listed as "Michael Casey.") In 1943, for instance, Billy Murray and Monroe Silver accomplished something unusual by combining the Casey and Cohen traditions in one double-faced Beacon record, which they called "Casey and Cohen in the Army." Billy's Casey stemmed directly from the great Hunting original, while "Mike" Silver, of course, has long been THE Cohen.

One thing is certain—No confirmed collector of the best work of the Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists will ever pass up a good Casey record or anything else recorded by Russell Hunting, Sr.! It has been a pleasure to chronicle this distinguished creative artist—executive's career at a length which is unlikely to be allotted to any other recording performer. This has been done partly for the sake of touching upon the fascinating story of the rise and fall of the cylinder record in England, but mostly because I have felt it a duty to make good use of the wealth of information available to me concerning that truly versatile and accomplished genius who will long be remembered as the "Great Casey."

THE END

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. n12288

COLLECTOR WANTS unusual vocal operatic records in excellent condition. — E. F. Prescott, 3046 Jackson St., San Francisco 15, Calif. n12235

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. s12633

PATHE PHONOGRAPH records and catalogs wanted.—Jamison R. Harrison, Bedford, Mass. mh3231

CLASSICAL RECORDS for sale. Send for list.—H. P. Silverman, 216 Denham Bldg., Denver 2, Colo. ap3031

WANTED: LAKESIDE and Everlasting cylinder records. — Norris Dullum, Colfax, N. D. f166

20 THOUSAND historical records. Opera, instrumental, popular, blues and swing. Send "wanted" list to—John Sici-gnano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. mh6825

SALE: 300 duplicates; vocal operatic records. Private collector. Send for returnable list.—E. F. Prescott, 3046 Jackson St., San Francisco 15, Calif. f2462

OUT-OF-PRINT RECORDINGS, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City, 19. jai2069

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. jai22361

WANTED: Music boxes, every description. Meerscham pipes, steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Meyer, Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. jly12235

NICE SWISS Music Box in rosewood case, plays 10 tunes $50.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. f108

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade — Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main St. 12, Los Angeles, Calif. s12036

AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC. List 10c. —Fore's, 3151 High, Denver, Colo. o12024

WANTED: 1 1/2 in Stella Swiss music box tune discs. — Catherine Dofelmier, 1219 18th North, Seattle, 2, Wash. f6652

WANTED: SWISS music box, with extra cylinder. Good condition.—Raymond P. Marsolek, 1082 Redondo Ave., Long Beach, California. mh6882

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES in playing or damaged condition. Will pay highest market prices. Write—Lee Boddy, Iowa Falls, Iowa. my6003

RECORDINGS. 500 Crosby, 500 Goodman, thousands every Nameband. Thousands greatest classic singers, 1900-1940. Clarke, Pryor, Sousa specialist. Itemize wants. Exchanges.—Josephine Mayer, St. Barbara, Calif. my6446

CLASSIFIED AD RATES
6c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 7. (Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

This rate applies to both For Sale and Wanted to Buy classified ads in this department.

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey mh12800

COLLECTOR WANTS unusual vocal operatic records in excellent condition. — E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco 15, Calif. n12235

PHONOGRAPH Records bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f12234

PATHE PHONOGRAPH records and catalogs wanted. — Jamison R. Harrison, Bedford, Mass. mh3231

CLASSICAL RECORDS for sale. Send for list. — H. P. Silverman, 216 Denham Bldg., Denver 2, Colo. ap3081

20 THOUSAND historical records. Opera, instrumental, popular, blues and swing. Send "wanted" list to — John Siojgnano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. mh6825

SALE: 300 duplicates; vocal operatic records. Private collector. Send for returnable list. — E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco 15, Calif. mh2462

OUT-OF-PRINT RECORDINGS, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged. — American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City, 19. ja12069

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items. — Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. ja122361

WANTED: Music boxes, every description. Meerschmum pipes, steins. Will sell my duplicates. — Herbert H. Meyer, Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. jly12235

SHEET MUSIC, Operatic Records. Lists 10c. — Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. oi2024

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade — Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main St. 12, Los Angeles, Calif. sl2036

WANTED: DISC records, popular 1900 to 1920 lists exchanged. — Charles Clark, 100 John, Wellington, Ohio. mh109

VIOLINS. CLOSING out entire collection (Hobby). Some very old. $15.00 up. — Mrs. G. A. Runyon, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. mh1201

WANTED: SWISS music box, with extra cylinder. Good condition. — Raymond P. Marsolek, 1082 Redondo Ave., Long Beach, California. mh6882

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES in playing or damaged condition. Will pay highest market prices. Write — Lee Boddy, Iowa Falls, Iowa. my6003

RECORDINGS. 500 Crosby, 500 Goodman, thousands every Nameband. Thousands greatest classic singers, 1900-1940. Clarke, Pryor, Sousa specialist. Itemize wants. Exchanges. — Josephine Mayer, St. Barbara, Calif. my6446

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

6c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 7. (Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

This rate applies to both For Sale and Wanted to Buy classified ads in this department.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Dan W. Quinn I

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

TWICE during the years that I have been exchanging letters with many of the Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists I have been notified that my friend by correspondence had died between the writing of his last letter to me and the arrival of my reply.

One of these sad occasions was when I received a letter from Harry Macdonough's son, Jack, telling me of his father's sudden death from heart disease. The other was when Dan W. Quinn's son, Ritchie, returned an envelope which I had addressed to his father, marked, "Died November 7, 1938." A letter which followed from the younger Quinn explained that the well loved veteran comedian had succumbed to intestinal cancer, as Henry Burr did less than three years later.

Sorry as I was to learn of Mr. Macdonough's passing, the death of Mr. Quinn, at the advanced age of 79, was an even greater shock, because, although my correspondence with him had been considerably more extended and of a more intimate nature than that I enjoyed with the sweet-voiced second tenor of the Haydn Quartet, he had never even hinted at his fatal ailment.

Dan Quinn was one of the very earliest singers to make records. In fact, a biographical notice in The Billboard described him as a "famous vocalist of the '90's era and the first singer to experiment with Edison in phonograph recording." More conservative and probably more accurate was an article in the November 8, 1938, New York Herald Tribune, which said:

"Dan W. Quinn, vaudeville actor and tenor, died yesterday at his home, 312 West Twentieth street. Mr. Quinn was 79 years old. He was one of the first persons to have his voice recorded on the wax cylinder phonograph records. He retired from vaudeville in 1916. Surviving are three sons: Dan W. Jr., Ritchie and Frank Quinn, and two daughters, Mrs. Herbert Hunaberger, of Collingswood, N. J., and Mrs. Norman Manderson."

There, in brief, we have the career of Dan W. Quinn. It is fortunate, however, that in writing a detailed account of his recording activities, I have the benefit of an excellent character analysis by my dear friend, the late Frank Dorian, who gave me much valuable information about the pioneer recording performers with whom he was intimately associated for so many years, as well as extremely interesting reminiscences from Mr. Quinn himself.

First I shall quote Mr. Dorian, who said:

"When I hear the phrase, 'old-time recording artist,' I always think of Dan Quinn. He was one of the finest men I have ever known, not a prig or prudish in any respect, but one of the cleanest, hardest-working, most self-respecting of artists. I haven't seen the old boy in more than 20 years and I understand he's now a great-grandfather, but the last time I ran into him he was still stepping along with all the vigor of youth, though he must then have been over 50. It's good to know that he's comfortably well off. He and Billy Murray are outstanding among the limited number of old-time recording artists who have taken care of their money and become men of prominence and influence in their communities."

Mr. Dorian's mention of Dan Quinn's clean living is borne out by the active part the singer took for many years in New York temperance movements. Some of the old-time recording artists were heavy drinkers, but few, if any, of the alcohol addicts retained their voices and good health as long as Mr. Quinn. The rule that "no booze-fighter ever won a decision" has panned out well in this field of artistic endeavor.

And now for some first-hand reminiscing by my departed friend, whom I was never privileged to meet face to face:

"In January, 1892, I was engaged to entertain a political club in Hoboken. One of the features was a man who gave a phonograph exhibition and invited everyone to make a voice test. Many folks got up and sang a song or recited something and he reproduced the result. The phonograph was a great novelty at the time, and these records created a lot of amusement, though most of them were terrible. I was loath to make an attempt, but they all begged me and finally I did. I was lucky enough to have a voice and style of singing that were just 'made' for recording, so I may say without egotism that I was a veritable 'riot.' I don't know what it was about my voice that made it 'go' as I always sang quietly. There must have been some latent penetrating power. Anyway, the operator urged me to go to one of the laboratories and make a real test.

"In a short time I went to the New York Company, located at 257 Fifth Avenue. Richard Townley Haines was the manager and he was so much taken by my singing that I did a lot of work for him. I'll never forget one of the first records I made. It was 'Down Went McGinty.' I was singing from memory and when I reached the chorus I forgot my lines and exclaimed: 'Oh Lord, I forgot it!' This record was treasured by the Company for a long time.

"In a little while I began to hear of other phonograph companies, so I graduated to the New Jersey Company at Newark. (These, of course, were the very early pioneer days when various phonograph companies, domiciled in different states, leased the rights to use Edison's patents. Practically all these organizations were short-lived.—U. W.)

"Here is where I began to spread out. I was new, and my fund of material interested them greatly. The manager, Victor Emerson, (later chief recording expert for Columbia and the founder, in 1916, of the Emerson Phonograph Company) was a marvel. He was not only a past master in his mechanical line, but a showman of the first water—a wizard. When anything went wrong, all the rest of the boys would paw around frantically, trying to find out the trouble. Then Vic would quietly take charge and soon everything would be working admirably.

"It was while working for Vic Emerson that I began to work like a good fellow and went after all the latest songs. I learned everything whether it naturally suited my style or not. The good singers—I mean fellows like John W. Myers and George Gaskin—were slow getting up their stuff, and I, being a sight reader, just couldn't keep from learning every new number. I sang the hits of 'The Geisha,' 'San Toy,' 'The Runaway Girl' and every other Broadway success then in vogue. I was the first to make records of 'Sweet Rosie O'Grady,' 'Daisy Bell,' 'Little Annie Rooney,' 'The Bowery' and 'The Cat Came Back.' This latter song was so popular Mr. Emerson told me: 'Dan, I wish it were possible for you to stand there and sing that song a thousand times.'

"But I didn't stick altogether to comic, sentimental and topical numbers. Mr. Emerson and Mr. Tewksbury, his assistant, wouldn't allow anyone else to sing the Moody and Sankey hymns, such as 'I Need Thee Every Hour' and 'Throw Out the Life Line.' I loved to sing them. It took me back to my boyhood days when I was a boy soprano in an Episcopal choir. I made my living in the frivolous field, but my heart was in the other."

Here we temporarily interrupt Mr. Quinn's reminiscences. Next month's installment will tell of his later career.

(To be continued)

OLD PRINTS

(Continued from page 13)

Francisco consumed an average of 300 days. The coming of the streamlined Clipper Ship reduced the time to as low as 89 days.

There were "Extreme Clippers" and "Medium Clippers." Probably there were "Ordinary Clippers," but the owners forgot to call them that. The "Extreme A-1 Clipper" was built on racing lines, sharp of prow, narrow of beam, carrying a prodigious stretch of sail. She was a crack ship, expected to make the run from New York to San Francisco in no more than a hundred days. That was par for the course.

The "Medium A-1 Clipper" was built on more generous lines, could carry more cargo and accommodate more passengers. She usually loafed into San Francisco Bay after a voyage of 120 days.

Passengers on a Clipper Ship experienced about as much pleasure and comfort as a man on horseback for the first time. They were huddled in the cabin during most of the voyage, for the ship's deck was almost constantly swept by the ocean waves. But nothing mattered; gold was just across the horizon and could supposedly be had for the asking.

Some made fortunes but the great majority were doomed to disappointment and failure. It is these "Clipper Ship Sailing Cards" that bring back a glorious era when Gold was King, and the Clipper Ship was Queen of the seas. And besides they picture graphically the good and bad art work of their time.

—O—

AUTOGRAPHS

(Continued from page 14)

wasted his time largely in scribbling; his parents became paupers, and he himself was compelled to apply for relief to the parish.

"My study of Clare leads me to the belief that he was capable only of a very mild effusion of poesy. I do not know whether it is worth while to reproduce my manuscript poem of his—but I will try two or three stanzas at all events:

SLEEP OF SPRING

"O for that sweet, untroubled rest
That poets oft have sung,
The babe upon its mother's breast,
The bird upon its young,
The heart asleep, without a pain,
When shall I know that sleep again.

"I love the weeds along the fen,
More sweet than garden flowers,
Freedom haunts the humble glen,
That blest my happiest hours,
Here prisons injure health & me
I love sweet freedom & the free.

"Then toil itself was even play
'Twas pleasure e'en to weep,
'Twas joy to think of dreams by day,
The beautiful of sleep.
When shall I see the wood & plain & dream those happy dreams again.
To Mary Howitt
Northampton, July 16, 1844

"I am at a loss to understand how stuff of this sort could ever be accepted as evidence of poetic capacity. The poet's corner of an ordinary country newspaper will give us better results.

"There is a good deal of likeness between those two great masters of the short story, Bret Harte and Rudyard Kipling. While Kipling is easily the superior, Bret Harte really anticipated him, in his own peculiar style, by thirty years, and did for California what his wonderful successor has done for India. Kipling writes:

"April 2, 1896

SIR,—I 'ave received yourn o' the 23th March an the pamphlick likewise, an' am 'ighly pleased to think you as an ex-jolly consider my verses suitable an' instructive to the core, for which I 'ave always 'ad an' ever shall 'old the 'ighest respect. At the same time I takes my pen to deny emphatic, same as Peter, that ever I spoke even quassi-contempshus of the core in anything I ever done; an' the Boston paper don't know anything about it. When I alluded to them as 'bleached,' I meant them as swings their 'ammicks on the lower deck under the electric which makes 'em pale an' like fish-bellies—same as torpedo men & engine room arificers. This is my explanation an' affidavit an' I am

Most respectfully yours to command,
Rudyard Kipling

"May Bret Harte be considered to be so great that he might as well not be living? He has been absent so long that he seems almost one of the immortal dead, and I may again violate my rule. Nearly a generation has passed since his star rose suddenly out of the West. Unfortunately, his vein was not deep, and he soon exhausted it, while Kipling is able to open new mines in new directions, and abandons the old lodes without a moment's hesitation. Bret Harte's first Eastern publisher was our old friend Carleton, and most of us remember that first edition of the 'Condensed Novels,' with Carleton's cabalistic sign on the title-page. Then came the 'Heathen Chinees' and the 'Luck of Roaring Camp,' and the star blazed all over the firmament. About that time Harte evidently began to think that he had outgrown Carleton and the queer symbol, and even New York, then but a way station on the Grand Trunk Railway, which had its terminus in the modern Athens, on the shores of Back Bay. He hastened to seek the sacred shrine there established in the domains of James R. Osgood & Co., and this is one of his letters to them:

"San Francisco, Jan. 1st, '71
GENTLEMEN,—Pray accept my thanks for the dozen presentation copies of the

(Continued on page 119)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Dan W. Quinn II

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

THE following continues the late Dan W. Quinn's recollections of his recording career

"I'll never forget how happy I was to go to Washington in September, 1894, and make records for the Columbia Company, which in those days had its headquarters in the Capitol City. I arrived pretty early in the day, tired and begrimed with car smoke. When I reached the place on Pennsylvania Avenue the very first one to greet me was none other than our good friend, Mr. Dorian. My engagement was for a week, singing every day. . . . One happening I remember with particular vividness. Mr. Child (Calvin C. Child, who died in retirement a year or so ago after having been for many years the director of Victor's Red Seal recording department), was then taking records at Columbia, and after a few tests I started in and made several rounds of songs. He took five records off the machine and left me for quite a while. After he returned we went right on with the work and nothing more was said of the incident. One day, after I had run my total of rounds up to 200 for the week, Mr. Child asked if I remembered his going out with the five records. He then told me he had suspected I was lying down on the job because I sang with so little effort, but on taking those samples down to the basement and playing them he had found them all good and loud.

"While I was singing for Columbia on the Washington trip I did considerable work for Mr. Emile Berliner. He had a place a little farther down Pennsylvania avenue. Here was another fine man. It was a treat to see him working on his disc 'gramophone.' I used to make records for him—mostly tests—after I was through with Columbia, and he would turn the old crank round and round and say to me, 'Dan, isn't that fine?' Really and truly, it wasn't so good, but it was his baby and he could foresee wonderful progress. And think what he finally did do with the gramophone and then consider the state of perfection to which he developed the microphone! I'd sing 'Drill, Ye Tarriers, Drill!' and when I came to the chorus he'd take a big stick and bang it over a barrel to get the effect of a dynamite explosion. Gee, Ulysses, it was funny!"

Mr. Quinn was right. That "explosion" does sound funny. I have a very old 3,000-series Monarch record of this selection, sung by Mr. Quinn, in which the "realistic" explosion occurs, and it is amusing rather than terrifying. Incidentally, two of the first 10 seven-inch single-faced records made by Victor after Eldridge R. Johnson acquired Berliner's patents were sung by Mr. Quinn. They were the now forgotten "King Gilhooley" and the still remembered, "Strike Up the Band (Here Comes a Sailor)."

The singer again reminisces: "After finishing that September engagement with Columbia, I returned to New York on Saturday, suffering with a cold—and had to leave immediately for Boston. I had arranged to sing a special list of 200 songs for the New England Company, and my engagement began on Tuesday morning. With my cold the outlook was not very promising, but I tackled the job and put in 50 songs right off the reel. I kept getting better and sang my cold out by the time I was ready to go home on Friday afternoon. I had sung 50 songs each day for four days, to the amazement of the New England crew. I had done 400 songs during the two weeks in Washington and Bristol besides the experimental work with Mr. Berliner.

"Roughly speaking, during my more than 20 years of recording experience, I sang 2,500 titles. I couldn't begin to guess how many millions of copies of my records were sold. During my active days I recorded for practically all American companies: Edison, Victor, Columbia, United States, New Jersey, Chicago, Ohio, Boston, Gramophone, Gennett, Leeds-Catlin, and a number of others. All the phonograph people I came into contact with treated me royally, being kind and courteous to a fault.

"It is a pleasure to recall my former days, now that I am lapsing into the serene and yellow. My wife often went with me on my swings around the circuit, and the memories are beautiful to both of us. On May 5, 1933, we celebrated our fiftieth anniversary. We have five children, all married except our youngest boy, Frank Banta Quinn. We have eight grandchildren and one great-granddaughter." (Note by U. W.—Frank Banta Quinn was named for Mr. Quinn's former accompanist and Edison staff pianist, Frank P. Banta, who died in 1904 at the early age of 33. His son, Frank E. Banta, one of the most brilliant of ragtime and jazz pianists, toured with the Eight Famous Victor Artists for 10 years and is now frequently heard on radio).

"I mentioned the Leeds and Catlin Company. They had only a small plant but it did a land office business for a long while. Ira D. Sankey, the evangelist, worked there every day. He had a Mason and Hamlin melodeon, and put in full time singing all his repertoire of hymns, 'The Ninety and Nine' and all the rest. He turned out thousands of records and they took 'em all.

"But, with all his plugging away, Sankey never equalled my record. Neither did anyone else, so far as I know. A few years ago our booking agency put on a program for the Ediphone Company at the Pennsylvania Hotel. On the program were our old friends, Billy Jones and Ernie Hare, also Ed Meeker, who used to be an Edison staff comedian and the 'announcer' for the old cylinder records. (It's sad to realize that Jones, Hare, Meeker and Mr. Quinn now are all gone.—U. W.) The boys started to have a heated argument regarding a recording session I once had at the Edison works. Ed had worked that day behind the racks, assisting Walter Miller, the recording manager, and of course was supposed to know what he was talking about. He did, but on this occasion he exaggerated terribly. He maintained that I sang 125 songs at one session.

"When I came in I was asked to settle the argument, and Ed was broken-hearted when I told the Happiness Boys, truthfully, that the number was only 74. Even so, the tradition is that this is the best record ever accomplished in the game. It was done without a stop from 10 a. m. to 1:30 p. m., and Mr. Miller is authority that my last 20 rounds were the clearest and best."

Here end the quotations from Mr. Quinn, who, within a year or so after beginning his recording career, was one of the outstanding favorites on the brown wax cylinders. An interesting souvenir of those old days is a catalog issued in 1899 by the Talking Machine Company (later known as the Babson Brothers, of Chicago), which had placed on the market a cylinder machine known as the "Polyphone." It had two reproducers and was supposed to give twice the volume of sound of ordinary machines. It is said to have sounded pretty good—on the infrequent occasions when the two reproducers tracked together.

Dan W. Quinn, New York City, 1933

At any rate, one of the catalog pages shows a photograph of Mr. Quinn, who had spiky black hair-brushed straight back. In a note addressed to "My dear Douglass" (Leon F. Douglass, one of the officials of the company), he declares that after hearing the Polyphone, "I was not only surprised but delighted with the magnificent reproduction."

Evidently Dan Quinn's endorsement was worth a lot in those days!

(To be continued)

LINCOLNIANA

WANTED: Abraham Lincoln items—Albert Griffith, R. 2, Oshkosh, Wis. ja12669

ABRAHAM LINCOLN A to Z: (A) Autographed books. (B) Broad-sides. (C) Clippings, bound or loose. (D) Deluxe editions. (E) Engravings, etchings, etc. (F) Foreign language books. (G) Government publications. (H) Holograph writings. (I) Illustrations, especially cartoons. (J) Juvenile books. (K) Keepsakes, curios, etc. (L) Lincoln bust, medals & tokens. (M) Music, sheet or bound volumes. (N) Newspapers, Lincoln numbers. (O) Original photographs. (P) Political banners and ballots. (Q) Queer items, puzzles, etc. (R) Ribbon badges. (S) Sermons on Lincoln's death. (T) Tributes on card or pamphlets. (U) Used Lincoln book by any author. (V) Variants of any Lincoln title. (WXYZ) Radio Speeches. Wanted for Lincoln Library and Museum. Lincoln National Life Foundation, Fort Wayne 1, Indiana. ap32931

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

Edison

Diamond Disc Records

Popular — Classical — Opera

Woodymay Record Co.

73 Roxbury St. — Boston 19, Mass.

app

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Dan W. Quinn III

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

DURING MOST of his recording career, Dan W. Quinn was a free-lance, singing for any company which had the price, but in at least one twelve-month period, when the nation was preoccupied with the Spanish-American war, he was under exclusive contract to Columbia.

In a catalogue of cylinder records issued by Columbia in 1899, appears an agreement dated May 1, 1898, which reads:

"To the Columbia Phonograph Co. —We hereby accept the proposition you have made us to give our exclusive services as makers of talking machine records to the Columbia Phonograph Company during the ensuing year." Signers were Vess L. Ossman, ("the Banjo King"), George J. Gaskin, Len Spencer, J. W. Myers, Russell Hunting, Dan W. Quinn, Miss Minnie Emmett, Will F. Denny, George Schweinfest, George W. Johnson, Billy Golden, Steve Porter, J. J. Fisher, the Gilmore Brass Quartette, the Columbia Orchestra, directed by Tom Clark, the Imperial Minstrels and the Spencer Trio (Spencer, Golden and Porter.)

RECORDS

COLLECTOR WANTS unusual vocal operatic records in excellent condition. —E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco 15, Calif. n12235

PHONOGRAPH Records bought. —E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f12234

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. —E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap128001

12-ALBUM Red Seal Victors, 10" Classics $10. 12-Album, ditto, 12" $12.—Horton, West Sand Lake, N. Y. my1001

COMPLETE CATALOG, including many hard to get numbers of 25 different label records. Thousands of numbers. Catalog will be mailed upon receipt of 10c in coin or postage.—Tuttle Sales Co., 534 S. Salina St., Syracuse 4, N. Y. o6219

CLASSICAL RECORDS for sale. Send for list.—H. P. Silverman, 216 Denham Bldg., Denver 2, Colo. jly3291

OUT-OF-PRINT RECORDINGS, classical, operatic, 1800-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City, 19. jal2069

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES in playing or damaged condition. Will pay highest market prices. Write—Lee Boddy, Iowa Falls, Iowa. my6003

RECORDINGS. 500 Crosby, 500 Goodman, thousands every Nameband. Thousands greatest classic singers, 1900-1940. Clarke, Pryor, Sousa specialist. Itemize wants. Exchanges.—Josephine Mayer, St. Barbara, Calif. my6446

This exclusive arrangement apparently lasted only a year. From 1900 on, Mr. Quinn recorded indefatigably for Victor as well as Edison, which already had a long list of cylinders by him. From 1892 to 1902, he enjoyed great popularity and a handsome income, resulting from the grueling work of singing by the "round."

Then master records were found feasible for cylinders, as well as for discs, and the invention filled the recording artists with apprehension. What, they wondered, was to become of their large incomes if it were possible to make a million records or so from one master and the tiresome, but remunerative, job of singing the same songs over and over by the round were done away with? The prospect of a permanent master was particularly vexatious to men with limited repertoires, such as George W. Johnson, "the Whistling Coon," and Billy Golden, who at that time chiefly depended on singing "Turkey in the Straw" over and over to keep going.

With Mr. Quinn, the situation was somewhat different. He was a facile sight reader and would never run out of recording material as long as new songs were written, but he didn't like the idea of singing them only once for a stated fee.

I have a faded photo, taken at the turn of the century, when the Columbia Company brought out its first master cylinders and had some of its artists make a special trip to the Bridgeport factory for a demonstration. Quinn, Porter, Ossman, Gaskin, Spencer, George Graham and Schweinfest, the piccolo virtuoso, are in the picture and most are looking glum. They could not visualize the future royalty system of paying record makers which caused performers' earnings to soar to heights undreamed of in 1900.

Mr. Quinn continued to make records for several years afterward, although he retired from facing the horn just before the advent of the double-faced record, which made a craze of the phonograph. He was largely a "lone wolf," seldom singing with other artists and apparently never doing quartet work, but he participated in a number of minstrel records and also did some duets with Helen Trix, a Brooklyn girl who later went to England and was an established music hall favorite for more than 30 years. Since the war, she has returned to this country and was living in New York the last time I heard from her. I hope to see her the next time I go to New York.

After giving up record making, Mr. Quinn continued to do some vaudeville work and also operated a theatrical booking agency, which he continued to run until almost the day of his death. He made no double-faced records, so far as I can learn, until they had been on the American market for almost eight years.

But in 1916 Dan Quinn made a brief recording comeback. The Victor "popular" list for April, 1916, was headed by a double-faced Quinn record, containing two songs so appropriately titled that I suspect they must have been written especially for him. They were, "Hello, Boys, I'm Back Again" and "At the Fountain of Youth." He made no more for Victor, but Columbia issued his "Hello, Boys" and "I Can Dance With Everybody But My Wife." Unless he worked for some of the minor companies, he made no more records until 1918 when he appeared on half a dozen Gennett hill-and-dale records. "Oh Frenchy" and other songs of the first World War were among the Gennett titles. They concluded his return as a phonograph singer.

Ulysses ("Jim") Walsh, author of the "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" department, and announcer, Dorothy Jennings Turner, giving the "Jim Walsh's Wax Works" radio program from Station WDBJ, Roanoke, Va. The program, heard at 5:30 each Saturday afternoon, consists of playing records from Walsh's large collection, accompanied by factual information concerning recording companies and artists, and frequent ad lib comments by Wax Works host and hostess. This photo was taken without notice during a moment of ad libbing.

Dan Quinn's last years appear to have been happy—he seems to have possessed a peculiarly intimate quality of radiating a good cheer all his own—although they were saddened by the death of his wife, affectionately known to a generation of vaudevillians as "Mother Quinn," a year or two before his own passing, and the eventual knowledge that he was suffering from an incurable malady. He and I hoped that we should some day be privileged to shake hands at 312 West Twentieth street, and have a "knock down and drag out" chat, or series of chats, about the early recording days, but I was never about to visit New York before he left us. The best I could do was have two or three friends call upon him, bearing messages of greeting from me and receiving good wishes in return.

One of my cherished possessions is an autographed photo sent to me by Mr. Quinn in 1933. By that time he was 74 years of age and his face bore little resemblance to that of the young man who had "endorsed" the Polyphone and signed up exclusively with Columbia back in 1898. Undoubtedly, it looked still less like that of the seven-year-old boy who in 1866 had started going to school in San Francisco, his birthplace. Referring to his venerable years, Mr. Quinn jokingly spoke of himself as: "Dan Quinn, that ancient gent who keeps going on, forever and forever."

An "ancient gent" he may have been, but the white-haired, bespectacled old gentleman of 1933 was a better looking man than the much younger one of 1898. Increasing age only refined his features and brought out his nobility of character. Looking at his photograph as an old man, one realizes that growth was a constant, never-ending process with Dan Quinn, and that he was, at the end of his life, an improvement on what he had been in his prime.

In the worth repeating words of Frank Dorian, he was:

"One of the finest men I have ever known . . . one of the cleanest, hardest-working, most self-respecting of artists."

If any of the pioneer recording artists deserve to be remembered with deep affection—and most of them do—then Dan W. Quinn belongs, on every count, well near the top, with the finest and best of his brethren!

BELLS

THE BELL HOBBY

By JAMES F. COOPER

One of my unusual bells is a black clay bell from Oaxaca City, Oaxaca, Mexico. The four mouths and tongues form a cross—really four bells in one. It has a metallic ring. My friend Henry Clements, retired railway postal clerk of Sacramento, got it for me when he was on a vacation trip in Mexico.

Another unique bell is a handmade Basque sheep bell, made in France. The leather strap fastened it to the sheep's neck. It has a bulge and air chamber five inches across, and tapers down to a three inch mouth with a bone clapper. It is six inches high and has a long distance carrying sound because of the air chamber, and a peculiar sound because of the bone clapper.

One Basque sheep herder, when asked to sell one of these bells, refused, as it is the only bell which will keep the coyotes from eating his lambs. He agreed, however, to sell a sheep (which had a bell strapped on its neck) for $3. The bell was secured and the sheep turned loose after the transaction.

oOo

Another historic bell is one I had polished and especially inscribed as a souvenir of the round trip between San Francisco and Pacific Grove on August 4, 1941, when the first Highway Post Office west of the Mississippi and the third in the U. S. A. was inaugurated. I signed the trip report as co-clerk-in-charge, an honorary position for the trip. There were nine officials and clerks aboard. I also was given a reception at the San Leandro Post Office when the distributing bus passed through. This honorary trip and reception was because I offered the first resolution in the Railway Mail Association that such a service be established; this was 14 years previous. The bell was my idea of a souvenir and was rung at each post office visited enroute.

BELL MART

UNUSUAL SCANDINAVIAN bells, etc. List for stamp.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. s12264

WANTED: BELLS of all kinds. Send description and price.—Wilson's Old Mexico Shop, 554 W. Mission Dr., San Gabriel, California. my6023

CHILDREN'S VICTORY Bells of America 50c; Victory Bell playlet 18c, plus postage.—Edith Iredale, National Chairman, Altadena, California. my6084

WANTED BELLS. All kinds. Describe, price. — Mrs. Tilden Patton, Lexington, Illinois. n12803

MISCELLANEOUS

BEAUTIFUL Silver sheen on brass, silver, bronze bells. Just rub on "Ever-shine." Cleans, polishes, plates. $1 postpaid.—E. W. Tracy, Rutland, Vt. je3003

TRAVEL SEARCH FOR BELLS

By A. C. Meyer

$2.50 postpaid.

In the last 10 years, semi-retired, Mr. Meyer and his wife, also a bell enthusiast, indulged their hobby of bell collecting, which has taken them to many parts of the world. In every city and virtually every crossroads, they added interesting specimens to their collection. Now "grounded" because of the war, Mr. Meyer has summarized it all in a down-to-earth story.

Edition is Limited.

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING COMPANY
2810 S. Michigan Chicago 16, Illinois

BELLS

In my excavations in prehistoric MOUNDS, at Winklife, Ky., and other DIGS, I have accumulated thousands of duplicates which I have decided to dispose of to other collectors at very reasonable prices. Since this is not a business with me, remit with order, and if goods are not satisfactory, money will be refunded. (See my ads in Natural History and Indian Bells and Mineral Sections.)

ADD TO YOUR BELL COLLECTION:

CENTRAL AMERICAN COPPER BELL,
$5, $10, $15.

Transportation paid.

These copper bells made centuries ago by the "lost wax" method.

Each had to be made in an individual clay mold. Average size about three inches. Guaranteed genuine prehistoric and unique. Price governed by size and workmanship. Address:

COLONEL FAIN WHITE KING, Prop.
King Mounds - Winklife, Kentucky

COYOTEPEC

CEREMONIAL OR LAVA BELLS

Made by the Indians in the State of Oaxaca, Mexico, of very hard black earthenware.

These bells have nice tones, are about 4 1/2 inches tall, made in the form of women with skirts — A Collector's MUST.

4 Bells strung on Colored Hand-made Mexican Cord. $1.50.

Single Bells, each 50c.
All Prepaid to You. Send Money Order or Check. mh51p

Wilson's
Old Mexico Shop

554 West Mission Drive
San Gabriel - California

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Are These the "Supreme Fifteen"?

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

"Whom do you consider the 10 or 12 most outstanding pioneer recording artists?"

That is a question which several enthusiasts have asked me, and it is one I have found so interesting that I have decided to devote one of my HOBBIES articles to discussing it.

Of course, it is understood that personal taste inevitably plays a part in the making of any such selection. However, I have not been seriously guided by my own preferences. For instance, I find most of Cal Stewart's "Uncle Josh" monologs rather boring, but I cannot blink the fact that he was one of the prime favorites of millions of record buyers. There are also women recording artists whose voices and style I prefer to those of Ada Jones, but anyone who knows the history of the early recording days must bow in tribute to Ada's great versatility and her popularity, which was far greater than any other woman record maker has ever enjoyed.

In compiling this list I have taken into consideration chiefly the various artists' ability; their popularity at the height of their careers; the length of those careers and the extent to which their records find favor among present-day collectors. Having done this, I am partly amused and partly chagrined to find that, instead of selecting "the Supreme Twelve," as I had intended, I have been unable to narrow my list down to fewer than fifteen and have been obliged to put two artists in tying position in each of the three top slots.

For what it is worth, here is my choice of The Supreme Fifteen:

1. Billy Murray—Henry Burr
2. Ada Jones—Len Spencer.
3. Arthur Collins—Byron G. Harlan.
4. Harry MacDonald.
5. Albert Campbell.
6. Frank C. Stanley.
7. Steve Porter.
8. Billy Golden.
9. S. H. Dudley.
10. William F. Hooley.
11. Dan W. Quinn.
12. Cal Stewart.

Perhaps a few notes concerning my selections will be interesting, so here goes:

Billy Murray and Henry Burr: My own personal preference was strongly for letting Billy Murray occupy the No. 1 position alone. Ever since I was six or seven years old he has been my favorite recording artist and today he is one of my dearest friends. No other pioneer has been able to match his record of making records as long ago as 1896 and as recently as 1942. When he was at the peak of his career, his records were the most popular ever made by any singer. The erstwhile "Denver Nightingale," known nowadays to his pals as "The Boss," is certainly one of the greatest names in the history of popular recorded music.

On the other hand, his long-time friend and associate, "Hank" Burr, was the most popular of all ballad singers. During the approximately 30 years in which he recorded, most of the time as a freelance singer for virtually all companies, he probably made twice as many records as any other singer. His fame also is holding up well and there are probably almost as many collectors who specialize in Burr records as there are Murray fans. It seems only fair, therefore, to put the most popular recording comedian and the best loved ballad singer together on top.

Ada Jones and Len Spencer. Here again was a problem. Len Spencer was the first world-famed recording artist, beginning in 1889 or 1890, and he remained popular until he died in 1914. As an original genius who had mastered all dialects and wrote hundreds of sketches for use by himself and other recording artists, he was unequalled. Yet Ada Jones, one of his discoveries, acquired in a few years a fame that eclipsed his own and, to millions of record buyers, was THE woman singer. I must give them equal prominence.

Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan. The recording careers of these one-time enormously popular singers of "coon songs" were so nearly coeval and they were so closely associated for more than 20 years that it would be invidious to give either rank over the other. My own feeling is that Collins, if anything, was the more versatile and accomplished singer and comedian, but that is a mere personal preference.

Harry MacDonald. After the first three places have been filled, making decisions concerning the others becomes progressively more difficult. I think, however, that Harry MacDonald, in view of the fact that he was for many years the second most popular recording ballad singer, second only to Burr, and was also the star of the Haydn, Edison and Orpheus Quartets, is entitled to fourth place. Nor should his later career as head of the Victor artist and repertoire department and recording director for Columbia be forgotten. As a versatile artist and executive, MacDonald, I think, belongs fourth.

Albert Campbell. Here again, personal acquaintance and strong friendship perhaps should be discounted, but I believe that my friend, Al Campbell, whose recording career began in the mid-90's and extended more than 30 years into the electric era, chiefly as first tenor in the later years of the Peerless Quartet, belongs fifth.

Frank C. Stanley. Of all the artists considered here, Frank Stanley had the shortest career—from 1898 until his death in 1910. His genius as a composer of songs, writer of sketches and developer of the talent of other artists was so great, however, that had he lived longer I think he would rank even higher than sixth. Perhaps his crowning achievement was forming the Peerless Quartet, but after playing over scores of his records I have about decided that he had the greatest natural vocal gifts of any of the pioneers.

Steve Porter. From now on, choice of place becomes ever harder, and I admit that the "standings" from here down have been shuffled more than once. Steve Porter, however, as the writer and recorder of innumerable hilarious Irish sketches and the accomplished baritone of the American, Premier and Harmonizers Quartets appears to belong no lower than seventh.

Billy Golden. As the perpetrator of "Turkey in de Straw," "Rabbit Hash" and such seemingly immortal "coon specialties," Billy Golden takes high rank. I can't remember ever hearing a recorded word by him that wasn't spoken or sung in Negro dialect, but millions of people relished his inimitable performances.

S. H. Dudley. Because of his long popularity as a recorder of comic songs and as baritone of the Haydn and Edison Quartets, S. H. Dudley would deserve a place among the immortals. But when we consider that he was also for many years the Victor catalog editor, that he wrote the first editions of the Victor Book of the Opera and was a long time in charge of Victor's popular recording activities, it is hard to see how he can be placed lower than ninth. If he hadn't quit recording in 1914, Billy Murray, considered by many collectors to be the greatest pioneer recording artist, is shown here as a guest artist on Jerry Lawrence's Wax Museum radio program, demonstrating how disc records were made in the acoustic recording era. Standing behind the recording horn is Freddie Mesch, veteran Victor recording engineer. This photo was made in 1943, when Lawrence's program was on WOR, New York. It is now heard from WMCA.

sombody higher up probably would have to make room for him.

William F. Hooley. "Bill" Hooley began making records in the '90's and kept at it until 1918, when he died. As the "foundation" for the Haydn, American, Premier, Orpheus, Lyric and other quartets, this great basso is entitled, I think, to rank with the first ten.

Dan W. Quinn. Dannie Quinn was one of the most popular recorders from around 1894 to 1907 or 1908. Almost a decade later he made a brief comeback. The "spottiness" of his career in his later years is my reason for placing this lovable Irish gentleman no higher than eleventh.

Cal Stewart. Certainly, the creator of "Uncle Josh," who made his famous "Punkin Center" records more than 20 years before his death in 1920, is entitled to recognition. He created a whole village, whose mythical inhabitants were as familiar to the average record buyer as their relatives and friends.

So there they are—my choice of the Supreme 15. It is a wrench to leave out such beloved names as genial John Biebling, who was first tenor in the Haydn, American and Edison Quartets for so many years; Russell Hunting, Sr., who was arbitrarily removed from consideration because during the overwhelmingly greater part of his career he worked abroad; Vess L. Ossman, "the Banjo King"; John W. Myers; Charles D'Almaine, pioneer violinist; Harry Anthony and James F. Harrison, the gospel song singers; Edward M. Favor; "Ragtime Bob" Roberts, one of my own prime favorites; Harry Tally; Will F. Denny; Joe Natus; George P. Watson, and Corinne Morgan, the only woman pioneer recorder, aside from Ada Jones, who could possibly be considered for inclusion in my list.

An interesting fact is that, of all the fifteen I have chosen, only Burr, who began making records in 1902 or 1903, and Ada Jones, who started in 1904, were not recording before 1900. Only three are alive as I write—Murray, Campbell and Dudley. Billy is in his 60's; Al in his 70's and S. H. in his robust 80's. All used their real names for recording purposes, excepting Burr, who was really Harry H. McClaskey; Macdonough (John S. Macdonald); Stanley (Frank Stanley Grinstead, and Dudley (Sam H. Rous).

Now let's hear from John L. Norton, Sr., Jimmy Martindale, Jack Via, Henry Hamblen, Angus Joss, Frank Gloodt, Walter McDonald, "Mac" McKee, Charles Clark, Allan Debus, Joe Fortgang, Cecil Smith, Charlie Hodgdon and all the other lovers of the pioneers. I'd like to see how closely their lists agree or disagree with mine. If I get enough, perhaps I can compile a symposium and publish the result.

BELLS

Bell Memory of World War I

By WM. A. BARNHILL

DURING WORLD War One, as an officer in the U. S. Army, I was stationed at Fort Kaiser Alexander in Germany after the armistice. This fort is situated just outside the city of Coblenz on a hill near the junction of the Rhine and the Moselle Rivers. According to Baedeker's Rhine guide book, before the fort was established here it was a Carthusian Monastery for about 150 years.

While exploring the long passageways under the fort one day I glanced up and noticed a small bell fastened to the high vaulted ceiling, just discernible in the faint light of the tunnel. My interest as a collector was aroused. I went back a few days later with one of my men and we managed to detach the bell from the ceiling. It was fastened to a broad flat spring with a wire attached, which we traced to the outside wall where it had a handle attached to it. Upon pulling the handle the bell would jangle. No doubt it was used as a signal or alarm for the men in the fort.

After getting the bell down, and into the daylight, I was more than thrilled to find it made of bronze, with a raised crucifix on the face and the number 16 on the back. The size of the bell is five inches in diameter by five inches high overall. The tone is high pitched and the bell gives off tone vibrations for a full minute after it has been struck with a tapper. Unfortunately there is no identifying mark or date on the bell.

I have always wanted to trace the history of the bell. I believe it must be one of the smaller bells of a set of chimes. There were some chimes in the clock tower of the main barracks building at the fort that struck the hours. It did not occur to me at the time to explore this tower. Perhaps the chimes were the spoils of war and were taken from some church or it may be that they descended from the monastery. Who knows?

A Bell Designed From Temple

MOST TYPES of Javanese bells are in the shape of Borobudur temples which are located about 20 miles from Djokjaharta. The idea of the dragon is to protect the deity. The men who are standing are the guards. The temples of Borobudur have hundreds of bells that are in the temples, decorated with dragons and guards.

BELL MART

UNUSUAL SCANDINAVIAN bells, etc. List for stamp.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. s12264

WANTED: BELLS of all kinds. Send description and price.—Wilson's Old Mexico Shop, 554 W. Mission Dr., San Gabriel, California. my12069

FOR SALE: No. 3 and No. 4 Farm Bells, $7.50-$12.50. Also smaller bells, various types.—Antique Inn, Mexico, Mo. je1201

WANTED BELLS. All kinds. Describe, price. — Mrs. Tilden Patton, Lexington, Illinois. n12808

MISCELLANEOUS

BEAUTIFUL Silver sheen on brass, silver, bronze bells. Just rub on "Ever-shine." Cleans, polishes, plates. $1 postpaid—E. W. Tracy, Rutland, Vt. je3008

TRAVEL SEARCH FOR BELLS

By A. C. Meyer

$2.50 postpaid.

In the last 10 years, semi-retired, Mr. Meyer and his wife, also a bell enthusiast, indulged their hobby of bell collecting, which has taken them to many parts of the world. In every city and virtually every crossroads, they added interesting specimens to their collection. Now "grounded" because of the war, Mr. Meyer has summarized it all in a down-to-earth story.

Edition is Limited.

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING COMPANY
2810 S. Michigan Chicago 16, Illinois

COYOTEPEC

CEREMONIAL OR LAVA BELLS

Made by the Indians in the State of Oaxaca, Mexico, of very hard black earthenware.

These bells have nice tones, are about 4 1/4 inches tall, made in the form of women with skirts — A Collector's MUST.

4 Bells strung on Colored Hand-made Mexican Cord, $1.50.

Single Bells, each 50c.

All Prepaid to You. Send Money Order or Check. mh64

Wilson's
Old Mexico Shop
554 West Mission Drive
San Gabriel - California

BUY - SELL & EXCHANGE

Buggies, Wagons, Carts, Cutters, Sleighs, Harnesses, Saddles, Parts, Shafts, Poles, Wheels, Trailers, Sleigh Bells, Whips, Halters, Rope, Farm Bells, Sheep, Lambs, Goats, Donkeys, Horses, Ponies, Coach Dogs. my640

WM. R. LANDSBERG

Goerke's Corners

Waukesha, Wis.

BELLS

In my excavations in prehistoric MOUNDS, at Wickliffe, Ky., and other DIGS, I have accumulated thousands of duplicates which I have decided to dispose of to other collectors at very reasonable prices. Since this is not a business with me, remit with order, and if goods are not satisfactory, money will be refunded. (See my ads in Natural History and Indian Relics and Mineral Sections.)

ADD TO YOUR BELL COLLECTION:

CENTRAL AMERICAN COPPER BELL.
$5, $10, $15.

Transportation paid.

These copper bells made centuries ago by the "lost wax" method.

Each had to be made in an individual clay mold. Average size about three inches. Guaranteed genuine prehistoric and unique. Price governed by size and workmanship. Address: mr450

COLONEL FAIN WHITE KING, Prop.
King Mounds - Wickliffe, Kentucky

— SEVENTH WAR LOAN —
Buy War Bonds

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Harry Anthony and James F. Harrison. I.

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

This is the first time in the more than three years that I have been writing these biographical sketches that I have combined an account of the activities of two pioneer recording artists. It is appropriate to do so in this instance, however, because to the disc and cylinder buyers of a generation ago, "Harry Anthony" and "James F. Harrison" seemed virtually one personality, as nearly inseparable as ham and eggs, pork and beans, Mutt and Jeff or the Katzenjammer Kids.

On second thought, these comparisons may be poorly chosen, for they suggest humor, whereas the recorded work of Anthony and Harrison was always serious. This accomplished tenor and baritone were known almost entirely, during the less than a decade in which they sang regularly together, as specialists in the rendering of gospel hymns. As concert artists, they were also skilled and cultivated singers, under their own names, of higher types of music, but on "platters" and "oatmeal boxes" their reputation was based almost entirely on excellent duet versions of such familiar tunes as "Will There Be Any Stars in My Crown?" and "When the Mists Have Rolled Away." Unlike most recording artists of that period, they never essayed comedy.

The ultra-devoutness of their work won them high esteem, especially in what has been called the Southern "Bible Belt." This I learned while still a small boy, hardly more than out of rompers, but already reading and absorbing everything I could find on the subject of phonographs and records.

One fine fall day I strolled into a drug store where cylinder records were on display. Soon, a farmer who had just sold his crop of tobacco pushed open the front door and loudly announced that "the old woman and the kids" had asked him to fetch home a few "pieces" for the graphophone. He was explicit concerning the kind of cylinders he wanted, in spite of the fact that he obviously had been swallowing strong waters and was unsteady on his legs.

"I don't," said the red-faced agriculturist, "hold with these here ragtime reels. What I want is some good old-time pieces like the songs I learned at my mother's knee. I want some good hymn tunes by this here Anthony an' Harrison. They sing good pious pieces, an' ef I held with gamblin'—which I don't—I'd lay they was godly men."

Here the infant Walsh piped up. "I ain't so sure," he said to the farmer, that Anthony and Harrison are such godly men. They've changed their names to John Young and Frederick J. Wheeler, so maybe that means the police are after 'em!"

This intently funny remark met with no favor. Disdainfully glaring at the precocious youngster, the rustic snappishly retorted:

"Is that so? Well, young'un, it don't matter to me if they calls themselves Adam an' Eve! I believe Anthony an' Harrison are godly men, an' I cotton to their pieces a heap mo'n I do to these here cussed ragtime reels!"

So saying, he chose "Tarry With Me," "Softly Now the Light of Day," "When the Mists Have Rolled Away" and a few other Anthony and Harrison duets, and after having insultingly spurned a proposal that he add "Uncle Josh Keeps House" to his collection, vibrated out of the store. If I had been a betting tot, which I wasn't, I would have laid five to one that he dropped and smashed those fragile cylinders before he reached his wagon. But I didn't follow him to find out. I stayed in the drug store to listen entranced to the latest Billy Murray record.

In thinking that Harry Anthony and James F. Harrison had discarded their established names in favor of new ones, I had the facts reversed. Their real names actually were John Young and Frederick J. Wheeler. Both had well-deserved reputations for excellent church, concert and oratorio singing and had thought it advisable to use fictitious names for their recording activities until the standard of reproduction improved to the point where they considered no harm would be done to their professional reputations by its being known that they sang into the old-fashioned horn. As records improved, a reputation for making good ones became one of a singer's greatest assets. Recognizing this, the duetists ceased, for the most part, calling themselves "Anthony and Harrison" and stepped forth as Young and Wheeler, although the earlier team is the one by which they are best remembered nowadays.

I think both Mr. Young and Mr. Wheeler are still alive, although I have not heard from either for several years. In the days when I corresponded with Mr. Wheeler, he lived at 159 Radford Street, Yonkers, N. Y., but my friend, Harry Hunting, son of Russell Hunting, Sr., about whom I wrote in this department some months ago, recently made a special trip to the Radford street address in the hope of finding out something for me about the baritone, and was told he had not lived there for years and no information was available concerning his present whereabouts. When I was in New York late in 1940, however, several recording artists told me Mr. Wheeler was still alive.

Unfortunately, I lost the few letters I received from Mr. Young and am obliged to depend upon my memory for recollections of what he told me about his recording activities. When we corresponded, he was living in New York City and was a member of the once-famous Roxy Quartet.

Neither singer seemed to be certain just when he began to make records. Young said he remembered making cylinders, "and think I may have made some of the old two-minute wax ones," but had no idea of the year in which his career as a recording artist started. He was certainly recording as long ago as 1903 or 1904, for I have a Leeds record by "Harry Anthony" which goes back to that period, a year or so before he formed his memorable association with Mr. Wheeler. His name does not, however, appear in the 1903 catalog of Edison cylinder records.

Before taking up singing as a profession, Mr. Wheeler (who, like Young, was a native New Yorker), worked briefly as a reporter on a Utica newspaper. Then, after receiving recognition as an accomplished church singer, he came to the attention of the old Universal Talking Machine Company, which made Zonophone records before Victor bought out the Zonophone business in 1903.

And now I shall quote from one of Mr. Wheeler's letters:

"Looking back upon the happy days spent in the recording laboratories during many years seems indeed quite like a dream. I still have some of my old records to remind me.

"If my memory serves me correctly, my first recording was for the old Universal Talking Machine Co. I remember that at that time I was struggling to 'make both ends' meet, so to speak, and when a year's contract was offered me by this company for the grand total of $1,400, I immediately experienced the feeling of what financial relief means. Well, the funny thing about that year's work was that shortly after signing the contract something happened at the recording laboratory and work was soon suspended. I made only four or five records during the whole year, but I collected just the same.

"It was shortly after that contract expired when the opportunity to join the Edison forces occurred. I remember going to the laboratory at Orange, N. J., for my first 'date' and it was an exciting day, I assure you. That first record was 'Old Jim's Christmas Hymn' and was sung as a duet, my teammate being 'Al' Campbell, who has also been a popular recording artist all these years. For some reason, we did not continue our team work. I can't recall why, and it was soon after that when the team of 'Anthony and Harrison' was formed for the recording of sacred hymns. I think I can safely say that they scored a great success and were always counted as among 'the big sellers.'"

Here I shall stop quoting Mr. Wheeler long enough to say that the Campbell-Harrison duet of "Old Jim's Christmas Hymn" was issued, rather out of season, in June, 1904, with the number of 8708. Campbell and Harrison also sang together on two other Edison cylinders, 8734, "My Old New Hampshire Home," which has interest as being the first big hit ever written (in 1899) by the famous song writing team of Andrew B. Sterling and Harry Von Tilzer, and 8839, "Rock of Ages." The "Hampshire" record was issued in the July, 1904, supplement, and the hymn in November. The supplement commented: "Ever since 'Old Jim's Christmas Hymn' we have had many requests . . . to have these artists make a complete record of 'Rock of Ages,' a part of which is given in 'Old Jim's Christmas Hymn.' . . . The music was specially arranged for this record, the second verse being differently sung from the first, although Dr. Hastings' old familiar tune is retained throughout. This is one of the best religious records that we have ever put out."

Already, although "Anthony and Harrison," had not struck up their partnership, the name of "James F. Harrison" was being associated with hymns.

To be continued

INSIGNIA COLLECTORS

FOREIGN DECORATION & CAMPAIGN RIBBONS
Beautiful multi-colored silk, mounted on heavy card-board, suitable for mounting in frame or album. Living emblems of history, and battles of yesterday. Newest hobby sweeping the nation. Starting packet and folder, $1.00 to—fly

INSIGNIACRAFT

236 - 28th Ave., N. W. - Calgary, Canada
MEDAL RIBBONS - INSIGNIA

Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists Harry Anthony and James F. Harrison. II.

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

THE FIRST Anthony and Harrison duet record appears to have been made for Edison, the company with which the singers were most closely associated for the greater part of their careers. It appeared in the May, 1905, record list and, rather oddly, was not a "sacred song," in the strict sense of the term. Instead, it was a musical setting of Longfellow's famous poem, "Excelsior."

In those days Edison published a little monthly magazine, "The New Phonogram," devoted to giving descriptions of records and answering questions about recording artists. Of "Excelsior," the Phonogram said:

"This famous musical setting by M. W. Balfe of Longfellow's poem introduces a new team of duettists in Anthony and Harrison, who sing tenor and baritone respectively. . . . The singers are accompanied by the orchestra. . . . The record is one that will be wanted by every lover of high class music."

The singers' true gospel hymn note was struck in October, 1905, when a two-minute cylinder 9105, "When the Mists Have Rolled Away," was issued and had a huge sale. Said the New Phonogram:

"A sacred selection, the words of which were written by Annie Herbert and the music by Ira D. Sankey. It makes a splendid duet record. As Messrs. Anthony and Harrison are both choir singers in one of the principal New York churches they are able to give the hymn a perfect interpretation."

The team appears to have made no Columbia records until two cylinders, 33034 and 33035, were issued in December, 1906. The selections were "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning" and "Over the Line." In ensuing months, these hymns were also offered on discs, and Anthony and Harrison discs and cylinders appeared almost every month.

For some reason, the now prosperous and popular tenor and baritone did not make a Victor connection until 1910. On page 4 of Victor's July record supplement of that year, under the heading, "The First Anthony-Harrison Duet," the following appeared:

"5780. 'See the Pale Moon' . . . The Victor announces with pleasure the engagement of these well-known singers for a series of duets, both secular and sacred. The first of these is a smooth and perfectly balanced rendition of Fabio Campana's famous duet, which many great singers have been pleased to include in their repertoire."

"The fact that these duettists have been singing together for a long time will be quite evident to those who hear this beautiful record. The perfect sympathy which exists between the artists is a delight to the listener."

During the next two years, the tenor and baritone sang several hymns for Victor, but since their work for that company began comparatively late, their Victor list never attained the proportions of their Edison and Columbia titles.

About this time, Mr. Wheeler made one or two Columbia records under the name of Frederick Wheeler, and John Young records appeared in both Victor and Columbia lists.

The May, 1912, complete Victor record catalog carried a biographical sketch of Mr. Young, accompanied by a photograph of the tenor, who in those days disguised his youthful appearance by wearing a mustache. It read:

"John Young is one of America's representative concert tenors and has won great popularity because of his fine voice, the intelligence and good taste of his singing, his unusually good enunciation and agreeable personality."

"Mr. Young has filled engagements with some of the foremost musical societies and festivals, including the New York Oratorio Society, Brooklyn Institute, Albany Musical Association, Troy Choral Club, Syracuse Liederkrantz, Choral Club of St. Paul, etc., and at the Annual Festivals in Nashua, Manchester and Macon."

The tenor also told me that he had sung as soloist with many of the large symphony orchestras and in concert with some of the most famous operatic stars—all of which is evidence that he possessed vocal ability far in excess of that required to sing hymns of the sort popular in country churches. Although his voice was too light for "heroic" roles, he occasionally made operatic records in English, a notable one being the Miserere from Trovatore, with Elise Stevenson as the soprano, sung for Columbia.

Mr. Young was exceptionally careful to make sure that no harm befell his voice. Billy Murray laughingly told me that, on a number of occasions when he and Young went out together in the evenings, his friend would walk with a handkerchief placed over his mouth as a precaution against taking cold. This extreme caution was puzzling to the immortal Billy, who trained for recording engagements by going to baseball games or six-day bicycle races and yelling his head off.

During this period, Mr. Wheeler also was successful in concert work, besides making records for all the companies then putting out discs and cylinders in America. He appears to have acquired the sobriquet of "the Golden Voiced Baritone," judging by an item in the March, 1911, issue of the Talking Machine News, of London:

"James F. Harrison, known throughout our colonies as the Golden Voiced Baritone, who recently finished his American tour with Sembrich, the great operatic singer, was everywhere voted an enormous success. Edison Amberol record No. 680, 'Tell Mother I'll Be There,' is recorded by this famous artist."

"Of course," Mr. Wheeler remarked, in writing to me, "Mr. Young and myself were not confined to the recording of duets. We both made solo records, sang with such quartets as the Edison Mixed Quartet, the Knickerbocker Male Quartet and in various kinds of chorus work, etc."

Since little is known nowadays concerning the organizations mentioned by Mr. Wheeler, I may say that the Edison Mixed Quartet, formed in the early 1900's, was at first composed of a Miss Chapel (her first name seems never to have been printed), soprano; Corinne Morgan (who, under her real name of Corinne Welsh, sang in the same church choir with Young and Wheeler), contralto; George M. Stricklett, tenor, and Frank C. Stanley, one of the greatest of all pioneer recording artists, bass. Anthony and Harrison came into it after Stanley's death in 1910. The Knickerbocker Quartet, formed in 1908, was originally Stricklett, second tenor; Anthony, first tenor; Harrison, baritone, and Gus Reed, bass. After Diamond Discs began to take place of Edison cylinders, Harvey Hindermeyer became second tenor and Donald Chalmers, bass.

Anthony and Harrison, or Young and Wheeler, as they were by this time better known, did little work together after 1912, when Mr. Young signed an exclusive Edison contract, while Mr. Wheeler elected to go on free-lancing and formed associations with other popular recording artists. Among these was the contralto, Elsie Baker, with whom he sang for both Victor and Columbia until Miss Baker, who later became a Victor Red Seal Star, signed an exclusive contract with that company. On popular song records they called themselves Edna Brown and James F. Harrison. In concert numbers, they were Baker and Wheeler.

Autographs

Meditations of an Autograph Collector

IN RECENT ISSUES we have quoted from a book written more than 42 years ago by an autograph collector, Adrian H. Joline, for Harper and Brothers. The book was well named. Joline showed a fine knowledge of books and of history, a knowledge which he had enriched with his hobby. We quote briefly again from his comments and his letters.

"Even that cold-hearted, unimaginative person who sees in an autograph letter only a fragment of faded paper with irregular tracings of ink, and cannot comprehend the sensations of the collector when he realizes that he has before him the actual handiwork of the great man who made those tracings, will sometimes grant us the concession that there is a merit about a book which has 'associations.' I cannot explain why this is so; perhaps he thinks he could write a better letter himself, whereas he knows that he could not make a book, and the book has a tangible quality, a sort of solid reality about it which appeals to his materialistic nature. I find that I can always arouse a gleam of intelligence when I show this person such a book, while he will turn a dull, lack-lustre eye upon a precious letter of John Keats, or one of Alexander Pope, or even a page of Dean Swift or Samuel Johnson. In my own few volumes of this kind, there is a field

RICHARD M. LEDERER, 235 Madison Ave., New York 17, N. Y. Wants offerings of checks, promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or orders to pay made by Presidents, prominent old New Yorkers, Naval and Military heroes, signers of the Declaration of Independence, etc. Write for Want List No. 10. Also interested in mechanical banks. jly122952

WANTED: Autograph material, American literary and historical.—John Valentine, 669 S. Monroe, Decatur, Ill. au12024

Autograph Letters - Documents

And Manuscripts by Famous Persons
American and International.
Also Diaries and Accumulations of Old American Business Papers, Old Ledgers,
Etc., Etc.

WANTED

Correspondence Invited

Charles F. Heartman
The Book Farm

Route 3 - Hattiesburg, Miss.

32 Years Business Experience
CASH BY RETURN MAIL

Books, Pamphlets, Newspapers, etc., of American interest also bought.

BUY WAR BONDS

Rhadames sang the Third Act duet, her triumph was complete."

Interviewers crowded around the substitute prima donna eager to learn her name. Perplexed by family considerations, she hesitated. Finally, she said, "Call me Chalia, just Chalia." (Chalia is an affectionate diminutive for Rosalia.) This remained her professional name throughout her career.

Her next public appearance was in 1895 at the Teatro Lirico, Milan, where she was engaged by Sonzogno to sing the title role in the premiere of Coronaro's new opera, Claudia. She was a resounding success. Even Sonzogno's powerful rival, Ricordi, wrote her name in his "Golden Book," while Sonzogno himself gave her the privilege of singing exclusively whatever role she might choose for the next season. Santuzza (Cavalleria Rusticana) was her choice and the following year she sang it repeatedly, appearing in other roles as well.

Then she was prevailed upon to interrupt her well-launched career and return to Philadelphia. Stopping off at Paris en route from Milan, she found that in agreeing to return to America she had spoiled a great opportunity. Sbriglia, the famous singing teacher with whom she had consulted before going to Milan, had persuaded Massenet to reserve for her the leading role in his forthcoming opera, Sapho. What young soprano could ask for more than to create such a colorful and important part? Nevertheless, because she had promised to go home, home she went. To make things still worse, when she arrived in Philadelphia, she found she had been imposed upon. Immediately resuming her career, she joined Colonel Mapleson's company for the season of 1896-97, and sang in some of the first American performances of Andrea Chenier. Her interpretation of the heroine was warmly praised by the Boston and Philadelphia critics.

The next year Maurice Grau engaged her for the Metropolitan where she made her debut as Santuzza on December 17, 1898. Later she toured the United States with the Damrosch-Ellis Opera Company for 18 weeks, alternating with Melba and Gadski. Other members of the company included De Lussan, Olitzka, Ceppi, Dippel, Pandolfini and Van Hoose.

(To be continued)

MUSIC BOXES
and EXTRA DISCS for sale

LLOYD G. KELLEY
Broadway and Rt. 3
Hanover, P. O. Box 342, Mass.

d540

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists Harry Anthony and James F. Harrison. III.

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

AFTER Mr. Young became an exclusive Edison artist, he also became first tenor of the Criterion Quartet, whose members gave "tone tests," demonstrating that no difference could be detected between the ensemble's actual singing and the New Edison's reproduction of their work, and filled hundreds of other concert engagements throughout the country. The quartet's personnel changed considerably through the years, but at the height of its popularity it consisted of Young, first tenor; Harvey Hindermeyer, second tenor; George W. Reardon, baritone, and Donald Chalmers, an Edison staff artist, bass. After radio came in and the Roxy theater, from which the popular "Roxy's Gang" program emanated in New York, was built, the quartet changed its name to the Roxy Quartet and was extremely popular for years.

Incidentally, the Criterion Quartet was formed, in 1903 or 1904, by the still active baritone, Reinald Werrenrath, then only about 20 years old. Other members were Robert R. Rainey, first tenor; William A. Washburn, second tenor, and Walter A. Downie, bass, none of whom were still singing in the foursome by the time Mr. Young joined it. The first Criterion Quartet made records for Edison, Columbia and Leeds, but never rivaled in popularity the established recording quartets of that day.

A short-lived Edison organization in which Young sang from 1917 to 1919 was the Harmony Four, consisting, besides himself, of Gladys Rice, soprano; George Wilton Ballard, second tenor, and Chalmers, bass. He also made some later duets with Helen Clark for the Gennett "Art-Tone" series, in which he was rather frivolously listed as "Jack" Young.

Meanwhile, as has already been mentioned, Mr. Wheeler was beginning his long series of baritone-contralto duets with the young and charming Elsie Baker. He continued to sing Edison duets with Mr. Young, but in 1915 struck up a recording partnership for other companies with Reed Miller, a distinguished concert tenor who died in 1923. They were very successful for several years, but did not sing hymns.

"For popular songs and duets we always used the nom de plume of James Reed and James F. Harrison," Mr. Wheeler wrote. For more pretentious singing, the pair called themselves by their real names.

"I suppose," the baritone commented, "the idea was to give varied names for the catalogs and monthly lists of records, although when I first started recording for the Edison company most singers used other than their own names. Young aspiring concert singers thought at that time that to use their own names for the so-called 'canned music' would be unwise. But my phonograph experience through many years is among the most cherished recollections of my career as a concert, church and opera singer."

After several years as an exclusive Edison singer, Mr. Young returned to his former free-lance status. When John Bieling dropped out of the American Quartet in 1918, after the death of William F. Hooley, the quartet bass, Young took Bieling's place as first tenor and the organization consisted for the next few years of Young; Billy Murray, second tenor and star; Steve Porter, baritone; and Donald Chalmers, bass. Young and Chalmers likewise continued to sing in the Criterion Quartet. Still later the tenor became more interested in radio than recording work and devoted most of his time to appearances with the Roxy Gang.

Meanwhile, although they were no longer working actively together, the friendship between the erstwhile "Anthony and Harrison" continued. After Victor Emerson, one of the pioneer recording experts, left the Columbia company in 1916 to found the Emerson Phonograph company, he must have recalled how fast the Anthony-Harrison gospel hymn duets had sold, for in 1922 Emerson issued a double-faced record by

EDISON DIAMOND DISC LIST

Part 4

- DELNA, Marie
83036 Jocelyn—Berceuse (1914)
83019 Prophete—Ah, mon fils (1914)
83024 Samson—Mon coeur (1914)
- DEL VALLE, Loretto
82279 Magic Flute—Der holle Rache/RAPPOLD & URLUS (1922)
- DESTINN, Emmy
82527 Butterfly—Un bel di (1914)
82525 Gioconda—Suicidio (1913)
82531 Tosca—Vissi d'arte (1914)
- DE TREVILLE, Yvonne
80296 Chanson provencale/WHY (1915)
82334 Lakme—Bél Song/HOWARD (1925)
- DE VERE, Clementine
82057 Coeur et la Main—Bolero (1914)
82057 Grand Mogul—Valse des Serpents (1914)
83033 Maritana—Scenes that are brightest (1917)
- DORRIAN, William
80195 Pearl Fishers—Mi par d'udire (1915)
- DUCHENE, Maria
80766 Prophete—Ah, mon fils (1923)
80766 Trovatore—Stride la vampa (1923)
- DUFAULT, Paul
74011 Amadis—Bois epais (This artist also recorded a number of French songs in the 74,000 series)
- EASTON, Florence
82355 Lohengrin—Elsa's Traum (1929)
82355 Tannhauser—Gebet (1929)
- EDISON, T. A.
50509 Let us not forget (A message to the American people) (1918)
- ERROLLE, Ralph
82560 Roi d'Ys—Vainement (1918)
- FERRARI-FONTANA, Edoardo
82555 Inno di Garibaldi (1918)
83057 Tosca—E lucevan (1917)

the two singers in their old familiar style, although under their rightful names of John Young and Frederick J. Wheeler.

Nor was that all. Veteran Columbia record buyers must have rubbed their eyes when, late in 1926, electrically recorded double-faced record No. 611-D appeared. It was sung by "Anthony and Harrison" precisely as they would have sung it twenty years before and without the slightest falling off in the quality of their excellent voices. One side was "Almost Persuaded"; the other, "Softly and Tenderly." The accompaniment was by violin, cello and organ, a fact which irked a rather snooty reviewer who wrote in the Phonograph Monthly Review:

"Beware of this suspicious combination of instruments. This particular record almost drives me to profanity."

By 1926, the phonograph was appealing to a more musically cultured and sophisticated audience than had patronized it years before. This duo was not followed by others and, as far as I have been able to learn, it represents the last recorded work of the once highly popular tenor and baritone. I have long wondered how it happened that the "boys" teamed up for that 1926 offering and went back to their old Anthony-Harrison designation instead of calling themselves Young and Wheeler.

In listing their various accomplishments, neither Mr. Young nor Mr. Wheeler mentioned that they had appeared in the pioneer talkies, but their voices were recorded in Thomas A. Edison's first "talking pictures" (silent films synchronized with Edison records, somewhat on the Vitaphone principle), which were shown in theaters throughout the country in 1913 and 1914.

Discussing his latter-day activities, Mr. Wheeler, writing at the height of the pre-war depression, said:

"We so-called old-time singers have been badly hit by the radio and talkies. It seems that the new and young singers are the ones in demand now."

"Concert work has also been affected greatly, and the light opera game sorely hit. I am doing but little, outside of church work, but still have hopes of breaking in on the radio some fine day."

I don't know whether Mr. Wheeler is still singing, but if he is, I am certain he has far more of genuine musical ability and vocal equipment than the average younger singer of the present day, and the same thing is true of Mr. Young.

Both singers were asked for their photographs. Mr. Young replied that he was sorry he did not have a suitable one, but Mr. Wheeler sent me a picture which I still cherish. Whether disguising themselves as Anthony and Harrison or using the names which rightfully belonged to them, they were splendid artists, and I hope they are still in our midst, enjoying good health and happiness.

RECORDS

COLLECTOR WANTS unusual vocal operatic records in excellent condition.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson St., San Francisco 15, Calif. n12235

—BUY BONDS—

HARRY DICHTER

5458 Montgomery Ave., Phila. 31, Penna.

EARLY AMERICAN MUSIC WANTED

I will pay carriage charges on any material shipped to me for inspection, and my cash offer. ap440

Want List sent on request.

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f12234

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap128001

LIMITED NUMBER duplicate records for sale or exchange; Patti, Sembrich, Bispham, Lauri-Volpi, etc.—E. P. Courtney, 724 Dudley Dr., Shreveport, La. n3252

CLASSICAL RECORDS for sale. Send for list.—H. P. Silverman, 216 Denham Bldg., Denver 2, Colo. 03291

OUT-OF-PRINT RECORDINGS, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City 19, N. Y. ja12069

WANTED 15 IN. DISC records for Mira Music Box.—George Schait, 8 Walnut St., Cranford, N. J. s3081

"WANTED: VICTOR Supplements 1903 through 1916. Columbia supplements August, Sept., 1923; Victor Catalogs before 1914.—Robert B. Julian, 5203 California Street, Omaha, Nebr. ja6863

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. ja122361

FRENCH METRONOME, mahogany case, perfect, $8 plus parcel post.—Ann Tromanhauser, Parkville, Mo. s187

SHEET MUSIC, Operatic Records. Lists 10c.—Fore's, 3161 High, Denver 5, Colorado. o12024

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main St. 12, Los Angeles, Calif. s12036

MUSIC BOXES and Singing Birds for sale. Music boxes repaired, squeaks eliminated. New tips and teeth replaced in comb, etc. Works polished, cases refinished.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, Rhode Island. mh120621

WANTED "KALLIOPE" 7 1/4 inch Music Box Discs.—Mrs. R. F. Kuennen 1111 Troy Rd., Edwardsville, Ill. s3061

WANT AUTOMATIC TYPE A player Piano music rolls. Ten selections per roll.—Wm. S. Allen, 1st National Bank Bldg., Santa Ana, California. s3252

CORRESPONDENCE invited; object exchanges of early classical (operatic) vocal discs.—Albert Wolf, 301 West 57th St., N. Y. n8402

MELODEONS FOR SALE. Both octagon leg and folding melodeons, all in good playing cond. Descriptions and prices sent on request.—Joseph Leighton, 16 Montclair St., Springfield 4, Mass. s3633

ANTIQUE FRENCH upright piano, manufactured Doison of Paris—1850, four feet high, four feet long, excellent condition and tone. Further details write.—Mrs. Charles DeFord, 2108 Key Blvd., #964, Arlington, Virginia. s1681

WANTED: RARE or ancient musical instruments, especially lutes and small harps.—Miss Marta Brokaw, 3300 - 16th St., N.W. #504, Washington 10, D. C. s1231

MATHUSHEK piano, rosewood, carved legs, excellent playing condition, 61" long. Write for further information. Tables.—Mrs. Hal Kohn, Newberry, S. C. s1001

"THE GEM Roller Organ," fine playing condition, $15.—Weiner, 181 East 93rd St., N. Y. C., N. Y. s1001

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosorik & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan

Chicago 16, Illinois

Buy War Bonds

WANTED RECORDS

Columbia Grand Opera by the following singers: Suzanne Adams, Campanari, Edouard de Reszke, Charles Glibbert, Scotti, Schumann-Helk & Sembrich. (Ten-inch size only)

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels. International Zonophone Company: Disco Zonofone, Disque Zonophone by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by this artist, especially her Carmen arias on 40075.

Phonograph Record Catalogs, Monthly supplements, etc.

ALWAYS WANT

The following issues of VOICE OF THE VICTOR a trade magazine published by Victor: Anything prior to No. 8, Vol. VII, Sept. 1912 AND 1913: May, June, Sept., Oct. and Dec.; 1918: Jan.; 1917: March, Oct. and Dec.; 1918: Jan., April, June-to-Dec.; 1919: Jan. to June and Nov.; 1922: Jan., March and Oct.; 1925: Oct. Anything after "Late Fall," 1930.

FOR SALE

Record Catalogs & Supplements

French Pathe's complete recording of La Favorite on 21 double-sided 14 inch discs. (Three of the discs are missing).

Same company, same size and type of record — Pierre Corneille's famous tragedy Le Gid, enacted by artists of the Comedie Francaise. 17 double-sided discs of which one is missing.

STEPHEN FASSETT

% LEBOW

210 W. 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Collectors' Vote on "The Supreme Fifteen."

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

BILLY MURRAY is the collectors' choice for the title of Greatest Pioneer Recording Artist.

So, at least, I judge on the basis of comments which have been mailed to me since my article, "Are These the Supreme Fifteen?" appeared in the June issue of HOBBIES. As you may remember, I not only gave my choice for the top 15, but invited other collectors to vote, keeping in my mind not so much personal preference for a given artist's work as the necessity of evaluating the performer on the basis of popularity, length of career and lasting quality of his or her reputation. As an example of the attitude I meant, I said that my own preference was strongly for putting Billy Murray in first place by himself, but I had decided it would be only fair to give Henry Burr, the most popular of recording ballad singers, equal rank with the great comedian.

My other choices were: For second place—Ada Jones and Len Spencer; third—Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan; fourth—Harry Macdonough; fifth—Albert Campbell; sixth—Frank C. Stanley; seventh—Steve Porter; eighth—Billy Golden; ninth—S. H. Dudley; tenth—William F. Hooley; eleventh—Dan W. Quinn, and twelfth—Cal Stewart.

I had given a great deal of thought to my selections and it turns out that I hit the average collector's taste pretty well. Fourteen of my choices finished among the first 15 after all the "returns" had been tabulated. Hooley, however, was nosed out by "Ragtime Bob" Roberts, one of my own prime favorites, whose records I enjoy much more than some of the artists who appeared on my personal list.

Before I give the results of my tabulation, I should explain that I had some difficulty in deciding just how the results should be recorded. Although I had intended the voting to apply only to pioneer recording artists—those who had established their reputations before double-faced disc records and four-minute cylinders became popular in 1909—a few collectors included votes for some who came into vogue later. I tabulated these, although strictly, they did not belong in the balloting.

Each time an artist was voted to be the collector's favorite for the No. 1 spot, I credited him with 15 points. One listed for second place got 14; third place, 13, and so on down until the one placing 15th got only one point. In the case of one collector who sent a list of 20 favorites, I decided to give the final six one point each. A few collectors did not give a complete list of 15. In such a case, I gave the first choice 15 points, and the others followed downward until the points "ran out." Where a collector indicated a tie for first place or any other, I gave both contenders the full value of their votes. If this seems a bit unfair, I can only say I think it fairer to credit two singers listed in a first place tie with 15 points each, than to give them 7½ points each and let the second place entrant have 14.

And now, here is the composite result of the voting of HOBBIES' readers. The figure after the artist's name indicates the number of votes he or she received, according to the "point system":

1. Billy Murray, 173.
2. Henry Burr, 129.
3. Arthur Collins, 110.
4. Byron G. Harlan, 101.
5. Frank C. Stanley, 90.
6. Ada Jones, 83.
7. Harry Macdonough, 79.
8. Len Spencer, 78.
9. Albert Campbell, 64.
10. Billy Golden—Steve Porter, 58.
11. Dan W. Quinn, 47.
12. S. H. Dudley, 39.
13. Cal Stewart, 33.
14. Bob Roberts & Nora Bayes, 26.

Those, on the basis of the comments that reached me, are the Supreme 15. Other artists who received votes were: Harry Tally, 24; J. W. Myers, 23; Marion Harris, 21; William F. Hooley, 18; Eddie Morton, 17; James F. Harrison, 16; Will F. Denny, 14; Edward M. Favor, 14; Jack Norworth, 13; Aileen Stanley, 13; Frances White, 11; J. Aldrich Libbey, 11; Bert Williams, John Biebling, Johnny Marvin, Arthur Fields and Al Bernard, 10 each; Sam Ash and A. D. Madeira, 9; Harry Anthonny, Joe Hughes, Jim Marlowe, Joseph Natus and Walter Van Brunt, 8; Nat M. Wills, 4; Billy Jones and Ernest Hare, 3; Helen Trix, Corinne Morgan, Gus Van and Joe Schenk, 2; Manuel Romain, Lucy Isabelle Marsh, George Gaskin, Elise Stevenson, Elizabeth Brice and Charles King, 1.

And now let's have some comments from the collectors. The first letter to reach me was from Allen G. Debus, of Glenview, Ill. Allen is only about 20, but his fervent interest in old records and the artists who made them shows that today's youngsters are able to appreciate music other than "swing" when they are given the chance.

Allen took the time and trouble to make three lists—the first, which I tabulated, containing his honest efforts to list the performers in the relative order of their importance, without regard to his own preferences; the second, a "purely personal" tabulation, and the third classifying the artists according to the number of records he has by each.

In the "unprejudiced" list, Debus lined them up as follows: 1—Murray; 2—Collins; 3—Harlan; 4—Burr—Campbell; 5—Spencer; 6—Bert Williams; 7—Ada Jones; 8—Macdonough; 9—Porter; 10—Quinn; 11—Stanley; 12—Golden; 13—Dudley; 14—Stewart. His list contained the same names as my original one, although not in the same order, except that he dropped Hooley to make room for Bert Williams, the famous Negro comedian whom it had not occurred to me to think of as a pioneer recording artist at all. However, since Williams made records with his partner, George Walker, for Victor as long ago as 1901, he has a right to be on the list.

"I seriously believe," Allen remarked, "that Bert Williams should be given a high place on any list of the great recorders. He certainly made some of the most entertaining records I have ever listened to. Perhaps Sir Harry Lauder should be given a place in the top 15 also." To the latter remark, I would reply that Lauder should rank near the head of any list of the great pioneer British recording artists, but the Hobbies voting was intended to apply only to Americans.

Allen's second list, based on his personal prejudices, again puts Billy Murray at the top. (The "election," incidentally, was virtually a first-place landslide for the erstwhile "Denver Nightingale." He was on every list. Sixth place was the lowest anyone rated him, and only one other collector placed him as low as third.) Others are: 2—Collins; 3—Harlan; 4—Spencer; 5—Williams; 6—Dave Montgomery and Fred Stone—7—Ada Jones; 8—Quinn; 9—Joe Weber and Lew Fields; 10—Roberts; 11—Myers; 12—Norworth; 13—Blanche Ring; 14—Bayes; 15—Favor. Artists with most titles in Debus' record collection are: Murray, 88; Collins, 68, and Harlan, 66.

Allen's listing of Nora Bayes in his "personal preference" grouping, which was not included in the tabulation, reminds me of something I had previously overlooked—that Miss Bayes actually tied Bob Roberts for last place on the Supreme 15 classification. Both got 26 points. Strictly speaking, however, she was not a pioneer recording artist and does not belong on the list.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

FOR SALE: Stella disc music box with 45 seventeen inch records.

Old classical and old popular airs. Solid oak console. In excellent working order. Price, crated for shipment, F.O.B. Hobe Sound, Florida.
$300.00
Subject to previous sale.

ROBERT GLASSFORD
Hobe Sound, Florida

A. V. BORNAND
Music Boxes Bought and Sold
Expert Repairing
Parts

333 - 5th Avenue - Pelham 65, New York
ap64p

omissions—hundreds of omissions—many of which were records whose existence was unknown when Bauer's book was published. For the present revision, therefore, I am concentrating my efforts on Bauer's original work. The revised edition will attempt to list ALL THE RECORDS OF THE LATERAL-CUT DISC TYPE MADE BY IMPORTANT VOCAL ARTISTS BEFORE Jan. 1, 1910. As it is not a commercial enterprise, the revision will be sold at only enough above the actual cost to reimburse me for the expense incurred.

"HOW CAN YOU HELP? This book will be for the use and benefit of all collectors. It is a cooperative enterprise and only if all collectors take time out to help can it be a real success. I would like to urge all of you who own or have access to a copy of Bauer's original Historical Records to list for me all records which fall within the scope of the present revision and which are not in Historical Records. When listing, be sure to include (1) catalog number; (2) title, artist and composer; (3) serial number; (4) type of label. Those of you who are not familiar with Bauer's book can help by sending lists of all vocal (classical, not popular) Zonophones, early Black and Silver Columbias, Berliner, Pre-Dog Victors and any other unusual record which might fall within the scope of the book. This applies to foreign as well as domestic issues.

Sincerely yours,
William R. Moran.

1335 Olive Lane,
La Canada, Cal.

WANTED RECORDS

Columbia Grand Opera by the following singers: Suzanne Adams, Campanari, Edouard de Reszke, Charles Gilbert, Scotti, Schumann-Heink & Sembrich. (Ten-inch size only)

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders
Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by this artist, especially her Carmen arias on 40075.

Phonograph Record Catalogs, Monthly supplements, etc.

ALWAYS WANT

The following issues of VOICE OF THE VICTOR a trade magazine published by Victor:
Anything prior to No. 8, Vol. VII, Sept. 1912
AND 1913: May, June, Sept., Oct. and Dec.;
1916: Jan.; 1917: March, Oct. and Dec.; 1918:
Jan., April, June-to-Dec.; 1919: Jan. to June and Nov.; 1922: Jan., March and Oct.; 1925:
Oct. Anything after "Late Fall." 1930.

FOR SALE

Record Catalogs & Supplements

French Pathe's complete recording of La Favorite on 21 double-sided 14 inch discs. (Three of the discs are missing).

Same company, same size and type of record — Pierre Cornille's famous tragedy Le Cid, enacted by artists of the Comedie Francaise. 17 double-sided discs of which one is missing.

STEPHEN FASSETT

% LEBOW

210 W. 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

COLLECTORS' VOTE ON "THE SUPREME FIFTEEN"

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

(Continued from the October Issue)

The second letter was from Angus Joss, of Joliet, Ill., and it was so well reasoned and interesting I wish I had space to quote it in full. Angus came closer to agreeing with my placement of artists than did any one else. He, too, gave a tie to first place, letting Billy Murray and Henry Burr share the honor. "It would be very hard," Joss said, "for me to decide between these two. I feel I know Billy best of the two and in his field I could not concede his place to anyone. Harry holds a place in my heart that I never can give to any other ballad singer. I have heard of more Burr than Murray fans and, if possible, they are more rabid."

Angus also gave Jones and Spencer a tie for second place. "I believe," he wrote, "Ada was the best woman singer whom I have ever heard. Operatic warblers sink into oblivion beside her matchless voice. . . . Spencer I regard as a genius of monolog and dialog."

Like me, Joss tied Collins and Harlan in third, remarking: "I prefer Collins to Harlan in performance, but if these two were separated into a Supreme 15 I would rate Harlan right beside Collins. . . . I care little for Harlan's solo work but his duologs and monologs place him in a class with Spencer."

Joss disagreed in my choice of Macdonough for fourth place. "I like Macdonough very much," he said, "but would interchange him with either your fifth or sixth choice." This remark gave Campbell and Stanley a tie for fourth, according to Joss. Of Campbell he said: "Al's solo work doesn't appeal so much to me, but his duet, trio and quartet work rank as high as Billy Murray's multiple hook-ups." Of Stanley: "Stanley is reduced in rank with me only because I have so few titles by him as compared with his predecessors in the list. . . . As a soloist alone he is very close to Billy, even in his comic ditties."

Choosing Porter for seventh place, Angus wrote: "I never could consider Porter a great singer, except in duet or quartet work. As a comedian he surely belongs in the seventh choice and I agree with you fully in this decision."

Joss also agreed with my placement of Billy Golden, saying: "Golden as a singer and comedian in Negro dialect has no peer. I believe he is even a shade ahead of Billy Murray in this field, but Golden is not a versatile artist like Billy, so I could not place him higher than eighth."

I had listed S. H. Dudley ninth, and Joss concurred. "Dudley's quartet work, aside from his solo work," he said, "places him at least in ninth place. His resonant voice adds luster to any multiple work. His quality of voice in comic solos does not approach Billy Murray's, but it is fine nevertheless."

Tenth place was given by Joss to Hooley, the unfortunate bass who was the only one of my choices to be pushed out of the ranks of the elect. "Hooley's scarce solos," he said, "make him a baritone favorite with me. His quartet work is very fine, even on a par with Porter's. What a firm foundation he was to any quartet! He is very close to Stanley in this respect, also."

Dan Quinn holds down eleventh place on Angus' list. "I haven't," he wrote, "enough of Quinn's solos to have become intensely fond of him. He was a fine comedian, but I agree with you that he can't rate a notch higher as things stand."

Angus also placed Stewart at the bottom of his list, saying: "I am fond of his monologs, but don't play them very often, as I want to regard him as a genius, and too constant playing might cause a slight boredom. I have nearly all his records."

(To be continued)

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

COLLECTORS' VOTE ON "THE SUPREME FIFTEEN"

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

(Continued from the November issue)

IT WAS NOT in the least a surprise to me that Billy Murray was voted by HOBBIES readers to be the greatest pioneer recording artist. Frankly, I should have regarded any other outcome of the tabulation as an upset. I was surprised, however, when Jimmy Martindale, of Brooklyn, who is one of Billy's most intimate friends and probably owns more Murray records than any other collector, decided not to place the beloved "Boss" alone on a pedestal, as I had anticipated, but to make a three-way tie of first place by letting Henry Burr and Ada Jones stand there with him.

"I think," Jimmy wrote, "your decision to tie Billy and Hank for first place is perfectly considered, but Ada Jones belongs there, too. Not only did Ada come into her greatest popularity at the time she teamed up with the Boss, but Billy, in my estimation, achieved his most marked public recognition as Ada's singing partner. . . . Ada and Billy seem to have supplemented each other in a perfect manner and their careers interlocked at a time when the public was most phonograph conscious. . . . Like yourself, I would personally have liked to have given the top role to the Boss all by 'hissself.' However, I do feel that he must share it not only with Hank but dear little Ada."

Jimmy's other choices are: 2—Collins and Harlan; 3—Macdonough; 4—Spencer; 5—Porter; 6—Stanley; 7—Stewart; 8—Walter Van Brunt; 9—Golden; 10—Quinn; 11—Campbell; 12—Bob Roberts.

"I think," he wrote, "that Walter is deserving of the No. 8 position. His recording rise was very rapid and he built up an extremely strong following." My own feeling is that Walter Van Brunt (known nowadays as Walter Scanlan) came along just a little too late to be considered a pioneer recording artist, and I had not therefore considered this good friend of mine for my list. I emphatically hold, however, that Walter belongs high on any list of the greatest all-time popular recording artists.

If I was surprised to find Jimmy Martindale making a three-way tie of first place, there was no surprise whatever in learning that Frank Glootd, of Chicago, placed the distinguished Mr. Murray in first place all to himself. Frank has a huge Murray collection—in fact, I doubt that he is strongly interested in any other recording artist—and if I were called on to name the most unqualifiedly enthusiastic Billy Murray admirer in the world, I'd even have to pass by Jimmy Martindale and myself shout the name of Frank Glootd.

"Billy Murray," the Chicagoan wrote, "is my choice for first place because, ever since my childhood and primary school days, he has been my favorite recording artist. I can never forget when I first heard his clear, golden tenor voice sing such popular songs as 'Honey Boy,' 'Cheyenne,' 'Casey Jones,' 'I Remember You,' and 'Meet Me in St. Louis, Louis,' just to name a few old items as reminders. I doubt if ever any other artist will equal Murray's career, making records dating from 1896 to 1942. . . . Murray was just a natural-born singer, and at no time in his early recording days did he two-time his name on record labels to fool the public, as some artists have done for income's sake. I see no reason why Billy Murray should not occupy No. 1 position on the Supreme 15."

Glootd's other choices are: 2—Ada Jones; 3—Collins and Harlan; 4—Burr; 5—Harry Tally; 6—Stanley; 7—J. W. Myers; 8—Campbell; 9—Golden; 10—Macdonough; 11—Dudley and Quinn; 12—Spencer and Stewart.

A. R. (Jack) Via, Jr., of South Boston, Va., is a jeweler, and he resorted to the language of his profession in explaining why he gave first place to—you've guessed it—Billy Murray.

"I nominate Billy for first place," Jack said. "He is unchallenged. He dominates the field as a diamond surpasses other gems. He is more versatile than any of the others and, I believe, would go over swell today."

Arthur Collins is the Virginian's choice for second place. "I place comedy ahead of ballads," Via explained, adding: "I like the 'coon songs' and their situations. I like the timbre of Collins' voice, his interpretations and his style. I do not especially care for Byron G. Harlan, except as an assistant to help Collins put over his songs, but they belong together."

"I give third place, almost ahead of Collins," Jack said. "To Billy Golden. He is one of my prime favorites. I guess I smile every time I think of him."

"Let's give fourth place to Bob Roberts," Jack continued. "I don't have so many records by him, but those I have are masterpieces. Eddie Norton should come along in here somewhere, so let's tie him with Roberts for fourth place."

"Let's give a lady a break. I think Ada Jones should come in fifth place. She seems to have attained Billy Murray's enunciation and interpretation, or 'styling,' maybe I should say."

"Although Uncle Josh laughed too much at his own stories," Via wrote, "I guess he was doing no more than the present applause system does for the radio gag man. I put him sixth."

"Len Spencer seems to fit in seventh place. The word 'versatile' should be used again for him, because he could take a variety of parts—speeches, recitations, descriptives and comedy."

Jack said he placed Harry Macdonough in eighth place as his first choice of ballad singers; Frank C. Stanley in ninth, and Henry Burr, tenth. Concerning his "low-rating" Burr, he said: "Placing him tenth probably will disgust lots of collectors. I know he is one of the tops, but I just don't like his solo voice. It needs vibrato. However, I think he is swell in duets and quartets." He listed Albert Campbell in eleventh place and Steve Porter in twelfth.

Joseph Fortgang, of New York, is, like Allen Debus, a record collector barely old enough to vote, if that. He has a program called "Vaudeville Isn't Dead," which he gives under the name of Joe Franklin from radio station WNEW, New York, at 6:35 each Sunday evening, playing old records of the types he collects. An ardent admirer of Henry Burr, he gives him a first place tie with Murray. His other choices are: 2—Collins; 3—Stanley (who, by the way, showed surprising strength, appearing on every list—certainly a striking proof of the permanent appeal of the great basso who has been dead 35 years); 4—Jones; 5—Harlan; 6—Spencer; 7—Porter; 8—Macdonough; 9—Harison; 10—Quinn; 11—Morton; 12—Roberts; 13—Campbell; 14—Tally.

Joe also said that if he were not required to stick to the pioneers, his all-time list would be: 1—Burr, Murray, Billy Jones and Ernest Hare; 2—Collins; 3—Sam Ash and Lewis James; 4—Irving Kaufman and Walter Scanlan; 5—Al Jolson; 6—George M. Cohan; 7—Ada Jones and Vaughn De Leath; 8—Stanley; 9—M. J. O'Connell and Elliott Shaw; 10—William J. Halley.

William A. Dyer, Jr., general manager of the Indianapolis Star, sent only a partial list. "I am enthusiastically for Billy Murray as No. 1," he said, "and would pair him with no one except, possibly, Ada Jones,"

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 114)

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

Early Regina 4 ft. coin-operated box, with 50 Edison cylinder records, running cond. $55.00
Early Weber piano, needs tuning repairs; similar to one pictured page 10 in Oct. Hobbies. Price $100.
Harp type early piano $150. Steinway square piano, excellent playing condition $125. Chicago light-wood Cottage Organ, excellent playing condition, shipped with or without high back $65.
Walnut, small box type organ, 3 ft., needs some repair to reeds $35. Excellent playing early melodeon with delicate legs $200. Swiss music box, needs governor repair $25; roll and parts to another box shipped with complete one for $10 extra.
Edison cylinder phonograph with large horn & records, needs slight repair $22.50. Dulcimer $6; flute $4.
No further description on these items; Send check and shipped F.O.B. from

Freeman Farm Antiques
Watkins Glen, N. Y.

Music Boxes For Christmas

1. Swiss, antique cylinder box, 14x7x5" high, cylinder playing 8 tunes. Entirely rebuilt, mechanically perfect, excellent tone. $5.00
2. Swiss antique cylinder box, 14x7x5" high with 5" cylinder playing 6 tunes. Mechanically perfect, very old box playing Swiss folk music. 80.00
3. Mahogany box, sub-drawer construction, 20x11"x11" high with three 7 1/2" cylinders each playing 6 selections. Good condition. 150.00
4. Symphonium disc type beautiful old buried walnut case with inlay, 20x10"x10" high. Double comb exceptionally fine soft tone, with 50 extra discs all in good condition. 125.00
5. Large, hand carved mahogany music box, 41x10"x12" high with matching table 48x20"x30" high, Louis VI legs. Has 7, 16 1/2" cylinders each playing 6 selections. Excellent program of representative music. Made to order and one of the finest instruments still in existence in perfect condition. Value $2000. Any reasonable offer given consideration.
6. Mahogany utility box, 14x8x4" inlaid with various rare woods, highly polished. Plays 6 opera selections on small cylinder movement. A beautiful and useful gift. 80.00
7. Very rare cigarette box, 10x5", cut from solid piece of walnut and entirely covered with exquisite fine hand carving. Plays two selections. 80.00

MANY OTHERS AVAILABLE.

Further Details Upon Request.

A. BORNAND

333 Fifth Avenue Pelham, New York

THE NEW 1946
No. 37
"SHOOTERS BIBLE"
Bigger, Better Than Ever!
512 Pages
9,000 PICTURES!
OVER 20,000 ITEMS!
COMPLETELY REVISED!
still only $1

In size, contents and quality, nothing to compare with it. Completely revised. New Guns, New Ammunition Lists. Many New Items. Latest Factory Prices. 50 Page Book Section. New Articles by famous writers. Limited Edition. Send DO LAR Now. Post Paid.

STOEGER ARMS CORP.
 507 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 17, N. Y.

Antique Firearms
Edged Weapons — Armor

Bought and Sold
 Illustrated 145-page catalog of pistols, swords, daggers, 25 cents.

ROBERT ABELS
 860 Lexington Ave. Box H New York 21

Gun Bargains

12 Ga. Winchester Lever action shot gun 24". Barrel 5 shot, excellent condition $27.50
 Double barrel muzzle loading shot guns. Fair and good condition at $4 and $6 each.
 Single barrel percussion pistol about 70 cal. 6". Barrel, excellent condition. A beauty at $12.50.
 Colt 41 single shot Derringer, excellent condition and very scarce going at $12. Colt 38. 6 shot swing out cylinder, 8 1/2" barrel, blue steel revolver, excellent condition $33.

ALBERT LEE, Box 58, HARDIN, KY.

ANTIQUE ARMS

Wanted and For Sale

Old pistols, guns, swords, knives, war relics, weapons of all kinds. Will buy one piece or whole collection.

ROBERT P. WOOTTON
 514 N. State St. Chicago, Ill.

WANTED TO BUY

DO YOU KNOW of any Firearms Collections which I may purchase? Generous Reward for your assistance.—James Serven, Santa Ana, Calif. f126501

OLD, OBSOLETE or antique firearms, edged weapons, shooter's accessories.—H. A. Brand, 1008 Ingalls Bldg., Cincinnati 2, Ohio. ap12468

WANT RARE Pistol collections. Cash. Describe and price.—Miller Bedford, New London, Ohio. mh12416

BIG PISTOLS, little pistols and the ones in between. Also brass or copper powder flasks. Drop me a card with description and price.—Col. Charles Fritz, 2169 Glenside, Norwood, Ohio. d3063

WILL TRADE Colt Dragoons and Wells Fargo models for Engraved Colts and "Kentuckys".—James Serven, Santa Ana, Calif. my12468

WANTED: INFORMATION relative to Dr. Henry Fitcher, The Pitcher Automatic Repeating Arms Co. or to the pilot model or plans of same made by that company. Contact Harry Wandrus, 2454 N. 24th St., Milwaukee 6, Wisc. d3003

ANTIQUE PISTOLS: Single specimens or entire collection.—Locke, 3607 Ault Park Rd., Cincinnati 8, Ohio. ja12027

WANTED: Authentic "Kentucky" rifles and "Kentucky" pistols.—Herman P. Dean, Box 1240, Huntington, W. Va. f12726

FLINTLOCK RIFLES & pistols wanted. Long rifles with Hexagonal or Octagonal Barrels; maple walnut or pine stock continuing under barrel to muzzle; ornamental or plain; marked or unmarked; wrought iron or brass compartment in stock. Any flintlock pistol. Please describe accurately and state price.—Antiques Buyer, Quakertown, Pa. jly120041

WANTED: BOOKS, Articles, pamphlets, etc., pertaining to Damascening and the art of sword manufacture; particularly the fabrication of Damascus Swords.—S. J. Gwoosh, President, Excel Automatic Products, Inc., 165 Vanderpool Street, Newark 5, N. J. mh6048

SWAP, BUY OR SELL: Have over 40 guns, modern and antique, Colts, etc. List 10c—Sully Levitt USMSGs, Rt. 3, New Orleans, La. d3872

FOREIGN FLINTLOCK Pistols wanted. Please describe and price.—James Serven, Santa Ana, Calif. f12426

WANTED: SINGLE pieces or collections of Antique Arms. Fair prices paid. Also liberal commissions paid for information leading to purchase of a collection.—Kimball Arms Company, Woburn, Mass. s124431

BEST PRICES for single shot target rifles, molds, powder measures, etc.—Chester Nikodym, 1616 NBC Bldg., Cleveland 14, Ohio. n120021

WANTED FOR CASH: Old pistols, rifles, bladed weapons, war relics.—Robert Abels Shop, 860 Lexington Avenue, New York 21, New York. ja128001

FRIENDS. BEING one of the largest dealers in the world's rarest guns, we ask you to submit prices and conditions on your rare or beautiful guns. We buy exceptionally rare or fine pieces, scarce Colts, scarce S&W's, fancy guns, percussion pistols, flint pistols, fancy muzzle loaders or extra heavy muzzle loaders, rare military pistols and rare automatic pistols. Anything of exceptional quality or merit we want. State price and condition first letter. Keep in mind that we are about the largest buyers in the country of Entire Gun Collections—there is a very good reason.—Miller Bedford, New London, Ohio. f120084

FOR SALE

ANTIQUE & USED firearms, molds, gunsmith tools, accessories, ammunition. Send 10c for list.—H. A. Brand, 1008-A Ingalls Building, Cincinnati, Ohio. f12069

ANTIQUE PISTOLS, rifles, armor, edged weapons; 145 pp. illus. cat., 25c.—Robert Abels, 860 Lexington Ave., New York 21, N. Y. ja128001

ANTIQUE FIREARMS. Send dime for list Kentucky, percussion revolvers, military arms. "Satisfied customers since 1933".—Calvin Hetrick, New Enterprise, Pa. f3042

FOR SALE: Stevens-Ballard .25-20 rifle, $60. Engraved T. Parker 10 gauge double hammer $34.50. .45 Caliber muzzle loading half stock rifle $32.50. E. G. Bonehill 10 gauge double hammer $24. .38 Special OMT new 6" barrel, bead sights $44. Winchester single shot Hornet, BSA barrel, custom built stock, new 330 Weaver scope $98.—Wm. J. Seymour, Hinton, Iowa. d1243

ANTIQUE & OBSOLETE firearms for Collectors. List for 25c (coin) refunded first order.—William F. Flynn, 2314 Van Brunt Boulevard, Kansas City 1, Mo. au122511

GUNS!!! MY 52 page catalog for collectors and shooters' lists more than 500 antique and modern guns and pistols. In addition, have a large assortment of swords, daggers, bayonets, cartridges for collectors, gun accessories and parts, loading tools and molds, war relics, including a great many items from the present war, books, and other collectors' items. Price 25c coin.—Martin B. Retting, H., Shokan, N. Y. s120051

SHILOH BATTLEFIELD minie balls 20c each; 6 different for $1 (coin) Postpaid. No lists.—G. Edward Goble, 602 Austin Ave., Sheffield, Ala. d3162

GUN LIST FOR STAMP.—Guy Salisbury, Spicer, Minn. n12483

PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21)

for their, to me, immortal skits and duets. I base my choice of Billy Murray not so much because of his long and singular record as because of a peculiar freshness in his voice, which, combined with his wit and versatility, made everything that he did—dialect or straight—good. He really knew how to put over a song. Eddie Cantor has a touch of the same genius, without the voice and without the variety."

Bill said he voted for Henry Burr for No. 2 spot, "on the record, though I'm not over-fond of ballads." He tied Collins and Harlan for third place; gave Len Spencer fourth, and wound up after listing Stanley, Porter and Dudley, fifth, sixth and seventh.

John L. Norton, Sr., the "Wizard of Woodymay," of Boston, admitted that he cast his vote largely on the basis of preferences acquired when he listened, as a small boy, to wax cylinder records in the '90's. For this reason, the names of some of his choices will be unfamiliar to many present-day collectors. This is especially true of his fourth place entry, J. Aldrich Libbey, who famous for singing "After the Ball" in vaudeville 50 years ago, and A. D. Madeira, in seventh place, who made no records after the very early 1900's.

"There is nothing," Mr. Norton said, "for me to add to your 15 popular artists. As far as John Q. Public was concerned, you are 100 per cent correct, but that ain't the way I heard them. Remember that I heard them in the 'early earlies.' Billy Murray wasn't on any soft wax records, but most of my favorites were."

This is Mr. Norton's list: 1—Collins; 2—Will F. Denny and Ed. Favor; 3—Dan Quinn; 4—Libbey; 5—Murray; 6—Madeira; 7—Joe Natus; 8—Stanley; 9—Golden; 10—Dudley; 11—Hooley; 12—Helen Trix; 13—Roberts; 14—Manuel Romain.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

If You're Moving

Don't forget to send a post card to HOBBIES' Subscription Dept., 2810 S. Michigan, Chicago, Ill. Mail your card at least two weeks before the date of issue. Because of the paper shortage we cannot duplicate lost copies.

all the Phonodiscs, and in the duets the first names of all the singers are abbreviated. But, in the solos, the first names are given in full in the case of every singer with the single exception of E. Tetrassini, who remains just that. This I consider suspicious, to say the least! But perhaps the strongest argument of all is this: why should Eva Tetrassini, a famous star in comfortable circumstances and the wife of Cleofonte Campanini, a popular conductor, make records for a small, second-rate company like Phonodisc whose artists, with the exception of Burzio, were all good but minor singers. Also, why should she make her duets with such perfect naughts as Acerbi, Baldassari, Santini and so on? Furthermore, why is it that, while Eva was a dramatic soprano, all the selections recorded by 'E. Tetrassini' belong to the lyric-colorature repertoire? (As far as can be ascertained, not one of the operas associated with Eva's career is among those represented on the E. Tetrassini discs.) This is a point that caused comment among record collectors even before Elvira was heard of.

"But somehow I feel sure Eva must have recorded. Perhaps she will turn up on Zonophone some day. More definite, however, is the Fonotipia advertisement, which Guy Ferrant showed me in Paris in 1939, listing Eva Tetrassini's name in full. Thus I feel sure Eva must have recorded. Nevertheless, with a heavy heart, I am scratching out her name at the head of my lists of Phonodisc and Columbia records and substituting that of Elvira. And remember that I was the first to draw attention to the Phonodiscs of 'E. Tetrassini' in the Gramophone (a magazine published in England) about 1936, at which time I attributed them to Eva, and naturally it goes against the grain a bit to admit my mistake. Yet in the face of the information which has recently come to light, I must declare myself definitely in favor of Elvira."

Edison Cylinder

and
Diamond Disc Records also
WOODYMAY RECORD COMPANY
Knights of the Turntable
73 Roxbury Street, Boston (19) Mass.

MUSIC BOXES

and EXTRA DISCS for sale

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Broadway and Rt. 3
Hanover, P. O. Box 342, Mass.

d54o

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

COLLECTORS' VOTE ON "THE SUPREME FIFTEEN"

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

(Continued from the December issue)

Henry Hamblen, of Nashville, belongs with Mr. Norton as the only collector who put Billy Murray any lower than a tie for first place. "I would unhesitatingly vote Billy the No. 1 place but for one thing," he wrote. "That very thing is what, no doubt, makes him the idol of so many. He will be singing right along melodiously and drop into talk, which I despise." Henry listed 20 artists, as follows:

1—Burr; 2—J. W. Myers; 3—Murray; 4—Macdonough; 5—Harry Talley; 6—Campbell; 7—James F. Harrison; 8—Harry Anthony; 9—Quinn; 10—Ada Jones; 11—Spencer; 12—Stanley; 13—Corinne Morgan; 14—Dudley; 15—Roberts; 16—Collins; 17—Harlan; 18—Lucy Marsh; 19—George Gaskin; 20—Elise Stevenson.

Charles B. Clark, a retired vaudeville performer, of Wellington, Ohio, sent an interesting list, but, not clearly understanding the "pioneer" stipulation, included a good many artists beyond the time period which I had intended.

He wrote: "I should name Billy Murray as No. 1 on my entertainment list, and others as follows: 2—Nora Bayes; 3—Jack Norworth; 4—Henry Burr; 5—Frances White; 6—Arthur Fields and Al Bernard; 7—Sam Ash; 8—Billy Golden, Joe Hughes and Jim Marlowe; 9—Marion Harris; 10—Steve Porter; 11—Frank C. Stanley; 12—Nat M. Wills; 13—Billy Jones and Ernie Hare; 14—Gus Van and Joe Schenk; 15—Elizabeth Brice and Charles King."

Ray Matschullat, of Omaha, did not give a complete list, but said: "Without a doubt my favorite recording artist is Billy Murray. When I was little my parents had several of his records. In one form or another, I have over 200 of his records. With the poor methods they had of recording in those days, his voice always came through with flying colors."

"My favorite woman singer of those days," Matschullat said, "is Marion Harris. To my way of thinking, she had a voice in a million."

"Next to Billy Murray and Marion Harris, my favorites are Aileen Stanley, Nora Bayes, Collins and Harlan and Johnny Marvin."

Charlie Hodgdon, of Salisbury, Mass., got his list to me a few days before I was ready to begin writing this article. Knowing his great fondness for the records of Harry Macdonough, Steve Porter and Bill Hooley, I imagined he would choose one of them for first place, but he, too, picked Billy Murray, saying: "Billy is my choice because of his many successful years before the public, even as late as the jitterbug era, without one ounce of criticism. Never have I heard anyone say he didn't like Billy Murray's singing."

The following are excerpts from Charlie's comments on his other choices: "2. Harry Macdonough—This great tenor of the Hayden and Orpheus Quartets ranks No. 2 with me. I have never heard finer diction than Mr. Macdonough's. He was an excellent singer of ballads, standard songs and light opera."

"3. Henry Burr—to many people he was tops in ballad singing. He was also before the public for a long number of years, and a great favorite with all. I especially like his duet singing with Al Campbell."

"4. Steve Porter—My own favorite. If he had included a few popular songs and ballads, I believe he would have had a great many more fans. He was a finished musician, master of dialects, versatile singer and a good pinch-hitter on any team."

"5. Byron G. Harlan—This sweet-voiced tenor is my choice for No. 5. His 'rube' sketches were tops, reminding me more of the old New England Yankee than any other recorder."

"6. John Bieling—Without any doubt the sweetest voice I have ever heard on records. His fine work in the Hayden and American Quartets and duets with Varn Brunt and Macdonough are enough to rate him No. 6."

"7. Albert Campbell—His fine work in the Peerless Quartet and Sterling Trio and the Campbell-Burr duets rate Al No. 7, not to mention his fine personality, which all of his comrades praise. I'm glad he is alive and still going strong."

"8. William F. Hooley—Basso of the Hayden, American, Orpheus, Lyric and other leading quartets. What more need be said of old Bill, the King of Quartet Basses?"

"9. S. H. Dudley—For years the editor of the Victor record catalog and very capable baritone of the Hayden Quartet. Old Sam rates No. 9."

"10. F. C. Stanley—No one before the public so short a time ever made a better impression than Mr. Stanley. As organizer of the Peerless Quartet and maker of fine duets with leading singers of his day, he rates No. 10."

"11—Billy Golden; 12—Cal Stewart; 13—Bob Roberts; 14—Ada Jones; 15—Arthur Collins."

And so ends the fan mail occasioned by my "Are These the Supreme Fifteen?" article. I hope, and believe, the results will prove interesting to HOBBIES readers. If I had received hundreds, or thousands, of letters instead of a dozen or so, the result might have been different, but I doubt it. I imagine this small cross-section gives a good idea of what collectors think of the old-time recording artists. At any rate, I have tabulated the figures as accurately as possible and reported them honestly.

HARRY DICHTER

5458 Montgomery Ave., Phila. 31, Penna.

EARLY AMERICAN MUSIC WANTED

I will pay carriage charges on any material shipped to me for inspection, and my cash offer. ap64o

Want List sent on request.

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists. tfo

SINGLE RARITIES AND ENTIRE COLLECTIONS PURCHASED

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Congress Building

Miami, Florida

Andre Bauge Still Alive

In his article in the December 1945 issue of HOBBIES, Leo Riemens reported that this fine French baritone had been killed in an air raid. More recently, however, Leo was informed by Aline Vallandri, the Pathé soprano, that Bauge had not been killed after all, though his house in Paris was destroyed. Bauge, incidentally, is the son of the operetta star, Tariol-Baugé, whose records are known to American collectors. André himself recorded accoustically for HMV and later made a series of electrics for Pathé. Like his mother, he has appeared in operetta, but has sung also at the Opera Comique. During the first world war he was decorated for bravery in action, and was later elected President of the Société des Artistes Ancien Combattants. Some years ago, one of Bauge's Pathé's won a prize and was later issued here by Columbia: Plaisir d'Amour (Martin) and Romance du Bard from Ariodante (Mehul), number P-9155-M. This recording reveals a light voice of considerable charm and, while his rendition of Plaisir d'Amour is not on a par with Giliert's it is nevertheless very good. In the lovely Ariodante air, he is heard to better advantage, for unfamiliar music and sensitive singing combine to make this an extremely attractive recording.

A. V. BORNAND
Music Boxes Bought and Sold
Expert Repairing
Parts

333 - 5th Avenue - Pelham 65, New York
ap64p

HARRY DICHTER
5458 Montgomery Ave., Phila. 31, Penna.
EARLY AMERICAN MUSIC WANTED
I will pay carriage charges on any material shipped to me for inspection, and my cash offer.
Want List sent on request.
ap64e

Edison Cylinder
and
Diamond Disc Records to WOODYMAY RECORD COMPANY
Knights of the Turntable
73 Roxbury Street, Boston (19) Mass.

REGINA
MUSIC BOXES
and EXTRA DISCS for sale

LLOYD G. KELLEY
Broadway and Rt. 3
Hanover, P. O. Box 342, Mass.
d54e

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists Edward Warren Meeker. I.

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

Although Edward Warren Meeker won just fame as a Favorite Pioneer Recording Artist, his recorded voice also was heard by millions of people who had no idea who he was.

Mr. Meeker, who died aged 63, on April 19, 1937, at his home in Orange, N. J., had several other distinctions, but in this respect of being a "mystery man" whose voice was heard throughout the world he was almost unique.

The mystery, however, is easily explained. Besides an accomplished comedian, specialization in Irish comic songs and Negro dialect specialties and making many records under his own name, Mr. Meeker was for years the Edison company's "announcer."

From the beginning of the phonograph business until 1908 or 1909, it was the custom of most companies to have a recorded musical selection prefaced by a spoken announcement, like this:

"'Rainbow.' Indian Love Song. Sung by Ada Jones and Billy Murray. Ed-i-SON rec-CORD!" It was Ed Meeker who, during the last several years of the announcement custom, gave the preliminary information on many hundreds of records, regardless of by whom the Edison cylinder was sung or played.

Even after the announcements, which had been originally used to prevent unscrupulous persons from duplicating and re-selling standard brands of records had been done away with, Meeker remained for many years as an Edison staff artist, whose versatility, ingenuity and powers of mimicry were greatly appreciated.

COLLECTORS RECORD SHOP
825 Seventh Avenue
New York 19, N. Y.

Re-Issues and Re-Recordings of rare out of print operatic, theatrical & speech records.

Free Mailing List Upon Inquiry
ja64

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists to

SINGLE RARITIES AND ENTIRE COLLECTIONS
—PURCHASED—

DIXIE RECORD CLUB
Congress Building Miami, Florida

EDWARD MEEKER

During his entire career, the comedian's activities were restricted, to an almost unparalleled extent, in favor of just one recording career—Edison. In 1909, he made one Victor record, an amusing rendition of Jean Havez's "coon song," "Broke," which appeared on the back of a Billy Murray rendition of "Gee, I Wish I Had a Girl." The number was 16291. Aside from that solitary exception, Meeker never, so far as I have been able to learn, sang for any company but Edison, and I have long wondered how it happened that he made that one lone Victor record.

How did Ed Meeker get his start with Edison in the first place? According to what "Bill" Hays, a veteran Edison recording expert who is still on the job for Thomas A. Edison, Inc., told John L. Norton, Sr., of the Woodymay Record Company, Meeker's engagement as an announcer was caused by the discovery that he had a robust voice which did not in the least live up to his inappropriate last name. To quote Mr. Norton's account of what Mr. Hays told him:

"Ed Meeker was a workman at the Edison plant. One day he was painting window casings near the recording room and carrying on a conversation with another workman in a very loud voice. They needed someone for an announcer, as Collins (Arthur Collins, the 'Preacher and the Bear' singer who had been doing announcing for Edison) wasn't always available, so they brought Meeker in, gave him a few tests and his laborious days were over. Meeker died . . . of ulcers of the stomach."

A brief summary of Mr. Meeker's career, printed in a New York newspaper on the day after his death, may be quoted here. It incorrectly gives his first name as Edwin:

"Edwin Warren Meeker, announcer whose voice was familiar in thousands of American homes long before the

ROBERT GLASSFORD
Hobe Sound, Florida

FOR SALE

Accordian. Hohner, 120-bass, 2 shifts, original German reeds, Argentine type curved keyboard, perfect condition, attractively decorated white box, $300.

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

WANTED RECORDS

Columbia Grand Opera by the following singers: Suzanne Adams, Campanari, Edouard de Reszke, Charles Glibert, Scotti, Schumann-Heink & Sembrich. (Ten-inch size only)

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders with Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels. International Zonophone Company: Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by this artist, especially her Carmen arias on 40075.

Phonograph Record Catalogs, Monthly supplements, etc.

ALWAYS WANT

The following issues of VOICE OF THE VICTOR a trade magazine published by Victor: Anything prior to No. 8, Vol. VII, Sept. 1918 AND 1918: May, June, Sept., Oct. and Dec.; 1916: Jan.; 1917: March, Oct. and Dec.; 1918: Jan., April, June-to-Dec.; 1919: Jan. to June and Nov.; 1922: Jan., March and Oct.; 1925: Oct. Anything after "Late Fall," 1930.

FOR SALE

Record Catalogs & Supplements

French Pathe's complete recording of La Favorite on 21 double-sided 14 inch discs. (Three of the discs are missing).

Same company, same size and type of record — Pierre Corneille's famous tragedy Le Cid, enacted by artists of the Comedie Francaise. 17 double-sided discs of which one is missing.

STEPHEN FASSETT

944 Monroe Lane Woodmere, N. Y.

Persons ordering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

dawn of radio, died yesterday at his home, 195 Main Street, Orange. He was 63.

"Phonograph records made by the Edison Co. were his medium. It was his voice, when recording was in its infancy, that spoke the closing words of each disc: 'This is an Edison record.'"

"A Spanish-American War veteran and a former minstrel trouper, Mr. Meeker was associated with the Edison Co. for 35 years, both as a singer and an announcer.

"A native of Orange, he was the son of Enoch Meeker, noted in that city as the tallest policeman in its history.

"Mr. Meeker made his stage debut with Miller's Twentieth Century Minstrels and later toured with Hoyt's Minstrels. In the World War he was an entertainer at Camp Dix.

"His greatest thrill, he once said, was the privilege of giving a song recital before Thomas A. Edison on the inventor's 75th birthday.

"Recently, he had appeared as a singer and entertainer in night clubs.

"Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Margaret T. Meeker; a son, Frank, and a daughter, Mrs. Madeline Brown, all of Orange.

"Funeral service will be held today at 10 a. m. in St. John's Roman Catholic Church. Burial will be in St. John's Cemetery, Orange."

The foregoing newspaper "story" contains some inaccuracies. Announcements, which were finally done away with because customers complained, with little justification, that they took up too much space which might be devoted to music, were not made on Edison discs, but on cylinders, and they were at the beginning, instead of the end, of the record. The announcer did not say, "This is an Edison record."

Mrs. Meeker, who says her husband was born January 22, 1874, told me he was associated with Edison as an announcer and singer for 32 years, retiring only because of poor health.

He may have been used as an announcer for a considerable time before his talents were utilized as a recording artist, but the first yearly Edison record catalog I have in which Meeker records are listed is one issued in April, 1907.

Judging by the numbers of the comparatively few Meeker records on sale in 1907, the announcer-comedian's first solo cylinder was 9234, "What's the Use of Knocking When a Man is Down?" This must have been made early in 1906.

Other Meeker solos were: 9526, "Do, Re, Mi, Fa, Sol, La, Si, Do"; 9310, "Good-Bye, Mr. Greenback"; and 9402, "Song of the Nations," in which he announced "Wacht am Rhein," "Wearing of the Green," and "The Red, White and Blue," whistled by Joe Belmont.

In addition, he participated in one vocal trio record made early in 1907, No. 9471, "Whistle It" from Victor Herbert's sensationally successful operetta, "The Red Mill." Billy Murray and Helen Trix were the other trio members.

This reminds me of the fact that Meeker was something of a "lone wolf" during his recording career. Except in descriptive specialties, he was seldom called on to team up with other artists. I can think of only one duet in which he took part—"Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Shean," which he and Steve Porter sang on Edison discs and cylinders in 1922. It was a much better interpretation than the one sung for Victor by the original Gallagher and Shean themselves.

The first record I ever heard by Edward Meeker was listened to when I was a very small boy indeed and was an Edison cylinder rendition of Raymond Brown's one-time well-known "coon shout," "I Wish't I Was in Heaven Sittin' Down." The ditty told of the colored hero's desire to be where he would be perfectly happy, "with old St. Peter handin' me a crown," and I was charmed with the singer's gusto and ability to be highly amusing.

MUSIC BOXES and singing birds. Due to the termination of the war my full time is required in my regular business, therefore I will in the future take care of my regular customers only as my time to repair music boxes will be limited.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. mh120621

500 EDISON cylinder records for sale. 25c ea. in random lots of 10. $1.25 ea. for any specified title Sacrifice Violano Virtuoso. Perfect condition. Best offer over $275, cost $3200. Send Quarter for photo & description, most ingenious mechanical musical instrument ever made.—W. B. Mollard, Westfield, N. Y. f3255

WANTED: MUSIC box discs, 5½" diameter for Symphonion; key-winder watch.—Mosoriak, 615 Patterson Road, Dayton 9, Ohio. ap3801

RECORDS

COLLECTOR HAS 4000 choice vocal operatic records for sale. Send for free list.—Louis Bullaro, 2432 Washington St., San Francisco 15, Calif. f3252

WANTED: Any cylinder record catalogs or Edison catalogs during cylinder era.—Lt. H. D. Holt, Camp McCain, Miss. mh3612

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f12234

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap128001

OUT-OF-PRINT RECORDINGS, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City 19, N. Y. ja12069

WANTED: REGINA 27" discs, Mira 15½" discs.—George Schalt, 8 Walnut Ave., Cranford, N. J. mh3291

CLASSICAL RECORDS for sale. Send for list.—H. P. Silverman, 216 Denham Bldg., Denver 2, Colo. ap3291

MISCELLANEOUS

WANT CONTACT buyer in or near Dayton. Private collection, rare records.—Mrs. L. A. Crittenton, 926 Five Oaks, Dayton, O. ap3042

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main St. 12, Los Angeles, Calif. ap3402

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, every description. Meerschau pipes, steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Mayer, 2911 Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. d12219

WANT: UNUSUAL music boxes. Describe fully and quote price to Brown County Ridgecrafters, Nashville, Ind. f3081

PLAYER ORGAN records, 100 classical. (Wilcox & White Co.)—Mark Markle, Box 474, Ojai, California. my4642

REGINA, AUTOMATIC, music box wanted; A1 condition, reasonably priced.—Box 224, McPherson, Kansas. f127

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Edward Warren Meeker. II.

(Continued from the February issue)

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

That was always the secret of Meeker's success (humor). He had an excellent baritone voice, sonorous and resonant, but it was his highly developed sense of humor and knack of making people laugh that won him recognition as one of the prime favorites among Edison staff artists. As for Meeker's sense of humor, I believe I told in the biographical sketch of Dan W. Quinn how Ed, in the latter days of the Edison company, roguishly tried to convince the late Billy Jones and Ernie Hare that Mr. Quinn had made 150 or so cylinder records at one engagement — a clearly impossible feat. Mr. Quinn told me of the incident with great glee. It is sad to think that Meeker, Quinn, Jones and Hare are now all gone.

One of Edward Meeker's outstanding characteristics was his facility in dialect work and his acting ability, which made him the principal figure of many of the vaudeville sketches recorded for Edison by the staff organization which was known as the Empire Vaudeville Company.

Some months ago I outlined the career of George Washington Johnson, the first Negro recording artist, and told how his records were dropped from the various companies' catalogs after he had been hanged for the murder of his wife.

In 1917, however, Edison decided to reinstate Johnson's famous "Laughing Song," and Meeker was chosen to take the principal part in the new recording. The record begins with the members of an amateur minstrel troupe in despair because they have no one to sing the Laughing Song. Then someone remembers that "Meeker is in the billiards" room and he is called down. To me, he does a much better job of singing this hilarious ditty than poor Johnson himself did. Another famous Johnson number was the "The Whistling Coon." This also was revived by Edison at about the same time as the Laughing Song. The record begins with a group of soldiers singing and swapping jokes. Suddenly a nondescript Negro (Meeker) appears and when asked his name bashfully says he is known as "Whistling Pete." He is called on for a song and finally, after vain protests, sings and whistles "The Whistling Coon," being joined by the other member of the cast at the end. As "Whistling Pete" shuffles away, a bugler softly plays "Reveille." No doubt, Meeker's Spanish-American War and Camp Dix experiences were reflected in this arrangement.

It was not only in Negro dialect, however, that Edward Meeker, the ex-minstrel, was proficient. Some of his best Edison records were in Irish brogue. Two which have given me great pleasure are "The A. O. H.'s of the U. S. A." and "He's Living the Life of Reilley." In the busy war days, I told Mayor Earl Riley, of Portland, Oregon, about having the latter record. He was greatly amused and said that if he should again find himself in Roanoke he hoped I would play it on my radio program from Station WDBJ especially for him. His Honor indicated that, as mayor of the Pacific Coast's most congested defense area, the life he was living was by no means that of Reilley!

(TO BE CONTINUED)

HARRY DICHTER

5458 Montgomery Ave., Phila. 13, Penna.

EARLY AMERICAN MUSIC WANTED

I will pay carriage charges on any material shipped to me for inspection, and my cash offer

Want List sent on request.

Ja74

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM
HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

MUSIC BOXES

all types

BOUGHT, SOLD and REPAIRED.

ap64p

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

LOIS C. FLEMING

151 S. Third Street Catawissa, Penna.

I HAVE SEVERAL ORGANS ON HAND THAT PLAY AND ARE IN VERY FINE CONDITION.

Priced at $25.00 each.

Write for Photo and Description
Crating and Transportation Extra.

mhp

We have a stock of fine
accordions for sale

WRITE

mhc

Tose School of Music

G. Tose, Director

4282 Archer Avenue

Chicago (32) Illinois

CORRECTIONS

In the Historical Record Reviews that appeared in the February issue, there were three typographical errors which require correction:

1. The correct number of Marianne Brandt's Pathe cylinder of the Trinklied from Lucrezia Borgia is 19261 not 1926.
2. Heinrich Hensel was, of course, born in 1874, not 1847.
3. The Columbia originals of the Boninsegna arias were recorded in 1910, not 1919.

RECORDS

COLLECTOR HAS 4000 choice vocal operatic records for sale. Send for free list.—Louis Bullaro, 2432 Washington St., San Francisco 15, Calif. my3042

I HAVE duplicate operatic records for sale. This is the only time in 1946 that I make this offer. Write.—Thomas McMillan, 179 Spring Street, Rochester 8, New York. mh1402

WANTED: ANY cylinder record catalogs or Edison catalogs during cylinder era.—Lt. H. D. Holt, Camp McCain, Miss. mh3612

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap128001

OUT-OF-PRINT recordings, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City 19, N. Y. ja12069

WANTED: 11 1/2" DISC records for Olympia Music Box.—John Dixon, 23 Mason Drive, New Britain, Conn. mh169

WANTED: REGINA 27" discs, Mira 15 1/2" discs.—George Schait, 8 Walnut Ave., Cranford, N. J. mh3291

CLASSICAL RECORDS for sale. Send for list.—H. P. Silverman, 216 Denham Bldg., Denver 2, Colo. ap3291

Music Boxes For Sale

Symphonion, mahogany, 20, 12" discs.....$80.00
Regina, oak, 20, 15½" discs..... 70.00
Swiss 21" box, 9" cylinder, 8 tunes..... 85.00
Regina-Corona Automatic, 20½" discs..... Write ap

A. BORNAND

333 Fifth Avenue Pelham 65, New York

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists tfo

SINGLE RARITIES AND ENTIRE COLLECTIONS
PURCHASED

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Congress Building Miami, Florida

MUSIC BOXES

all types

BOUGHT, SOLD and REPAIRED.

ap64p

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

HARRY DICHTER

5458 Montgomery Ave., Phila. 13, Penna.

EARLY AMERICAN MUSIC WANTED

I will pay carriage charges on any material shipped to me for inspection, and my cash offer

Want List sent on request.

ja74

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Edward Warren Meeker. III.

(Continued from the March issue)

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

Still another masterly Edison record, not in dialect, by Meeker, is "The Argentines, the Portugese and the Greeks," by far the best interpretation of that classic comic number I have ever heard.

"He's Living the Life of Reilley" was the last Meeker record, numerically speaking, issued by the Edison company. It came out in 1923, but the song itself had been recorded several years before and kept in the files because of a peculiar Edison flair for recording a number at the height of its popularity, then holding it out of circulation until most of the demand had died. Actually, his last record, based on date of recording, seems to have been 50970, "Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Shean," already mentioned, coupled with a Meeker solo, "Who Tied the Can on the Old Dog's Tail?" in which his ability to imitate animals is well shown.

I mentioned in the first installment how Edward Meeker's voice, in his announcer days, was heard by millions of Edison patrons, few of whom had any idea who was doing the speaking. He also took part in many other discs and cylinders on which his name does not appear, and in which his participation will be detected only by a confirmed student of old records.

For instance, in 1919, Harry Raderman, the jazz band leader, originated a mirthful specialty in which he made his trombone "laugh." On at least two Edison records I have, Meeker gives a convincing laughing trombone imitation. One is the Rachel Grant-Billy Murray duets of "When My Baby Smiles at Me"; the other, Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan's sidesplitting "I Want a Jazzy Kiss" one of the funniest records ever made.

In Billy Golden and Joe Hughes' blackface skit, "Bear's Oil," Meeker is a tramp who appears near the end of the record and helps the other comedians sing "Haul That Woodpile Down." He is also a tramp in Gilbert Girard's hilarious sketch, "Day-break at Calamity Farm." In Fred Duprez's classic, "Desperate Desmond (Rehearsing the Orchestra)," Meeker takes the part of "Mr. Leader," to whom Fred addresses his mock-serious complaints concerning the poor performance of the ensemble.

The Edison record of "Cohen on His Honeymoon" begins with Meeker and John Burckhardt, Edison staff pianist, trying out "She May Have Seen Better Days." My good friend, Monroe ("Mike") Silver, then enters as "Cohen," says the song reminds him of his wife and tells with great gusto of his honeymoon—an imaginary one, since "Mike" has always been a bachelor.

John Orren and Lillian Drew, described as "vaudeville's favorite mimics," made an Edison record in which they imitated everything from a saw-mill to a dog fight. It was Meeker who said at the beginning: "I take pleasure in introducing to you vaudeville's favorite mimics, Orren and Drew. The imitations produced on this record are done by the human voice alone, without the aid of any mechanical device whatsoever."

No doubt many other examples could be found of Ed Meeker's unsung but effective work in earning for Edison "descriptive" records the well-deserved reputation of being the best ever made. He was a great performer, and I believe his association with the Edison company continued, in some capacity, until the company finally quit the record business in the fall of 1929. As long as record collectors exist, his achievements and recorded specimens of his best work will not pass out of existence.

Before closing this sketch, I must thank the singer's widow, Mrs. Margaret Meeker for lending me the only photograph she possesses of her husband in order that it might be reproduced for HOBBIES' readers. This deed of kindness to one of whom she knew nothing, except from his written assurance that he was a long-time admirer of Edward Meeker, is most sincerely appreciated.

RECORDS

COLLECTOR HAS 4000 choice vocal operatic records for sale. Send for free list.—Louis Bullaro, 2432 Washington St., San Francisco 15, Calif. my3042

VOCAL RECORDS: Obsolete and out-of-print numbers. Duplicates from collector's library. For list, write to—The Record Collector, Box 103, Wynnewood, Pennsylvania. ap1231

COLLECTOR wants old classical vocal records in fine condition.—Mitchell S. Jean, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. je3291

AUCTION of classical records. Send for list.—Warren Becker, 1674 LaFayette Rd., Los Angeles, Calif. ap148

WANTED: Symphonion 7½ & Olympia 15½ records.—C. A. Ramsey, Marengo, Ohio. je3651

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap128001

OUT-OF-PRINT recordings, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City 19, N. Y. ja12069

CLASSICAL RECORDS for sale. Send for list.—H. P. Silverman, 216 Denham Bldg., Denver 2, Colo. ap3291

100 4 MINUTE unbreakable cylinder records $10.—Norris Dullum, Colfax, No. Dak. ap187

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

More About S. H. Dudley

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH.

A biographical sketch of Samuel Holland Rous, known as a recording artist under the pseudonym of S. H. Dudley, appeared in the Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists department for January and February, 1944. After recounting Mr. Rous' achievements as baritone of the Haydn Quartet, Victor record catalog editor and author of The Victor Book of the Opera, I said that, as far as I knew, he was still alive and added:

"It would be a pleasure to resume communication, but I would hesitate to inflict correspondence upon Mr. Rous at his advanced age." I also mentioned that the tone of letters I had received from him several years before was "one of buoyant happiness."

Since that article was written, I have heard again from Mr. Rous and am glad to say that his buoyant spirit is still in evidence, at the age of four score. Seeing an article in the Victor Record Review, in which he was mentioned as the originator of the Book of the Opera series, I inquired if the magazine's editor had Mr. Rous' address. Told that he was living in Los Angeles, I wrote, inquiring if he remembered our bygone correspondence. The reply I promptly received was so interesting that I am sure admirers of the once famous baritone, who also made whistling records under the name of Frank Kernell, will be delighted to read the following excerpts:

"Friend Walsh: Forget you? Impossible! Are you not the most irrepressible, indefatigable, enthusiastic, painstaking and successful Old Record Crank in U. S. A.? How your wife, if any (note by U. W.—I don't have one!), manages to keep house in the midst of files overflowing with 10,000 ancient records we know not! . . .

"Well, the Old Codger has just turned 80 and still going strong. Consulting an oculist the other day about a possible cataract operation, the rather crusty old specialist said, 'How old are you?' 'Eighty,' says I. 'Well, how long are you going to live?' 'Ten years.' 'All right, then, I'll do it; but if you will be kicking off in a year or two, it's not worth while!'

"That ten years, so glibly predicted, is quite a probability. The family record is magnificent; none of the parents, grandfathers or g.g.'s ever thought of dying before at least 80, and several reached the 90s. I have two cousins in Southern Indiana over 100. And Sam Rous is apparently in excellent health.

"I had 30 or 40 bosses during the 13 years I was barnstorming with opera companies. Not to mention several jobs in the dry goods line in Indianapolis and Cincinnati.

"The curious thing about my 'career' is that it was all based on 'bluff.' To start with, I never even went through high school, but was forced to get a job at 13 when my father lost his hearing and could no longer teach. Then I jumped into opera without ever having a single voice lesson! Opera must have wanted recruits badly in those days. Of course I never attempted real singing roles, except when I was forced to do such parts as Toreador, Mephistopheles or Sylvio in emergencies. My line was that of utility buffo—bandits, such as Sparfucile, Devilshoof, Dancalro; comedy baritones like Pooch Bah, Zuniga, Fernando. In the 13 years I did about 100 roles in 72 operas. In all 3,742 performances—U. S. A., 3,375; Canada, 240; Mexico, 127. Carmen, 308; Faust, 224; Trovatore, 206; Pagliacci, 205, etc. And 200,000 miles.

"From opera I plunged into record making, and became the 'Bing Crosby of 1900'—that is, more records were sold of Dudley, Kernell, duets, quartets, than of any other singer of the time. Too bad the days of royalties had not arrived! But, as you know, in 1902 the duplicating process spelled doom for big earnings; so when the Victor sent me a wire, (I was vacationing in Switzerland after that strenuous summer in England making records for British companies) offering to make me assistant manager of the record department, plus the privilege of singing for Edison, plus a small royalty on records sold, I leaped at it. . . . After another year, they bought off my Edison privilege. . . . Then the 50 shares of stock given to each laboratory executive (for the duration of his job) began to pay those monumental Victor dividends—during several years dividends were $5 per cent a year! . . .

"All this time I was being paid for being a musical expert. . . . The fact was—and is—that I know practically nothing about music. I can identify the keys of F, G and E-flat, but am not sure about the rest. However, I had a good ear and knew good music when I heard it. And I refused to let anything go into the catalog unless it was as perfect as the process would permit. I had many an argument with singers who thought a record was 'good enough,' rather than go to the trouble to remake it. . . .

"The early editions of the Book of the Opera were easily gathered from history, librettos and press notices of old performances, put into as simple language as I could manage, because record buyers of the time knew little of music, especially opera. Present editions seem to me to be a bit too highbrow. This book is now well on its way to the 600,000 mark, which certainly breaks all records for a musical work. . . .

"The only thing I am really proud of is that marvelous (though I say it) catalogue. You will remember what a job it was to find anything when the double-faced records came along. I well recollect the consternation in a directors' meeting when the estimates of its cost were read. The project was almost rejected when President Johnson backed up my contention that this book would be the sensation of the record world and would put the Victor so far in front that our rivals would never catch up. . . .

"The Victor people were never afraid to 'gamble' with some new idea. Do you remember the time they put out a specially good (for the period) record of mine, a classic called 'Put Me Off at Buffalo'? The company was almost down to its last dollar, but they offered one of these records free to every owner of a disc machine in the U. S. and Canada. If I remember right, they sent out 100,000 of these, and were down to the last cent when the returns began to come in. This, of course, was long before I joined the laboratory staff. During this period Johnson was struggling to improve his product while keeping his financial head above water. He frequently could not raise money to pay the boys in his machine shop, and gave them part of it in stock of the infant company. Lucky boys! . . .

"Well, after 17 years of bringing out that supplement, exactly on a certain day

FOR SALE

Mira Music Box for 24" records; 24" base. — cabinet below box for storing records.

20 RECORDS INCLUDED.
Inquiries Solicited.

myp

JOHN YSTESUND

1518 N. 7th St., Sheboygan, Wisconsin

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

We have a stock of fine accordions for sale

WRITE

Tose School of Music

G. Tose, Director

4282 Archer Avenue

Chicago

(32)

Illinois

in the month. . . I got so I hated the calendar with a consuming hate and threw down an ultimatum to the directors as follows: "Gentlemen, I've had enough!" They expressed sorrow and offered me a pension on the condition that I did not join any of their rivals. I leaped at that, sold my house, jumped into the car and have been going ever since! . . .

"You may imagine that Mrs. Rous and I were much interested in the liberation of Paris, where we have been 21 times. And our 22nd visit will occur just as soon as passports and ships are available. Mrs. Rous being a Hollander, is quite pleased to see Holland set free."

And so ends that part of Mr. Rous' letter which is of general interest to students of careers of the pioneer recording artists. I am sure that friends and admirers of this splendid gentleman, who was voted a place in the ranks of "The Supreme Fifteen," hope that he erred on the conservative side in telling the eye specialist that he would live another ten years. We all, I know, wish him a much more extended life span and hope that every minute will be filled with the high spirit and zest for living that seem to be an inherent part of his charming personality.

RECORDS

COLLECTOR HAS 4000 choice vocal operatic records for sale. Send for free list.—Louis Bullaro, 2432 Washington St., San Francisco 15, Calif. my3042

COLLECTOR wants old classical vocal records in fine condition.—Mitchell S. Jean, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. je3291

WANTED: Symphonion 7½ & Olympia 15% records.—C. A. Ramsey, Marengo, Ohio. je3651

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City, 6, N. J. ap12069

OUT-OF-PRINT recordings, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City 19, N. Y. jai2069

ANNOUNCING. A new periodic mail auction of unusual records by notable singers. Obtain those items you have wanted at your price, or use this additional means of placing your good duplicates in the hands of those who want them most. Write for list and details.—The Music Den, 2133 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 26, Calif. o55-64

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f12675

RECORD COLLECTOR with several hundred duplicates, desires exchange. Lists promptly forwarded upon receipt of yours.—Sims, P. O. Box 741, So. Miami, Fla. au6255

500 EDISON cylinder records for sale, 25c ea. Random lots, $1.25. Any specified title.—W. B. Mollard Jr., Westfield, N. Y. my3803

WANTED: DISCS for largest size "Mira" music box. Give titles, prices.—J. B. Williams, 608 Susquehanna Ave., W. Pittston, Pa. jly3822

WANTED: RECORDS for Symphonion music box, 15" diameter.—G. F. Malone, Homeworth, Ohio. my1001

Recordings: Thousands early classic singers. 700 Goodman, 700 Crosby, 600 Miller; Thousands all name bands. Clarke, Pryor, Sousa specialist. Everything 1900/1942. Josephine Mayer 418½ E. Islay St., Santa Barbara, Calif. jly3054

FOR SALE: Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph with 30 cylinder, unbreakable records, as good as new, for $15.—Peter H. Looper Ashland, Penn. ap12069
City, 6, N. J.

MISCELLANEOUS

MUSIC BOX, Criterion, with 7 discs. Rich, dark red rosewood or mahogany case, 21" x 19" x 12", handsomely carved. Powerful mechanism thoroughly checked, practically as new. A rare and beautiful instrument. Sent insured express collect. Price $125, crating free.—The Bellamy Store, Cooperstown, N. Y. my1072

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, every description. Meerschmump pipes, steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Mayer, 2911 Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. d12219

WANTED: SAXOPHONE; antique oboes, clarinets, flutes.—Flodine, Stephenson, Mich. je3441

PLAYER ORGAN records, 100 classical. (Wilcox & White Co.)—Mark Markle, Box 474, Ojai, California. my4642

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f122781

FOR SALE: Regina automatic music box, plays 12 3 ft. records automatically. Is in perfect working condition.—George Schait, 8 Walnut Ave., Cranford, N. J. my3672

FOR SALE: Edison Phonographs: Home model, 2 miniature, small brass horn, $10. Standard model, 2 & 4 min., large horn, $10. Both include 15 records. Have few extra horns, $2-$3.50. Express collect.—Peter Grattelo, 1523 W. Stover St., Freeport, Ill. my1002

WANTED: OLD MUSIC boxes beyond repair. All types wanted for spare parts.—A. Boraand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. jai2468

FOR SALE: Edison Phonograph Model A. Excellent condition. 99 records. $25 prepaid.—Robert Thompson, 605 Anderson St., Greencastle, Ind. je3612

WANTED: CYLINDER records, phonographs. Parts. Music boxes. Discs, mechanical birds.—Nugent, 101 No. Third, Richmond, Va. jly3291

FOR SALE: VIOLIN, marked inside, Antonius Stradiuarius, Faciebat Anno 1721. Crack, bridge missing. Offers.—A. Halsey Brown, East Marion, L. I., N. Y. my1441

TEN MUSIC boxes, $50 to $500. Mahogany Regina Corona, Super Deluxe, superior in design, detail to coin slot type. Send description what wanted, 25c for photo. 400 day brass clock under dome, $35, needs cleaning.—W. B. Mollard, Westfield, N. Y. my3654

MUSIC BOXES: I am still accepting a limited amount of repair work on music boxes and other mechanical pieces. I also have choice music boxes for sale; all types.—Geo. A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. je3024

MUSIC BOX collection for sale, including following: Oak cabinet Symphonion with 15 records 13½", excellent condition, $90. Regina, cherry cabinet with 15 records, 15½", fine buy, $100. Mahogany cabinet, same, 1 tooth out, 15 records, 15½", $95. Regina, oak cabinet, needs refinishing, with 15 records, 12", $60. Swiss music box with bells, 8 airs, nicely inlaid cabinet, good shape, $75. Swiss box, 6 airs, with Jacot safety check, nice inlaid cabinet, $85. Reed Pipe Clarion with 20 player rolls, over 100 tunes, $40. Edison Triumph Phonograph with large horn and 20 cylinder records, good shape, $30. Other values in music boxes which need repair.—H. F. Sanderson, P.O. Box 414, Evansville, Ind. my1666

FOR SALE: Edison Ambrola Phono. Cylinder, oak cabinet model. Drawers to hold up to 80 records. 40 records, crated $35. Excellent playing shape: Edison diamond disc phono. Chippendale console. Cost $350 when new. Walnut veneer. Needs refinishing. $50 crated. Express extra on above articles.—Peter Grattelo, 1523 W. Stover St., Freeport, Ill. my1523

FOR SALE: Famous composers & their works. Paine, Thomas, Klausner, Millet 1911. Volumes: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 10, 12. Good, fair condition. The Story of A Musical Life. Root, Church 1891. Good condition. Tramp, Tramp, Tramp. Root. Nims-Knight 1890. Used, fair.—B. Kassal, 1444 S. 15th St., Omaha 9, Neb. my1061

BOOKS RECEIVED

For those who want to bind books as a handicraft hobby, we can recommend the new book—"General Book Binding" by Chris Groneman. Every process is illustrated so that a novice can follow instructions and bind different types of books, including permanent binders for magazine volumes and rebinding old books.

It is published by McKnight & McKnight, Bloomington, Ill.

Now that the crippled veterans are with us, there will be renewed interest in leather handicraft as a hobby. A book that covers this subject is "General Leather Craft" by Raymond Cherry. All the different leathers are illustrated and described, and minute instruction given for carrying on the work step by step. Not only the making of leather novelties is taught, but more standard material such as ladies purses, belts, etc., that are always saleable.

The book is published by McKnight and McKnight of Bloomington, Illinois.

Cigar Band Club

The International Cigar Band Society announces its new officers for the ensuing year, as follows: President, Richard Stolt, Chicago; Vice President, Grover Greasby, Wisconsin; Treasurer, Thomas Lamberson, Indiana; Secretary, Norman Bobel, New Jersey; Publicity and Advertising Chairman, Arthur Abrahams, New York.

Old Mechanical Banks

By Ina Hayward Bellows

The only authentic, comprehensive history of old mechanical banks . . . filled with illustrations of banks, each identified, described and appraised in value and rarity. A valuable handbook for collectors and dealers . . . $2.50.

Order your copy from HOBBIES 2810 S. Michigan Chicago, 16, Illinois

WANTED: A locomotive like this

W. A. LUCAS

56 Tuxedo Avenue

Hawthorne, New Jersey

my9

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Ada Jones. I

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Ada Jones

FORTY YEARS ago, Ada Jones was probably the most popular phonograph singer in the world.

In those days she was still a comparative newcomer, who had begun her record-making career only in 1904, but her progress into popularity had been nothing less than astonishing and she was already becoming the subject of more rumors and legends than ever attached themselves to the name of any other pioneer recording artist.

Because of her mastery of Negro dialect, some record buyers insisted that Ada Jones was a Negress. She was equally good at mimicking other dialects, so that still other admirers believed her to be Irish, German or virtually any nationality that might be named. Lighthouse keepers in Australia and diamond miners in Africa fell in love with the reproduced voice that caroled to them from the morning glory horns of old-fashioned phonographs, and wrote her proposals of marriage. And, periodically, the English-speaking world was swept with rumors, which originated nobody knew where, that "Ada Jones, the best singer in the world," was dead. Usually, these reports were specific enough to include the date of her fictitious death and the name of the fatal malady.

Today, Ada Jones has been dead almost a quarter of a century, but a fragrance still clings to the memory of her once magical name and thousands of collectors cherish her old discs and cylinders.

Even so, many details of her life are exasperatingly obscure, and I have met with almost insuperable difficulties in searching out material for a series of articles dealing with her personality and achievements.

For instance, although we have Miss Jones' word for it that she was born in Manchester, England, where her mother was "a famous singer," I have not been able to ascertain the date of her birth or the names of her parents.

Letters to the theatrical weeklies, Billboard and Variety, failed to bring the information I needed. The New York Public Library's theatrical department had only a few unimportant references to Ada Jones in its files. The newspaper published at Huntington Station, Long Island, where the singer lived during most of her recording career, took a friendly interest in my project but had no precise biographical information. I was disappointed to learn that even the New York Times had not published an account of her death in 1922.

Billy Murray, Miss Jones' loyal friend and recording associate for 15 years, also could not supply the data I sought. The Rocky Mount, N. C., physician who attended her in her last illness did not know her exact age, but said the singer's business manager told him she was 40. My own belief is that she was probably somewhat older, since her career as a public entertainer demonstrably extended as far back as 1891—31 years before her death.

The search was made the more difficult because Ada Jones' husband died a few years ago and her one child, a daughter, is also dead. Apparently, she has no immediate surviving relatives.

But, in spite of these drawbacks, the facts about Miss Jones' recording career are sufficiently well established for me to present what I believe will prove to be one of the most interesting of all the series I have written about Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists. It will also be the first I have written about a woman singer. As is well known, few women's voices recorded well in the old days and all the other most popular phonograph performers were men.

Here it might be well to refute another "Ada Jones legend"—the occasionally heard assertion that hers was the first woman's voice ever recorded. That is by no means the truth. Numerous women had preceded her to the recording horn. Names of some, such as Minnie Emmett, Marguerite Newton, Estelle L. Mann, Seniorita Godoy, Elizabeth Spencer, May Kelso and Corinne Morgan are more or less familiar to specialists in collecting old "popular" records.

Ada Jones was, however, the first woman whose records had a world-wide vogue and who, for a few years, may have been more popular than any rival masculine artist. As will be remembered, she was the only feminine singer whom readers of HOBBIES voted into the ranks of "The Supreme Fifteen."

I am fortunate that I shall be able to quote, in a succeeding installment, from an article written by Ada Jones herself, telling of her beginning and subsequent career as a recording artist. Also available is a magazine interview in which she told other things about herself, and I have had the advantage of the personal recollections of Billy Murray, who believes that he was to a considerable extent responsible for the "discovery" of his long-time singing associate.

But, before I begin to trace the details of Ada Jones' 18-year recording career, it might be well to quote what the phonograph companies said about the buxom, blonde, blue-eyed woman, with a figure like the Metropolitan Opera sopranos of two generations ago, in those days when she was the "dream girl" of thousands of men who had never seen her in the substantial flesh.

Here is what Sam Rous (S. H. Dudley) wrote in the May, 1912, Victor record catalogue:

"ADA JONES, Comedienne. No series of records in the entire Victor catalogue has given more innocent pleasure to the public than the clever solos in various dialects by Miss Jones, the quaint German, Irish and other dialect specialties of Jones and Spencer, and

We have a stock of fine accordions for sale

WRITE

Tose School of Music

G. Tose, Director

4282 Archer Avenue

Chicago (32) Illinois

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists

SINGLE RARITIES AND ENTIRE COLLECTIONS PURCHASED

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Congress Building

Miami, Florida

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosorick & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM
HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

AN ESTEY ORGAN

Has 10 stops, solid walnut case, church style. Plain unornamented case with provision for pumping on the side. Also wind indicator. Built in 1918. Excellent Condition.

Price $350.00 crated.

MRS. J. C. YOUNG

203 West 10th Street, Austin 21, Texas

the popular songs of the day given as duets by Miss Jones and Mr. Murray.

"Miss Jones continues to surprise everyone by her great versatility; no matter what the character, it is always cleverly done. Whether her impersonation be that of a darky wench, a little German maiden, a 'fresh' saleslady, a cowboy girl, a country damsel, Mrs. Flanagan or an Irish colleen, a Boverly tough girl, a newsboy or a grandmother, it is invariably a perfect one of its kind."

This laudatory critique, it will be observed, gave no biographical information concerning the most popular woman singer who ever made records. The Columbia catalogue for November, 1914, was no more explicit. It said:

"ADA JONES, Soprano. Miss Jones is without question the cleverest singer of soubrette songs, popular child ballads and popular ragtime hits adapted for the soprano voice now recording for any company. She is also in general ways one of the most popular singers in the record field and her records have been heard in all quarters of the globe. Her duet records with Mr. Van Brunt, unique and entertaining as they are, have also come in for unlimited popular approval. At least one record in which Miss Jones has sung appears on the Columbia list each month."

(To be continued)

RECORDS

COLLECTOR HAS 4000 choice vocal operatic records for sale. Send for free list.—Louis Bullaro, 2432 Washington St., San Francisco 15, Calif. au3252

COLLECTOR wants old classical vocal records in fine condition.—Mitchell S. Jean, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. je3291

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City, 6, N. J. ap12069

OUT-OF-PRINT recordings, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City 19, N. Y. ja12069

ANNOUNCING. A new periodic mail auction of unusual records by notable singers. Obtain those items you have wanted at your price, or use this additional means of placing your good duplicates in the hands of those who want them most. Write for list and details.—The Music Den, 2133 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 26, Calif. o64-55

MUSIC BOXES

ALL TYPES OF CHOICE SWISS BOXES FOR SALE. ALSO REGINA BOXES IN MAHOGANY AND HAND DECORATED CASES: Singing bird and other mechanical pcs. n64p

Music Boxes Repaired

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington

Rhode Island

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f12675

RECORD COLLECTOR with several hundred duplicates, desires exchange. Lists promptly forwarded upon receipt of yours.—Sims, P. O. Box 741, So. Miami, Fla. au6255

500 EDISON cylinder records for sale, 25c ea. Random lots, $1.25. Any specified title.—W. E. Mollard Jr., Westfield, N. Y. my8803

WANTED: DISCS for largest size "Mira" music box. Give titles, prices.—J. B. Williams, 608 Susquehanna Ave., W. Pittston, Pa. jly3822

WANTED: O'keh red, label records by Gerald Griffin—Kilroy, 1129 North Rowan, Los Angeles, California. jel09

Recordings: Thousands early classic singers. 700 Goodman, 700 Crosby, 600 Miller; Thousands all name Bands. Clarke, Pryor, Sousa specialist. Everything 1900/1942. Josephine Mayer 418½ E. Islay St., Santa Barbara, Calif. jly3054

FOR SALE: Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph with 30 cylinder, unbreakable records, as good as new, for $15.—Peter H. Loeper Ashland, Penn. City, 6, N. J. ap12069

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, every description. Meerscham pipes, steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Mayer, 2911 Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. d12219

WANTED: BOXWOOD Ivory-feruled clarinets, flutes.—Floodine, Stephenson, Mich. je3441

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. au3402

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f122781

MELODEONS FOR SALE. Both octagon leg and folding melodeons, all in good playing condition. Descriptions and prices sent on request.—Joseph Leighton, 16 Montclair St., Springfield 4, Mass. je1861

WANTED: OLD MUSIC boxes beyond repair. All types wanted for spare parts.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. ja12468

FOR SALE: Edison Phonograph Model A. Excellent condition. 99 records. $25 prepaid.—Robert Thompson, 605 Anderson St., Greencastle, Ind. je3612

WANTED: CYLINDER records, phonographs. Parts. Music boxes. Discs, mechanical birds.—Nugent, 101 No. Third, Richmond, Va. jly3291

MUSIC BOXES: I am still accepting a limited amount of repair work on music boxes and other mechanical pieces. I also have choice music boxes for sale; all types.—Geo. A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. je3024

COLLECTION 30 genuine old violins for the collector, connoisseur, professional. Descriptive catalog as to their authenticity, history, preservation, tonal characteristics and price range will be sent postpaid for one dollar.—Isador Berger, Violin Connoisseur, Great Northern Theater, Chicago, Illinois. au3654

For Sale:—Regina automatic Music Box with several 27" records, $350. Regina 20¾" and 27" records. Stella 17" and 15½" records. Mira 15½" and 18" records.—George Schait 8 Walnut Ave. Cranford, N. J. au3666

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Ada Jones. II.

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Billy Murray, who has had a longer career than any other pioneer recording artist and whose long-range popularity has exceeded that of all the rest, once wrote an article for the Edison company's house magazine, in which he related how Ada Jones first came to his attention.

"I am no Christopher Columbus," Billy wrote, "but I have made one discovery that I am proud of. I was down on Fourteenth street in New York, looking for amusement, and I happened to wander into a little museum. It was crammed full of marvels, but the greatest marvel to me was the voice of a girl who was singing there. She had what is known as 'pep' in these days. I think it was labeled 'ginger' or 'tobasco' at that time. Anyway, it was some spice. I simply couldn't forget her voice and manner."

"Some time after, I was making a record with Len Spencer. It was a duet for a male and female voice. Sure! I was supposed to be the female voice. I can get away with some pretty high notes, but there were a couple in that song that I couldn't reach on tiptoes. I couldn't have raised my voice that high with a fifty-ton crane. So I told the director about the girl I had heard in the Fourteenth street museum and suggested that she be given a try-out. He told me to bring her around. I did, and she made just as big a hit with everybody else as she did with me. Ada Jones was her name. Did you ever hear of her?"

"Some one," Billy added, "has spread the impression that Ada Jones is, in private life, Mrs. Billy Murray. We are married but not to each other."

As Billy personally related to me his discovery of Ada, he and Len Spencer were doing what used to be known as a "coon sketch." Len was saying something like, "Does you love me, honey bunch?" and Billy was replying, "You knows I does, sugar chile!" when Victor Emerson, the manager of the Columbia studios, in which they were filling a recording engagement, came in.

"Oh, for Pete's sake!" Emerson snorted in disgust. "If you've got to do that sort of thing, why don't you get a woman for the woman's part, Len, instead of having another man try to do it?"

Murray then spoke up. "Victor," he said, "I heard a little woman singing not long ago at Huber's museum, down on Fourteenth street, that I believe would be fine in this kind of work. Her name is Ada Jones." Both Spencer and Emerson expressed interest, and this, Billy said, resulted in Ada Jones' becoming not only Len Spencer's partner in descriptive sketches but also winning instantaneous popularity as a solo singer.

Under the heading of "Singing to the World," Ada Jones wrote, in the February, 1917, issue of the Edison Amberola Monthly, an account of her recording experiences that is well worth reproducing in its entirety. It is especially interesting to me because of the able defense the beloved singer made of her decision to sing popular music as a career. She points out a fact, which is often overlooked, that as much "popular" as "classical" music proves to be of permanent value and survives. I came across a good illustration of this fact a few days ago while reading an advertisement published in an 1880 number of Scribner's magazine. Of the then popular songs offered for sale by one publisher, at least half are still fairly well remembered and sung occasionally or, in a few cases, frequently. Since the list contains about 200 titles, this seems an astonishingly high percentage of survival, and disposes of the contention that all popular music is necessarily ephemeral.

Here is Ada Jones' own article:

"I have been asked to write a little story of my phonograph career, I suppose because I am one of the best known phonograph singers in the world."

"It was thirteen years ago that I started singing for the phonograph and I have been at it ever since. That is a long time but there is not a single moment of it that I regret. Indeed, rather I am thankful that circumstances gave me the opportunity to enter this field and that such talents as I may possess enabled me to be as successful as I am. I often pause and wonder just how many people, at the particular moment, are listening to my voice. I don't believe that there is a single singer for the phonograph who does not have this thought at times. It may seem to you that a singer like myself, who sings the everyday songs for everyday people, may not have a highly appreciative audience, but I believe that it would be hard to find people more grateful than those comprising the invisible audience to which I sing. Unable to indicate their approval by applause, they express it by letters. I have hundreds of these, received from all parts of the world and all kinds of people."

"I have one from a lighthouse keeper in Australia, telling me that he would go insane in his isolation if he did not have a phonograph to keep his mind occupied. He might better have expressed his gratitude to Thomas A. Edison than to myself, but I received the letter because he happened to be very fond of my records. Another letter that I prize is one from the captain of a little trading vessel that plies, or used to ply, among the Fiji Islands. I have one from a prospector in Alaska and still another from a shift boss in a diamond mine in the Kimberley fields in South Africa. During the Spanish-American War, I received many letters from boys at the front."

"My work has brought me a profound respect for my profession. I have come to take a delight in interpreting the songs that are born of the people and sung by the people. They express the real sentiments of the times with far greater fidelity than the productions of cultured and educated musicians who look to other countries and other times for their themes and inspirations. And I believe that the world is enriched by the melodies and sentiments that come from the masses. Only a fragmentary portion of either classical or popular music becomes immortal, and fully as much 'popular' music survives as does the classical. I like ragtime because I feel that it is typically American. It is alive, virile, dashing and stimulating. It reflects the dominant qualities of the American race. It would not have found its origin here if the sentiments it expresses were not those of the people, and it would not have captivated public fancy so thoroughly if it did not have some real merit. Victor Herbert once remarked that he was equally sorry for the person who couldn't enjoy ragtime as he was for the person who couldn't enjoy opera."

"Although it may seem simple, making a record is not an easy task, and I always am 'all in' after I have finished. It is the nervous strain of knowing that you must not make a single mistake, that wears on you. On the vaudeville stage a false note or a slight slip in your pronunciation makes no difference. On the phonograph stage the slightest error is not admissible. To make one means that you must make the record over again. The first record I made was a duet with the late Len Spencer. It was a rendition of the once popular song called 'Pals', and was one of the famous 'Jimmie and Maggie' series of records. My first solo was 'My Carolina Lady,' a song that swept the country when 'coon' songs were in vogue. My introduction to my profession was brought about by Len Spencer and Billy Murray, both of whom I met in New York. Previous to that time I had had an abundance of experience on the stage, both legitimate and variety. When I was born in Manchester, England, I seemed destined to a theatrical career. My mother was a famous singer and I was brought up in the atmosphere of the stage."

"As I sit quietly at home with my family at Huntington, L. I., and think that every day my voice is being heard the world over, I feel a deep sense of appreciation to the man who invented the phonograph and gave me the opportunity to sing to all the world through the medium of his marvelous invention."

Two points occur to me in connection with Miss Jones' article. Her reference to receiving "many letters from boys at the front" in the Span-

MUSIC BOXES

Swiss or American

Bought - Sold - Repaired

CLARK'S

416 S. Salina St., Syracuse 2, New York

Famous For Fine Music Boxes. jlyp

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF

MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Company

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan

Chicago 16, Illinois

JAZZ RECORDS WANTED

Good early classical records traded or will pay cash for

Paramount, Okay, Gennett, Graygull, Vocalion, Blackswan, Puritan, Brunswick and other
Jazz Labels, Circa 1920 thru 1940.

jlyp

HEATON'S HOT HARMONY HAVEN

260 Chestnut Street

Dayton, Ohio

ish-American war is puzzling, since the war was fought in 1898 and her recording career did not begin until six years later. She may have been thinking of troops who were stationed in Hawaii, the Philippines, etc., after her records had begun to gain a world-wide vogue.

The singer referred also to the nervous strain of making records. Perhaps this was the cause of her frequently having attacks of epilepsy while she was filling recording engagements. Only a few persons, aside from her most intimate associates, knew that she was subject to epileptic fits, but the seizures were a factor that frequently complicated her work.

"Any number of times," Billy Murray said to me, "we'd be recording duets. I'd hear a'plop' and look around, and there would be poor little Ada, writhing on the floor. We'd have to wait until she got over the spell, then try again to make a satisfactory record."

As may easily be imagined, this epileptic tendency seriously interfered with Ada Jones' career as a public entertainer, at least in her earlier years. She appears to have been less susceptible later.

(To be continued)

EDISON DIAMOND DISC LIST—Part 13

URLUS, Jacques

- 83033 Africana—O Paradies (1914)
- 82016 Cavalleria—Siciliana (German)/MILLER (1913)
- 82252 Die Allmacht (Schubert) (1922)
- 83030 Fidelio—Gott! welch' Dunkel hier (1914)
- 57017 Flying Dutchman—Willst jenes (1925)
- 83028 Freischütz—Durch die Walder (1914)
- 82260 La Juive—Rachel (German) (1922)
- 82277 Lohengrin—In fernem Land (1922)
- 83017 Lohengrin—Mein lieber Schwan (2891) (1913)
- 83017 Lohengrin—Mein lieber Schwan (3602)
- 82514 Lohengrin—Mein lieber Schwan (1913)
- 82260 Magic Flute—Dies Bildnis (1922)
- 57017 Magic Flute—Wie stark is nicht (1925)
- 82278 Martha—Ach, so fromm/MIDDLETON (1922)
- 83083 Messe Solennelle—Panis Angelicus (Franck)/RAPPOLO & PARVIS (1918)
- 83011 Meistersinger—Prize song (1913)
- 82276 Meistersinger—Preislied/MATZENAUER (1922)
- 83021 Marmelades Luftchen (Jensen) (1913)
- 73008 O schone Zeit (Gotze)/MITTELSTADT (1922)
- 82269 Rienzi—Allmacht'ger Vater/HEMPPEL (1922)
- 82275 Rienzi—Erstehe, hohe Roma/RAPPOLO (1922)
- 83020 Sehnsucht (Rubinstein) (1913)
- 73005 Sehnsucht (Rubinstein)/SCHUMANN (1924)
- 83040 Siegfried—Schmiedlied (1914)
- 83082 Stabat Mater—Cujus animam/VERLET & MATZENAUER (1918)
- 82514 Standchen (Strauss) (1913)
- 82254 Still wie die Nacht (Bohm) (1919)
- 82252 Traum durch die Dammerung (Strauss) (1922)
- 82246 Walkure—Ein Schwert (1922)
- 82246 Walkure—Siegmund's Liebeslied (1922)
- 83019 Zauberslied (Meyer-Helmund) (1913)
- 82280 Zauberslied (Meyer-Helmund)/MIDDLETON (1922)

VAN GORDON, Cyrena (Songs not listed)

- 82180 Favorita—O mio Fernando (1920)
- 82180 Trovatore—Stride la vampa (1920)

VERGERI, Emilia

- 76003 Carmen—Habanera (1917)
- 76003 Cavalleria—Voi lo sapete (Spanish) (1917)

VERLET, Alice

- 83057 Boheme—O soave fanciulla, with ZENATELLO (1917)
- 83039 Bonnie sweet Bessie (1921)
- 82561 Carmen (Wilson) (1918)
- 83070 Carnival of Venice, 2 parts (1917)
- 82178 Chanson d'amour (Hollman)/TIFFANY & LAURENTI (1920)
- 83060 Chanson de Florian (Godard) (1917)
- 83039 Coming through the rye (1921)
- 83065 Crucifix, with LANGEVIN/MIDDLETON (1917)

(TO BE CONCLUDED)

RECORDS

COLLECTOR HAS 4000 choice vocal operatic records for sale. Send for free list.—Louis Bullaro, 2432 Washington St., San Francisco 15, Calif.

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City, 6, N. J. ap12069

OUT-OF-PRINT recordings, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City 19, N. Y. ja12069

ANNOUNCING. A new periodic mail auction of unusual records by notable singers. Obtain those items you have wanted at your price, or use this additional means of placing your good duplicates in the hands of those who want them most. Write for list and details.—The Music Den, 2133 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 26, Calif. o64-55

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f12676

RECORD COLLECTOR with several hundred duplicates, desires exchange. Lists promptly forwarded upon receipt of yours.—Sims, P. O. Box 741, So. Miami, Fla. au6255

WANTED: DISCS for largest size "Mira" music box. Give titles, prices.—J. B. Williams, 608 Susquehanna Ave., W. Pittston, Pa. jly3822

FOR SALE: Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph with 30 cylinder, unbreakable records, as good as new, for $15.—Peter H. Loeper Ashland, Penn. ap12069

FOR SALE: Brand new records from HMV Historic Catalogue. Also other vocal cut-outs. For list write to.—The Record Collector, Box 114, Wynnewood, Pennsylvania. jly1042

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, every description. Meerschmum pipes, steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Mayer, 2911 Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. d12219

MUSIC BOXES for sale. Criterion fine cherry case 15½" discs, $150; Imperial Symphonion mahogany 20" discs, $120; Symphonion mahogany 12" discs, $90; Regina oak 15½" discs, $110; Regina upright mahogany 27" discs, $250; beautiful inlaid rosewood 12 tune Swiss box 6 bells perfect, $300; musical mantel clock 2 tunes, $30.—Bornand 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. jly1065

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. au3402

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f122781

WANTED: OLD MUSIC boxes beyond repair. All types wanted for spare parts.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. ja12468

WANTED: CYLINDER records, phonographs. Parts. Music boxes. Discs, mechanical birds.—Nugent, 101 No. Third, Richmond, Va. jly3291

MUSIC BOXES: I am still accepting a limited amount of repair work on music boxes and other mechanical pieces. I also have choice music boxes for sale; all types.—Geo. A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. jly3024

COLLECTION 30 genuine old violins for the collector, connoisseur, professional. Descriptive catalog as to their authenticity, history, preservation, tonal characteristics and price range will be sent postpaid for one dollar.—Isador Berger, Violin Connoisseur, Great Northern Theater, Chicago, Illinois. au3654

For Sale:—Regina automatic Music Box with several 27" records, $350. Regina 20¾" and 27" records. Stella 17" and 15½" records. Mira 15½" and 18" records.—George Schait 8 Walnut Ave. Cranford, N. J. au3666

For sale, Flute, over 100 years old. Stamp for details.—Nannie Wall, Forest Home, Ala. jly1441

A MONEY-MAKER!

Start Home Business

Making Statuary, Art Goods, Plaques, Novelties, Concrete Pottery, Artificial Marble, Floorings, Liquid Marble. We tell you how to make your own Flexible Molds. Write Today For VALUABLE FOLDER, FREE.

CREATIVE PUBL. Box 236 N. WINNETKA, ILL.

SAVE YOUR HOBBIES

The wealth of information contained in every issue of HOBBIES is too valuable to be thrown around with the consequent danger of loss. This binder is covered with buckram, with the title printed in gold. Its appearance will compare favorably with the handsomest bound books in your library. It will be sent to you postpaid on receipt of $2.50 with a guarantee of perfect satisfaction or money refunded.

Holds 12 Issues

HOBBIES MAGAZINE

2810 SOUTH MICHIGAN AVENUE
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

MUSIC BOXES
and EXTRA DISCS for sale

LLOYD G. KELLEY
Broadway and Rt. 3
Hanover, P. O. Box 342, Mass.

C. R. S.

Historical Records
Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and
speech records.

For Sale By
GRAMOPHONE SHOP
18 East 48th St., New York, N. Y.
AXELROD MUSIC
45 Snow St., Providence, R. I.
H. ROYER SMITH CO
10th and Walnut Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.
TULSA RECORD SHOP
517 South Boston, Tulsa 3, Okla. JA740
RECORD SHOP
14 Tillman Place, San Francisco 8, Calif.

Edison Cylinder

and
Diamond Disc Records
WOODYMAY RECORD COMPANY
Knights of the Turntable
73 Roxbury Street, Boston (19) Mass.

WANTED

COLUMBIA
GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILIBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.

International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

944 Monroe Lane, Woodmere, L. I., N. Y.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Ada Jones. III

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Three years after Ada Jones wrote her "Singing for the World" article for the Edison Amberola Monthly, Lawton Mackall, an enthusiastic phonograph fan, obtained an interview with her which was published in Farm and Fireside Magazine. Although it appeared toward the last of the comedienne's career, I shall reprint it here, out of chronological order, because it clearly reveals some aspects of the singer's personality, and also relates a somewhat different account of her introduction to the profession of phonograph singing than was given in Billy Murray's reminiscences and in what Ada Jones herself wrote.

I shall discuss these discrepancies after quoting from Mr. Mackall's article, which was illustrated with a cut of "Ada Jones sending a joke by wireless." This picture would surprise admirers of Ada, familiar only with her photos in the old record catalogs. Instead of having the mass of long hair always in evidence in her earlier pictures, she appears to be sporting a boyish bob, although the picture was made before bobbed hair was popular. She may have been "sending a joke by wireless," but she is holding a receiver to her ear and it is more likely that she was listening to a radio program through a primitive receiving set.

Here is what Lawton Mackall wrote:

"To make people smile who cannot see you is considerable of an art. Ada Jones has been doing that for twenty years; in fact, hers was the first woman's voice ever successfully recorded on the phonograph. She has a droll personality hiding behind phonograph records.

"I wonder if Charlie Chaplin or Fatty Arbuckle would be funny if we could do more than hear them? No telling. But I fancy that Charlie without the help of his famous feet and his jaunty cane and his twitching mustache would be pretty nearly a crippled comedian; and if rotund Roscoe had no means of exhibiting his fatness and grinning his well-known grin, he would fare badly. Ada Jones is able to amuse us through her voice alone. She makes us see the characters she sings.

"Having chuckled over many a record of hers—Irish character songs, Negro dialect numbers, rural skits, and so forth—I was filled with curiosity to know what sort of person she was in real life. So I took a train out to Huntington, Long Island, where she lives. As the train drew up at the little station, there was the usual scene that occurs when the mid-afternoon train arrives from the city—folks getting off and being greeted by their relatives, and general excitement. The quietest, most serious-looking person in sight was a woman whose features resembled photographs I'd seen.

"Are you—?"

"Yes, I'm Ada Jones," she said quietly. "Nobody ever believes I am when they meet me; but I am!

Was this the rollicking comedienne?

"People expect me to look funny, I guess," she continued almost apologetically as we walked the short distance up the hill lane to her house. "When I was out in Ohio on a concert tour, a little boy about eight years old stared at me

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Company

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan

Chicago 16, Illinois

MUSIC BOXES

ALL TYPES OF CHOICE SWISS BOXES
FOR SALE. ALSO REGINA BOXES IN MA-HOGANY AND HAND DECORATED CASES:
Singing bird and other mechanical pcs. n64p

Music Boxes Repaired

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington

Rhode Island

EARLY AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC
Bound Volumes or Loose Sheets

Wanted.

List on Request.

HARRY DICHTER, 5458 Montgomery Ave.
Philadelphia 31, Penna.

MUSIC BOXES

all types

BOUGHT, SOLD AND REPAIRED.

my74p

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

MUSIC BOXES

HOW TO REPAIR THEM. By Jacot. Published in 1890. I offer this rare 32-page booklet while the limited supply lasts. Price $2.00 a copy postpaid.

op

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington,

Rhode Island

as I was waiting on the railroad station platform, and I heard him say, "She Ada Jones? Naw, yuh can't fool me!" Sometimes even grown folks doubt me, so frequently I use a phonograph as an introducer—have it play one of my records, and then I come in and sing. People in the audience nod their heads and admit, "Well, well, it's her, sure enough!" (She mimicked the tone of voice).

"When you come down to it, why should a professional funmaker be expected to look comical and clown around continuously? When someone says to you, 'This is my friend, Dr. Poulitice,' you don't expect the doc to grab your pulse or sound your chest. If you met Jack Dempsey, you wouldn't expect him to knock you down just to be consistent. When the waiter asks Caruso what he'll have for breakfast, he hardly looks for a reply of 'Soft-boiled eggs and coffee!' sung in high C. Yet, for some reason, comedians are expected to be in a mad, mad mood day in and day out. Alas, the only person who fills that requirement is the smart guy at the village store—who isn't half as funny as he thinks he is'.

Ada Jones' quite, matter-of-fact manner is like the magician's sedate-looking silk hat from which he produces astonishing surprises when he wants to. The sleight-of-hand man's equipment, although varied, is limited to what he happens to have up his sleeve, but Ada Jones can bring forth, without preparation, most anything you ask for.

"In personal appearance Miss Jones is of medium height and what the poets call 'buxom.' The saying, 'laugh and grow plump,' is true of most comedians. Old Cal Stewart had a build like Santa Claus, and Collins and Harlan can each cast a pretty substantial shadow; even Billy Murray—with whom Miss Jones has sung many a record—is no bean pole. Ada Jones, while by far from being a Marie Dressler, has the cheerful proportions of the true funmaker. When her usually serious face lights up with drollery, there is a sudden glint of white teeth and a sparkle of dancing eyes.

"As she sat there on the front of her house, rocking casually, she answered a question about dialects by giving me an astonishing demonstration of voice magic. She would speak a few words in broad Irish brogue, then shift suddenly to darkey intonations; then as instantaneously to Bowery lingo. Her impersonations were so real that if my back had been turned I veritably should have thought that the characters she thus conjured up were there on the porch. She had me seeing things! If she chose to be a spiritualistic medium she would fool anybody. The truth is, she is a lightning-change artist without the aid of make-up.

"Where did I learn how to take off different kinds of people? Oh, just by watching and noticing. Some women can take one good look at a dress in a store window and go home and make one like it. I can't do that; but I can watch and listen to somebody on a street car or in a restaurant and go home and take them off. It's a matter of habit and training. You see, I've been mimicking ever since I was a baby.

"When I was a kid I found that taking off people was more fun than any other game. All children when they play imitate grown-ups. You watch any little girl teaching her dolls to behave. She talks to them just the way her mother talks to her—same words, same tone of voice, or so nearly the same as to sound absurd coming from a little tot.

"I was such a little mimic that my father would show me off before friends. I was too young to feel self-conscious or scared; it was just play to me. When I was five I took part in a concert, and sang a song all alone. I had an unusually strong voice for a child, and a good memory, so that I could pick up most any song I heard. At entertainments I would watch the other performers, and then come out and imitate them. Father used to say I could 'steal anybody's act.' If I hadn't been so young, they might have got at my nervousness, but as it was, they let me pass as a sort of curiosity.

"When I had made some success in 'variety' and comic opera, my stepmother who was my manager, took me to the old North American Phonograph Company which Thomas A. Edison had started not long before, and there I tried singing into the horn. It is a fact that mine was the first woman's voice ever successfully recorded by a phonograph. That was twenty years ago, before the modern disc had been invented or the cylinder perfected."

Some of the statements in this interview are puzzling because they appear to contradict what Miss Jones had already said about her career. I have shown in a preceding installment that hers was not the first woman's voice to be successfully recorded. Since her first records did not appear until late in 1904 or early in 1905, it had not been 20 years since the beginning of her recording career. The reference to "the old North American Phonograph Company" I take to be slip of Mr. Mackall's pen for the National Phonograph Company, the name under which Thomas A. Edison Inc., originally carried on phonograph activities.

I suppose there is a possibility that Ada's stepmother went with her to the Edison studios and had her make test recordings several years before any of her records were actually placed on the market, but this is not at all certain. Perhaps Mr. Mackall in writing his interview had an inaccurate recollection of what Miss Jones actually had said.

However that may be, we have now arrived at the point where her career may be considered from its beginning in 1904 to her death in a small town in North Carolina, when she was on tour, 18 years later.

(to be continued)

RECORDS

COLLECTOR HAS 4000 choice vocal operatic records for sale. Send for free list.—Louis Bullaro, 2432 Washington St., San Francisco 15, Calif. au3252

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City, 6, N. J. ap12069

OUT-OF-PRINT recordings, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City 19, N. Y. ja12069

ANNOUNCING. A new periodic mail auction of unusual records by notable singers. Obtain those items you have wanted at your price, or use this additional means of placing your good duplicates in the hands of those who want them most. Write for list and details.—The Music Den, 2133 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 26, Calif. o64-55

PHONOGRAPH Records bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f12675

EDISON diamond disc records, mostly classical. My choice 50c ea. Specified title 75c. mahogany large cabinet machine $35.—Mrs. A. W. Smith, Garfield, Kan. au1161

TRAVEL SEARCH FOR BELLS

By A. C. Meyer — $2.50 postpaid

In the last 10 years, semi-retired, Mr. Meyer and his wife, also a bell enthusiast, indulged their hobby of bell collecting, which has taken them to many parts of the world. In every city and virtually every crossroads, they added interesting specimens to their collection. Now "grounded" because of the war, Mr. Meyer has summarized it all in a down-to-earth story.

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING COMPANY
2810 S. Michigan Chicago 16, Illinois
Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Company

WANTED: Okeh red label records by Gerald Griffin.—Kilroy, 1129 N. Rowan, Los Angeles, Calif. au1501

RECORD COLLECTOR with several hundred duplicates, desires exchange. Lists promptly forwarded upon receipt of yours.—Sims, P. O. Box 741, So. Miami, Fla. au6256

SEND 3c STAMP for list of collectors' items to—2315 So. Flower St., Apt. 201, Los Angeles, Calif. ja6405

FOR SALE: Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph with 30 cylinder, unbreakable records, as good as new, for $15.—Peter H. Loeper Ashland, Penn. City, 6, N. J. ap12069

COLLECTION of old Ballad records. Many singers, sell in lots of 12 or more of each singer.—C. L. Hogan, R. 2, Kansas City 3, Mo. au1361

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, every description. Meerschmump pipes, steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Mayer, 2911 Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. d12219

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. au3402

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f122781

WANTED: OLD MUSIC boxes beyond repair. All types wanted for spare parts.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. ja12468

MUSIC BOXES: I am still accepting a limited amount of repair work on music boxes and other mechanical pieces. I also have choice music boxes for sale; all types.—Geo. A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. o3094

COLLECTION 30 genuine old violins for the collector, connoisseur, professional. Descriptive catalog as to their authenticity, history, preservation, tonal characteristics and price range will be sent postpaid for one dollar.—Isador Berger, Violin Connoisseur, Great Northern Theater, Chicago, Illinois. au3654

For Sale:—Regina automatic Music Box with several 27" records, $350. Regina 20 3/4" and 27" records. Stella 17" and 15 1/2" records. Mira 15 1/2" and 18" records.—George Schait 8 Walnut Ave. Cranford, N. J. au3666

WANTED: Music boxes, musical objects, clocks.—Madge Owens, 2122 First St., Bakersfield, Calif. au119

HIGH GRADE S. S. Stewart banjo, 5 string, $150 beautiful soloists instrument, made 1898; also Whyte Laydie Fairbanks & Cole $100, 5 string banjo, made 1908. Both in fine cases; also 1 Gibson mandolin in leather case, lyre type, ebony finish $100 instrument. Make offer on the 3 together.—C. G. Sturtevant, 2343 Ramona St., San Antonio 1, Texas. au1063

EDISON PHONOGRAPH, model C, small brass horn with stand, 60 cylinder records. Crated and transportation paid, $28.—Kathryn's Kurios, Canton, Mo. au1012

WANTED: CYLINDER records, phonographs. Parts. Music boxes. Discs, mechanical birds.—Nugent, 101 No. Third, Richmond, Va. o3422

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

ADA JONES. IV.

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

If Ada Jones actually was only 40 years of age at the time of her death, she cannot have been more than 22 when she began her career as a recording artist.

I have already indicated that I believe the age given on her death certificate is erroneous. The photographs of her which the recording companies published within a year or so after her records first appeared seem to me to be those of a woman of considerably more maturity than the early twenties would suggest. On the other hand, a present-day student of such things must allow for the aging effect of the types of hair styling and costumes that were popular in the early 1900's, and made young women look middle-aged by our standards.

The 1914 Edison catalog said that Miss Jones sang "Killarney" in public in Philadelphia at the age of seven—two years after her father had moved from England to the United States.

Can it be that she was a "star" two years later, at the age of nine? The New York Public Library's theatrical collection includes the following items about her:

"ADA JONES—She starred in 'A Knotty Affair,' by H. Hall Winslow (opening May 18, 1891) and other light comedies. In 1897, she was awarded a verdict for $315 against John C. Rice for services rendered by her in 'Court of Love,' by John J. McNally (opening December 29, 1896)."

Obviously, if the comedienne was only 22 in 1904, she was just nine in 1891, and 15 when she was awarded the $315 verdict six years later!

I should like to know, too, how it happened that a former "musical comedy star" was singing years later in a dime museum. Perhaps the attacks of epilepsy were less bothersome to a singer in Huber's Museum than they would be in more pretentious productions.

Putting to one side this somewhat unchivalrous consideration of Miss Jones' age, there can no doubt that she was extremely fortunate in making her phonograph debut under the guidance of Leonard Garfield Spencer.

Len Spencer, who was the first recording artist to win fame throughout the English-speaking world, was a man with his share of faults, but he was also a genius—the greatest creative genius who has ever earned a handsome income primarily through the phonograph. His originality, ingenuity and capacity for taking pains were unequalled by any of his contemporaries. If he were alive and at the top of his form today, he would undoubtedly be one of the best known and highly paid of radio writers and performers. As has been well said, he was "the Orson Welles of the early 1900's."

Because a series of articles dealing with Len Spencer's career will follow these about Ada Jones, it is not my plan to write extensively now concerning his mastery of dialects and his uncanny ability to squeeze complete dramatic sketches into the compass of a two-minute cylinder. Naturally, however, since he had been making records for 15 years before the "discovery" of the museum singer, he was the ideal man to teach her the tricks of recording and bring her natural gifts of mimicry to the remarkably high level that was so well displayed in her records.

It will be remembered that Miss Jones wrote that the first record she made was "Pals," a duet with Spencer. She also said that her first solo record was "My Carolina Lady." Presumably, since she was writing for an Edison publication, she was referring to her Edison records and excluding others, yet I can find nothing to indicate that Edison ever issued the first "Pals" Bowery sketch, which made Jones and Spencer a famous duet team, until a four-minute version was listed in August, 1910. On second thought, I should have said "Pals" made "Spencer and Jones" famous, because Len was not the type of genius who shirks the limelight and his name preceded Miss Jones' on their first records.

"My Carolina Lady"—a historic recording that I alas! have never had the pleasure of hearing—appeared in the Edison wax cylinder list for March, 1905. In those days, Edison issued a monthly fan magazine. The New Phonogram, which was supposed to sell for two cents a copy but was usually distributed free by dealers. Here is what it said of Ada Jones' first record:

"8948. My Carolina Lady. This record serves as an introduction to the phonograph public of another new singer in Miss Jones, who has a charming contralto voice. Miss Jones sings this selection in a style all her own, with a dainty coon dialect and expression that claim your interested attention at once. The music of this song was written by Andrew B. Sterling."

Judging by the serial number, the first descriptive specialty made by Jones and Spencer for Edison was "Heinie," which appeared in May, 1905. It was thus described: "A Dutch vaudeville specialty, introducing the song 'Heinie.' The scene is in the theater, with orchestra, and all the incidental effects are reproduced realistically. The music of this song was written by Ted Snyder and the words by Edward Rose. The record is cleverly made by Miss Jones and Mr. Spencer and cannot fail to achieve wide popularity."

That concluding statement about "Heinie," whose number was 8982, was something of a masterpiece of understatement. The June issue of the Phonogram listed another Jones—Spencer duet, "Every Little Bit Helps," a "coon skit" which was also an enormous hit. In describing the new record, the editor revealed incidentally that "Heinie" was the biggest selling record Edison had made up to that time:

"9016. Every Little Bit Helps. A realistic portrayal of a vaudeville act, introducing the theater surroundings, audience, orchestra and everything incidental to as bright and amusing a little act with a story to it as one would see or hear in a first-class vaudeville house. The record in the May list made by these artists broke all records for the sale of a single selection, and this one will probably be quite as popular. Fred Fischer wrote the music of this composition and George Whiting, the words."

As will be seen, the first Jones and Spencer records introduced a popular song of the day, with a playlet built around and illustrating the theme of the song. Later, Spencer more often wrote completely original skits.

Meanwhile, the phonograph's brilliant new star and her distinguished associate and mentor were not confining themselves to recording for Edison. I suspect, in fact, that their first work together was done for Columbia, since it was Victor Emerson who had insisted that Spencer should use a woman to play feminine roles in his skits and brought Billy Murray's suggestion that "the little woman at Huber's Museum" be tried.

As best as I can ascertain, the first Columbia record on which Ada Jones' name appeared was issued in February, 1905—a month before her first for Edison. It was listed as both a cylinder, No. 32623, and a disc, 3050. (Columbia was then the only company making both disc and cylinder records.) The record was "The Hand of Fate," described in a sub-title as "A Burlesque Mellow-drama," which was "full of the dramatic thrills so dear to the hearts of the gallery gods." The artists were "Len Spencer, Henry Spencer and Miss Ada Jones." It is interesting as the only record to my knowledge in which Len Spencer's twin brother, Harry, took part in a Jones and Spencer sketch, and one of the very few of any sort in which he ever participated, aside from sometimes being used by Columbia to make preliminary announcements.

Both Jones and Spencer were missing from the April, 1905, list, but they were back in May with "Mr. and Mrs. Murphy," an Irish sketch, which introduced Albert Von Tilzer's song, "Murphy." In June, Ada's first solo Columbia record made its appearance. It was cylinder No. 32731, "My Carolina Lady," the same "coon song" with which she had made her Edison debut. The Columbia Record described it "a refined coon song sweetly sung by Miss Ada Jones."

Also in June appeared two Jones—Spencer specialties: "Ev'ry Little Bit Helps," which Edison issued in the same month, on cylinder 32730, and "Pals," introducing Gus Edwards' song, "He's Me Pal," on disc 3148. Possibly this is the record of "Pals" which Miss Jones said was the first she ever made. It had a piano accompaniment instead of an orchestral one, which may indicate it had been recorded for several months before it was issued.

I am not sure when Ada Jones' first Victor record was issued, but it was No. 4231, a solo, "Mandy: Will You Be My Lady Love?" Eleven numbers down the list, on 4242, she and Len teamed up in "The Hand of Fate." Their next Victor was 4304, "Reuben and Cynthia." Miss Jones finally got around to singing "My Carolina Lady" for Victor on 4430.

(To be continued)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

By ULYSSES (Jim) WALSH

ADA JONES. V.

Here's a coincidence: On the day after I wrote the installment of this series in which I mentioned that "Heine" and "The Hand of Fate" were among the first descriptive specialites recorded by Ada Jones and Len Spencer, I received a letter from that enthusiastic young collector, Allen Debus, of Glenview, Ill., saying he had found those very records. He did not know I was writing about Ada Jones, so it is particularly interesting to learn that he has come across her very earliest records—which I have never heard.

Obviously, it is inadvisable and unnecessary to try to give a complete account of all the work done by the Jones and Spencer partnership from the beginning of their association until Spencer's death in 1914. I shall mention, however, that their Victor version of the famous "Bowery specialty," "Pals," was No. 4363, and that in 1906 they recorded "Peaches and Cream," an even more famous skit of the same type, for all the American phonograph companies.

It was not long before the glamorous recorded voice of the comedienne began to give her a popularity greater than that of the veteran comedian whose protegee she had become, and the editor of Edison's Phonogram magazine was flooded with requests for information about her. Many correspondents were particularly anxious to know if she were married. Some undoubtedly hoped she was not and longed for an opportunity to become "Mr. Ada Jones."

Commercial curiosity, however, was uppermost in the mind of E. S. B., of St. Paul, Minn., who asked in March, 1906: "How much do Miss Jones and Mr. Spencer receive for making a vaudeville record?" He was briefly told: "We cannot supply this information."

In November, 1906, the Columbia Record published, under the heading of "A Talented Pair," a photograph of Jones and Spencer, with the following comment:

"We print above pictures of two of the most famous record makers in the world. Mr. Spencer has long taken high rank as a Negro impersonator and his recitations and 'team' work with Miss Jones are exceedingly popular. Miss Jones, who was one of the first of the women record makers, is an artiste of the greatest versatility and in nothing is this more effectively shown than in her very clever imitations of Vesta Victoria and the way in which she renders the very popular songs 'Waiting at the Church' and 'It's All Right in the Summer Time.' Had Miss Jones done nothing but sing these songs she would have won a place in the front rank of graphophone record makers, but this line of work is only one of dozens in which she has been equally successful. Thus it happens that Len Spencer with his great abundance of talent and Miss Jones with her long experience and distinct ability are, taken together, one of the most forceful and entertaining pairs that have ever engaged in the work of making talking machine records which are always popular and in lively demand."

The Phonogram for July, 1907, contained this communication from

A.A.A., of Kansas City, Mo.: "I heard from one of your jobbers last week that Ada Jones and Len Spencer were married to each other. If so, will you give me date of same?" The reply; "Both Ada Jones and Len Spencer are married, but not to each other."

I have been unable to ascertain the date of Ada Jones' marriage, but it probably took place before her recording career began. Her husband was Hughey Flaherty, a vaudeville performer whose fame never approached hers. He survived her by nearly twenty years. Not only was she frequently rumored to be the wife of Len Spencer but, later, was commonly believed to be married to Billy Murray.

And now we come to an event that, to the true old record enthusiast, is of even more historical interest than the beginning of the Jones and Spencer partnership. I refer to Miss Jones' singing association with Billy Murray, which began in 1907 and was not altogether severed until her death. The Jones—Murray duets undoubtedly were the most popular ever made for the phonograph by any singing pair, with the possible exception of those of Collins and Harlan and Billy Jones and Ernest Hare. Ada and Billy reached their greatest popularity after their partnership began.

Their first duet for Edison was issued in October, 1907. It was No. 9659, "Will You Be My Teddy Bear?" (a sufficiently silly title) and received this comment in the Phonogram: "This song was Anna Held's greatest hit in 'The Parisian Model' and is one of the biggest successes of recent years. Always up to date, the New York musical stage seized on the prevailing Teddy Bear fad and the result is this bright little song with its pretty refrain. Max Hoffman composed the music and Vincent Bryan wrote the words."

The first duet by Jones and Murray came out about the same time and bore the long and dignified title, "You Can't Give Your Heart to Somebody Else and Still Hold Hands With Me." It was No. 4891. As early as March, 1907, the pair had recorded this same number on Columbia XP Cylinder 33088, and in April had joined with Frank C. Stanley in singing, "Whistle It" from "The Red Mill." Their first association therefore appears to have been for Columbia.

Despite the apparent triviality of the first songs they sang together, the duets of Ada Jones and Billy Murray at once became a reigning fad and eclipsed the Jones—Spencer specialties, although the latter continued to be profusely recorded and to sell well. Ada and Billy were the first team to sing in what was termed a "conversational style," and their free-and-easy, down-to-earth manner apparently could not be imitated with complete success by anybody else. Many years later Bing Crosby said that when he and Mary Martin recorded a series of duets for Decca, they got out some old Jones and Murray records and tried to imitate them. I confess that I have never been able to see the slightest resemblance between Mr. Crosby's vocalizing and anything that Billy Murray did, but Bing showed that he at least knew a good model to pattern after.

The Phonogram had published in October, 1905, an unflattering photo of Miss Jones, which made her look middle-aged and gave the impression that her face was composed mostly of a large nose and an uncountable collection of oversized teeth. A better picture was used in February, 1908, accompanied by this note: "It is with much pleasure that we print in this issue a new photograph of Ada Jones. We have had many requests from her hosts of admirers to re-publish her picture but have refrained from doing so until we could get a better photograph than the one published in October, 1905. This one was taken recently and is a faithful likeness. Of all women now singing for the Phonograph or any other talking machine, Miss Jones is unquestionably the most popular."

In May, 1908, when a Jones—Murray duet of "When the Song of Love is Heard" was issued, the Phonogram said: "Miss Jones and Mr. Murray have each acquired an added vogue with these duet selections, for each new record of their making is more in demand than the previous one."

The question of Ada's marriage continued to preoccupy many readers. In December, 1908, B. A., of Trinity, Texas, wanted to know the marital status of both Jones and Murray. He, or she, asked: "Is Billy Murray married, and what state is he a native of? Who is Ada Jones married to—that is, is she married to any of your singers?" The answers: "Billy Murray is not married. He was born in Colorado. (This was a mistake, since Billy was born in Philadelphia.) Ada Jones is married, but not to any of our singers."

For the first two years of their association, "Miss Jones and Mr. Murray," as the Victor labels then listed them, without including their first names, sang together for all the American companies. In 1909, however, Billy signed a "joint contract," which restricted his services to Victor and Edison, and Miss Jones was obliged to find other partners when singing for other concerns. For several years she and Walter Van Brunt (Walter Scanlan) were associated on Columbia records, and their duets had much of the Jones—Murray flavor. Their team-work stopped when Walter became an exclusive Edison artist in 1914, and she then sang with several other partners. Henry Burr, using the name of Irving Gillette, appeared with her on several Columbia records, but his voice and style did not adapt very successfully to hers. She also sang with one Will C. Robbins, who may possibly have been Sam Ash, and did a few duets with M. J. O'Connell for Columbia and Pathé.

(To be continued)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

ADA JONES VI.

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

I smiled when I copied that quotation from The Columbia Record in which Ada Jones, whose recording career had begun only two years before, was referred to as "one of the first women record makers." Even in so short a time, the comedienne had become a classic and her fame was as firmly established as if she had been the first person to sing "Mary Had a Little Lamb" into Edison's original tinfoil phonograph in 1877.

Something of the same attitude is shown in the June, 1907, issue of the Edison Phonograph Monthly, in which, under the head of "Pushing Grand Opera Records," Edison dealers were told: "A customer coming in for Ada Jones' latest will not accept the beautiful 'Flower Song' from Gounod's 'Faust,' even if it is sung by Madame Jacoby, by way of substitution; for her, there is nothing 'just as good.' But it is quite as likely that among your customers, or among the musically cultured of your town, there are those who would buy the Edison Grand Opera Records if they were persistently brought to their notice."

In October 1910, Edison issued the four-minute wax Amberol record No. 576, a duet by Jones and Murray of Percy Wenrich's famous Indian song, "Silver Bell," which immediately became the biggest selling record the company had made, up to that time.

A month later, the Phonogram found it necessary to deny one of those rumors, which were circulated periodically, that Ada Jones was dead. Under the heading of "A False Rumor," the editor wrote:

"Some unscrupulous individual (or individuals), whose identity or object we are unable to ascertain, has circulated the rumor that Miss Ada Jones is dead. The persistency with which the report makes its appearance is exceedingly annoying to Miss Jones, and we are also bothered by frequent requests for contradiction or confirmation of it.

"Miss Jones is very much alive, of course, as her monthly contributions to the Edison catalogue attest, and moreover is enjoying excellent health. As it is out of the realms of possibility to offer her many friends throughout the world more tangible proof of her entity than her records, she has suggested that we contradict this malicious rumor through the columns of the Phonogram so as to give the denial the widest possible circulation."

I doubt that the rumors were "malicious." The fact is that, in those days without radio and talking films, phonograph singers like Ada Jones, whose voices were heard over and over in the homes, particularly in small towns and the country, had the status of legendary figures, and the wildest rumors were circulated about them simply because they were living legends. This was particularly true of Ada Jones, who occupied a spot all to herself as the one outstanding feminine recorder, outside the ranks of operatic stars.

The November, 1910, denial of Miss Jones' death had been preceded by this question in the May, 1909, Phonogram from J. S. R., of Ellenburg, Washington: "Some one informed me that Ada Jones is dead. Is she?" The answer of course, was "Miss Jones is still living."

Two of Ada Jones' most popular solo records came out within a month of each other in 1909. In October was listed her four-minute version of "The Bird on Nellie's Hat," which had originally been made several years before by Helen Trix on a two-minute record, and in November came "Just Plain Folks." The latter was taken over into the Blue Amberol list and was a steady seller as long as Edison stayed in the record business. Probably more copies were sold of it than of any other Ada Jones solo record. The lyrics told the pathetic story of how an old couple from the country were coldly received when they went to see their son who lived in a city mansion "fine and grand" and left him, after deciding they were "out of place here, 'cause we're just plain folks." It is easy to dismiss such a naive composition as "trash," but such songs had, and have, a strong appeal to unsophisticated listeners, and Ada Jones was as much a mistress of this obvious type of sentiment as she was of comic dialects. She was not only a comedienne but a ballad singer of the type the plain people love.

In the November, 1909, Phonogram, C. D. B., of Yarbrough, Arkansas, bluntly asked: "If Ada Jones is married, why is she called Miss?" He was told: "For the same reason that induces all female singers and actresses, with few exceptions, to retain their maiden names—custom."

As a rule, the inquiries about Ada Jones and other singers came from small places, but in January, 1910, W. J. R., of Pittsburgh Pa., wanted to know: "Who did Ada Jones marry?" He was put off with, "We prefer not to answer this question."

In February, M. G. McK., of Meridian, Miss., asked: "What is Ada Jones' real name?" If this was another attempt to learn whom she married, it failed, for the answer was: "Ada Jones."

Mrs. H. L. P., Waterville, Maine, apparently hoped Miss Jones was someone she had known, for in June, 1910, she asked: "Was Ada Jones born in China, Maine? If she is married, is her real name Ada Jones?" She was told that Ada was not born in China and that "Ada Jones is her stage name; her married name is not of public interest."

This lady probably was the most persistent question asker the Phonogram ever encountered, because she made a host of inquiries, the answers

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, every description. Meerschaum pipes, steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Meyer, 2911 Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. d12219

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. n3832

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f122781

WANTED: OLD MUSIC boxes beyond repair. All types wanted for spare parts.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. ja12468

CERTIFICATE and expert opinion on old violins. Fee $5. Violins sent will receive prompt & careful attention.—Isador Berger (Violin Connoisseur), 165 E. Ohio St., Chicago, Ill. au126541

WANTED: CYLINDER records, phonographs. Parts. Music boxes. Discs, mechanical birds.—Nugent, 101 No. Third, Richmond, Va. ja3422

EDISON CYLINDER, home or standard, 30 assorted records, all for $15.—Peter H. Loeper, Ashland, Pa. d3612

REGINA MUSIC BOX, Mahogany cabinet with 14, 15 1/2" disc. Excellent condition. First $100.—S. O. Figliand, 4103-2nd, Des Moines, Iowa. n1041

FOR SALE: Scarce phonograph & radio parts. Victor records, single & double-faced. Columbia records, rare acoustics & electrics.—Leroy Hughbanks, Osborne, Kansas. j3223

MIRA console music box for sale, 22, 15 1/2" disc, plain oak case, good lines, 36" high x 25" x 19". Very good condition, $150.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. n1302

CELLO, old, German; one fine old Italian, one German violin, reasonable.—Phipps, 1756 Clybourn, Chicago. n1501

RECORDS

WANTED: Cylinder records; Edison, Columbia.—Leroy Hughbanks, Osborne, Kansas. ja3621

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap12069

OUT-OF-PRINT recordings, classical, operatic, 1900-1940, bought, sold, exchanged.—American Record Collectors Exchange, 1329 Sixth Avenue, New York City 19, N. Y. ja12069

MUSIC BOX DISCS available in various sizes for the Mira, Regina, Stella, Criterion, Olympia & Symphonion music boxes. Send for list, giving size desired.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. n1422

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f12675

CLASSICAL RECORDS for sale. Send for list.—H. P. Silverman, 216 Denham Bldg., Denver 2, Colorado d3012

SEND 3c STAMP for list of collectors' items to—2315 So. Flower St., Apt. 201, Los Angeles, Calif. ja6405

FOR SALE: Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph with 30 cylinder, unbreakable records, as good as new, for $15.—Peter H. Loeper, Ashland, Penn. City, 6, N. J. ap12069

FOR SALE: Music Box records: Regina 20 3/4", Regina 27", Mira 15 1/2", Criterion 15 1/2", Stella 17 1/4".—George Schait, 8 Walnut Ave., Cranford, N. J. ja3223 to which should interest record collectors today. Below are given her other questions, with the answers in parentheses:

"Is Byron G. Harlan a nom de plume; if so what is his real name? (No.) Is he married? (Yes.) In what year did he first sing on the stage? (Unable to say.) Was he born in Canton, Lincoln county, S. D.? (No, in Kansas. He formerly lived in Canton.) Why doesn't he sing with any ladies? (There is no particular reason why he does not sing with ladies.) Is Arthur Collins married? (Yes.) In what city did he formerly live? (In different cities, among them Orange and Newark, N. J.) What is the name of the manager of the singers? (Walter H. Miller.) Who sings bass in Record No. 8850, and who says 'I will' in the same record? (George H. Bemus.) Does Billy Murray play in a band or orchestra; if so, what instrument does he play? (No.) Where was he born? (In Philadelphia.) Is Manuel Romain a nom de plume? (No.) Are Golden and Hughes colored gentlemen? (No.)"

In December, 1910, Mrs. Carrie N. Doane, of Derry, New Hampshire, contributed to the Phonogram a poem in praise of the famous singer. Entitled "To Ada," it was no worse than the average amateur effort:

"You are singing as sweetly today, Ada Jones, as you did in the days gone by; You have sung your way into hearts and our homes without ever having to try. Your laugh is as merry today, Ada Jones, as it was in the 'Huskin' Bee,' And you've woven yourself right into our lives; that you belong to us, all will agree.

You are cheering our hearts today, Ada Jones, and time does but make you more dear;

For never is sorrow in song of your, Or drear winter in your year.

You've intertwined yourself 'round our hearts, Ada Jones, while you've gone on your way with your song,

And the heart that has heard you can never forget, and to us you will always belong.

You are singing as merry and light, Ada Jones, as you may in the by and by, While you coax the mirth to our saddened hearts, and never give room for a sigh.

You are singing more sweetly today, Ada Jones—what's the charm and where does it lie?

The vocal stars met in your horoscope, and we love you, dear Ada, that's why."

When this verse appeared, Ada Jones was perhaps at the height of her fame, and the New Hampshire woman's tribute probably was one of the most sincere and appreciated she ever received. It, too, however, bears the impress of the feeling that Ada had been singing for time immemorial, instead of making records for a mere half a dozen years. After all, considering that her recording career had begun so short a time before, there was no reason for wonder that she was still singing as well as she did "in the days gone by!"

(To be continued.)

WANTED

WANTED: Oil Paintings, 17-18-19 Century and works of art wanted for cash.—Lasslow, 959 Madison Ave., New York. my12463

WANTED: OLD American paintings—landscapes, portraits, clipperships. Send description.—C. K. Johnson, Hurler, New York. mh6084

WANTED: AMERICAN Historical and Primitive paintings. Old Tavern signs, historical items. High cash paid. You write, describe, we call.—The Stuyvesant Shop, 654 Stuyvesant Ave., Trenton, N. J. ja3293

WANTED: Paintings in oil or watercolor of clipperships, steamboats, side-wheelers. Give name of ship and artist when writing.—Harry Stone, 555 Madison Ave., New York City 22. o126941

Water-Colors

Pastels

PAINTINGS

Paintings at Auction

Selections from a recent sale conducted by the Parke-Bernet Galleries, Inc., New York, N. Y.

Alma Tadema, R. A., Sir Lawrence. British: 1836-1912. The Picture Gallery. In a Roman gallery are several figures examining a painting on an easel. In the foreground a reclining maiden reads from a scroll. A youth reads another scroll to three connoisseurs. Signed. Panel: 30¼x23¼ inches. Brought $1,000.

Knaus, Ludwig. German: 1829-1910. A German Village Fete. In a wide village green are seen numerous gay figures, dancing and conversing. Signed, and dated 1881. 41x58 inches. Brought $2,500.

Breton, Jules. French: 1827-1906. The Rainbow: Coast of Brittany. A peasant girl riding a donkey is followed by a bare-footed lad pointing backward. The landscape is barren, but the arch of a rainbow can be seen at the left. Signed, and dated 1883. 43½x61 inches. Brought $900.

Roybet, Ferdinand Victor Leon. French: 1840-1920. A Musical Party. A group of five cavaliers in seventeenth century costume surround a lady seated at a table before sheets of music. A page stands in the background. Signed, and dated 1879. 57½x47½ inches. Brought $3,100.

FOR SALE

MORELAND: Watercolor (7"9") $25.—Providence Antiques, 732 Westminster, Providence 3, R. I. n107

GOTHIC OIL PAINTING RESTORER

Readily removes dirt, film, dryness and surface scales. Supplies oils necessary to prevent cracking. Will not harm original finish.

PRICES

3-oz. size .....$ 1.00
8-oz. size ..... 2.00
Gallons ..... 12.00

Add 10% for Postage

GOTHIC PRODUCTS
319 S. Wabash - Chicago 4, Illinois

WANTED American Primitive Paintings

I want them of every description and subject.
Please describe. Send snapshot if possible.

HARRY STONE
555 Madison Avenue New York City

YOUR FAVORITE TENORS. Part 8

ROBERT I. BOBST, Washington

ANSELM
BONCI
CARUSO
CICCOLINI
CICCOLINI
URLUS URLUS
URLUS
ZENATELLO
ZENATELLO

Lucia di Lammermoor—Tu che a Dio (Edison 83018)
Rigoletto—La donna e mobile (Edison 83013)
La Forza del Destino—O tu che in seno (V6000)
Manon—Le Reve (Edison 82556)
Manon Lescaut—Donna non vidi mai (Edison 82210)
Die Allmacht (Schubert) (Edison 82252)
Die Walkure—Ein schwert (Edison 82246)
Stabat Mater—Cujus Animam (Edison 83082)
Faust—Salve Dimora (Edison 82238)
Requiem—Ingemisco (Edison 82214)

JOE PICKAR, New Jersey

CARUSO
CARUSO
DAVIDOFF
FLETA
JADLOWKER
MARCONI MARTINELLI
SLEZAK
SMIRNOFF
SOBINOFF

Lyric Performances
Tosca—E lucevan le stelle (Pathe)
Pearl Fishers—Mi par (Opera Disc)
Pojellei (Pathe)
Puritani—A te, o cara (V948)
Barcarolle "Masaniello" (Opera Disc)
Mefistofele—Dai campi (G&T)
Ernani—Come rugiada (V64514 or 737)
Weisse Dame—Komm o holde Dame (IRCC 99)
Barber of Seville—Ecco ridente (HMV)
Pearl Fishers—Mi par (HMV)

CARUSO
John O'SULLIVAN
John O'SULLIVAN
SCAMPINI
SCHMEDES
SLEZAK
TACCANI TAMAGNO
VIGNAS
ZEROLA

Dramatic Performances
Le Cid—O Souverain (V88554 or 6013)
Trovatore—Di quella pira (Col.)
Otello—Ore e per sempre addio (Col.)
Samson and Dalilah—Aria (Pathe)
Otello—Dio mi potevi (G&T)
Otello—Death (Odeon)
Manon Lescaut—Guardate passo son (Fono)
Andrea Chenier—Un di (HMV DS101)
Profeta—Sopra Berta (Fono. or HRS)
Pagliacci—No, Pagliaccio non son (Victor)

R. B. STONE, New York

CARUSO
CARUSO
CARUSO
CARUSO
CARUSO
McCORMACK
McCORMACK
MURATORE
SLEZAK
ZEROLA

La Juive Quand du seigneur (V88625 6001)
Boheme: Che gelida manina (V8302)
Cantique de Noel (V8302)
Pagliacci: No, Pagliaccio non son (V88279)
Trovatore Di quella pira (V87001)
Don Giovanni: Il mio tesoro (V74484 6204)
Lakme Vien al contento profondo (V87063 64171 775)
Monna Vanna: Elle est a moi (IRCC and Pathe)
Konigin von Saba: Magische Tone (V64115)
Andrea Chenier: Improvviso (V88243 74216)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

ADA JONES VII

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

For perhaps a dozen years after Ada Jones first sang into a recording horn, her popularity remained near its peak. It survived the death of her associate, Len Spencer, whose vogue had largely passed by the time he suffered his fatal heart attack in December, 1914. She continued to make many solo records and to be in demand for duet work with Billy Murray and other male singers.

After 1917, however, her phonograph activity declined considerably. Most probably, this was because the nation was engaged in World War I, and the type of war song that dominated the popular music field was not well suited to Miss Jones' style. Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, who specialized in blackface comedy work, lost their Victor and Columbia contracts for a similar reason—unsuitability of material and style to the changing themes of the time.

From 1918 on, Miss Jones did little solo work, and appeared only occasionally in the Victor and Columbia lists. In the former, for instance, she was represented by a duet with Billy Murray, "I'll Take You Back to Italy," in the spring of 1918, but did not reappear on a Victor record until the fall of 1919 when she assisted Cal Stewart in "Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy Put Up the Kitchen Stove."

She recorded oftener for Edison and some of the smaller companies, but even Edison largely ceased to assign her to duets with Billy Murray. From 1917, he sang much oftener with his veteran partner. After Billy returned to free-lancing in 1919, at the expiration of his joint Victor-Edison contract, he and Miss Rice also sang together for Victor, Aeolian-Vocalion and some minor manufacturers.

Perhaps a factor in Miss Jones' appearing less often on records was her increasing activity as a concert singer. She traveled in 1918 with a troupe consisting, besides herself, of George L. Thompson, the comedian, and the original Shannon Four quartet, whose members then were Charles Hart, first tenor; Harvey Hindermeyer, second tenor; Elliott Shaw, baritone, and Wilfred Glenn, bass. Her personal appearances with Cal Stewart, in the "Pumpkin Center" specialties, probably came a little later.

During this period, incidentally, the demand from buyers of Edison cylinder records for Blue Amberol versions of descriptive specialties that Ada Jones and Len Spencer had recorded on wax Amberol records ten years or so before was so great that several were reissued. In addition, Ada and Steve Porter made Diamond Discs of several of the original Jones-Spencer skits.

We are now approaching the end of Ada Jones' career and of her life. Late in 1921, she made her last records. For Edison she sang with Billy Jones, in the absence of Billy Murray who had signed an exclusive Victor contract the year before a double-faced record of "On a Little Side Street" and "When Francis Dances With Me"—two of the best numbers she ever did, in which her voice and style were unimpaired. About the same time she sang the "Francis" song for Victor, with Billy Murray as her partner. It was issued a month or so after the Edison version and was probably the last recording she ever did.

Then Miss Jones took to the road, as the head of a small concert company. The other members were "Armstrong, the Magician," a boyish-looking-young fellow with a mustache, who seems to have been her business

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, every description. Meerschmump pipes, steins. Will sell my duplicates.—Herbert H. Meyer, 2911 Grant Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa. d12219

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. f3753

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f122781

WANTED: old music boxes beyond repair. All types wanted for spare parts.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, New York. ja12468

CERTIFICATE and expert opinion on old violins. Fee $5. Violins sent will receive prompt and careful attention.—Isador Berger (Violin Connoisseur), 165 E. Ohio St., Chicago, Ill. au126541

WANTED: Cylinder records, phonographs, Parts. Music boxes. Discs, mechanical birds.—Nugent, 101 N. Third, Richmond, Va. ja3422

EDISON CYLINDER, home or standard, 30 assorted records, all for, $15.—Peter H. Loeper, Ashland, Pa. d13612

DISCS FOR OLYMPIA Music Box. 8 3/4" wanted.—Genevieve Keim, 319 Walnut, St., Columbia, Pa. d1501

FOR SALE: Scarce phonograph and radio parts. Victor records, single and double-faced. Columbia records, rare acoustics and electrics.—Leroy Hughbanks, Osborne, Kansas. j3223

EARLY AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC
Bound Volumes or Loose Sheets

Wanted.

List on Request.

HARRY DICHTER, 5458 Montgomery Ave.
Philadelphia 31, Penna.

MUSIC BOXES

all types

BOUGHT, SOLD and REPAIRED.

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

manager; Mabel Loomis, soprano and pianist, and Beth Hamilton, violinist. The two young ladies sang and played a higher type of music than their more famous star.

Since Ada Jones' following was always greatest and most enthusiastic in the smaller communities, that was chiefly the sort of place in which the troupe appeared. In February, 1922, for instance, it gave a performance in the little town of Marion, Virginia, where I then lived, and I was fortunate enough to be among those present in the Court Square Theater on what seemed to me a historic night. I was not a particularly observant boy, but I had a feeling that Ada Jones, although she sang as well as she ever had, was very tired, and I felt depressed as I left the theater.

Less than three months later, she died in Rocky Mount, N. C., after collapsing at the end of her recital in a theater there. It was difficult, after I decided to write this series, to obtain accurate information about the singer's final illness. A letter to the Billboard merely brought the suggestion that I consult the New York Public Library for information. The Library replied its record showed only that Ada Jones died May 2, 1922.

I wrote to the New York Times, and received this reply: "We are sorry that we can find no record in our files of Ada Jones (Mrs. Hugh Flaherty). The New York Times apparently carried no notice of her death nor does our morgue contain any file on her career." To me it appears strange that the nation's greatest newspaper should have completely overlooked the death of one of the most popular singers of her time.

Variety sent me a copy of its notice in the issue of May 5, 1922. It said briefly: "Ada Jones, heading her own road company under the management of O. E. Wee, died suddenly May 2 from uremia in Rocky Mount, N. C. The musical comedy star gave a performance Saturday night and was removed to a local hospital immediately after, where little chance for her recovery was looked for from the start. Following the death of Miss Jones the company, which included several musical features, was brought back to New York to be disbanded. Her remains will be taken to Huntington, L. I., for burial."

It seems rather unusual that Variety should have referred to Ada Jones as a musical comedy star, which she was not, and not have mentioned her phonograph career. The sketch was remarkable, too, for lack of any information concerning her age, surviving relatives and biographical data generally.

Determined to get more detailed information, I wrote to the Rocky Mount Evening Telegram, asking for a copy of the news story it must have carried about Ada's death, but received a reply from Miss Maud A. Battle, acting managing editor, that the 1922 file had not been preserved. She added:

"I checked with the Rocky Mount Sanitarium. They, likewise, have record trouble, for the hospital was run by the Catholic church at that time and when the Sisters left they took their records with them. However, I was told that Ada Jones was a patient of Dr. D. L. Knowles at that time, and you might get some additional information by writing to him."

Thanks to Miss Battle's suggestion, I wrote to Dr. Knowles and received a reply that was as courteous and comprehensive as he could make it. He wrote:

"I remember very well the short illness and death of Miss Ada Jones, but I do not recall any special incidents. What information I have for you I got from the death certificate. All records at the hospital have been lost or misplaced.

"I was called to see Miss Jones, early morning of May 1, 1922. She was at the Ricks Hotel and was traveling with her manager and a maid. When I saw her that morning she was practically unconscious. I had her moved to the hospital where she died next morning at 10:20. She never came out of her coma and delirium. Her blood pressure was extremely high and her kidneys were shot. I signed her death certificate, 'acute uremia due to nephritis and hypertension.' Her body was shipped to New York City and burial was supposed to have been May 5, 1922.

"The informant was W. J. Armstrong, traveling with Miss Jones as her manager (I think that is correct). He did not know so much about her past and did not know who her father and mother were—so here goes the certificate:

"Ada Jones Flaherty, age 40, phonograph and concert singer. Born in England, no date; father and mother, don't know, and don't know birthplace.

"Duration of illness, May 1-2, 1922. Died 10:20 a.m., May 2, 1922. No autopsy.

"Diagnosis: Acute uremia and nephritis. R. R. Gay, mortician, Rocky Mount, N. C. Body shipped to New York. Informant: W. J. Armstrong, no address. Husband's name given as Huly Flaherty.

"This is all I can give you and I hope you will find some use for it in your unique and interesting hobby. If I can help you further, call on me," was the way Dr. Knowles concluded his most appreciated letter. "Huly" as Mr. Flaherty's first name, of course, was a misunderstanding of Hughey, his correct given name.

(To be continued.)

STARS AND THEIR HOBBIES

Lily Pons shows off her collection of "snuff boxes" to her conductor-husband, Andre Kostelanetz.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

ADA JONES VIII

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Doubting that 40 was Ada Jones' correct age at the time of her death, I continued my inquiries by writing to the City of New York's Department of Health and asking if its bureau of records had the information I needed, but was told by Thomas J. Duffield, director of the bureau, that it lacked any record of the singer's birth or death. He suggested that I might obtain the information from the Bureau of Vital Statistics, State Department of Health, Raleigh, N. C. This was useless, however, since the Raleigh bureau's records would have been based on information provided by Dr. Knowles.

Then Jimmy Martindale sent me a copy of the Suffolk County Watchman, a weekly paper published at Huntington Station, where Miss Jones had lived. My Brooklyn friend had suspected I would be interested by an article, "Ada Jones Recalled in WABC Broadcast," and I was. I copy it here from the August 3 issue:

"Old residents of Huntington Station who happened to listen to an early morning WABC broadcast Wednesday had their memories refreshed when the commentator recalled the singing stars of the little Edison phonograph records of some thirty years ago. One of the favorites of that time was Ada Jones, who made her home on Douglas Court, and commuted to the city where she made records of sentimental ballads and popular songs.

"Miss Jones had a disposition bubbling over with good nature, the spirit of which she put into her art. Her records were among the best sellers of those almost forgotten Edison celluloids. An announcer would recite the name of the piece, gave the name of the composer, lyric writer and songster and then warn the listener that the music would follow immediately. Of course, the technique of introducing a musical piece on the air has changed with the time, but it is refreshing to know that Ada Jones is still remembered as one of the pioneers in the broadcasting of vocal entertainers."

There are a few easily seen slips in that article. The announcer did not give the name of the composer and lyric writer, nor did he "warn" that the music would begin immediately. But that is of little consequence. Hoping that the Watchman would find information in its back files about Miss Jones' death and funeral, I sent an inquiry, but Edward Dobson, a contributing editor, said the paper had little exact information about her. He suggested that I consult Len Spencer for further details, not knowing that Len had been dead for more than 30 years.

"Ada Jones," Mr. Dodson said, "never appeared in vaudeville, but went on small town tours, which probably accounts for so little being actually known about her. Her immediate family is dead, and those here who knew her had little information but what one gets about a neighbor. The fact seems to be that she is the first woman who had her voice recorded in her comedy skits and topical songs. I knew (her) as a very jovial and good-natured woman in middle age."

In its issue of August 31, the Suffolk County paper gave prominent "play" to an article featuring the letter of inquiry I had written. It had the caption of "Ada Jones First Woman to Have Voice Recorded on Old Cylinder Transcripts—Station Artist Sang for Early Victor Record" and read:

"The story recalling Ada Jones, the first woman whose voice was recorded for the phonograph, and who made her home in Douglas Court, Huntington Station, interested Jim Walsh on the editorial staff of the Roanoke World-News of Roanoke, Virginia. His hobby is collecting information about pioneer recording artists for use in his 'Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists' department in HOBBIES Magazine and for a book upon which he is working.

"Mr. Walsh desired more facts about Miss Jones than were contained in the brief news article published in The Watchman in the August 3 issue. In his letter he said that her singing partner, Billy Murray, still lives at Freeport, Nassau County, and recently appeared on an old-timers broadcast.

"Miss Jones, whose married name was Mrs. Hugh Flaherty, bought one of the first homes built in Douglas Court by the late Walter Seay, pioneer builder at Huntington Station. The Seay family lived next door and it was there that friends and neighbors enjoyed many pleasant evenings listening to her stories and songs. She made tours through the country with comedy sketches and popular ballads and it was on one of these tours that she was stricken and died at Rocky Mount, N. C., on May 2, 1922. Her husband died about four years ago and their daughter, Sheila, also is dead.

"When the first Victor cylindrical records were first made her contralto voice and comedy style won her the honor of having her voice recorded as the first woman to break into the field of entertainment. Another of her partners was Len Spencer, while a third partner made up a popular quartet on tour. 'She was really a great artist and I'd like to do her justice when I write about her,' Mr. Walsh said.

"Among the youngsters who listened to Miss Jones in the Seay home was Frances, the young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Seay. She had red hair and was very pretty. The singer took quite a fancy to her and undoubtedly inspired her to go on the stage. In her late teens she appeared with Eddie Cantor in the Winter Garden in Manhattan in a song and dance routine for two seasons. She is now Mrs. George Verme of Huntington, and possesses a rare collection of the old Ada Jones records.

"Mr. Seay died in 1939. Mrs. Lillian V. Seay, whose home is at 14 May Street, Huntington Station, has been spending her winters between Newport News, Va., and Florida. She recalls vividly her relations with Ada Jones and the many happy times they had together as neighbors on Douglas Court."

In view of the cordial tone of this article, I perhaps should refrain from pointing out that Victor never made "cylindrical recordings" and insisting once more that Ada Jones was NOT the first woman to have her voice recorded.

Since beginning this series, it has occurred to me that municipal authorities of Manchester, England, where Miss Jones was born, might be able to let me have additional details, such as the full names of her parents and her exact birth date. If I succeed in getting such knowledge, I shall pass it on in due time to readers of HOBBIES.

Ada Jones died when the average American was just beginning to hear of radio, but before it had ousted the phonograph as the most popular medium of musical entertainment. Electrical recording was not introduced until three years after her death. If she were alive today she would be at least somewhere in her sixties, and probably would long since have settled down to placid retirement.

Styles in entertainment change, of course, and Miss Jones' way of singing must appear dated to the youngsters of today, who probably would apply to it that charitable, all-embracing term of "corny." The fact remains, however, that she was not only the most popular woman who ever made records but was an artist of remarkable talents, who probably would be able to adapt herself to any modifications of style, either in singing or humorous delineation. Her records still charm thousands of collectors. I'd be willing to wager that, a generation from now, they will be in far more demand than will be the discs of such for the moment up-to-date singers as Dinah Shore and Hildegarde, who have only to keep at it long enough to be themselves branded as "corny!"

Certainly, Ada Jones' merits entitle her to be affectionately remembered.

Two varying types of the Columbia Grand Opera Disc Record label

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

A Visit With John Bieling

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

A dream came true last September when I spent two evenings and a day in the hospitable home of John Bieling at Hempstead, Long Island.

Few readers of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists will need to be told who John Bieling is. You know him to have been the first tenor of the Manhasset Male Quartet, the first vocal ensemble ever to make wax cylinder records in the early 1890's and, until his retirement in 1914, top tenor of the Hayden (Edison) and American (Premier) Quartets.

The name of "The Canary," as his associates used to call Mr. Bieling because he had a high, sweet voice that never blasted when he sang into the old-fashioned recording horn, has been familiar to me almost ever since I can remember, but he has seemed to me almost as legendary a figure as King Arthur or Robin Hood, and I had never really believed that I should some day be privileged to shake his hand and enter his home. There were times when I amused myself by suspecting that John had never existed and that I had only "dreamed him up."

This feeling was so strong that when Bryant Burke, my host during my stay at Hempstead, took me to Mr. Bieling's home immediately after I arrived in the Long Island town, and the famous tenor came to the door, I asked him to let me stand and look at him for a minute before I undertook to greet him.

"I just want to make sure you really exist!" I said.

John laughed, and assured me he was a substantial reality. He will be 78 years of age by the time this article appears, but is still active and mentally alert and as lovable a personality as anyone is likely to meet.

That first evening in the Bieling home was a memorable experience. I not only met John himself, but his sons, Harry and George, and Harry's daughter, Magdalen Margaret, who is best known to her friends as "Bo-Bo," a nickname her grandfather gave her when she was a tot. John also 'phoned to Billy Murray, who lives at Freeport, only five miles away, and we obtained Billy's agreement to join us the next day. There was one real disappointment, when we learned that Billy's inseparable pal, Jimmy Martindale, would not be able to join the party.

After several hours of lively conversation and listening to John's reminiscences, Bryant and I left, looking forward to resuming the get-together the next morning. And so we did, taking only time enough out for me to hear a representative sampling of some of Bryant's many amazingly rare and interesting old discs and cylinders.

When we returned to our happy rendezvous, I met Mrs. Bieling for the first time. Like "Bo-Bo," she is blessed with a charming personality and, like everybody in the Bieling menage, has a gift for making visitors feel welcome and perfectly at home.

Bryant and I had been on hand for only a few minutes when Billy Murray came over. It was a great pleasure to me to find "The Boss" looking so well and in superlative spirits. Billy suffered an attack of coronary thrombosis early in 1944 that had his friends badly worried, but he seems to have recovered completely and to be in excellent health.

What a time there was when the two surviving members of the American Quartet (Steve Porter, the baritone, and William F. Hooley, the bass, have been dead a considerable time) began to swap yarns about the old recording days! The enjoyment was increased when Jim Van Demark, a Cohoes, N. Y., collector, who had learned of my arrival, dropped in to join us. Jim, an enthusiastic collector of old "popular" records, is a friend of Billy and John's former associates, Will Oakland and Walter Scanlan.

While the five of us were going great guns, conversationally speaking, Milton Platnick, a photographer who makes pictures for many New York City and Long Island papers, dropped in and took the group "shot" which appears with this article. It was published, with an accompanying feature story, in the Nassau Daily Review-Star. Billy and John are shown listening to the American Quartet's 1910 Victor record of "Play That Barbershop Chord," reproduced by the Bieling's Victrola. Unfortunately, Harry Jansen, of Queen's Village, another admirer of the pioneer recording artists, arrived too late to get into the picture.

Mrs. Bieling served an excellent luncheon, and eating and conversing were impartially relished. For hours after the meal was cleared away we remained at the table, the collectors chiefly occupied in listening while Billy and John recalled incident after incident of the "old days." John, incidentally, showed his agreement with readers of Hobbies, who voted Billy the No. 1 pioneer recording artist, by remarking:

"I'm not saying it just because he's here, but I'd say it behind his back as well as to his face—Billy Murray is the greatest artist who ever made our kind of record! When it came to clear enunciation and knowing just how to put a song over, Billy," he added, "you were absolutely in a class by yourself!"

It was a wrench when Billy had to leave, about 5 o'clock, but we consoled ourselves with the belief that we'd all get together next year. Then the rest of us made a pilgrimage of a few blocks to see a house in which the late Arthur Collins, famous for his rendi-

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 23)

PIONEERS AND THEIR ADMIRERS MEET—This photo was taken in John Bieling's home at Hempstead, L. I., during a happy get-together of two pioneer recording artists and three of their collector-admirers. In the foreground, John Bieling (left) and Billy Murray (right), listen to a Victrola rendition of one of their 1910 records. In the background, left to right, are Bryant Burke, Hempstead, N. Y., "Jim" Walsh, of Vinton, Va., writer of the Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists department in HOBBIES, who is working upon a book of biographical sketches of early recording artists, and Jim Van Demark, of Cohoes, N. Y.

Photo by Milton Platnick, Hempstead, N. Y.

OLD AMERICAN TOWN VIEWS

"NEW ORLEANS"

"CENTRAL PARK, NEW YORK"

From our large stock of these attractive collectors' items, we offer the following hand colored engravings about 1870, by well-known artists and engravers, suitable for framing and gifts. Picture proper 6 by 9", on paper 9½ by 12½". Can be framed as large as 14 by 16". Published by Appleton, and all in good condition.

California (Golden Gate)
California (Mount Shasta)
California (Mirror Lake, Yosemite)
Canada (Quebec)
Connecticut (The Housatonic)
Connecticut (East Rock, New Haven)
Florida, On the Coast of Kentucky (Louisville)
Louisiana (New Orleans)
Maine (Mount Desert)
Maryland (Baltimore)
Massachusetts (Boston)
Missouri (St. Louis)
New Jersey (Highlands of Neversink)
New York (Buffalo)
New York (Lake George)
New York (Central Park)
New York (West Point)
North Carolina (Smoky Mountains)
Ohio (Cincinnati)
Ohio (Cleveland)
Oregon (Mount Hood)
Pennsylvania (Delaware Water Gap)
Pennsylvania (Philadelphia)
Rhode Island (Narragansett)
Rhode Island (Providence)
Virginia (Warper's Ferry)
Virginia (Richmond)
Washington, D. C. (from Arlington)
Wisconsin (Milwaukee)

$5.00 each

Check with order, prints returnable in five days if not satisfactory.

nc

THE OLD PRINT SHOP

Harry Shaw Newman

150 Lexington Avenue

New York 16, New York

required holes cut in the stage to effect the sudden appearances of clowns or elves, to the classic drama of Shakespeare or the melodramas much in favor, such as "The Corsican Brothers" or "Mazeppa."

FOR SALE

PRINTS COLORED in authentic manner by—Hazel Swayze, Wolf Den Road, Pomfret Center, Conn. s12487

COLOR PRINTS: Flowers, fruits, birds, costumes. Wholesale and retail. Wanted: Fine old lace paper Valentines. —K. Gregory, 222 E. 71st Street, New York, N. Y. f120021

ANTIQUE COLORED city views, $1 ea., Philadelphia, New York, Hartford, etc., 8"x12" margins, by Charles Magnus, fine condition.—Schwarz, 1806 Chestnut, Philadelphia, Pa. au12897

CURTIS FLOWER PRINTS, orig. hand coloring, each bearing date of over 120 years ago, size 5½x9 in., $5 doz. post-paid. Framed in gold leaf frame with French lined mats, $7.50 a pair, express collect. For Dealers: An assortment of 25 dated flower, costume and other prints for $12.50. Express collect. —Old Prints, 525 E. Argonne Dr., Kirkwood, Mo. n128423

PRINTS CLEANED. Also engravings. Age, water stains removed. Guaranteed. Lithographs bought, sold and exchanged. Want winter scenes, flowers, animals, scenery, sports, ships. —Stuart F. Gast, 3421 Center St. N. W., Washington 10, D. C. f124851

CURRIER & IVES PRINTS, Specialist's latest price list, 250 items. Send 25 cents to—The Old Print Dealer, 41-28 Little Neck Parkway, Little Neck, Long Island, New York. mh3885

OLD VIEWS OF CITIES. Early prints, hand colored, of your native town are interesting Americana. These are neatly mounted and protected by cellophane. Prices from $3 to $7.50. From Glasgow, Scotland, we have recently received colorful prints of old clipper ships, nine titles, matted ready for framing, size 9½x11½", $5 a pair.—Old Prints, 525 E. Argonne Dr., Kirkwood 22, Mo. s122743

Old prints and maps. Colored engravings, mezzotints, lithographs. Subjects include flowers, fruit, birds, fashions, costumes, sporting, coaching, Currier & Ives, views, ships, animals, fish, butterflies and many others. From 50c to $50.—Oscar Imber, 1332 Third Ave., New York 21, New York. mh3000

CURRIER & IVES PRINTS. Send stamp for list, large and small folios.—Frank W. Mathews, Scottsville, N. Y. f1041

COLLECTION OF 8 Revolutionary War scenes. All original Currier & Ives. Write for titles and price.—James J. O'Hanlon, 1920 Holland Ave., Utica, N. Y. f1761

If You're Moving

Don't forget to send a post card to HOBBIES' Subscription Dept., 2810 S. Michigan, Chicago, Ill. Mail your card at least two weeks before the date of issue. Because of the paper shortage we cannot duplicate lost copies.

MUSIC

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 22)

tion of the immortal "Preacher and the Bear," lived before he retired and moved to Florida. Oddly enough, the owner, a Mr. McGrath, who proved most cordial when he learned why we were taking pictures of his home, said he used to be a great admirer of Collins but had never before known that "Sir Arthur" at one time owned the place.

Jim Van Demark reluctantly left us, and Bryant, Harry and I ate a hasty supper in a restaurant. Jansen suggested that I should compile a list of every record made by Henry Burr. When I pleaded lack of time and said it would be a virtual impossibility to prepare anything resembling a complete list, Harry said he would undertake the job himself if collectors would send lists of Burr records to him. Those who would like to see such a list prepared should get in touch with Mr. Jansen.

Back to the Bieling home, where Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Rose joined us. 'Gene was for years the Edison company's flute soloist, and many collectors of Edison cylinders treasure his ocarina solo of "The Genevieve Waltz Medley," issued in 1905. Mr. Rose, who is now 80 but in good health, left the Edison company around the time the Diamond Discs were introduced, but in the ensuing years played with the orchestras of about a score of record companies. Both he and John were much interested in my hope of completing within the next year a book of biographical sketches of artists who made records from 1877 to 1909 and gave me considerable valuable information.

It was about 11:30 before Bryant and I could make up our minds to leave the Bieling family and return to our rooms, so that I could get some sleep, in preparation for leaving the next morning to visit my dear friends, J. L. Norton, senior and junior, of the Woodmay Record Company, of Boston. Even after we had gone about half a block up the street, the warm-hearted John joined us, to shake hands again and to express the hope that we'd have many more future meetings.

We heartily echoed his sentiments. And today, although weeks have passed, I still find it hard to believe that I have actually fulfilled a lifelong dream and met John Bieling himself!

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

7c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

METALLIZING BABY SHOES

The preserving of Baby Shoes by electroplating them with copper is a fast growing and very profitable business, and a FASCINATING HOBBY. Anyone can do it.

Send $2.00 for complete Course of Instructions.

CREATIVE PUBLISHERS, Winnetka 6, Illinois

d166

MISCELLANEOUS

ONE TEN TUNE Swiss music box in mahogany case, $95; One 10 tune Swiss music box in oak case, $110. Both boxes in very good condition.—E. Damaske, 756 N. Dragoon, Detroit 9, Mich. mh3164

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f128782

WANTED: Old phonographs, cylinder records, music boxes, discs, parts. Catalogs and other books on same.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. ap3492

CERTIFICATE and expert opinion on old violins. Fee $5. Violins sent will receive prompt and careful attention.—Isador Berger (Violin Connoisseur), 165 E. Ohio St., Chicago, Ill. au126541

AUCTION: Classical records. Other kinds for sale. What do you want?—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. jly6844

SINGING HUMMING BIRD in solid silver, gold plated & exquisitely enameled case, best offer, description, large photo $1, refunded returned. Singing birds in gilded cage perfect condition $200, description and snap, .25c. Edison cylinder records, 2 & 4 min. random title lots of 10, $1.50.—Mollard, Westfield, N. Y. mh3007

WANT 5" paper rolls for Symphonion organ.—123 W. State St., Geneva, Ill. mh3691

BOOKS FOR SALE: "Talking Wax," story of the phonograph with bibliography, $2.50; "You Can Make Records," hand book for recordist, $1.—Leroy Hughbanks, Osborne, Kans. ap3053

WANTED for my collection. Music boxes either cylinder or tin disc type any size or condition as I can use the parts. Also for sale, Edison cylinder records, any amount.—Lewis J. Kerstein, 32 South St., Freehold, N. J. my4917

FOR SALE: Mira, 15½" and 18" disc; Regina, 20¾" disc; Criterion, 15¾" disc; Stella, 17¼" disc; Regina, 27" disc; Capital Cuff music box; cylinder records; Symphonion A-B-C 13½" for 3 record playing box.—George Schaft, 8 Walnut Ave., Cranford, N. J. ap3475

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap12069

FOR SALE. Certified old violins, $65 up. Desc. catalog with article on "The Last of the Cremonas" will be sent post paid for $1.—Berger, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124261

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service c/o 4th floor, 110 East 23rd St., New York 10, New York (Mail Orders Only.) My 3844

FOR SALE: Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph with 30 cylinder, unbreakable records, as good as new, for $15.—Peter H. Loeper Ashland, Penn. City 6, N. J. ap12069

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f128001

RARE AND OLD operatics many imported acoustic De Lucia, Jadowker, Schlusnus, Slezak, Destinn etc., also rare and common domestic Caruso, De Luca, Galvany, Boronat, Clement, Farrar, etc., and out-of-print electrical vocals and fine instrumentals, bought, sold. No general lists, but will answer requests for individual records or will list records of given artists or categories on request.—The Record Hunter, 1194 Lexington Ave. (81st), New York 28, N. Y. mh1094

RECORDS FOR SALE Old dated phonograph records — disc — cylinder — catalogues — phonography magazines — Charles Clark, Wellington, Ohio mh119

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

LEN SPENCER. I.

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

More than a year ago readers of HOBBIES elected a group of pioneer recording artists to membership in the mystical "Supreme Fifteen." Twelve of those so honored have already been the subject of biographical sketches.

Three—Len Spencer, Frank C. Stanley and Cal Stewart—remain for consideration. All have something in common besides possessing last names beginning with S and having been dead a quarter of a century or more. Each was an artist of considerable interpretative skill in his own specialized field and each also had far more than the ordinary amount of creative ability.

Particularly was this true of Leonard Garfield Spencer. I am convinced that, in the 70 years since the phonograph was invented, no other recording artist has equalled him as an original thinker, author and performer.

Len Spencer was a genius and, I believe, a man born in advance of his rightful age. Someone has called him "the Orson Welles of the early 1900's." If he were alive today, at the peak of his powers, he probably would be one of the dominant figures of radio and television, as actor, producer, script writer or all.

Spencer, had he survived to the present day, would be an old man, past 79 years of age. The following brief biographical sketch of him appeared in a catalog of Edison Blue Amberol records dated April, 1914:

"LEONARD G. SPENCER, CHARACTER SINGER—

Familiarly known to his intimates and thousands of admirers in the phonograph world as 'Len.' This artist was born in Washington, D. C., January 12, 1867. When a mere lad, young Spencer became an associate instructor with his father in the Spencerian Business College in Washington. Business demands brought him in close association with the Edison Company, where the remarkable recording quality of his voice was immediately discovered. The wonderful flexibility of his voice; his powers of differentiating in his character portrayals, and his marvelous dialectic ability are some of the causes that have made him so popular."

This is a good thumbnail sketch of the once world-famous native son of Washington, D. C., although, as will appear later, the Edison Company had nothing to do with the discovery of Len's abilities as a recording artist. The Columbia company's headquarters were in Washington in the late 1880's and early '90's and Spencer was making Columbia records by the "round" years before Edison entered the business.

Before beginning to trace in detail Len's 25-year span as one of the most popular makers of records, it may be well to set down something of his family background and to devote especial attention to his remarkable mother, Sara Andrew Spencer. Some of Len's still well remembered traits undoubtedly were derived from her, one of the notable women of a bygone generation.

Mrs. Spencer died in 1910. Two years previously, the 1908 edition of "Who's Who in America" listed her as still being principal of the Spencerian business college in Washington. She was born in Savona, New York, in 1837, and in 1864 she married Henry C. Spencer, who died in 1890, about the time his famous son's recording career was beginning.

Young Mrs. Spencer proved herself an ardent advocate of woman suffrage. In 1871, when Len was four years old, she joined 72 other women in an effort to register and vote. Refused, she brought suit, which resulted in the Supreme Court's 1874 ruling that women were citizens but could not vote without local enabling legislation.

"Votes for women" constituted only one of Mrs. Spencer's interests. She strongly supported measures to reform "fallen women" and was given credit for defeating bills to license red light districts in Washington. During the '70's she secured passage of legislation there for "the rescue of outcast girls." She was secretary of the National Woman Suffrage Association from 1874 to 1881; president of the Woman Franchise Association of the District of Columbia

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 21)

MUSIC BOXES

all types

BOUGHT, SOLD AND REPAIRED.

my74p

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

Information Wanted

Eugenia Mantelli Zonophone Numbers

WHAT WE HAVE:

11009	11012	11018	11017	12568	12572
12573	12574	12575	12587	12588	12590
12591	12592	12613	12614	12615	12616
12617	12618	12620	12621	12622	12623
12624	24001	40072	40075

WHAT WE NEED:

Any Mantelli Zonophone number not on the above list, and especially numbers and matrix numbers of the following titles:

- Der Asra (Rubinstein)
- Samson—Printemps qui commence
- Romeo et Juliette—Chanson de Stephano

Since the publication of W. R. Moran's list of the Mantelli Zonophones, in the August, 1944, issue of this magazine, considerable progress has been made towards completion of her discography. If you can possibly help, please do so.

SEND INFORMATION TO:

STEPHEN FASSETT

HOTEL BREVOORT

15 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

For a Goose," "Coming to the Point" and "Just in Fun," from paintings by W. S. Mont, are more important. Another well-known American artist, Felix O. C. Darley, did a series of "American Farm Scenes," lithographed by the German, Furrh, in 1860, and the Berlin publisher, E. Sala, issued a set of "American Hunting Scenes" in the same tradition.

Across the English channel, British lithographers were almost as numerous, and just as well-equipped, as those of France. Ackermann, the great London print house, was publishing lithographs as early as 1819. N. M. Hanhart & Co., founded by a

FOR SALE

PRINTS COLORED in authentic manner by—Hazel Swayze, Wolf Den Road, Pomfret Center, Conn. s12487

ANTIQUE COLORED city views, $1 ea., Philadelphia, New York, Hartford, etc., 8"x12" margins, by Charles Magnus, fine condition.—Schwarz, 1806 Chestnut, Philadelphia, Pa. au12897

CURTIS FLOWER PRINTS, orig. hand coloring, each bearing date of over 120 years ago, size 5½"x9 in., $5 doz. postpaid. Framed in gold leaf frame with French lined mats, $7.50 a pair, express collect. For Dealers: An assortment of 25 dated flower, costume and other prints for $12.50. Express collect.—Old Prints, 525 E. Argonne Dr., Kirkwood 22, Mo. n128423

CURRIER & IVES PRINTS, Specialist's latest price list, 250 items. Send 25 cents to—The Old Print Dealer, 41-28 Little Neck Parkway, Little Neck, Long Island, New York. mh3885

OLD VIEWS OF CITIES. Early prints, hand colored, of your native town are interesting Americana. These are neatly mounted and protected by cellophane. Prices from $3 to $7.50. From Glasgow, Scotland, we have recently received colorful prints of old clipper ships, nine titles, matted ready for framing, size 9½"x11½", $5 a pair.—Old Prints, 525 E. Argonne Dr., Kirkwood 22, Mo. s122743

Old prints and maps. Colored engravings, mezzotints, lithographs. Subjects include flowers, fruit, birds, fashions, costumes, sporting, coaching, Currier & Ives, views, ships, animals, fish, butterflies and many others. From 50c to $50.—Oscar Imber, 1332 Third Ave., New York 21, New York. mh3000

ALL KINDS of Currier-Ives Prints single or Full Collection. Send for print list. Laurin's Old Print Shop, 86 High Street, Saco, Maine. je4384

CURRIER AND IVES PRINTS, 200 subjects, reasonably priced, lists. C. F. Degner, 335 15th St., Toledo, O. mh1911

COLORED Currier & Ives: "Midnight Race on the Mississippi", mint except for creases, $20. "Odd-Fellows Chart", 30 symbols, $8. "Temple of Solomon", $7. "U. S. Ship of the Line Pennsylvania", some defects, $20. "Awful Explosion of the Peacemaker", $3. "Mammoth Iron S. S. Great Eastern", close margins, $8. "The Riverside", pair $7. "Tree of Life", $8.—Earl Romey, Bluffton, Ind. mh1024

Cock Fighting Prints, set of 6 colored prints, drawn and engraved by Stock, pub. in London by W. C. Lee, size of prints including margins 11x15 inches $15. for the set; Britten's Watch and Clockmakers Handbook $5; Gluckman's United States Martial Pistols and Revolvers, $5; Scottish Tartans with Chiefs' Arms, Badges, etc. Colored Plates $2.50. Old Books Wanted. Ira J. Friedman, 716 Middle-neck Road, Great Neck, N. Y. my30211 partner of Englemann of Paris, Day & Haghe, Louis Haghe a Belgian who came to London in 1823, later Day & Son, and, after 1860, Vincent Brooks, Day & Son, and the later Yates & Co. all made fine prints, some of American interest. However, while albums were also an English fashion, topped by John Gould's forty-odd volumes of "Birds of the World," started in 1832, no American ones appeared. Vincent Brooks, Day & Son did a series of Indian scenes in the Mississippi Valley about 1860, "Buffalo Creek Near Fort Riley, Kansas," "Great Bend of Arkansas River" and others, and Day & Son several ship prints, "New York Packet Ship," "Clipper Ship Swiftsure" and U. S. Frigate St. Lawrence," which might be classed as a series. Yates & Co. did two splendid prints, "Midnight Race on the Mississippi" and "American Express Trains Leaving the Junction" possibly for the American market. And, more important, Ackermann published Hanhart's large "San Francisco" of 1851.

There are many other important American views from European presses. De Roy and Le Breton did early views of San Francisco, and there is a surprising "Cincinnati, Vue Generale Prise Derriere Newport" by the Cincinnati artist and lithographer Forbrider, lithographed by Le Mercier. New York views include Deroy's "View of New York Taken from Weehawk," with title also in French, German and Latin, one, "New York von den see Seite aus Gesehen" by Folger of Berlin, about 1850, and a number by W. & J. Turgis of New York and Paris.

Finally, the chromolithographs of 1865-1900 have to be considered. Technically, many of these are superb color prints, and, in a number of cases, they reproduce the work of competent painters. But, in the taste of the period, the great majority show European views or genre scenes in European backgrounds. Many of the publishers, too, are of European origin, and one, at least, Raphael Tuck & Co. who published lithographs in New York during the nineties, was a branch of the well-known London house, which probably printed their output. However, the imprints on chromos are rarely detailed, and we can only guess that the prints of E. S. & L. Restein of Philadelphia, Edmund Foerster & Co., Max, Jacoby & Zeller F. Tuchfather of New York and others of the period were printed abroad.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 18)

from 1871 to 1876; secretary of the district auxiliary association of the American Red Cross from 1877 to 1882, and was active and distinguished in other ways.

Later, she wrote two books, "The Woman Question" and "Thirty Lessons in the English Language."

Not a great deal is known to me of Len Spencer's short-lived father. He was a son of the inventor of the Spencerian style of penmanship,

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 23)

OLD AMERICAN TOWN VIEWS

"NEW ORLEANS"

"CENTRAL PARK, NEW YORK"

From our large stock of these attractive collectors' items, we offer the following hand colored engravings about 1870, by well-known artists and engravers, suitable for framing and gifts. Picture proper 6 by 9", on paper 9½ by 12½". Can be framed as large as 14 by 16". Published by Appleton, and all in good condition.

California (Golden Gate)
California (Mount Shasta)
California (Mirror Lake, Yosemite)
Canada (Quebec)
Connecticut (The Housatonic)
Connecticut (East Rock, New Haven)
Florida, On the Coast of Kentucky (Louisville)
Louisiana (New Orleans)
Maine (Mount Desert)
Maryland (Baltimore)
Massachusetts (Boston)
Missouri (St. Louis)
New Jersey (Highlands of Neversink)
New York (Buffalo)
New York (Lake George)
New York (Central Park)
New York (West Point)
North Carolina (Smoky Mountains)
Ohio (Cincinnati)
Ohio (Cleveland)
Oregon (Mount Hood)
Pennsylvania (Delaware Water Gap)
Pennsylvania (Philadelphia)
Rhode Island (Narragansett)
Rhode Island (Providence)
Virginia (Harper's Ferry)
Virginia (Richmond)
Washington, D. C. from Arlington
Wisconsin (Milwaukee)

$5.00 each

Check with order, prints returnable in five days if not satisfactory.

170

THE OLD PRINT SHOP

Harry Shaw Newman

150 Lexington Avenue
New York 16, New York

larger tents, more seats and other equipment. Also vying with each other to produce the most elaborate parades, circus owners paid particular attention to matching teams to draw their parade wagons, and up to 40 horses, driven two or four abreast, were used.

When baggage stock was in greatest use with the largest of all circuses, Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey circus, in the early 20's, some 350 head of stock constituted the department.

The show traveled on four trains of 22 to 25 cars each, the first three sections carrying wagons and the fourth section made up entirely of stock cars and coaches. There were four to five cars of baggage stock in each of the first three sections, the horses being loaded 25 to 30 to a car with harness on.

When the unloading process started at the railroad runs, pull-over teams of two horses were hooked on the wagons on the flat cars, and pulled them to the end of the train, where they were eased down the runs by trainmen. As soon as they were clear of the train, pull-away teams whisked them down the street, out of the way of the next wagon, and then the four, six or eight horse teams took them to the lot.

At night, the wagons were hauled back to the train by teams, the number of animals being determined by the weight of the wagon. Pull-up teams pulled them up the runs to the flat cars, and pull-over teams moved them down the string of flat cars to their proper places.

Typical of Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey lineup of baggage stock were 14 eight-horse teams, 24 sixes, 16 fours, 14 twos and half a dozen saddle horses for bosses.

During rainy weather, there was extra duty for the baggage stock, when hook rope teams were needed to move exceptionally heavy wagons in the mud. On such an occasion, as many as five eight-horse teams might be hooked to a single wagon, with an elephant or two pushing, to move a wagon to its proper place on the lot, or to get it back to the street.

But now, tractors have been put into service in place of pull-over, pull-away and pull-up teams, and large trucks and tractors haul the wagons to the lot, sometimes with three or four wagons hooked together as trailers.

So has passed into history, a colorful phase of the circus scene of yesterday.

F-9 2"

We are now producing many of our brasses.
No catalogs on hand,
but let us know your requirements.

BALL and BALL

Ball Bldgs. WEST CHESTER, PENNA.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21)

which used to be the most popular of "muscular method" handwriting systems. It was taught not only at the Spencers' business college, but to millions of students in public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Spencer operated their college at Ninth and D streets, Washington, and for several years also lived in the building, which later became the Lincoln, and then the Herzog, theater. It burned while known as the Herzog and a movie theater now occupies the site.

Len and his twin brother, Harry, were, I believe, the Spencer's only children. The brothers were closely associated as long as Len lived, although Harry never became so famous as Len. I have not been able to ascertain positively whether he is still alive.

Len Spencer's middle name, Garfield, was given to him in honor of Senator James A. Garfield, of Ohio, who was one of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer's intimate friends for years before he became president. Harry, christened Henry after his father, was always known by the nickname.

From the beginning, the Spencer boys followed, probably at their mother's insistence, the rule that twins must look, dress and act alike. Some years ago, Odell Whipple, a Washington man who attended the business college about 60 years ago, recalled:

"Not even the other students could tell Len and Harry apart. They would go to the blackboard and go through a regular drill, making the same strokes together. My father . . . sent me to the college in the hope that I would overcome my unfortunate left-handedness. Mrs. Spencer was also trying to cure Len of this 'vicious' habit . . . In Len's case the desired result was obtained, for he afterwards wrote in the beautiful flowing hand of his family."

This type of "Juke Box" was popular in the Gay '90's. You dropped a penny in the slot and, through the ear tubes, listened to a wax cylinder playing "The Sidewalks of New York." Such records can now be played electrically, with fine results. This photo was found in a discarded family album in an Iowa second-hand store. Nothing could be learned of the identity of the earnest young listeners. The machine shown here was a forerunner of the farmer's machine with morning glory horn. This was the type of cylinder phonograph used when Len Spencer began making records in 1889.

(To be continued)

WANTED: OCCUPATIONAL SHAVING MUGS like example above (Postman).

These old mugs featured many trades. app

W. PORTER WARE

Sewanee,

Tennessee

OLD BANKS

WILL PAY

$500.00 for 4

- Girl Skipping Rope
- Milking Cow
- Professor Pug Frog
- Pump and Bucket

Do you need any banks? Have many. Get my list.

HENRY W. MILLER

18 Elliot St., Mount Vernon, N. Y.

A. P. S. 12501

lfo

IF You have pieces of listed Pattern Glass for Sale, write us. . . .

State Price and Condition first letter. mhp

SCHULZE, BELL & BRITZ

2225 Blanco Road, San Antonio 1, Texas

The Doorway to One of the Largest Stocks of

ANTIQUES & ART OBJECTS

In the Northwest

Store Hours 9:30 to 5:30
Tues. & Fri. until 9 p.m.

Antique Corner

All the TRADING POST

37th & Nicollet Ave. REgent 6290
Minneapolis 8, Minn. tfo

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

LEN SPENCER. II

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

ELLEN BEACH YAW

(From the 1914 KEEN-O-PHONE catalog)

MISCELLANEOUS

MUSIC BOXES: Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. apx

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342, f128732

WANTED: Old phonographs, cylinder records, music boxes, discs, parts. Catalogs and other books on same.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. ap3492

CERTIFICATE and expert opinion on old violins. Fee $5. Violins sent will receive prompt and careful attention.—Isador Berger (Violin Connoisseur), 165 E. Ohio St., Chicago, Ill. au126541

AUCTION: Classical records. Other kinds for sale. What do you want?—Delano, 349 Lindenwold, Ambler, Penna. jly6844

WANT 5" paper rolls for Symphonia organ.—123 W. State St., Geneva, Ill. je3372

BOOKS FOR SALE: "Talking Wax," story of the phonograph with bibliography, $2.50; "You Can Make Records," hand book for recordist, $1.—Leroy Hughbanks, Osborne, Kans. ap3053

WANTED for my collection. Music boxes either cylinder or tin disc type any size or condition as I can use the parts. Also for sale, Edison cylinder records, any amount.—Lewis J. Kerstein, 32 South St., Freehold, N. J. my4917

FOR SALE: Mira, 15½" and 13" disc; Regina, 20½" disc; Criterion, 15½" disc; Stella, 17½" disc; Regina, 27" disc; Capital Cuff music box; cylinder records; Symphonion A-B-C 13½" for 3 record playing box.—George Schait, 8 Walnut Ave., Cranford, N. J. ap3475

WANTED. Music boxes, singing birds, and other musical mechanical items for my collection. Also interested in rare or historical phonograph records. Describe completely and state price.—Urban Thielmann, 3001 Queensbury Drive, Los Angeles 34, California. je3094

FOR SALE: Swiss Music Box, "The Grand Model," takes 14" records; handsome, moulded & carved, solid mahogany case; in fine condition.—J. Shaw, 135 Cumberland Road, Lowell, Mass. ap1861

After Len and Harry Spencer grew up, people probably had less difficulty in telling the twin brothers apart. Len had a cleft chin and wore his hair in a pompadour style that gave him at least a superficial resemblance to portraits of Beethoven. I have never seen a picture of Harry, but, even if he adopted the same mode of hair dressing, he can hardly have had one of Len's striking facial characteristics.

This, according to Fred Gaisberg's book, "The Music Goes Round," was a long knife scar down one side of his face, which he acquired in a fight that followed a gambling game—probably poker, a pastime of which he was extremely fond. The scar does not appear in any photos of Len that I have seen, but Gaisberg, who was an accompanist at the Columbia studios during Spencer's early recording career, and for many years has been a Gramophone company official in England says it "marred Len's handsome features." There is no doubt that, at the beginning of his career and for some years afterward, the brilliant comedian was, in spite of mother's example and precepts, what used to be called "a wild young man."

To return, however, to the Spencer business college as it was in the days when Len and Harry's mother was its supreme ruler: W. E. Shea, assistant to Mark Sullivan, the political commentator, and his sister, Miss Mabel Shea (Mr. Sullivan's secretary) were among its students. Rather surprisingly, Mr. Shea recalls Mrs. Spencer as "the original bobbed-hair woman" and as having turned on amazing powers of sarcasm when a pupil's work displeased her. Miss Shea admits having been "scared to death" of Sara Andrew.

When Len had been cured of his natural tendency to write with his left hand, he became, in his late teens, an assistant instructor in the Spencer business college. He was not above earning pocket money by writing handsome visiting cards for callers.

And now we come to the beginning of Len Spencer's brilliant career as a recording artist. In the late '80's there was revived interest in the possibilities of the cylinder phonograph, which Thomas A. Edison had invented in 1877. Edison himself had been too busy, experimenting with electric lighting problems, to pay much attention to questions of sound reproduction, but Charles Sumner Tainter and Chichester Bell, two Washington experimenters, developed a system of recording on wax, instead of tinfoil, which Edison had used. The result was the American Graphophone company, with the Columbia Phonograph company as its sales agent.

My lamented friend, the late Frank Dorian, who was associated with Columbia almost from its beginning and remained with it most of his next 40 years, recalled shortly before his death in 1939 that "The Columbia company started business in January, 1889, in two rooms in the Gunton building on Louisiana avenue, facing Fifth street. Some time in the summer of the same year it rented the four story and basement brownstone front building at 627 E street. It remained there until some time in 1893, at which time it moved to 919 Pennsylvania avenue, a large building which had formerly housed a dry goods store. . . It was at 919 Pennsylvania avenue that Columbia opened the first slot-machine parlor."

Mr. Dorian also recollected that the Spencer college became one of "the first users of the office graphophone (the instrument now better known as the dictaphone), and included a course in its operation as a supplement to its regular shorthand instruction.

"As a junior instructor in the college Len sometimes had to run errands for his father or mother, and in that capacity he visited our office quite frequently to get information, service parts, cylinders, or on similar

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap12069

FOR SALE. Certified old violins, $65 up. Desc. catalog with article on "The Last of the Cremonas" will be sent post paid for $1.—Berger, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124261

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service c/o 4th floor, 110 East 23rd St., New York 10, New York (Mail Orders Only.) My 3844

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS: Phonograph records cheap. Catalogue. Paramount, H-313 East Market, Wilkes-Barre, Penna. je3041

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f128001

RARE AND OLD operatics and other and other acoustic and electrical out-of-print classical vocals and instrumentals bought, sold, exchanged.—The Record Hunter, 1194 Lexington Ave., (81st), New York 28, N. Y. mh126371

WANTED: Discs for Olympia Music box 8½.—Genevieve Klein, 319 Walnut St., Columbia, Penna. je3012

EDISONS, music boxes, records. Free list.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. mh12066

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS for sale: Classical, jazz, cylinders, operatic. Lists. What do you want? Delano, 349 Lindenwold, Ambler, Penna. S6235

600 (Approx.) carefully chosen Edison disk records with $235 diamond point player. The best offer takes.—Lincoln Library Company, 2203 Walnut St., Philadelphia 3. Tel. RI 6-8223 my3766

WANTED: Jaroff Don Cossack recordings made in Europe. Give titles, price wanted.—John Barrett, R. F. D. No. 2, Freeport, Illinois. ap1412

errands. It was during one of those visits that he expressed a desire to do a record of his own voice and was accommodated, with the result that we discovered he had a rich baritone voice, a good style and the ability to put his character into a song. (That was either late in 1889 or early in 1890.)

"It did not take long to reach a bargain with Len, especially as he wanted to supplement his meager income and whatever money he could pick up in his spare time was additional pocket change. We set Spencer down in front of a piano (he could play his own accompaniments), set three or four phonographs on top of the piano with the horns directed as nearly as possible on a level with his mouth, and Spencer would sing and play until he was tired—or until he had made as many records as we could afford to buy at one time. We paid him at the rate of ten cents for each record which passed our tests and was accepted as saleable. That was the beginning of Spencer's career as a recording artist."

Here is an amusing incident which Mr. Dorian recalled concerning Len's earliest recording experiences:

"A feature writer by the name of Rene Bache, connected with the Evening Star . . . was a rather frequent visitor to our show rooms. As he occasionally gave us a little free advertising in his newspaper stories, and publicity of that sort was a very valuable asset to a struggling industry, we were entirely willing to entertain him. . . On one of his visits he heard Spencer's record of 'Sadie Ray,' a sentimental ditty, and was so enamoured of it he had it repeated several times. As he listened through the ear-tubes his repetition of the selection did not disturb the quiet of the show room, and he was allowed to go as far as he liked."

Bache decided to try to sing with the record and, said Mr. Dorian: "Whether he lacked a sense of tone or merely because, his ears being plugged by the tubes, he could not hear his own voice, I do not know, but his efforts to repeat the words and music on the record were so completely off-key and he emitted such a series of remarkably discordant sounds that I had a pretty hard job to maintain order in the business staff. . . 'Sadie Ray' stands out in my memory as one of Spencer's most successful sentimental efforts, which nearly created a riot in an orderly business establishment."

Mr. Dorian's description makes Rene Bache seem a figure of comedy, but in the long run he was anything else. On April 19, 1933, Washington newspapers published a brief news story, relating that "Rene Bache, 72 years old, a writer on popular scientific subjects and said to be the last male descendant of Benjamin Franklin, died last night from an overdose of sleeping powder. Magruder MacDonald, acting coroner, issued a verdict of suicide. Bache, a resident of Washington for 45 years, had been ill

OLD • SILVER

Pioneers of the American Silver Plate Industry

By LARRY FREEMAN

On this, the one hundredth anniversary of Rogers 1847 and the first successful commercial appreciation of electro-plating to table silver, our thoughts turn to forebears of a great American industry. These forebears were not silversmiths in the proper sense of the term, but rather makers of pewter, Britannia and German Silver substitutes for the more costly solid silverware. These men saw in the infant electroplating process of the early 19th century a means of reaching the mass market with a superior product. How well they succeeded is attested by the fact that today America leads the world in plated silverware.

In 1834 a young Yankee of Scotch-English descent, Robert Wallace, was shown a spoon made of German (nickel) silver. At that time he was engaged in making spoons of the softer Britannia alloy. The better product fired his imagination, and within a year he was making the first German silver spoons in America and laying the foundation for the great Wallace Manufacturing Company that even today makes plated silver hollow ware and table flatware. Two other great present silver plate firms owe their origin to this same period, namely, Reed and Barton and The International (Rogers 1847) Silver Company.

Rogers 1847 was the first successful application of electro-plate to table flatware. The company was later bought by the Meriden Britannia Company of Meriden, Connecticut, and even later (1898) consolidated with other silver plate firms of the Connecticut valley to form the International Silver Company.

The first successful electro-silver plating on hollow ware, such as teapots and pitchers, was achieved by Samuel Simpson in 1848, but leadership in this field quickly fell to Reed and Barton of Taunton, Mass. This was an organization dating back to 1824, the year Isaac Babbitt perfected for several years and was said to be facing total blindness."

There is nothing to indicate that Len Spencer ever considered suicide, but in the early 1900's, he, like Bache, suffered from failing eyesight. At first it appeared he would completely lose the use of his left eye, but its condition gradually improved.

Not long after Len Spencer's record of "Sadie Ray" exerted such a powerful fascination upon Rene Bache, the accomplished young baritone was well on his way to becoming famous wherever the English language was spoken.

(To be continued)

a while metal formula that could be easily worked into hollow shapes suited for table needs. This white metal was very much the Britannia alloy that was rapidly replacing pewter in the low price field. It was found that Britannia and white metal could be readily electro-silver plated, and by 1850, Reed and Barton had a number of beautiful plated tea sets on the market in open competition with the more costly solid silver and Sheffield (fused) silver plate. Other American Britannia makers, notably the Meriden Company, quickly followed suit. Soon there was a great quantity of silver plated hollow ware and table flatware on the market. Competition and the low price of bar silver quickly drove prices down. It became the fashion for each newly married couple to receive a plated silver tea set for a wedding present. This is the original source of much of the old silver plate that is today having a rebirth and vogue. Unlike glassware, which was easily broken during its years of neglect, the early American plate silver can still be restored to its pristine beauty. That is why there is now a concentrated demand for pieces to match up parts of sets lost over the period of years. Markings and numbers aid in easy identification, and by persistent searching, many a collector can acquire an authentic tea set made by the pioneers of a great American industry, one hundred years old today.

SILVER WANTED

COLLECTOR WANTS silver and gilt foreign souvenir spoons with pictorial enamel bowls and handles. Send list and prices, or spoons on approval.—References gladly given.—Arch J. Bergoffen, 385 E. 18th St., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. my12827

OLD SILVER WANTED: Made by "E. Mead" or "E. Mead & Co."; send description and price to J. L. Moor, 2366 Chilcombe, St. Paul 8, Minnesota. ap1161

WANTED: BASE for coffee urn.—Reed & Barton, 1795-S. Selleck, Tuba City, Arizona. ap1001

FOR SALE

EARLY AMERICAN and modern silver.—Frederick T. Widmer, Jeweler, (Est. 1844). 31 West St., Boston, Mass. je124041

STERLING SOUVENIR spoons, $1.50 each, tax included prepaid. Teaspoons and demi-tasse sizes. Rare and foreign souvenir spoons at higher prices.—Schwarz, 1806 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. au126541

SOUVENIR tea, coffee and foreign spoons. Also early American. Lists furnished.—Howland Dudley, Harvard, Mass. mv12036

STERLING souv. spoons. Silver list free.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. mh12065

WANTED

COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.

International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.

Lys Gauty singing Le quatorze Juillet

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

HOTEL BREVOORT

15 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosorjak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Company

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM
HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS
by great artists of the past can be bought at
YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All
bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists 1/2c

SINGLE RARITIES AND ENTIRE COLLECTIONS
PURCHASED

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

401 Congress Building, Miami 32, Florida

EARLY AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC
Bound Volumes or Loose Sheets

Wanted.

List on Request.

HARRY DICHTER, 5458 Montgomery Ave.
Philadelphia 31, Penna.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

LEN SPENCER. III

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

For more than a decade after Len Spencer's career began no method of making "master" cylinder records was known, and artists were compelled to sing the same numbers over and over by the wearisome "round." Spencer, however, had iron lungs, ample endurance and unlimited versatility.

Though he was primarily known in his later years as a comedian, Len at one time or another did all sorts of recording work. When he first visited the Columbia studios he not only sang popular ballads such as "Sadie Ray," but also recorded many hymns. (As will appear later, there was a deeply religious strain in his nature.) He was particularly esteemed for his abbreviated versions of speeches by famous men. For his ordinary "coon songs" and other popular productions he used the short and simple name of Len Spencer. The elocutionary efforts were usually represented, in a slightly more dignified way, as being by Leonard G. Spencer. After he married, he made a few records under the name of Garry Allen—Garry being short for Garfield and Allen being taken from his wife's maiden name. I have never seen a "Garry Allen" record and doubt that any are still in existence.

Making records became a profitable profession for the handful of artists whose voices recorded well in the 1890's and Len soon ceased to work at the Spencer business college. It is said that he offended his masterful mother by eloping with Miss Elizabeth Allen, a student at the college, when Mrs. Spencer considered him to be still too young to undertake the responsibilities of marriage.

Not only did Spencer sing and recite for Columbia, but he also did most of the "announcing." It was his voice which informed the listener at the beginning of each cylinder what the name of the selection was, by whom it was made and that the manufacturer was the Columbia Phonograph company of Washington and Paris. He, as well as his brother Harry, also did announcing for a few years after Columbia began to make disc records. I have a 1903 Columbia disc made by the great Polish baritone, Eduard de Reszke, in which the announcement unmistakably is made by Len Spencer.

Harry Spencer, incidentally, appears to have made only one solo record during his career—an Edison two-minute cylinder of "The Mad Ravings of John McCullough," which purported to reproduce the ravings of McCullough, a famous Shakespearean actor, after he had been confined in the Bloomingdale insane asylum. For the sake of greater realism the announcement was omitted! A number of elocutionists before Harry had also tried their voices on the "ravings." He likewise assisted Len and Ada Jones in one Columbia record, a burlesque on old-time melodramas called "The Hand of Fate."

When Emile Berliner began experimenting with his first crude disc records in Washington, Len became a Berliner artist. Columbia moved its headquarters to New York in 1896 or 1897, and Len went along. By this time Edison also was in the cylinder record business and he soon won recognition as one of the most popular Edison artists.

On May 1, 1898, however, Len signed an exclusive contract with

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

Extra Tune Sheets For Sale.

Parts and Repairs

P. O. Box 342

Hanover,

Massachusetts

C. R. S.

Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and
speech records.

FOR SALE BY Your Regular Dealer

Information Wanted

Eugenia Mantelli Zonophone Numbers

WHAT WE HAVE:

11009,	11012,	11016,	11017,	12568,	12572,
12573,	12574,	12575,	12587,	12588,	12590,
12591,	12592,	12613,	12614,	12615,	12616,
12617,	12618,	12620,	12621,	12622,	12622,
12623,	24001,	40072,	40073,

WHAT WE NEED:

Any Mantelli Zonophone number not on the above list, and especially numbers and matrix numbers of the following titles:

- Der Asra (Rubinstein)
- Samson—Printemps qui commence
- Romeo et Juliette—Chanson de Stephano

Since the publication of W. R. Moran's list of the Mantelli Zonophones, in the August, 1944, issue of this magazine, considerable progress has been made towards completion of my discography.
If you can possibly help, please do so.

SEND INFORMATION TO:

STEPHEN FASSETT

HOTEL BREVOORT

15 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Columbia. By this time he was branching out. Besides making solo records he was doing a great deal of recording in which the banjo accompaniment of L. Ossman, "The Banjo King," received equal prominence. He had organized the Len Spencer Trio, with Steve Porter and Billy Golden as his associates (occasionally George P. Watson, the German yodler, was used in the place of Porter or Golden) and was the organizer and leader of a recording group known as the Imperial Minstrels. George W. Johnson, "the Whistling Coon," was one of the Imperials, whose personnel also included the Greater New York Quartet. Who these gentlemen were nobody seems to know now, but Spencer and Porter probably were half the ensemble and the tenors may have been Dan Quinn and George Gaskin.

The exclusive contract arrangement appears to have lasted only a year. When Victor acquired the Berliner patent rights and began issuing records in 1901, Len was right on the job. He also recorded for Zonophone, Leeds and all the other early disc manufacturers as well as the various cylinder companies that flourished briefly.

In addition to his regular recording work, which had all the charm of infinite variety, the inimitable Mr. Spencer soon began to write comic sketches which he sold to other recording artists, and sometimes undertook some unusual promotional "stunts."

I have a two-minute Edison cylinder which apparently was made after Mr. Edison developed his "gold moulded" process of making permanent master records in 1902. On this record, Spencer, who appears to have been speaking at a convention of Edison jobbers, highly lauds the inventor's genius and says that "this record of pure gold" is being presented to Mr. Edison by his loyal dealers and admirers. I surmise that a gold-plated indestructible copy of the fulsome address was presented to Thomas A. Edison and that the jobbers were given ordinary wax copies as souvenirs of the occasion.

Another oddity in my collection is a double-faced Victor record, issued, judging by the label, no later than 1903. It is a sales demonstration record, designed to attract boys and girls and make them clamor for their parents to purchase a "Victor talking machine." Spencer is the benevolent master of ceremonies on both sides. This record is of particular interest in view of the commonly held belief that Victor issued no double-faced records before 1909. The company almost certainly disposed of no "doubles" through regular retail channels prior to that year, but there is every reason to believe that this double-faced demonstration record was in dealers' hands before the Odeon company, of Germany, put double-faced discs on the market in 1904, and—so it has been generally held—inaugurated the double-faced trend that eventually made single-faced records obsolete.

Still another oddity of Spencer's early recording career was his recitation of President McKinley's speech at the Buffalo exposition in 1901. Victor issued the record with Spencer's name on the label, but Columbia and Edison made no mention of the artist's identity. As Frank Dorian, the late Columbia executive, once remarked to me: "We didn't tell people the record was by McKinley, but we were interested in sales and we didn't mind in the least if the buyer thought it was by the president instead of Spencer." McKinley, who was mortally wounded by an assassin a few days after his appearance at Buffalo, certainly had no opportunity to make a record, but since Spencer's name was omitted, many owners of the Columbia and Edison records refuse to this day to believe that their copies do not contain the voice of "the martyr president" himself. However, it was Len Spencer who recorded it, just as he did Bryan's "Cross of Gold" speech, the Rev. Mr. Talmage's animadversions on infidelity and many other similar productions.

"To be continued")

MUSIC BOXES

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. s6868

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342, f128782

MUSIC BOX melodies now reproduced on modern phonograph records. 3 albums available $5.25 each.—Bornand Music Box Record Co., 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. jly3223

CERTIFICATE and expert opinion on old violins. Fee $5. Violins sent will receive prompt and careful attention.—Isador Berger (Violin Connoisseur), 165 E. Ohio St., Chicago, Ill. au126541

MUSIC BOX, 30x9x11", cylindrical in-laid box, 6 tunes, rich tone, excellent condition. Make offer.—Mayer, 1033 Clarence Ave., Oak Park, Ill. my1161

WANT 5" paper rolls for Symphonia organ.—123 W. State St., Geneva, Ill. j63372

FOR SALE: Swiss music box, Case 15x37x17", 4 cylinders 2½x13", 6 tunes each. Drawer holds 4 cylinders, mechanism perfect, Burl walnut, rosewood case, sandle wood and mother of pearl inlay, $350.—Lubbock Antique Shop, Lubbock, Texas. my1492

WANTED for my collection. Music boxes either cylinder or tin disc type any size or condition as I can use the parts. Also for sale, Edison cylinder records, any amount.—Lewis J. Kerstein, 32 South St., Freehold, N. J. my4917

WANTED. Music boxes, singing birds, and other musical mechanical items for my collection. Also interested in rare or historical phonograph records. Describe completely and state price.—Urban Thielmann, 3001 Queensbury Drive, Los Angeles 34, California. j63094

CLASSICAL, Operatic, Red Seal Victor, Columbia, other records; great singers of Long Ago. No lists, write wants.—Lloyd Bailey, 721 E. 11th St., Kansas City, Mo. jly3463

EDISON Phonographs—Gem, Standard, Homes, Triumph, one has hand painted flowered horn. Glass enclosed coin slot Columbia phonograph; Columbia machine like one pictured on page 23 of March Hobbies, has tin horn instead of listening tubes, All reasonably priced.—Peter Grattelo, 1523 W. Stover St., Freeport, Illinois. my1053

Death of Old Timer Recorder

Widely known as a soprano before her retirement in 1930, Mrs. Ella Kavel Loeser, Chicago, passed away last month at her home in Chicago. Mrs. Loeser began her singing career in 1893 under the name of Mme. Ella Kavel. A pupil of the late Daniel Protheroe, she specialized in German classics. She sang in some of the leading theatres of the country during the heyday of her career. She also recorded for Columbia and sang in vaudeville. Mrs. Loeser had been blind since the age of 19.

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap12086

FOR SALE. Certified old violins, $65 up. Desc. catalog with article on "The Last of the Cremonas" will be sent post paid for $1.—Berger, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124261

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service c/o 4th floor, 110 East 23rd St., New York 10, New York (Mail Orders Only.) My 3844

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS: Phonograph records cheap. Catalogue. Paramount, H-313 East Market, Wilkes-Barre, Penna. j63041

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f128001

RARE AND OLD operatics and other acoustic and electrical out-of-print classical vocals and instrumentals bought, sold, exchanged.—The Record Hunter, 1194 Lexington Ave., (81st), New York 28, N. Y. mhl26371

WANTED: Discs for Olympia Music box 8¼.—Genevieve Keim, 319 Walnut St., Columbia, Penna. j63012

EDISONS, music boxes, records. Free list.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. mhl2066

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS for sale: Classical, jazz, cylinders, operatic. Lists. What do you want? Delano, 349 Lindenwald, Ambler, Penna. S6235

600 (Approx.) carefully chosen Edison disk records with $285 diamond point player. The best offer takes.—Lincoln Library Company, 2203 Walnut St., Philadelphia 3, Tel. RI 6-8228 my3766

REGINAS, CRITERIONS, Stellas, Symphonium Music Box records for sale.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, New York. my1211

HANDSOME, ROSEWOOD SQUARE PIANO For Sale

Steinway made in 1868. Beautifully refinished with new wires, felts, keyboard; in perfect playing condition with gorgeous resonant bass, now tune to concert pitch. Graceful small size 78"x38"x37" high. Carved cabriole legs. Quaint matching rosewood stool with four sided seat covered with handmade needlepoint. Picture on request $485 crated, carrying charges collect. myp

MRS. WILLIAM J. MCINTYRE
18 Brook Street, Warren, Pa.

WANTED

COLUMBIA
GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders
Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.

Lys Gauty singing Le quatorze Juillet
ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

HOTEL BREVOORT

15 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5 POSTPAID—INSURED

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Company

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM
HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan
Chicago 16, Illinois

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS
by great artists of the past can be bought at
YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All
bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists tfo

SINGLE RARITIES AND ENTIRE COLLECTIONS
PURCHASED

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

401 Congress Building, Miami 32, Florida

EARLY AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC
Bound Volumes or Loose Sheets

Wanted.

List on Request.

HARRY DICHTER, 5458 Montgomery Ave.
Philadelphia 31, Penna.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

LEN SPENCER. IV

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Busy and successful as Len Spencer was in the first 15 years of his recording career, his greatest triumph began in 1905 when Ada Jones became his recording associate. According to Dan W. Quinn, Spencer "hot-footed it down to Huber's museum" and obtained Miss Jones' services just a day before Quinn made her a similar offer.

The career of Ada Jones has already been dealt with in a series of articles, which told much of her partnership with Spencer. Although their Bowerly sketches, such as "Pals," "Peaches and Cream" and "Jimmy and Maggie at the Hippodrome" were perhaps the most lastingly popular, they also did many "coon" skits, of which "Jim Jackson's Affinity is a good example; "rube" numbers like "Reuben and Rachel"; Jewish specialties of "The Original Cohens" variety; Irish character sketches, such as "Sweet Peggy Magee"—the list could be multiplied almost indefinitely.

During all this busy period, however, Len found time to do other types of recorded work. He revived a series of "auctioneer" records, of which "Auction Sale of Household Goods" is typical, which had been first recorded by W. O. Beckenbaugh, of Washington, D. C., who had been known on Berliner discs as "the Leather-Lunged Auctioneer." In "Auction Sale of a Music Store" he had the assistance of Parke Hunter, who played several musical instruments, but invariably performed "Hiawatha," to Len's apparent disgust. Several records featuring animal imitations, such as "A Barnyard Serenade," "Krausmeyer and His Dog Schneider" and "Daybreak at Calamity Farm," were widely popular. The imitations were entrusted to the capable mouths of the late Gilbert Girard and Al S. Holt. Some people almost went crazy at having to listen to their neighbors play the Spencer-Girard record of "A Scene at a Dog Fight" over and over. Len was also Billy Murray's first recording partner after Billy left California for the East in 1902.

I even have a Columbia single-faced disc, No. 19, issued in 1902, on which Spencer, assisted, so the announcement says, by George Schweinfest, dared to commit the sacrilege of recording "Uncle Josh's Huskin' Bee." It must have been while Cal Stewart, the original Uncle Josh, was on a world tour and unavailable for recording work. What part Schweinfest had in the record is not clear. He is dimly remembered nowadays as a piccolo player, and he certainly does not speak on the record. Somebody saws a fiddle, though, so perhaps Schweinfest, the Piccolo virtuoso, displayed his versatility by playing the violin for the "huskin' bee dance"!

I have no way of knowing what Stewart thought of Spencer's daring to record an Uncle Josh sketch, if he ever knew of it, but he may have considered that he obtained his revenge by making a Zon-o-phone record of "The Arkansas Traveller," a comic sketch which Spencer introduced in the 90's and was undoubtedly the most popular one-man record he ever did. It would also be interesting to learn, if we could, what Len

Edison CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS For Sale.

WOODYMAY RECORD CO tfo
73 Roxbury Street, Boston 19, Mass.

MUSIC BOXES

SPECIALIZING IN THE REPAIR OF MUSICAL
BOXES OF ALL TYPES, INCLUDING THE
REPAIR OF BIRD BOXES AND BIRD IN
Choice Music Boxes For Sale.
CAGE PIECES, ETC. sd

GEORGE A. BIDDEN
Barrington, Rhode Island

C. R. S. Historical Records Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and speech records. FOR SALE BY Your Regular Dealer

LLOYD G. KELLEY
Successor to

REGINA

MUSIC BOX CO.

Extra Tune Sheets For Sale. tfo
Parts and Repairs.

P. O. Box 342
Hanover, Massachusetts

ARTISTS!—

"You have the goods!"

Accept bookings readily
 Ratify contracts willingly
 Transact business confidentially
 Insure appearance positively
 Supervise details personally
 Terminate engagements satisfactorily
 Seek re-engagements meritoriously

PHONES. 3046.3480.3481. STUY

LEN SPENCER'S LYCEUM

46. E. 14TH STREET
NEW YORK

BOOKING AGENCYFURNISHING THE SERVICES OF THOROUGHLY COMPETENT AND RELIABLE

VOCALISTS DRUMMERS
 PIANISTS INSTRUMENTALISTS
 VIOLINISTS OPERATORS DRAMATIC LECTURERS

VAUDEVILLE ACTS. ETC.

LATEST AND BEST SONG SLIDES

BAND AND ORCHESTRA MUSICIANS

OPEN EVENINGS EXCEPT SATURDAYS, SUNDAYS
AND HOLIDAYS UNTIL 8 P.M.MANAGERS!—

"You want the goods!"

Meet artists personally
 Ascertain merits easily
 Negotiate salaries equitably
 Arrange details satisfactorily
 Get co-operation cheerfully
 Establish confidence absolutely
 Realize profits substantially
 Save disappointment always

That Len Spencer also believed in advertising is attested by this card which was distributed to advertise his various activities.

thought of Cal's presumption in treading on his own private territory. I have never heard this record, but J. W. C. Hesser, an Iowa collector, told me some years ago that he owned a copy.

By October, 1906, the new partnership of Len Spencer and Ada Jones (most of their early records gave the comedian's name precedence over his feminine associate) was already famous wherever records were bought. Disc and cylinder enthusiasts in England demanded to know something about the pair, so the Talking Machine News published a biographical sketch, most of which I shall reprint here, although it is not too accurate in some respects. The reference to Spencer's "modesty" especially may be discounted, since veteran phonograph people remember perfectly well that he had a high opinion of himself, though perhaps not an unduly exalted one in view of his genuinely great abilities. Said the T. M. N.:

"The author of character sketches, writer of songs and vaudeville artist who is too modest to write a biographical sketch of himself is a rare bird. But such a man is Mr. Len Spencer. Although Mr. Spencer for many years has been the possessor of a splendid voice with which he has made countless hits through the talking machine and on the vaudeville stage, he has never submitted to the wiles of a press agent or given any biography of any kind. Mr. Spencer's popularity has recently caused him to engage an entire floor in Twenty-Eighth Street, in the heart of the theatrical district of New York. His suite is known as The Home of Mirth, Melody and Ideas. . . .

"His work in dialect has been much enjoyed, more especially in recent years with his partner, Miss Ada Jones. Mr. Spencer's original dialect work was a feature of the Columbia exhibit at the St. Louis exposition (in 1904), where he made souvenir records that were greatly appreciated by the visitors. Before the Business Educators' Association of America, assembled at St. Louis, he also demonstrated the business practicability of the commercial graphophone.

"When Mr. Spencer strikes the trail of a fit subject for a dialect sketch he is as relentless as Sherlock Holmes. He has been known to follow such a 'lead' for miles, whether German, Irish, Italian or Negro—and he is a master of them all. One striking feature of Mr. Spencer's work is that it is provocative of mirth or tears, to suit the occasion. He reads extensively, making careful research in the field of comedy, and has every facility for creating sketches for his own needs as well as supplying material for many other artists.

"Mark Twain has said there are only six original jokes in the world, but Mr. Spencer seems to have found 600 different ways of treating each of them. He has in his files perhaps 20,000 laugh points. . . . Mr. Spencer first introduced the graphophone into minstrel work and has successfully managed several notable amusement enterprises, among them the Len Spencer minstrels and the Elite Vaudevilles, who toured the principal eastern towns. The team of Spencer and Jones has been offered more vaudeville engagements than it can take care of."

Not that this article says Len and Ada were "offered" vaudeville engagements. I don't think they ever appeared together in variety. Her tendency to epilepsy alone would have made such an undertaking impractical, not to mention Spencer's lacking the time to spare from his numerous other activities.

Just what the "Len Spencer minstrels and the Elite Vaudevilles" were I don't know, but the latter may have been the forerunner of the recording artists' concert troupe which later became known as the Record Maker Troupe and the Eight Famous Victor Artists. The minstrels may have been the "Columbia Minstrels," a novelty originated by Len. This consisted of lifelike models of popular recording comedians sitting on the stage in a typical black-face semicircle. Behind each dummy, but concealed by a screen, was a phonograph. The music appeared to come from the "dummies," but was recorded. (To be continued.)

"The World is Small"

In looking through March HOBBIES, I discovered on page 23 a picture of my elder brother and his pal listening to an old recorder. Under the circumstances it seemed only right that I should inform whoever owns the picture, of which there were only three made at the time, who these young fellows were and how they happened to be smoking at their age as it was an unheard thing in the "best families". I was born and raised in Iowa.—Mrs. F. S. Barr.

—O—

The Housing Problem

Of the many perplexing problems that confront the avid collector each day, there is none so acute, none so omnipresent as that of housing the collection. Each day's acquisition for the collection brings its own specialized problem, but in a general way the question remains, looming ominously on the otherwise bright horizon of the true collector's tomorrow. Especially prized or newly acquired specimens offer no serious problem as the collector is rather certain to want them out where he can gloat over them, and, in consequence, they usually end up in a position of prominent display about the house. The mantel, the more prominent tables, an important window shelf: these are the usual vantage points on which the newest and choicest of the collection are found.

A small discriminating collection of some one item could be comfortably confined to the shelves of a pine dresser. The arrangement on shelves to be made with an eye to color and utility, plus availability, rather than for any homogeneity of specimens. Yet, there are many small, beginning collections sprawled uncomfortably over many rooms of a home which would gain immeasurably in stature were they brought together on the shelves of a cabinet of this nature.

Blown glass would appear to be the best advantage on a pine cupboard, especially since the environment would be contemporary with the pieces. In clear, a coat of apricot or lettuce-green paint inside the shelves would display the glass best.

If You're Moving

Don't forget to send a post card to HOBBIES' Subscription Dept., 2810 S. Michigan, Chicago 16, Ill. Mail your card at least two weeks before the date of issue. Because of the paper shortage we cannot duplicate lost copies.

A MONEY-MAKER!*Start Home Business

Making Statuary, Art Goods, Plaques,
 Novelties, Concrete Pottery, Artificial Marble Flooring, Liquid Marble.

We tell you how to make your own Flexible Molds.

Write Today For

VALUABLE FOLDER, FREE.

CREATIVE PUBL. Box 236 N. WINNETKA, ILL.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

LEN SPENCER. V

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

The Talking Machine News article, previously quoted, said Len Spencer's "Home of Mirth, Melody and Ideas" was on Twenty-Eighth street, New York. Later, however, it was at 46 East Fourteenth street (Union Square), and still later at 245 West Forty-Second street.

Joe Fortgang, young New York record collector who, as "Joe Franklin," has made a brilliant success with his "Vaudeville Isn't Dead" radio program based on old recordings, some time ago sent me some post cards which were mailed from "Len Spencer's Lyceum, the Booking Agency on the Square." One, mailed on February 25, 1913, to "Mr. Max Backhaus, 303 E. 79th St., City," says: "Don't forget to come to our party Sat. eve. at 421 E. 52nd St. Come early, don't disappoint your friend, Harry S."

The card, which shows traces of the Spencerian style of penmanship, must have been written by Len's brother, Harry, who was associated with him in the operation of the Lyceum, or booking agency. The other side shows a pompadoured gentleman, unmistakably Len Spencer himself, talking into a phone. In the lower right hand corner is another gentleman who looks like the original of "Cohen on the Telephone." According to the card, Len was then "furnishing the services of thoroughly competent and reliable vocalists, drummers, pianists, instrumentalists, violinists, operators, dramatic lecturers, vaudeville acts, etc., latest and best song slides, band and orchestra musicians."

We are getting ahead of the story, however. Spencer concentrated on being a booking agent and sketch writer for other vaudeville and recording artists after his own popularity had waned. For several years after his association with Ada Jones began his vogue remained at its peak. It was not at first seriously impaired by Ada's beginning to make duets with Billy Murray in 1907, although after a year or so the Jones-Murray combination became the most popular duet team in phonograph history and the Jones-Spencer sketches were pushed into the background.

In 1908, while Jones and Spencer dialect numbers were still selling as fast as the factories could turn them out, Len introduced a new partner, one "Mozarto," who had, or was represented to have, the unusual ability to play two musical instruments at once. "Mozarto" might easily have been a figment of Len's imagination — Frank Dorian could not recall him and said he suspected that he was — but he was represented by Victor and Edison to be a noted European music hall performer, so perhaps he actually existed.

The June, 1908, issue of the Phonogram contained the following description of Edison cylinder 9852, "Krausmeyer's Birthday Party": Although humorous in itself this vaudeville sketch is more noteworthy for the clever instrumental selections by Mozarto, a well-known vaudeville artist. These include a one-string violin playing a Hungarian Rhapsody, a one-string violin and an ocarina playing a selection from 'Faust' and a clarinet duet. Mozarto actually plays all the instrumental features. In the violin and ocarina duet the ocarina is played by means of a rubber tube leading from his mouth to

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES—133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$8 POSTPAID—INSURED

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Company

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan

Chicago 16, Illinois

EARLY AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC
Bound Volumes or Loose Sheets

Wanted.

List on Request.

HARRY DICHTER, 5458 Montgomery Ave.
Philadelphia 31, Penna.

WANTED

COLUMBIA
GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders
Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.

International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.

Lys Gauty singing Le quatorze Juillet
ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

HOTEL BREVOORT

15 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

Edison CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS

For Sale.

WOODYMAY RECORD CO

73 Roxbury Street, Boston 19, Mass.

Information Wanted

Eugenia Mantelli Zonophone Numbers

WHAT WE HAVE:

11009,	11012,	11016,	11017,	12588,	12572.
12573,	12574,	12575,	12587,	12588,	12589.
12591,	12592,	12513,	12614,	12615,	12616.
12617,	12618,	12620,	12621,	12622,	12623.
12624,	24001,	40072,	40075.

WHAT WE NEED:

Any Mantelli Zonophone number not on the above list, and especially numbers and matrix
numbers of the following titles:

- Der Asra (Rubinstein)
- Samson—Printemps qui commence
- Romeo et Juliette—Chanson de Stephano

Since the publication of W. R. Moran's list of the Mantelli Zonophones, in the August, 1944,
issue of this magazine, considerable progress has been made towards completion of her discography. If you can possibly help, please do so.

SEND INFORMATION TO:

STEPHEN FASSETT

HOTEL BREVOORT

15 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

MUSIC BOXES

SPECIALIZING IN THE REPAIR OF MUSICAL
BOXES OF ALL TYPES, INCLUDING THE
REPAIR OF BIRD BOXES AND BIRD IN CHOICE Music Boxes For Sale.
CAGE PIECES, ETC.

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington,

Rhode Island

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

Extra Tune Sheets For Sale.
Parts and Repairs.

Now offering for the first time in thirty years a new tune for the 15 1/2" Regina music box.
"JINGLE BELLS." Price $3.00.

Will be adding new tunes each month.
Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342

Hanover,

Massachusetts

If You're Moving

Don't forget to send a post card to HOBBIES' Subscription Dept.,
2810 S. Michigan, Chicago, Ill.
Mail your card at least two weeks before the date of issue. Because of the paper shortage we cannot duplicate lost copies.

the ocarina, which is fastened to the violin. He plays the two clarinets at the same time, one in each side of his mouth."

"Sim and Sam, the Musical Coons," another original sketch by Spencer, was issued in September, 1908. The number was 9929. It was thus described:

"A racy vaudeville sketch. Sam and Sim are a pair of vivacious 'coons' who get back at one another with a lot of witty ragtime repartee leading up to some clever musical stunts. The latter are done by Mozarto, the European vaudeville performer. He plays about every known type of instrument, his strong point being taking them two-at-a-time. We are treated to saxophone duet, 'Sycamore Tree'; to 'Swanee River' on a one-string violin and ocarina, and to a clarinet duet, 'Jamaica Two-Step,' Mozarto being the sole performer in all three duets."

The Spencer—Mozarto partnership lasted for only a few records. When Edison introduced four-minute cylinders late in 1908, Len's inventiveness was given a fillip. With twice as much recording time available as on the two-minute records, he was able to do his creative gifts justice and some of the Amberol cylinders are among the best things that he and Ada Jones ever did. I am inclined to give the palm among all their records to "Little Arrow and Big Chief Greasepaint," a burlesque on the old-time "Wild West" show that I consider one of the funniest things ever cut into wax. Years after his death, this sketch, as well as several other Jones-Spencer specialties, was transferred to indestructible Blue Amberol records and stayed in the catalog until Edison went out of the record business in 1929.

The advertising card mentioned the ability of Spencer's Lyceum to supply "song slides," which were used in the old days of vaudeville to illustrate the words of popular songs as they were rendered on the vaudeville stage. Len wrote and recorded at least one sketch based on the song slide idea. In October, 1910, Edison issued Amberol record No. 529, "Mamma's Boy," which revived a song that had been popular five years before. Described as an "illustrated song idea," it was divided into two scenes.

In the first, a group of boys were playing soldiers. "Mamma's Boy," portrayed by one "Miss Myrtle Spencer," proposed the game and wanted to be captain. Mickey Finn, acted by Clarence Rockefeller, wouldn't allow him to play but pulled his Little Lord Fauntleroy curls and velvet trousers and called him "a mamma's boy." Mamma's Boy's mother called him in and he sobbingly told her of his troubles. His mother (Ada Jones) then sang the chorus of the "Mamma's Boy" song, beginning, "Don't you mind what they call you, darling."

The second scene supposedly occurred 30 years later, and was described by the Edison ad. writer as follows: "After the battle, return of reconnoitering squad reporting to captain. Captain congratulates men on glorious victory. Soldiers give all credit to captain. Captain refers to order from General to sail home within a week. Sergeant tells of Captain and himself being soldiers thirty years. Captain recognizes Sergeant as Mickey Finn, playmate of boyhood days. The Captain acknowledges, good naturedly, that he was called 'Mamma's Boy.' Soldiers join in singing chorus of song, and Taps and good-nights clear the record, which was arranged entirely by Len Spencer."

In the second half Len himself was the former "Mamma's Boy," Steve Porter was the sergeant and the Premier Quartet took the part of soldiers. I wonder who Myrtle Spencer was? She may have been Harry Spencer's daughter. Len's children were named Ethel, Michael and Clare. Clarence Rockefeller also is an unknown but presumably was not a son or grandson of John D.

Another unusual Spencer-inspired record of those days was the Entrance of Topsy scene from "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Len was St. Claire; Ethel Harboro (I suspect this was his daughter Ethel) was Aunt Ophelia; Myrtle Spencer was "Little Eva"; Spencer was also Uncle Tom; Ada Jones was Topsy, and a two-banjo accompaniment was furnished by Vess L. Ossman and a gentleman named Dudley — who, whoever he was, WASN'T S. H. Dudley! I have that information from S. H. himself.

(To be concluded)

THE COMBS AND PINS OF A MUSIC BOX

By G. P. HECKERT

The comb is the most visible part of the essential mechanism of a music box. However, the condition of the tiny pins on the cylinder are just as important.

Since the publication of the "Curious History of Music Boxes" several years ago I have received letters from all parts of the country asking me to furnish new combs and to restore the cylinders. I have had music boxes in all sorts of conditions shipped to me and brought into my store, some from great distances, many of which had to be turned down because there was no factory or dealer from which to obtain the necessary replacements. What a pity, for the owners were unusually nice people you would like to please.

In the 34 years I have been in business there has not been one new music box made so far as I know. Whatever material for doing the repairs has become scarcer each year and today you will see in the advertising columns of HOBBIES requests for ruined music boxes from the few repairers still in existence. This is done in the hope of replenishing their stock of spare parts. And there are many parts not to be had. Take the medium sized pinions for the governors and the worm or fan staff for example. They are very seldom obtainable, nor even fair substitutes. Music boxes, like Swiss watches, come in such unlimited variety that I have almost never seen two alike. Therefore in essential parts it is usually necessary to put in "the nearest thing you can get".

A little booklet written in 1890 by one of the leading importing firms states that, "In order to avoid useless correspondence we will state here that no comb or cylinder can be duplicated even by the manufacturer unless the whole box is sent to the factory, which would generally cost more than a new one. If the pins are damaged we can replace them but for cheap boxes this is hardly worthwhile as the cost of such repairs would almost equal the value of the box."

Now let us take several examples. One of my close friends has a music box with three interchangeable cylinders. Each cylinder is about 14" long with almost eight airs on each. All pins are perfect and the case and movement in mint condition except that some mischievous person or child picked 17 teeth out of the comb in a row — treble teeth in a fine two comb box of the 90's. With the finest modern grinding wheel I hoped to cut a strip of new teeth from another comb, neatly insert them and tune them. So my friends far and wide joined in the search — time or cost of no consideration. Did we find it? Apparently so, but the Rockwell test showed a difference in hardness. The result of this was that he wrecked the box, gave me the combs for future reference and put the cylinders away hopefully.

In time he bought an oak box of the same size and about the same de-

(CONTINUED IN ANTIQUE DEPT.)

C. R. S. Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and
speech records.

Records available through dealers or direct
from us if there is no dealer in your city.
Free mailing list of new issues.

tfc

C. R. S.
HISTORICAL RECORDS
2060 First Ave. New York 29, N. Y.

MUSIC BOXES

all kinds

Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired
(Third generation in the music box business)

tfc

A. V. BORNAND
333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

CAL RECORDS is printed and ready for distribution, that fact will be clearly announced in this and in other magazines.

VICTOR HERITAGE

Series No. 2

PASQUALE AMATO—I due Foscari: O vecchio cor (1913)
Germania: Ferito prigionier (1913)
Record 15-1005, 12-inch, price $3.50
CELESTINA BONINSEGNA—Aida: O cieli azzurri (1910)
Masked Ball: Ma dall'arido (1906)
Record 15-1006, 12-inch, price $3.50
POL PLANCON—Magic Flute—Invocation (1905)
Le Lazzarone (Ferrari): Le Flibustier (Georges) (1905)
Record 15-1007, 12-inch, price $3.50
JOHN McCORMACK & LUCREZIA BORI—Traviata: Parigi, o cara (1914)
JOHN McCORMACK & MARIO SAMMARCO—Bohème: Ah Mimi, tu m'as (1910)
Record 15-1009, 12-inch, price $3.50
JEANNE GERVILLE-REACHE — Carmen: Habanera (1910)
Paul et Virginie: Chanson du Tigre (1911)
Record 15-1008, 12-inch, price $3.50

RECORDS FOR SALE

2,500 EDISON Cylinder Records (New). Many pioneer recording artists. 25c ea. in random lots of 10. $1 for any specified title. 1919 to 1930 Victor record catalogs. Stamp appreciated. F. Bogenrief, Hinton, Iowa. aul132

C. R. S.

Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and speech records.

Records available through dealers or direct from us if there is no dealer in your city. Free mailing list of new issues. tfe

C. R. S.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave. New York 29, N. Y.

MUSIC BOXES

all kinds

Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired
(Third generation in the music box business) tfo

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

RECORD COLLECTORS SERVICE now offers

VOCAL COLLECTORS:

Caruso 1902's, Boninsegna, de Luca, de Lucia, Didur, Navarrini, Krusenicki, Sammarco, Vignas, etc. Berliners, G&T's, Zonophones, and Fonotipias.

Send want lists to

RECORD COLLECTORS SERVICE

Room 1108, 8 West 40th St., New York 18, N. Y.
(Mail orders only) aup

Edison

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS

For Sale.

WOODYMAY RECORD CO tfo

73 Roxbury Street, Boston 19, Mass.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

LEN SPENCER.—VI

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Although Len Spencer's ability to write, produce and act recorded vaudeville sketches appeared inexhaustible, the popularity of this type of record declined after 1910, with Ada Jones devoting most of her time to singing duets with other artists, especially Billy Murray. The last of the Jones and Spencer sketches may have been a twelve-inch record of "A Race for a Wife," issued by Victor in 1913.

Len went his prosperous way, however, as a sketch writer and booking agent. One of his great ambitions, nevertheless, was not realized. It was that of being Billy Murray's business agent.

Spencer had a formal, slightly drawing way of speaking, something like that of the old-time tragedians he sometimes impersonated, and he always addressed Billy as "Wil-yam." (Anyone who has the Spencer-Hunter record of "Auction Sale of a Music Store" can get a good idea of how he pronounced the word, for the versatile musician in that sketch is referred to repeatedly as Will-yam.)

"Will-yam," Len would say, "you are too easy-going. You are not receiving the stipend to which your great abilities entitle you. Make me your business agent, Will-yam, at a mere fifteen per cent of your earnings, and I guarantee to increase your honorarium most substantially."

"Sure, Len!" the good-natured Billy would agree. Out of range of Spencer's impressive personality, however, he would see the matter in a different light. "Why," he would ask himself, "should I pay Len fifteen per cent to be my booking agent when I've already got all the work I can possibly do?" So he would 'phone to Spencer and say: "I've been thinking it over, Len, and I don't believe I want to go ahead with that agent's proposition of yours."

"Very well, Will-yam!" Len would reply, with unruffled dignity. "It shall be as you wish. But I give you fair warning—you'll live to regret your lack of business acumen!"

Len Spencer's last record was "Uncle Fritz and the Children's Orchestra," a sketch which he made on Edison discs and cylinders in time for the December, 1914, Christmas trade. This was the only Diamond

MUSIC BOXES

SPECIALIZING IN THE REPAIR OF MUSICAL BOXES OF ALL TYPES, INCLUDING THE REPAIR OF BIRD BOXES AND BIRD IN CHOICE MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE. sp

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington,

Rhode Island

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

Extra Tune Sheets For Sale.
Parts and Repairs. tfo

Now offering for the first time in thirty years a new tune for the 15 1/2" Regina music box. "JINGLE BELLS." Price $3.00.

Will be adding new tunes each month. Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342

Hanover,

Massachusetts

If You're Moving

Don't forget to send a post card to HOBBIES' Subscription Dept., 2810 S. Michigan, Chicago, Ill. Mail your card at least two weeks before the date of issue. Because of the paper shortage we cannot duplicate lost copies.

WANTED

COLUMBIA

GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ☆ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ☆ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ☆ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ☆ CAMPANARI
- ☆ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ☆ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ☆ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INC., SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

—O—

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.

International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonofone, Disque Zonophone by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by this artist, especially her Carmen arias on 40078.

Lys Gauty singing Le quatorze Juillet
ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

West Falmouth, Massachusetts

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

Disc he was ever to make. In it he portrayed the role of a benevolent old German uncle who brought gifts to his little nieces and nephews and led them in playing a "Christmas Symphony" on toy instruments.

His death occurred on December 16, 1914, only a week after the greater part of Edison's phonograph and record manufacturing plant at Orange, New Jersey, had been destroyed by fire. The February, 1915, issue of the Edison Phonograph Monthly, under the heading of "Len G. Spencer's Funeral," contained the following article:

"For years Len G. Spencer has delighted Edison audiences. His songs with Ada Jones and others were equally well known. His voice was a powerful baritone with a quality well fitted for record making.

"He passed away on December 16, 1914, at his home, 150 East Forty-eighth street, New York. Funeral services were held at the 'Funeral Church' at the undertaking establishment of Frank A. Campbell, West Twenty-third street, New York. Friends were notified, but were not apprised as to the character of the services, which came as a surprise to those present. They consisted simply of two phonograph selections in Mr. Spencer's own voice, made some years ago on Edison records and specially kept for this funeral service. In one Mr. Spencer's voice was heard to repeat the Lord's Prayer, in a deep, slow, solemn tone. Then followed in the same voice, but in a somewhat higher tone, the Twenty-third Psalm. The unexpectedness of these records was a surprise to all except the immediate family. The body was afterwards cremated and the ashes buried at the family plot in Washington, D. C.

"Mr. Spencer was 46 years old. He left a will in which are a number of $500 bequests to charitable institutions. The will also contained a provision that the records are to be preserved and next used at the tenth anniversary of his death. Many of Len Spencer's records still have a wide popularity and a steady sale."

Len Spencer may have been the first person in all history whose recorded voice was heard reciting the Lord's Prayer and the Twenty-third Psalm (which he had also recorded for Victor and Columbia, as well as Edison) at his own funeral. It would be interesting to know what gave him the idea of having the records played at his death. Perhaps it was suggested by a paragraph in the April, 1906, issue of the Columbia Record, Columbia house organ, which said: "At the funeral of Miss Minnie Nelson, a Chicago music teacher, a record of her own voice was recently reproduced. The selection was 'Nearer My God to Thee,' and it was so beautifully rendered that it added greatly to the impressiveness of the ceremony."

Or he may have read, in the May, 1906, issue of the Phonogram: "A feature of a funeral service recently held in Sullivan county, New York, was a phonograph selection. When the religious ceremony was over a phonograph was placed on the casket and the assembled mourners listened to the dead man singing one of his favorite hymns."

Ada Jones, who attended the funeral, told Billy Murray that when she heard Len Spencer's living voice she was so overcome she twisted her handkerchief into knots, trying to keep from screaming because of the emotional strain induced by the unexpected event.

Frank Dorian told me that Spencer's death occurred as he was at his desk, signing a letter in the beautiful flowing Spencerian hand he had learned at his parents' business college—the same hand he had used in 1898 when he placed his signature to a testimonial saying that the Polyphone, a cylinder phonograph with two horns and two reproducers reproduced his voice "as naturally as I sing." As he affixed his signature, the pen paused in the middle of his name and rolled from his hand. Members of his family found him dead of a heart attack.

I have not been able to ascertain definitely whether Len Spencer's wife and his three children are still alive, but I hope they are and that the record of his voice was played on the tenth, twentieth and thirtieth anniversaries of his death, and will be played into the indeterminate future.

MISCELLANEOUS

MUSIC BOXES: Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. s6868

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. s3763

FOR SALE: Music Box Records. New Regina 15½"; White Xmas, Silent night, Jingle Bells; Regina 27"; Regina 20½"; Stella 17¼"; Mira 15½"; Mira 18"; Criterion 15½"; Symphonion ABC 13½".—George Schait, 8 Walnut Ave., Cranford, N. J. o3616

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342, f128782

BUY & SELL Edison cylinder phonographs records, horns, reproducers, recorders & parts.—Leroy Hughbanks, Osborne, Kans. au3422

CLASSICAL, Operatic, Red Seal Victor, Columbia, other records; great singers of Long Ago. No lists, write wants.—Lloyd Bailey, 721 E. 11th St., Kansas City, Mo. o3053

MUSIC BOX melodies now reproduced on modern phonograph records. 3 albums available $5.25 each.—Bornand Music Box Record Co., 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. o3053

CERTIFICATE and expert opinion on old violins. Fee $5. Violins sent will receive prompt and careful attention.—Isador Berger (Violin Connoisseur), 165 E. Ohio St., Chicago, Ill. au126541

BACK POPULAR MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Rags, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, H-3151 High., Denver 5, Col. my12048

WANTED: Old phonographs, cylinder records, music boxes, discs, parts. Catalogs and other books on same.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. je120011

FINE REGINA Music Box. Snapshot on request $147.50.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. au148

WANTED. Music boxes, singing birds, and other musical mechanical items for my collection. Also interested in rare or historical phonograph records. Describe completely and state price.—Urban Thielmann, 3001 Queensbury Drive, Los Angeles 34, California. o3074

PHONOGRAPH records cheap. Catalogue.—Paramount, HA-313 E. Market, Wilkes-Barre, Penna. s3041

COLLECTORS' Records obtainable.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Avenue, New York City. je12276

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap12036

FOR SALE. Certified old violins. $65 up. Desc. catalog with article on "The Last of the Cremonas" will be sent post paid for $1.—Berger, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124261

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. n63001

REGINA discs wanted, 20½". State tunes, price.—Harry Happer, Pleasant Plains, Illinois. s3012

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f128001

RARE AND OLD operatics and other acoustic and electrical out-of-print classical vocals and instrumentals bought, sold, exchanged.—The Record Hunter, 1194 Lexington Ave., (81st), New York 28, N. Y. mh126371

EDISON CYLINDER Phonographs, outside horns, with 20 cylinder records $15.—Charles Clark, Wellington, O. au189

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS for sale: Classical, jazz, cylinders, operatic. Lists. What do you want? Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. s6235

WANTED TO BUY or exchange 27" Regina disks.—Lillian Uharik, 2540 S. Millard Ave., Chicago 23, Ill. au3832

EARLY AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC

Bound Volumes or Loose Sheets

Wanted.

List on Request.

HARRY DICTER, 5458 Montgomery Ave.
Philadelphia 31, Penna.

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

passioned plea of the Prayer from Resurrection.

Mary Garden was known for the great care with which she prepared each role and for the burning, contagious enthusiasm which illuminated the performances in which she took part. It is not too much to say that her recordings project these same qualities to such a degree that they remain audible testimony to a long, brilliant career and great lyric and dramatic gifts.

Cylinder Records and Machines DIAMOND DISCS, PATHES

R. L. POLEY

sp

1124 S. University Blvd., Denver 10, Colo.

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

SINGLE RARITIES AND ENTIRE COLLECTIONS
PURCHASED

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

1135 du Pont Building, Miami 32, Fla.
tfc

C. R. S.

Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of
operatic, theatrical, and
speech records.

Records available through dealers or direct from us if there is no dealer in your city. Free mailing list of new issues.
tfc

C. R. S.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave. New York 29, N. Y.

MUSIC BOXES

all kinds

Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired
(Third generation in the music box business)
tfc

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

World-Wide Record and Music Agency

143 E. Garfield Ave.,
Milwaukee 12, Wisconsin
COLLECTORS — RESEARCHERS
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC LABELS
CYLINDERS AND DISCS
OPERA — SPEECH — POPULAR
oc

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

SAD NEWS ABOUT S. H. DUDLEY

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Regular readers of this department are familiar with the name of S. H. Dudley. They know him as the baritone of the Hayden Quartet, the first male voice ensemble to become internationally famous by its phonograph records; as the Victor catalog editor from 1902 to 1916 and as the author of the first editions of the Victor Book of the Opera. Biographical information about the singer, whose real name was Samuel Holland Rous and who was voted by HOBBIES readers to be one of the fifteen greatest pioneer recording artists, appeared in the January and February, 1944, and May, 1946, issues.

When I last heard from Mr. Rous, about four years ago, he had "just turned eighty" but was in excellent health and confidently expecting to live to be 90, if not 100. Since he came from an exceptionally long-lived family, there were good grounds for his optimism. Now, however, I am grieved to say that I have learned not only of his death, but of that of Mrs. Rous, who survived him by only a day. Mrs. Rous, who had been paralyzed for several years, was well known in the 1890's as a concert and opera singer under the name of Sofia Romani.

News of this fine couple's passing came from Miss Nellie G. Flynn, of Los Angeles, in a letter that deeply touched me. Miss Flynn, a nurse, waited on both Mr. and Mrs. Rous during their illnesses and injured her own health in doing so. She called Mr. Rous "Dad" and his wife, "Mom."

I shall quote most of her letter as a document of more than ordinary human interest:

"Los Angeles, Cal., June 16, 1947. Mr. Walsh: I am Miss Flynn. I have been nursing Mrs. S. H. Rous for the past 6½ years. I wanted to write you the sad news. Mr. Rous talked to me of you a lot.

"On June 6 at 20 to 11 a. m. I lost Mr. Rous. He was a sick boy for a month or more, became quite ill on Wednesday. We took him to the hospital, and he took hemorrhages of the stomach. They were not quite sure just what it was.

"Well, my poor old Dad passed away. He was a fine person — the best God ever put on earth. Then Mrs. Rous passed away on Saturday . . . just 23 hours after him. I had a double funeral for them on June 9 at 2 o'clock.

"I had 25 months with Mom. She was bedfast, had a stroke, completely

MUSIC BOXES

SPECIALIZING IN THE REPAIR OF MUSICAL BOXES OF ALL TYPES, INCLUDING THE REPAIR OF BIRD BOXES AND BIRD IN CHOICES Music Boxes For Sale.
CAGE PIECES, ETC.
sp

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington,

Rhode Island

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

Extra Tune Sheets For Sale.
Parts and Repairs.
tfc

Now offering for the first time in thirty years a new tune for the 15½" Regina music box. "JINGLE BELLS." Price $3.00.

Will be adding new tunes each month. Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342

Hanover,

Massachusetts

Edison

DIAMOND DISC
OPERATIC SELECTIONS

WOODYMAY RECORD CO.

tfc

73 Roxbury Street, Boston 19, Mass.

WANTED

COLUMBIA
GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.

International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by this artist, especially her Carmen arias on 40076.

Lys Gauty singing Le quatorze Juillet
ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

West Falmouth, Massachusetts

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

The late S. H. Dudley (Samuel Holland Rous), baritone of Haydn quartet, Victor catalog editor until 1916 and author of first Victor "Book of the Opera."

paralyzed. I lifted her in and out of bed as you would a three-year-old child . . . Mom was over 180 pounds, and I lifted her six to ten times a day. I fed her all her meals. I loved these people as if they were my very own . . . God was so good to those two through life and did not part them in death. He died at 20 to 11 and she at that very minute went into a coma. See what a beautiful ending. They both had a very happy death.

"My memory is so full of happiness while here with them. The beautiful thought of them will forever go through life with me. Thanks be to God for that. I have tried to let his (Mr. Rous') friends know of his death. If you know any of them please let them know . . . I will be here at the apartment till the last of June, then I will have to go to the hospital. I ruptured my side lifting Mother, so will have that taken care of . . . I tried so hard to fill their empty life and I think I did a good job of it. They both loved me.

"Dad's property goes to her nieces and his sister and niece . . . Am having mass said for them. Please add Mom and Father Rous in your prayers. They need us more now than ever."

I don't think anyone could read the foregoing without being impressed by the loving care and kindness Miss Flynn, of whom I had never heard until her letter arrived, bestowed upon the venerable couple for whom she did so much in their last years. Mr. Rous was 83; his wife, probably a year or two younger.

Unfortunately, I never met Mr. Rous, but his letters breathed such a spirit of confidence and vitality that it's difficult indeed to realize he's gone. I know the news will be a grievous shock to his old friend, John Bieling, of Hempstead, Long Island, the only surviving member of the Hayden Quartet.

I remember that when I was in New York in October, 1940, Albert

Campbell and I took a walk on the last day of my stay. As we passed one place — just where, I can't recall now — Al remarked: "That's where Sam Rous' brother used to have a phonograph company." The firm name was Rous and Burke. I have never been able to get much information about this long-gone pioneer recording concern, and probably never shall know much about it now, for, like Sam Rous, poor Al Campbell also is gone. "Clancy," as Billy Murray always called him, died on January 25 this year. To lose two such great old-timers as Albert Campbell and "S. H. Dudley" in one year is indeed a tragedy to those of us who love the pioneer recording artists and the great work they did. However, as long as collectors treasure their records, they will not be entirely forgotten, and that is a consoling thought.

Meanwhile, goodbye, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Rous! We're all sorry that you had to leave us.

Before becoming a recording artist, S. H. Dudley had considerable experience in opera, touring with the Emma Juch and Marie Tavary Grand Opera Companies in the United States, Canada and Mexico. This old poster was issued by the Tavary Grand English Opera company in the season of 1895.

Complete names of the artists are: Marie Tavary, Sofia Romani (Mrs. S. H. Dudley) and Marie Van Cauteren, sopranos; Helena Von Doenhoff, Leonara Herding and Sarra Carr, contraltos; Payne Clarke, William Stephans and Charles O. Bassett, tenors; Emil Steger, S. H. Dudley and Arthur R. Seaton, baritones; and Conrad Behrens, Pietro Mascotte and Thomas S. Guise, basses.

THE ANTIQUES OF PIANO LORE

By FRANK FARRINGTON

The cycle has been completed. A speaker at a London exhibition in 1851 declared that in the then recent years one of the greatest changes in social life had been the change from dependence upon amusement in public, outside of the home, to the enjoyment of entertainment and amusement in the home. And he declared the prime factor in bringing about this change had been the development of the piano.

But now amusement and entertainment in the home have given away before the attractions of motoring, roadhouse dining and dancing and the pleasure of going places, and we are back again to one hundred years ago. In so far as the piano is concerned, it has hopped from the pianissimo of the home to the fortissimo of the dance hall.

Perhaps there is something to be said in favor of the end of the strumming and "chop-sticks" that made peace in the home something less than ideal through the long period when every girl's parents thought she ought to learn to play the piano. There were many pianos that were neighborhood nuisances, but after all, the piano through half a dozen decades was the center of much social gayety. Perhaps it will come back into its own, minus the "chop-sticks!"

A writer in "Harper's New Monthly Magazine," back in 1879, was saying, "Possibly the time may come when the rage for the antique, now expending itself upon pottery, will bring out the old pianos and give them a market value." Possibly. Very early pianos and their contemporaries and predecessors in the form of spinets, harpsichords and virginals are today attracting the attention of collectors of antiques.

The earliest musical instruments were, of course, stringed instruments, played by plucking the strings as with the harp and "Play on your harp, little David" was the keynote. It was the beginning of the use of the hammer method of securing a tone that led to the piano.

The clavicitherium came into use about 1325 and it appeared as an oblong box within which strings of catgut were stretched, varying in length from the longest, reaching the full length of the box, to the shortest, enough shorter to give the highest desired note. These strings were operated by striking a key which caused a so-called plectrum to strike the string. This was an elementary form of the hammer method of making a sound. Incidentally, it has been discovered that catgut strings known to be 3,000 years old will still give out a sound. Catgut would seem to have more lives than the cat.

Today we need to know very little of this six-syllable, 14th century ancestor of the piano. It belongs in the realm of things that were antiques before there were any antiques. But it did represent the beginning of the piano type of musical tone production.

When the tone was first produced by striking the strings instead of by picking them, it was made with a quill fastened to a piece of wood operated by keys resembling the piano keyboard. It failed to satisfy in tone old Dr. Burney (author of "The General History of Music," London, 1776) who described the tone as "a scratch with a sound at the end of it."

Somewhat later came the clavichord which, too, was an oblong box with strings and keys for three octaves. The keys, when struck, caused the brass strings to be hit by brass hammers rather than by quills. Mozart made a clavichord a part of his regular equipment.

The earliest approach to the piano as we know it today, was the virginal, and almost contemporary with it were the spinet and the harp-

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 33)

took a few years ago under the supervision of Queena Mario. But perhaps a few words about the career of Jeanne Jomelli will not be amiss. She was born in Amsterdam in 1879 and made her debut at the Royal Opera house there at the age of 16, as Juliette. Her vocal teacher was Stockhausen with whom she studied at Frankfort-am-Mein. A world wide tour soon followed. In Paris she was coached by Massenet. In New York she appeared with the Manhattan Opera Company (1906), and in the United States she later sang with the Boston Symphony, and on December 28, 1913, she gave a recital at Carnegie Hall in New York. She died in 1932. Her recording activities seem to have been very limited and the only titles I know of were listed in the July, 1911, TALKING MACHINE NEWS—ten-inch, needle-cut Edison Bell discs:

1085 Traviata: Ah fors, part 1

1086 Traviata: Ah fors, part 2

1087 Louise: Depuis le jour

1088 Annie Laurie

1089 Ave Maria (Gounod)

I have a vague recollection that Keith Moyer (Washington) once reported the Traviata on a Phono-disc, or some obscure make, and a blurred memory of Edison cylinders, but my information files are far away as I write these lines and I am unable to check the facts.

One of the newer innovations on the market in the form of music books is a Play-by-Color book issued by Lenore and Sid Wolfe, 986 Sanford Ave., Irvington 11, N. J. There are editions for the beginner and advanced student, at the price of $1.50 each. The chart furnished with the edition is simple enough and we imagine that by following the rules one could gain the desired effects in a reasonably short time.

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

Extra Tune Sheets For Sale.
Parts and Repairs.NOW OFFERING FOR THE FIRST TIME IN THIRTY YEARS NEW TUNES FOR THE
15 1/2" REGINA MUSIC BOX.

"White Christmas," "Jingle Bells," "Noel,"
"Hark! The Herald Angels Sing,"
"Santa Claus is Coming to Town"

Price $3.00 each.

Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342

Hanover, Massachusetts

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

EUGENE C. ROSE. I

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

In Freeport, N. Y., thrice sacred to collectors of ancient phonograph records as the home of Billy Murray, there also lived, until a few months ago, a vigorous gentleman, now 81, whose association with recorded music goes even farther back than Billy's.

Eugene C. Rose, who moved not long ago from Freeport to Oceanside, N. Y., made cylinders as long ago as 1889 — 58 years ago. Veteran record collectors will remember him as a member in the pioneer days of the Edison company's bands and orchestras, in which he played the flute, and as one of the three skilled musicians who composed the Edison Venetian Trio of violin, flute and harp.

I had the pleasure of meeting the active and alert Mr. Rose in September, 1946, at John Bieling's home in Hempstead, Long Island. Until about a month before my arrival, the two old cronies hadn't met in 25 years and neither was sure the other was still around, although they lived only five miles apart. Their reunion came about through a Nassau Daily Review-Star article featuring Mr. Rose. Afterwards, on August 2, 1946, the paper carried a story headed "Friendship of Rose and Bieling Revived Through the Review-Star," the first few paragraphs of which are:

"Last Saturday the Nassau Daily Review-Star carried a story on Eugene C. Rose, of Freeport, retired flautist who once played with great orchestras and was member 45 years ago of the Edison Phonograph company recording orchestra. He celebrated his 80th birthday Saturday.

"John H. Bieling, of Hempstead, now in his 78th year, picked up the paper and read the story. Bieling, one of the country's first recording artists, had known the Freeport musician when he was singing with Edison back in the late 1890's.

"He had not seen Rose for 25 years, had lost all trace of Rose since the day Rose walked into his Victor agency shop on Front street, Hempstead. In the meantime, the two had been living only about five miles apart.

"The veteran Hempstead recording artist, who today recalled that he was preceded by only five people in the country as a recording artist, in the days when barbershop quartets made famous such old-timers as 'Sweet Adeline,' 'Take Me Out to the Ball Game' and 'Side-walks of New York,' immediately made plans to get in touch with his old friend. He did this yesterday, contacting Mr. Rose's wife on the telephone and making a date later in the day for a good 'old-timer's' session, recalling their days together with the Edison Phonograph Company."

By the time I visited in Hempstead, the reunion mentioned in the foregoing article had already occurred, and Mr. Rose came over again from Freeport for a chat about the old phonograph days.

Mr. Rose told me that he was born in Danzig, Germany on July 26, 1866. He came to the United States at an early age and by 1889 was already well known as a flute virtuoso. In that year, when the phonograph was only twelve years old, Thomas A.

An early picture of Eugene C. Rose

Edison decided to have its wonders displayed at the Paris exposition, held in observance of the completion of the Eiffel tower, so the great inventor went to Paris, taking several cases of records which had been made especially to be played at the exposition.

"These," Mr. Rose says, "were made by prominent instrumentalists and singers of that time. Of all the records he took with him, I only know for sure of three I could mention. Maud Powell played a violin solo; Theodore Hoch played a cornet solo; and a trio by Beethoven for two concert flutes and alto flute was made with Carl Wehner and Gustav Gast playing the concert flutes and myself the alto."

Mr. Rose describes the records with which Mr. Edison astonished the exhibition-goers as "the old white wax cylinders."

In 1900, the veteran flautist—who, of course, wasn't a veteran then — went with John Philip Sousa and his band to the Paris Exposition, and in 1901 they played at the Glasgow Exposition. During their concert tour in England, Mr. Sousa received a Royal Command letter to give a concert at the Royal Palace in Sandringham before King Edward VII. The occasion, Mr. Rose recalls, was Queen Alexandra's birthday.

Upon his return to the United States, the genial "Gene" Rose established himself as a member of the various Edison house bands and orchestras, besides playing occasional solos and appearing in duet and trio combinations. He played several flute and violin duets with Eugene A. Jaudas, for many years an Edison orchestra director, and in August, 1914, the Edison record list contained "Will o' the Wisp Polka," played as a piccolo duet by Rose and Henry Heidelberg.

This was the description given of the record: "Henry Heidelberg and Eugene C. Rose are both proficient piccolo players. Mr. Heidelberg was piccolo soloist with the Innes Band for eleven years and was with Sousa

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap12086

FOR SALE. Certified old violins. $66 up. Desc. catalog with article on "The Last of the Cremonas" will be sent post paid for $1.—Berger, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124261

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. n68001

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—I. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f128001

RARE AND OLD operatics and other acoustic and electrical out-of-print classical vocals and instrumentals bought, sold, exchanged.—The Record Hunter, 1194 Lexington Ave., (81st), New York 28, N. Y. mh126371

RECORDS: Operatic, classical, vocal & instrumental. Great artists of the past. Write me your wants.—Mrs. Clifford Smith, 2508 Chelsea, Kansas City, Missouri. n3223

Elegant Rosewood Square Piano, Chickering, 1865. All original, perfect condition, wonderful tone. Make offer.—Della Gray, Marengo, Ia. o1081

RECORD AUCTION of rare cut-out opera & classical items. Send for free list.—S. Luzinas, 3229 Wallace St., Chicago 16, Illinois. n3492

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. au123711

RECORD COLLECTORS: Rare operatic, vocal, classical for sale reasonably priced. Send want lists. Cylinders, jazz, popular.—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. mh6885

2,200 EDISON 4 minute cylinder records (New). Many Pioneer recording artists. 25c ea. in random lots of ten. $1 for any specified title. 1919 to 1930 Victor record catalogs. Regina Hexaphone. Never used commercially $60. Photo 10c.—F. Bogenrief, Hinton, Iowa. o1592

PHONOGRAPH Records cheap. Catalog.—Paramount, HB-313 East Market, Wilkes-Barre, Penna. d3041

for five years. Mr. Rose was a member of the Metropolitan Opera House Orchestra and was for a number of years solo flutist of the Edison Concert Band."

Since Mr. Rose says his association with the Edison Company ended at about the time the Diamond Disc was introduced, this record probably had been made some years previously as a wax cylinder and was being re-catalogued in Blue Amberol form.

Records, such as "Sweet Spirit, Hear My Prayer," by the Edison Venetian Trio, composed of Charles Scheutze, harp, and Jaudas, violin, in addition to Mr. Rose, were popular from around 1905 to 1910. However, Mr. Rose's biggest seller probably was "The Genevieve Waltz Medley," played by him on the ocarina, and listed by Edison in February, 1906. Here is what the New Phonogram said about the cylinder which 'Gene recalls it took three days of hard work to make:

"This is a record by the ocarina and the first solo of its kind made for our catalogue. A bit played by the ocarina, which was introduced into 'The Musical Yankee'... led to numerous requests for an entire record of this unique instrument. This specially arranged waltz solo, with orchestra accompaniment, is the result. The ocarina makes an unusually loud and clear record, and this selection will undoubtedly be much in demand. It introduces 'On the Banks of the Rhine With a Stein', 'I'll Be Waiting in the Gloaming', 'Sweet Genevieve' and 'Wait Till the Sun Shines, Nellie'."

"When I was introduced to Mr. Rose, I gave a poor impersonation of Edward Meeker's "announcement" at the beginning of that "Genevieve" record and then asked its maker if he remembered it. He said he certainly did, and told me of how much trouble it had been to record properly."

I then recalled that Walter Rouse, a Canadian collector, had sought for something like twenty years for a copy of that old wax cylinder, which he remembered hearing as a boy, and that I gave him mine several years ago. Luckily, I have since been able to replace it.

(To be concluded.)

MISCELLANEOUS

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. d3463

MELODEONS for sale. Both octagon leg and folding melodeons, all in good playing condition. Descriptions and prices sent on request. Also melodeons repaired.—Joseph Leighton, 2626 Westfield St., West Springfield, Mass. o1434

FOR SALE: Sq. grand piano, "Peek & Son".—Mrs. Otto E. Breitwieser, R. R. 1, Windfall, Indiana. o1211

REGINA MUSIC BOX cabinet model, including 27 12" discs of unusual selection. Motor perfect condition. $85 express collect.—Marie Crotty, 1508 Kishwaukee St., Rockford, Illinois. o1281

WANTED: 8 3/4" Olympian or Criterion music box discs, also 15 1/2" Miras.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. o1331

WANTED: Music Box made in Praha, Bohemia, or Prague, Czechoslovakia.—Roy Mosoriak, 1436 West 73 Place, Chicago 36, Illinois. o1331

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Cal. d3332

FOR SALE: Music Box Records. New Regina 15 1/2", White Xmas, Silent night, Jingle Bells; Regina 27"; Regina 20 1/2"; Stella 17 1/2"; Mira 15 1/2"; Mira 18"; Criterion 15 1/2"; Symphonion ABC 13 1/2".—George Schait, 8 Walnut Ave., Cranford, N. J. o3616

MUSIC BOXES for Christmas. Choice selection of disc and cylinder types. Also extra discs available for Mira, Stella, Symphonion, Criterion, Olympia and Regina boxes.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. o3053

LESSER MASTERS With Tone. Inexpensive and tonally good hand-made fiddles. Books on the violin invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship. Antique musical instruments. Lists free.—Houghton Music Co., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. s124812

RARE OLD VIOLIN by Gabriel David Buchstetter, 1763. Make offer.—D. W. Ball, 843 Anastasia Ave., Coral Gables, Florida. n3662

RECORD COLLECTORS: Fine old Victor Red Seals, No's betw. 61203 & 96000; Caruso, Scotti, others. Free list. Best offer takes.—Alice Boone, 2424 Whittier, Los Angeles, Calif. o3873

DONT MISS SEEING the A. V. Bornand collection of rare antique music boxes when visiting in the East this summer. No. 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y., (just outside of New York City). o3264

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f128782

CLASSICAL, Operatic, Red Seal Victor, Columbia, other records; great singers of Long Ago. No lists, write wants.—Lloyd Bailey, 721 E. 11th St., Kansas City, Mo. o3053

SQUARE GRAND PIANO, over 100 yrs. old, restrung, playing condition, original ivories and finish (could be redone). Beautiful Crotch Mahog., interesting history. Crating, shipping extra. Details on request. $400.—R. F. Thomas, Norris Lane, Box 119, Baltimore 21, Md. 01662

Swiss music boxes, 2 tunes $6.25 to $12.35
No. 2. 4 3/4" long, 3 3/4" wide, 2 tunes 6.25
No. 3. 2 tune hand carved box, 4 1/2" long 7.50
No. 4. Hand carved box, 5 1/2" long, plays 2 tunes 8.25
No. 5. Hand carved secret box, 5 1/2" long, 3 3/4" wide, 2 tunes 9.00
No. 6. Serpentine style case, secret lock, hand carved cluster of flowers on top, case 6" long, 4 1/4" wide 9.65
No. 7. Serpentine style case, hand carved cluster of flowers on top, secret latch, 7 1/4" long, 4 1/4" wide, 2 tunes 10.30

AVAILABLE IN QUANTITIES

No. 12. Toilet paper holder with 2 tune music box unit 10.00
No. 16. 8 3/4" diameter round tray with handles, grape carving 10.90
No. 17. 8 3/4" diameter round tray with grape carving without handles 11.60
(Carving more pronounced & open)
No. 18. Oval tray 1 1/2" long, plays 2 tunes, assorted types 11.60
No. 19. Oval tray 1 1/2" long, grape leaf and grapes carving expertly done, 2 tunes 12.35

DISCOUNT TO DEALERS oc

LLOYD G. KELLEY

HANOVER, MASS.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

EUGENE C. ROSE. II

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Eugene Rose, the accomplished virtuoso of flute, piccolo and ocarina, was, he says, "a real phonograph enthusiast" in the days when he was playing for the Edison company. When a son was born to him and Mrs. Rose at 6 A. M., September 21, 1906, the proud father got out his big Edison Concert cylinder machine as soon as the nurse brought the baby in for him to see. Then he put on a recording blank and "immortalized" the youngster's first cries. That done, he took the record down to the Edison laboratories and boasted that he had discovered a new singer!

Besides doing all sorts of recorded orchestral work, Mr. Rose helped to play musical accompaniments for the talking pictures which Thomas A. Edison introduced, through a combination of phonograph and film, around 1912. He says it was an ordeal performing for those primitive talkies in blistering summer weather with 36 big arc lights burning overhead, and is full of amusing anecdotes of the difficulties experienced in making the films and records synchronize. Sometimes, for instance, a dog would be barking, but the barking sound wouldn't be heard until a little later.

Mr. Rose played in the Metropolitan Opera orchestra from 1911 to 1917, and with all of Fred Stone's shows at the Globe theatre in New York, beginning in 1914 with "Chin-Chin," and continuing through 1929 with "Three Cheers." In the latter, he recalls, Will Rogers "pinch hit" for Stone, who had been hurt in an airplane accident. Rogers, himself, was killed in a plane crash in 1935.

After the flautist, or flutist, if you prefer, left Edison, he played as a free-lance in the orchestras of perhaps a score of other phonograph companies. During recent years he has done considerable teaching.

And now we come to a really unusual incident. In October last year, a month or so after I saw Mr. Rose at John Bielings's home, L. Brevort Odell, of Brooklyn, who has one of the largest collections in the world of cylinder phonographs and records, announced in the New York Daily News that he would like to give three of the instruments to persons who would appreciate them and would present a hundred records with each.

Mr. Rose's son, Robert V. Rose, of Freeport, was one of those who applied to benefit by Mr. Odell's generosity. He received the following interesting postal card, which Mr. Rose has given me permission to quote:

"Dear Mr. Rose: It will be a pleasure to give you one of the phonographs we offered through the News, and I am sure there is at least one solo by Eugene Rose among the records. This is a preliminary note and shall write you soon to

MUSIC BOXES

all kinds

Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired
(Third generation in the music box business) tf

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

World-Wide Record and Music Agency

143 E. Garfield Ave.,

Milwaukee 12, Wisconsin

COLLECTORS — RESEARCHERS
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC LABELS
CYLINDERS AND DISCS
OPERA — SPEECH — POPULAR

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

Extra Tune Sheets For Sale.
Parts and Repairs. tf

NOW OFFERING FOR THE FIRST TIME IN
THIRTY YEARS NEW TUNES FOR THE
15 1/2" REGINA MUSIC BOX.

"White Christmas," "Jingle Bells," "Noel,"
"Hark! The Herald Angels Sing,"
"Santa Claus Is Coming to Town"

Price $3.00 each.

Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342

Hanover, Massachusetts

WANTED

COLUMBIA

GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILIBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

—O—

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.

International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by this artist, especially her Carme-
arias on 40076.

Lys Gauty singing Le quatorze Juillet
ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

West Falmouth, Massachusetts

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS
by great artists of the past can be bought at
YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All
bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price
of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

SINGLE RARITIES AND ENTIRE COLLECTIONS
— PURCHASED —

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

1135 du Pont Building, Miami 32, Fla. tf

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

Edison

DIAMOND DISC
OPERATIC SELECTIONS

WOODYMAY RECORD CO. tf

73 Roxbury Street, Boston 19, Mass.

C. R. S.

Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of
operatic, theatrical, and
speech records.

Records available through dealers or direct
from us if there is no dealer in your city.
Free mailing list of new issues. tf

C. R. S.
HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave. New York 29, N. Y.

MUSIC BOXES

SPECIALIZING IN THE REPAIR OF MUSICAL
BOXES OF ALL TYPES, INCLUDING THE
REPAIR OF BIRD BOXES AND BIRD IN
CAGE PIECES, ETC.

Choice Music Boxes For Sale tf

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington, Rhode Island

A late picture of Eugene C. Rose.

make arrangements. Please tell your father his playing has given us pleasure for many years."

The card was written on October 19. On October 21 Mr. Odell wrote the following equally interesting letter:

"Dear Mr. Rose: Hundreds of letters were received in response to our offer in the News and I wish it had been possible to give to many seemingly worthy applicants. We increased the number of outfits to five, but at present that is the limit.

"Your letter especially interested me, for so many of the instrumentalists have been forgotten. Everyone remembers Billy Murray, Jones, Collins, etc., but apparently the band men just represent a cornet, a fiddle, a piano, etc., and few collectors regard their records at all. In my case, I have always taken my greatest pleasure from instrumental music, so to hear about Eugene Rose was a pleasant surprise.

"Just a few days ago, my good friend, John Norton, who runs the unique Woodymay Record company, in Boston, and ourselves were mentioning Mr. Rose's flute solo, 'La Traviata Concert Waltz,' as being one of the best such recordings ever made.

"I presume you know your dad also played the 'musical sweet potato.' Well, you'll hear him get really sweet music out of the ocarina!

"Please let me know when you can call for the machine. . . Another outfit is going to the son of Dan Quinn, the singer, and another to Billy 'Musical' Huehn, old-time troupier and associate of early recording artists.

"John Young, who sang as 'Harry Anthony,' often visits us and hears his fine recordings."

The "sweet potato" record to which the generous Mr. Odell referred of course was the "Genevieve Waltz Medley" mentioned in last month's installment. The younger Rose took the instrument to Freeport and played "Genevieve" for his father — and 'Gene in turn called John Bieling on the 'phone and played the record for him.

The Odell letter brings out one interesting point. As he says, the old-time instrumentalists have been largely overshadowed by the fame of the singers who made records at the same time. Of course, it was easier for a voice to convey the individual artist's personality in those days than it was for a flute or a cornet to make a similarly indelible impression. It happens that Eugene Rose is the first instrumentalist of whom I have written a biographical sketch during the nearly six years that I have been doing the Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists series for HOBBIES. Others, such as Vess Ossman, "the Banjo King," and Charles D'Almaine, the violinist, will be dealt with later, but Mr. Rose breaks the ice for the instrumentalists, just as Ada Jones did for the women singers.

And I'm very glad indeed that I've had the opportunity of paying tribute to a fine musician, who has vigor and alertness that would do credit to a man twenty or thirty years his junior. Eugene Rose is a most attractive and likable gentleman. As I write this sketch on a warm night in July, I'm hoping that I shall be going to New York about two months from now, and that while I'm on Long Island, I shall meet Mr. Rose again and hear more of his inimitable reminiscences of the old days when the cylinder phonograph with the morning glory horn was the ultimate in home entertainment.

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap12086

FOR SALE. Certified old violins. $65 up. Desc. catalog with article on "The Last of the Cremonas" will be sent postpaid for $1.—Berger, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124261

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. n68001

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f128001

RARE AND OLD operatics and other acoustic and electrical out-of-print classical vocals and instrumentals bought, sold exchanged.—The Record Hunter, 1194 Lexington Ave., (81st), New York 28, N. Y. mh126371

RECORDS: Operatic, classical, vocal & instrumental, Great artists of the past. Write me your wants.—Mrs. Clifford Smith, 2508 Chelsea, Kansas City, Missouri. n3223

RECORD AUCTION of rare cut-out opera & classical items. Send for free list.—S. Luzinas, 3229 Wallace St., Chicago 16, Illinois. n3492

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. au128711

RECORD COLLECTORS: Rare operatic, vocal, classical for sale reasonably priced. Send want lists. Cylinders, jazz, popular.—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. mh6885

PHONOGRAPH Records cheap. Catalog.—Paramount, HB-313 East Market, Wilkes-Barre, Penna. d3041

EDISON RECORDS: 2 minute, 4 minute, Blue Amberol, Discs. Good condition. $3 assorted lots of 12. Indicate preferences, comic songs, sketches, ballads, hymns, instrumentals, etc. Will follow when possible. Specified titles $1 Orders sent collect.—William Dyer, 401 Buckingham Drive, Indianapolis, Ind. n1782

EDISON PHONOGRAPH and 100 records. Ada Jones, Cal Stuart, Billy Murray. Write.—Box 271, Lincoln, Nebr. n1211

BATTISTINI, GALVANY, plus many foreign vocal deletions for sale at nominal prices (duplicates from large private collection). For list, write to:—Record Collector, Box 106, Wynnewood, Pa. n1981

FOR SALE: Edison Disc and cylinder records. Old dated record catalogues.—Charles Clark, Wellington, Ohio. n1001

MISCELLANEOUS

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. d3463

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Cal. d3832

LESSER MASTERS With Tone. Inexpensive and tonally good hand-made fiddles. Books on the violin invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship. Antique musical instruments. Lists free.—Houghton Music Co., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. s124812

RARE OLD VIOLIN by Gabriel David Buchstetter, 1763. Make offer.—D. W. Ball, 843 Anastasia Ave., Coral Gables, Florida. n3662

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342, f128782

FOR SALE: Tavern Piano, electric, coin operated. App. 5 ft. tall, 5 ft. wide, 3 ft. deep. No keyboard. Plays 40 Spanish tunes with automatic mandolin attachment. Uses Seeburg or Clark rolls. Antique oak finish. Fine condition. $235.—L. A. Rear, 1103 Monterey Road, South Pasadena, Calif. n1024

FOR SALE: Erlich's Organ Discs. 12 discs about 13" dia. for rare Erlich Table Organ. Light operatic airs. Fine state. $12.—L. A. Rear, 1103 Monterey Road, South Pasadena, Calif. n1012

Exquisite Old Halet, Davis rosewood square grand with bellows attachment. Best offer takes.—Mueller, 1420 Chicago, Evanston, Ill. Greenleaf 9796. n1002

FOR SALE: Old Grand Piano, square type, rosewood material. Made by Boardman and Gray, Albany, New York, once owned by President Fillmore, also a pin with daughter's picture in, surrounded by 64 pearls, fastens with gold chain. Date on pin, 1851.—Mrs. Frank Potts, 516 Stoddard, East Lansing, Mich. n1053

REGINA MUSIC BOX, mahogany, with 20, 15½" disks, including Christmas selections $97. Upright Regina, 5 ft. high, mahogany set of 12, 27" discs $175. Serpentine shape, beautiful mahogany Regina with 12, 20½" discs.—Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. n1372

MUSIC BOX CYLINDERS entirely repinned; broken teeth replaced in combs; all repairs done by expert.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. n1161

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

The "Cheapest Talking Machine"

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

My being a writer about the pioneer days of the recording industry has caused me to receive a great many interesting questions concerning what might be termed "the odds and ends of the phonograph."

Among these questions are: "What was the largest record ever made?" and "What was the smallest?"

The largest records ever made for ordinary commercial sale appear to have been the products of Pathé Freres and the Neophone company. Pathé was originally a French firm with branches throughout the world, and Neophone was formed in England in 1904 by Dr. A. Michaelis, a Swiss scientist. It was in existence only a few years, but was the first company to make a hill-and-dale disc record to be played with a sapphire point. Pathé followed suit in 1906 with an improved record of the same type.

Both Neophone and Pathé made 20-inch discs, consisting of operatic arias or overtures. I have never seen any of these records, but since they were four inches larger in size than present-day 16-inch radio transcriptions they certainly must have had the appearance of giants. Because of their "coarse" cut, with the grooves much wider apart than in ordinary records, their playing duration was not in keeping with their size. It was, I believe, about ten minutes to a side.

The smallest records I know of that were made for ordinary sale were the Little Wonder single-faced variety, on the American market from 1915 to 1920. They were 5½ inches in diameter and were made by the Columbia company. I suspect they were dubbed from Columbia records, but their playing time was only about half that of a Columbia 10-inch disc, and their volume was considerably less. Names of the artists were not given on the tiny labels.

I believe Jack Norworth, the famous comedian and song writer and perhaps the nation's foremost collector of miniature objects, has a playable record of his song, "Shine On, Harvest Moon," made especially for him, which is only a half-inch in diameter. But that of course could not be considered in the class of records offered for public sale.

Many families used to pride themselves on owning a single-faced Victor record of the Lucia Sextette sung by Caruso and other famous artists. Since the disc cost $7, having it to show to astonished visitors was considered something of a mark of distinction. That may have been the most expensive single-faced record, but I believe Columbia for a brief time offered a double-faced one at $7.50. The Little Wonder records sold for ten cents, about as low a price as anyone could expect to pay, but in the early 1930's the Woolworth five-and-ten cent stores also sold double-faced Madison records,

WANTED

COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders
Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonofone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.

Lys Gauty singing Le quatorze Juillet
ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

West Falmouth, Massachusetts

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

MUSIC BOXES

all kinds

Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired
(Third generation in the music box business tfo)

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

World-Wide Record and Music Agency

143 E. Garfield Ave.,
Milwaukee 12, Wisconsin
COLLECTORS — RESEARCHERS
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC LABELS
CYLINDERS AND DISCS
OPERA — SPEECH — POPULAR

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

Extra Tune Sheets For Sale.
Parts and Repairs. tfo

NOW OFFERING FOR THE FIRST TIME IN
THIRTY YEARS NEW TUNES FOR THE 15½" REGINA MUSIC BOX.

"White Christmas," "Jingle Bells," "Noel,"
"Hark! The Herald Angels Sing,"
"Santa Claus is Coming to Town"
Price $3.00 each.

Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342

Hanover, Massachusetts

C. R. S.

Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and
speech records.

Records available through dealers or direct from us. If there is no dealer in your city.
Free mailing list of new issues. tfo

C. R. S.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave. New York 29, N. Y.

MUSIC BOXES

SPECIALIZING IN THE REPAIR OF MUSICAL
BOXES OF ALL TYPES, INCLUDING THE
REPAIR OF BIRD BOXES AND BIRD IN
CAGE PIECES, ETC.
Choice Music Boxes For Sale dp

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington, Rhode Island

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS
by great artists of the past can be bought at
YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All
bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price
of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

SINGLE RARITIES AND ENTIRE COLLECTIONS
— PURCHASED —

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

1135 du Pont Building, Miami 32, Fla. tfo

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

Edison

DIAMOND DISC OPERATIC SELECTIONS

WOODYMAY RECORD CO. tfo
73 Roxbury Street, Boston 19, Mass.

made by the Grey Gull company, for a dime.

The most expensive acoustic phonograph ever produced for sale by dealers probably was a "Gothic" model of the New Edison Diamond Disc, which was listed in a 1920 Edison catalogue. To obtain one you were asked to pay a mere $6,000. I have never seen one of these extraordinary instruments, but judging from the picture it must have been about the size of an ordinary house.

And, by a process of reversion, that brings up the question, "What was the cheapest phonograph?" and leads us to the subject of the present article.

Not long ago, William A. Dyer, Jr., general manager of the Indianapolis Star, was looking through files of old correspondence, when he came upon a letter which had been written to the Star on May 28, 1915, by the Excello Novelty Company, Inc., "manufacturers of advertising novelties, toys, metal specialties, etc., 1427 to 1433 Catherine Street, Philadelphia, Pa."

The letter suggested that the Star might be interested in obtaining a supply of the firm's Excello Talking Machine, "described in the enclosed circular," for distribution as a premium with subscriptions. The price was given as 65 cents each, F. O. B. Philadelphia.

Thinking I would be interested in this glimpse of one phase of the phonograph's picturesque past, Mr. Dyer sent me the circular, which is reproduced herewith. On the margin of the letter from the Excello company, someone had written: "Mr. Payne: It looks like a fake to me. Did you ever see one?"

As it happened, this device, which came close to being the least expensive phonograph ever made, was not a fake. It was one of several machines of similar type then being produced in and around Philadelphia, and possibly all being made in the same factory. About a year ago I had an opportunity of examining bound volumes of the Philadelphia Press for 1915 and 1916, and found a large number of advertisements of "talking machines" of this kind.

There was something of a price war going on while the sale of the toy instruments lasted. This same Excello machine was being advertised for 50 cents plus 15 cents for postage — a better price than the "65 cents F. O. B. Philadelphia," which had been quoted to the Star.

A phonograph was being offered at the same price by the Standard Talking Machine Company, of 845 Broad street, Newark, while the Manifone Talking Machine company, of 434 Market street, Philadelphia, wanted $1 for one. If you were ambitious to get up into the "higher brackets," the Concertphone Talking Machine company, 134 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, would sell you one for $6, described as "the lowest-priced talking machine with high quality tone," and as being the equal of instruments exorbitantly priced at from $15 to $25. You also could pay $6 for a record player from the Lincoln Talking Machine company, of Pleasantville, N. J. The advertisers boasted it was capable of playing a 12-inch record without rewinding.

The American talking machine, offered by the Husted Manufacturing company, of 1039 South Seventeenth Street, Philadelphia, was in the same price range as the Excello, but the real rock-bottom price must have been offered by the Ford Talking Machine company, of 2805 Germantown, Philadelphia, whose price was only 45 cents plus 15 cents postage. Surely, no one could expect to buy a good "graphophone" for much less than that. Anybody who would have balked at that price probably would have objected to paying one cent a share for stock of the Amalgamated Oil company, of Oklahoma City, which was running some fervent full-page ads in the Press!

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 36)

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap12086

FOR SALE. Certified old violins. $65 up. Desc. catalog with article on "The Last of the Cremonas" will be sent postpaid for $1. — Berger, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124261

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. my6698

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f123001

RARE AND OLD operatics and other acoustic and electrical out-of-print classical vocals and instrumentals bought, sold exchanged.—The Record Hunter, 1194 Lexington Ave., (81st), New York 28, N. Y. mh126371

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. au128711

RECORD COLLECTORS: Rare operatic, vocal, classical for sale reasonably priced. Send want lists. Cylinders, jazz, popular.—Delano, 349 Lindenwood Ambler, Penna. mh6885

PHONOGRAPH Records cheap. Catalog.—Paramount, HB-313 East Market, Wilkes-Barre, Penna. d3041

SPECIAL OFFER—Eleven 10" John McCormack records $15.—Franklin, 14 Beverly Place, Little Rock, Ark. d1501

ACOUSTIC vocal operatic records for sale at set and reasonable prices. For lists write.—Milt Weiss, 715 Dickinson, Memphis, Tenn. ja3082

MISCELLANEOUS

MUSIC BOXES: Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. d3463

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Cal. d3832

LESSER MASTERS With Tone. Inexpensive and tonally good hand-made fiddles. Books on the violin invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship. Antique musical instruments. Lists free.—Houghton Music Co., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. s124812

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342, f128782

BACK POPULAR MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Rags, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, H-3151 High., Denver 5, Colo. my12048

WANTED: Old phonographs, cylinder records, music boxes, discs, parts. Catalogs and other books on same.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. je120011

COLLECTORS' Recordings obtainable.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Avenue, New York City. je12276

SHEET MUSIC with color covers: "The Bloomer Schottisch," 1851, Sarony & Major, pretty woman demonstrating bloomer costume, $4.50. "Pride Polka," 1850, Sarony & Co., with beautiful peacock on a wall $2.50; "Hook & Ladder Polka," Duval's Steam Press, 1852, colored picture "Empire" hook & ladder truck with firemen, mended tear across lower part of cover $2.25. "Three Polkas," B. W. Thayer & Co., picture young man and woman and little girl, undated $1.90. "Fast Young Folks Schottische," Sinclair Litho., 1866, young couple driving "spanking" team fast $2.50. Concert Roller Organ, fine tone, nice case, played with hand crank, perfect condition, 29 music rolls $35.—Elizabeth Farrington, Greenlawn Antiques, Delhi, N. Y. d3077

FOR SALE: Rare Old Violin, Collector's item. Russian model, labeled Nikolaus Kittle, St. Petersburg 1867. $75.—Ernest A. Frier, 12 Lyon Ave., Menands, Albany, New York. d1571

CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, parts, bought, sold, exchanged. 50 cents for list. Returnable on first order.—A. Nugent, Jr., 100 N. Third St., Richmond, Va. f3463

OLD MUSIC BOX Melodies now reproduced on standard modern phonograph records. New Christmas album RB 4 containing 2 plastic records (4 sides) now ready $3.50.—Bornard Music Box Record Co., 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. d1542

WANTED. Music boxes, singing birds, and other musical mechanical items for my collection. Also interested in rare or historical phonograph records. Describe completely and state price.—Urban Thielmann, 3001 Queensbury Drive, Los Angeles 34, California. f3094

CHARTOLA GRAND (Mandolin-Guitar) complete with Zitherhammer and Zither ring, self-instructor lesson book and over 150 self-instructive sheets of popular music. Original price of instrument, $30.00. Like new. Best offer takes it.—Kathryn's Kurios, Canton, Mo. d1052

SWISS MUSICAL Units $3.50 postpaid. New! Musical Wedding, Baby Albums. Music Boxes.—Novelties of Distinction, 131 W. 42nd, New York 18, N. Y. f3082

26" AUTOMATIC Changer Regina Music box, perfect $275; Swiss music box with organ, perf. except governor needs adjusting $150; large singing bird, perfect $100; small singing bird $135, perfect; two singing birds in cage, perfect $155; singing bird in small box, "toroise shell," this is like new $200; 400-day clock $60; unusual (automaton) midget of man setting at table, eye brows, eyes and lips move while his arms pour a drink in glass and he drinks. Without motor; 1/20th h. p. Wig and clothing in bad shape, but perfect mechanically. Made in France $45.00.—B. L. Williams, 700 E. Woodbine, Chevy Chase, Md. d1657

REGINA MUSIC BOXES with 15 1/2" discs, $75 to $200. Regina 27" discs, $3 ea. Musical child's chair, black walnut with satinwood inlay, two tunes, $75.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. d1832

CYLINDER RECORDS;

DIAMOND DISCS.

OPERATIC, POPULAR. MACHINES.

R. L. POLEY

dp

1124 S. University, Denver 10, Colo.

BISQUE HEAD DOLL, brown stationery eyes, closed mouth, small waisted kid body, 21" tall $27.50. Black china head, 6" shoulders, good old hairdo, shoulder expertly restored $15. 24" Ball jointed Floradora, fair $6. 20" black haired china, original clothes, china hands and feet $20. Bonnet doll head, write. Many others. Stamp please. Trans. extra.—Mrs. Harry Bowlin, 707-24th St., South Bend 15, Indiana. d1144

COLLECTION Class Dolls of all types. Send stamp for list. Will buy small collections.—Mrs. Lloyd Hollister, 285 Goshen Rd., North Little Rock, Arkansas. f3043

DOLL COSTUMES and bodies made to order. Stamp for reply. — Olive Kline, Box 21, Farina, Ill. my6844

XMAS GIFT Suggestion—Lobster claw made into head of various characters. Hang in playroom or children's room. 50c each. — Ericko, West Springfield, Mass. d1161

DANISH NATIONAL and Character Dolls. Authentic, made in Denmark. Price $5 to $7 each. Stamp for reply.—The Wayside Shop, 167 Purchase St., Rye, N. Y. d1071

DOLL STANDS. Send for descriptive circular of a complete new line of doll stands.—Ideal Doll Stand Co., P. O. Box 194, Mound, Minn. dx

Famous Berwyn Doll Collector's Collection of American and Foreign Dolls.—Koepeke, 1824 So. Ridgeland, Berwyn, Ill. d1061

THE DOLL LADY, Reed City, Mich. Cuts patterns for any type costume, any period. Also costumes all types of dolls and makes old fashioned hats & accessories. Books on dolls, all kinds of dolls for sale. Stamp please. d1662

PEDDLER DOLLS AGAIN! Those appealing old lady dolls, 8½" tall, tray full of miniature household needs more interesting and detailed than ever. Description on request. Stand included, $5 postpaid.—Madelon Lyle, 521 Giffin Ave., Pittsburgh 10, Pa. f3003

LOVELY BISQUE HEAD restrung, jointed dolls. Some with new wigs. Several kid body dolls. One very large one. Most need only dresses. State needs. Stamp.—Lucille Manchester, 188 W. Genesee, Auburn, N. Y. d1422

DOLLS—All kinds, $2 to $300. Write desires. Also doll stands and books on dolls.—Claudia Davenport, Monroe City, Missouri. d1041

12½", BISQUE HEAD, sleeps, imitation kid jointed body, new dressmaker clothes, $12.—Mrs. Lovett, McPherson, Kansas. d1201

S-A-R-O-F-F

"THE MOST UNUSUAL DOLLS IN AMERICA" For December we offer our Russia Ballet Doll, ANNA PAVLOVA in her Swan costume. White spangled feathers, etc., 10". Mounted $3.00. From Peru an imported doll. Native hand made, male or female, 11" tall. Hand-loomed fabric costumed, embroidered, $5.00. dc

Write for catalogue of Saroff and Imported Dolls.

S-A-R-O-F-F

2014 No. Eleventh St., St. Louis 6, Missouri

Creche figures in the Thayer collection

NEW DOLLS by Anne Helm. I am back again with handmade dolls entirely unlike my pre-war dolls. You will love them. Write for descriptive list.—Anne Helm, 2518 Trenton, Joplin, Mo. dp1422

For Sale: Two Schoenhut dolls.—Nina B. Shepard, Granville, O. d107

DOLL COLLECTORS. 10-piece doll coffee ser. in wood. Artistic Poker painting dec. $7.—Rudolf Loos, (15) Geschwenda, Thuringia, Germany. ja3082

Pioneer Recording Artists

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 32)

Some years ago, I knew a man who had bought and kept one of the Excello machines. He let me try it, and the results were surprisingly good, chiefly because the construction was scientifically correct, with the cardboard horn fitting directly into the sound box. This was the principal of the first Victor instruments, which some old-timers insist were among the best acoustic phonographs ever produced. There was no mainspring to wind, and it required a certain knack to turn the crank, protruding through the spindle hole, so that the music came out steadily and not in jerks. But once this was done the results were not at all bad. In fact, the Excello sounded so much better than a $50 machine with internal horn which we played beside it that there was really no comparison.

Maybe the Star would have done well to offer it as a subscription premium, after all.

DOLLS FROM SWITZERLAND

HAND CARVED WOOD — MEN AND WOMEN

Jointed at Shoulder, Elbow, Hip, and Knee.

Authentically Dressed. All Swiss Cantons. Approx. 12" Tall.

$13.50 Each — $25.00 Pair

EVANRUDE DOLLS

574 Bergen Avenue, Jersey City 4, N. J.

money refunded for any reason within 5 days.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

John Bieling Gives Another Party

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

A year ago I told readers of HOBBIES about a party which John Bieling gave for a few of his fellow recording artists and record collector friends at his home in Hempstead, Long Island. Now I have the pleasure of reporting my latest trip to New York, in September, which was featured by an even bigger and better party given by John, with the sympathetic and generous cooperation of Mrs. Bieling and the entire Bieling family. I shall also touch briefly upon my other activities during that never to be forgotten week.

Leaving Roanoke, Virginia, on the evening of Saturday, September 6th, I arrived in Newark early the next morning and went straight to Orange, N. J. After a few hours sleep in my suburban hotel room, I called on Mrs. Elizabeth Repelow, daughter of the late Frank C. Stanley, one of the best loved of all the pioneer recording artists, at her apartment in West Orange. Her sister, Mrs. Elaine Powell, was also present, as were Mr. Repelow and Mr. and Mrs. Repelow's daughter. They told me many interesting things about their father, to be used in a Frank Stanley series which will appear in HOBBIES. They also gave me a handsome poster of pictures of old-time Victor Red Seal artists, which had once belonged to their father; a booklet listing the program of the concert which other recording artists presented as a tribute to him shortly after his death; sheet music which had belonged to his recording associates, Corinne Morgan and George Seymour Lenox; and a blotter with the signatures of Thomas A. Edison and the inventor's son Charles, formerly governor of Jersey.

That evening I had a most pleasant visit with Mrs. Ethel Van Horn Harlan, widow of Byron G. Harlan, one of the most famous of all old-time recording artists. Mrs. Harlan was a 19-year-old school teacher when she first met Mr. Harlan in an Orange boarding house. She recalled that when she entered the dining room she tripped and fell flat, and the comedian ever afterwards maintained that she fell hard for him the first time she saw him! They were married on June 22, 1904, with Mrs. Harlan believing that her husband was ten years older than she. Afterwards she learned that he was born in Paris, Kansas, on August 29, 1861, and was really twenty years her senior. Mr. Edison gave them a handsome Edison cylinder phonograph for a wedding present, and when their daughter was graduated from high school he signaled the occasion by presenting her with a New Edison Diamond Disc instrument.

Mrs. Harlan was the first woman in the United States to be the president of a city board of education. I saw a silver trowel which read: "This trowel was used by Mrs. Byron

G. Harlan in laying the corner stone of the high school building on Northfield road, West Orange, October 20, 1923." She was also secretary and vice president of the West Orange Community League, of which Mrs. Edison was president. During the war Mrs. Harlan was State director (for New Jersey) of the Office of Government Reports, originally called the National Emergency Council, which developed into the Office of War Information.

Most of Monday was spent at the Edison laboratories in West Orange, New Jersey, where Norman Speiden, the curator, and "Bill" Hayes, manager of the repair department, most painstakingly made sure that I saw everything of interest. I also had a half-hour chat with Arthur L. Walsh, former senator from New Jersey, the vice president of Thomas A. Edison, Inc. We are not related, but that doesn't keep us from calling each other "Cousin Arthur" and "Cousin Ulysses." I had lunch with Mr. Speiden and two Edison veterans — Andy Weber and "Skeets" Warner. Mr. Warner got his nickname from the fact that he used to make moving pictures of the private lives of mosquitoes, in furtherance of one of Mr. Edison's experiments.

I left Orange late Monday afternoon and went to Hempstead, where I had a happy reunion with Bryant Burke, who had obtained a room for me, and all the Bieling family. Tuesday was mostly devoted to my being interviewed by a staff writer for the New Yorker magazine, in the expectation that an article will be published about me and my record collecting activities.

Wednesday, September 10th, was the date of John Bieling's party, and, aside from being extremely warm, it was a perfect day for the occasion. Early in the morning the Hempstead radio station, WHLI, carried a news announcement that John was having a party for his fellow recording artists, and our host was so exhilarated he danced a brief jig! Before long the artists and collectors began arriving. Billy Murray came, then Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Rose, Will Oakland, Irving Kaufman and Walter Scanlan — whom you may know better as Walter Van Brunt. Harvey Hindermeyer wasn't able to make it until late in the afternoon, but spent the evening. John Young (Harry Anthony) had planned to be present but was detained at the last moment. Charles Harrison would have joined us, but wasn't sure of the day the party was to be given.

What a wonderful time the gang had, listening to old discs and cylinders by the distinguished artists who were there in the flesh, or dividing into small groups and "talking up a storm." The Edison Company sent over Fred Rabenstein, who used to write the artists' talent checks, to extend greetings and distribute medals recently struck, commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the immortal inventor. I had charge of the publicity and was kept busy giving information to reporters and photographers. The New Yorker staff writer joined us for two or three hours and seemed to have a great time.

And what a wonderful meal it was that Mrs. Bieling and the other ladies of the family prepared for the thirty or more friends who enjoyed their hospitality! I don't know words strong enough to express my appreciation of the trouble and hard work they went to in making certain that everybody had plenty of the most delicious foods.

We all agreed that a similar event — which I think, adopting a suggestion of John L. Norton, Sr., should be called "John Bieling Day" — must be held every year. At the same time, it's obvious that the party has outgrown the stage of being held in a home — not to mention the great amount of trouble it necessarily must be to the Bieling family. Mr. Speiden, the Edison curator, has indicated that we would be welcome to get together annually in the Edison laboratory. There is also sentiment for holding the get-together in a hotel on Long Island and pro rating the expense of obtaining a room and a meal, so that the cost will be slight for everybody concerned. I personally favor a two-day meeting, which would provide a greater opportunity for having good long talks with all the artists whom we admire so much, and their collector admirers. There is also talk of forming an association of artists and collectors. At any rate, I want to assure the readers of HOBBIES that admirers of the Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists will be welcomed at the next meeting, whenever and wherever it is held, and that further information concerning our plans will be given here. We are trying to "round up" a much larger number of pioneers to be on hand for the fun next year. For instance, I have just learned that John Hazel, who played the cornet many years ago in the Edison orchestra, is now living in Monsourville, Pa., and have written to him. I have also written to Fred Van Eps and Fred Hager and shall try to get in touch, through theatrical magazines and correspondence with many others.

But, above all things, we must never forget that John Bieling originated the idea of having an annual party, and that if others are held, arrangements should be made for him and his family to attend as honor guests!

The remainder of my trip must be briefly summarized. On Thursday I went back to Orange, accompanied by George Bieling (John's son, and one of the most thoughtful and considerate sons any father ever had); John Norton, senior and junior, of the famous Woodmay Record Company in Boston, and Quentin Riggs, a 17-year old record collector who came by plane from Oklahoma City to meet the artists whom he so deeply admires. Again there was a wonderful trip through the Edison laboratories. After parting from George and the two Johns, Quentin and I called on Mrs. Harlan.

Old Time Recording Artists Get Together

Five famous recording artists sing with an Edison cylinder phonograph at John Bieling's party. Left to right: Mr. Bieling, Walter Scanlan, Will Oakland and Billy Murray. In front of machine, Irving Kaufman.

On the wall is an 1896 photograph of the Edison quartet: John Bieling, first tenor; Jerry Mahoney, second tenor; S. H. Dudley, baritone, and William F. Hooley, bass.

On Friday, Quentin and I met Abel Green, the editor of Variety, at his office. We also had a talk with Joe Laurie, Jr., at the Lambs, and regretfully declined an invitation to attend his "Can You Top This?" radio program the next night. After lunch at Lindy's with Irving Kaufman and Irving's lovely blonde wife, Belle, we took a Fifth Avenue bus to East 66th street in the hope of finding P. G. Wodehouse, the famous English humorist and creator of "Jeeves," at home. He wasn't, but we had a most enjoyable meeting with Mrs. Wodehouse. That night we went to Brooklyn and were guests of Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Odell, who have more than nine thousand cylinder records — some so old they completely baffle me — and a score or more of cylinder phonographs.

Saturday was marked by lunch at Lindy's with Billy Murray, Jimmy Martindale and Mr. Wodehouse. That afternoon, Quentin and I went to Joe Belmont's bird store in Radio City and had a long talk with the genial Joe, who began making whistling records in 1894. He'll be at the party next year. In the evening, we visited Mr. and Mrs. Walter Scanlan, but left early enough to get back to Hempstead and spend a couple of hours with John. The next day we left for our homes — Quentin by plane and I by train.

Truly, a wonderful and memorable trip! I'm hoping for another like it in September, 1948.

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap12086

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. my6698

PHONOGRAPH Records bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f128001

RARE AND OLD operatics and other acoustic and electrical out-of-print classical vocals and instrumentals bought, sold exchanged. — The Record Hunter, 1194 Lexington Ave., (81st), New York 28, N. Y. mh126371

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. au128711

RECORD COLLECTORS: Rare operatic, vocal, classical for sale reasonably priced. Send want lists. Cylinders, jazz, popular. — Delano, 349 Lindenwold Ambler, Penna. mh6885

REDUCED Price Sale—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City, N. Y. je12276

ACCOUSTIC vocal operatic records for sale at set and reasonable prices. For lists write. — Milt Weiss, 715 Dickinson, Memphis, Tenn. ja3082

WANTED — Classical vocal records, especially electric cut-outs. — Warren Becker, 1674 La Fayette Road, Los Angeles, Calif. ja189

MISCELLANEOUS

VARIOUS MUSIC BOX discs for sale. Harry Brody, 1972 72nd Street, Brooklyn, New York. f3691

SQUARE GRAND PIANO, beautiful rosewood case, excellent playing condition. Original ivory. Picture. — Mrs. Julius Kingdom, 819 Spruce Street, Boulder, Colo. f3803

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. 1 buy, sell, trade. — Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Cal. d3832

LESSER MASTERS With Tone. Inexpensive and tonally good hand-made fiddles. Books on the violin invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship. Antique musical instruments. Lists free. — Houghton Music Co., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. s124812

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items. — Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f128782

BACK POPULAR MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Rags, everything. List 10c—Fore's. H-3151 High., Denver 6, Colo. my12048

WANTED: Old phonographs, cylinder records, music boxes, discs, parts. Catalogs and other books on same. — Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. je120011

THE LAST of the Cremonas. Artistic brochure including thirty other violins and their makers, $1 postpaid. — Berger (Violin Connoisseur), 165 East Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124431

VIOLIN FOR SALE, Cremonatone No. G 1140, Stradivarius model, made in France, cost $207 in 1919 with bow and case. Price $300. — J. Thecla, 63 W. Ontario St., Chicago 10, Ill. Phone: Del. 6090 after 8 P. M. ja1132

CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, parts, bought, sold, exchanged 50 cents for list. Returnable on first order. — A. Nugent, Jr., 100 N. Third St., Richmond, Va. f3463

WANTED. Music boxes, singing birds, and other musical mechanical items for my collection. Also interested in rare or historical phonograph records. Describe completely and state price. — Urban Thielmann, 3001 Queensbury Drive, Los Angeles 34, California. f3094

SWISS MUSICAL Units $3.50 postpaid. New! Musical Wedding, Baby Albums. Music Boxes—Novelties of Distinction. 131 W. 42nd, New York 18, N. Y. f3082

WANTED Paillard Music Box Rolls, 17½" length, playing cylinder, 20½" overall with ends. Write—Maurice Buening, Red Lodge, Montana. ja1571

1895 EDISON Triumph Phonograph for sale, in excellent condition, with 200 old Edison records. Address—S. Feeley, 18 Winnemass St., Natick, Mass. ja1451

MUSIC BOXES: Regina, Mira, Criterion, Olympia, Capital. Large selection of Regina 27" and 15½" discs. Edison Diamond Disc, Victor, Columbia, Zonophone records, many operatic. Player and reproducing piano rolls. Beatty parlor organ. Stringed instruments. Novelty music boxes. Every inquiry answered. — Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. mh3686

Start HOME BUSINESS

Making Statuettes

You can easily start a home business of your own making statuettes, plaques, artificial marble flooring, liquid marble, flexible molds, metalizing baby shoes. Amazing profits.

Valuable folder FREE. d81c

CREATIVE PUBLISHERS

Box 236-N, Winnetka, 6, Ill.

IF YOU LOVE PETS

Whether it's cats, canaries, dogs, love birds, rabbits, fish or butterflies. You will find stories that you will enjoy and teach you more about these pets and how to care for them in the 68 pages and more monthly ALL-PETS MAGAZINE. $1.75 a year. Sample copy 25c. WRITE: mhx

18 Forest Ave., Fond du Lac 26, Wis.

November

EUGENIA MANTELLI:

Cenerentola — Naccqui all'affanne and Non piu mesta IRCC 3015.

AMADEO BASSI:

Fedora—Amor ti vieta and Siberia—T' incontrai. IRCC 3016.

CLAUDIA MUZIO:

Aida—O Patria mia and Otello—Ave Maria. IRCC 3019.

CORRECTION: The following record was erroneously omitted from the recent discography of the Mary Garden recordings compiled by Howard Barnes, Jr.: Columbia A-5289 Jongleur de Notre Dame — Liberte and Herodiade—Il est doux, il est bon.

(THE END)

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap12086

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. my6698

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. f128001

RARE AND OLD operatics and other acoustic and electrical out-of-print classical vocals and instrumentals bought, sold exchanged.—The Record Hunter, 1194 Lexington Ave., (81st), New York 28, N. Y. mh126371

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. au128711

RECORD COLLECTORS: Rare operatic, vocal, classical for sale reasonably priced. Send want lists. Cylinders, jazz, popular.—Delano, 349 Lindenwood Amler, Penna. mh5885

REDUCED Price Sale—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City, N. Y. je12276

EDISON RECORDS—2 minute, 4 minute, Blue Amberol, Discs. Good condition. $3 assorted lots of 12. Indicate preferences, comic songs, sketches, ballads, hymns, instrumentals, etc. Will follow when possible. Specified titles $1. Orders sent collect.—William Dyer, 401 Buckingham Drive, Indianapolis, Ind. f1782

MISCELLANEOUS

VARIOUS MUSIC BOX discs for sale. Harry Brody, 1972 72nd Street, Brooklyn, New York. f3691

SQUARE GRAND PIANO, beautiful rosewood case, excellent playing condition. Original ivory. Picture.—Mrs. Julius Kingdom, 819 Spruce Street, Boulder, Colo. f3803

LESSER MASTERS With Tone. Inexpensive and tonally good hand-made fiddles. Books on the violin invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship. Antique musical instruments. Lists free.—Houghton Music Co., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. s124812

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f128782

BACK POPULAR MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Rags, everything. List 10c.—Fore's H-3151 High., Denver 6, Colo. my12048

WANTED: Old phonographs, cylinder records, music boxes, discs, parts. Catalogs and other books on same.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. je120011

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

GILBERT GIRARD

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Taken as a whole, the pioneer recording artists were a colorful crew. And one of the most picturesque certainly was Gilbert Girard, who won wide popularity throughout the United States and the British Empire solely because of his ability to mimic the sounds made by wild and domestic animals and birds. This peculiar talent virtually gave Girard a niche of his own in the Phonograph Hall of Fame, since he had only one rival, the late Al S. Holt, who eventually went to England, where he died in 1924.

Two names that are almost impossible to keep out of any article dealing with the old-time recording days are those of Russell Hunting, "The Original Michael Casey," and Len Spencer, who had the greatest creative gifts of any recording artists of their time. Both will appear in this sketch. It was Hunting who first introduced Girard to the mysteries of recording as long ago as 1895, but it was some years later, as a partner of the ever-resourceful Len in making comic sketches, that he became best known.

Gilbert Girard was of French-Canadian descent, but was born about 80 years ago in San Francisco, where he spent his boyhood. As a youngster, he was fond of imitating the lowing of cows, neighing of horses and the cries and songs of birds. In fact, he could mimic anything. He also became locally well known as he grew up for having a fine baritone voice.

The details of Girard's early career are confusing, to say the least. Few men surely can have crowded so

THE LAST of the Cremonas. Booklet listing thirty violins and their makers. Postpaid $1.—Isador Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124431

CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, parts, bought, sold, exchanged. 50 cents for list. Returnable on first order.—A. Nugent, Jr., 100 N. Third St., Richmond, Va. f3463

WANTED. Music boxes, singing birds, and other musical mechanical items for my collection. Also interested in rare or historical phonograph records. Describe completely and state price.—Urban Thielmann, 3001 Queensbury Drive, Los Angeles 34, California. f3094

SWISS MUSICAL Units $3.50 postpaid. New! Musical Wedding, Baby Albums. Music Boxes.—Novelties of Distinction, 131 W. 42nd, New York 18, N. Y. f3082

MUSIC BOXES: Regina, Mira, Criterion, Olympia, Capital. Large selection of Regina 27" and 15½" discs. Edison Diamond Disc, Victor, Columbia, Zonophone records, many operatic. Player and reproducing piano rolls. Beatty parlor organ. Stringed instruments. Novelty music boxes. Every inquiry answered.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. mh3636

WANTED.—Phonograph Cylinders for my personal collection. Duplicates exchanged.—Ben Franklin, Haynesville, Va. Ap3361

Gilbert Girard, Paris, July 18, 1913

much into a few years. He got his start on the stage in San Francisco, acting in a melodrama. Engagements in musical comedy followed. Having now reached the mature age of twenty, he decided he was tired of the stage, so he went, looking for gold in the California mines. Not finding it, he returned to theatricals and became the partner of a once famous actor, McKee Rankin. A little later he was a trapeze performer in a circus, and after that he became a successful circus clown.

The lure of the gold fields beckoned again, but this time the versatile actor decided not to hunt for the metal himself but to take a theatrical troupe to Alaska. When the group arrived, they were told theirs was the first aggregation of entertainers to visit the frozen North. The trip was a huge success, financially, for the miners willingly paid from five to 25 dollars for tickets to the performances.

On returning to the United States, the restless but genial Gilbert went to Seattle, where he tried to operate a vaudeville theater but without success. So he quit the profession again and became a newsdealer. Of course he grew tired of that and returned to the show world. When the vaudeville performers staged their famous "White Rats" strike against theater owners and agents, Girard was one of the leaders. By this time he had not only long since made his first brown wax cylinders as a partner of Russell Hunting, but had teamed up with Len Spencer for a series of their well-remembered sketches. The most popular of these

WANTED

COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILIBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders
Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonofone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.
Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.
Lys Gauty singing Le quatorze Juillet
ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

317 W. 108th Street,
New York 25, N. Y.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS
by great artists of the past can be bought at
YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All
bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price
of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

SINGLE RARITIES AND ENTIRE COLLECTIONS
— PURCHASED —

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

1135 du Pont Building, Miami 32, Fla.
tfo

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 183 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to

Lightner Publishing Corp.

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

Edison

DIAMOND DISC OPERATIC SELECTIONS

WOODYMAY RECORD CO. tfo

73 Roxbury Street, Boston 19, Mass.

undoubtedly was "A Scene at a Dog Fight," which they made for all the phonograph companies in business around 1901 and 1902. This record was both remarkably popular and painfully realistic — so much that some phonograph owners drove their nervous neighbors well-nigh frantic by playing it over and over. Witness this heartbroken protest which one man wrote to a newspaper in 1905, after "Scene at a Dog Fight" had been on the market for several years:

"A dozen times a day a dog fight in its most realistic form is performed, apparently to the unalloyed delight of my neighbors. A hoarse-voiced 'tough' announces the terms of the fight in tones only possessed by the variety of mankind of which he is a representative. 'Stop that dog, please!' he calls out again and again, as his eloquence is interrupted by the barking and yelping of the dogs, and the crowd he is addressing yells its impatience for the fight to begin. At last the fight is on, and if you were actually assisting at it, in defiance of the penal code, you could hardly get a more realistic sense of the elevating amusement. The talking machine tells the whole story. If the dog fight was actually taking place on the lawn, and the refuse of humanity had gathered there to see it, the proceedings would hardly be more real than they seem in this machine reproduction. I have never had the privilege of witnessing a dog fight, but from repeated hearings of that phonograph I feel as if I had now subjected myself to criminal arrest for violating the law by sneaking into that sort of thing."

Concerning this pitiful complaint, the Talking Machine News, which reprinted the letter, remarked: "This, the well-known Dog Fight Record, used to be a very popular one and a great seller, and though its vogue has fallen off it is still in some demand in the States. Needless to say it is a 'faked' record: the doggy imitations are, however, extremely good."

Another highly popular sketch, written by Spencer, who did all the talking with Girard providing the animal imitations, was "Daybreak at Calamity Farm." Less known, but one of their most amusing, is Columbia single-faced disc No. 922, "Imitation Chinese Song," which Spencer and Girard made in 1902. They not only pretend to sing in Chinese, but Girard, assisted by the "house band," gives side-splitting imitations of a Chinese orchestra. But the most remarkable thing about the record is that Spencer, who makes the "Announcement," puts Girard's name ahead of his own!

"Michael Casey" Hunting had gone to England in 1899 and become recording manager for the Edison Bell company. Later he and Louis—now Sir Louis Sterling—organized the Russell Hunting Record Company and made Sterling cylinders. It was probably at "Casey's" suggestion that Girard went to England in 1902 and stayed there for five years. He soon became a favorite in the London variety halls, and his services were eagerly sought by the English record firms. He made some specialties for Nicole Freres, who turned out a reddish-brown semi-flexible cardboard record around 1903 and 1904, and also worked for the Gramophone Company and Edison Bell. Then he signed up exclusively with Russell Hunting to make Sterling cylinders and Odeon discs.

C. R. S.

Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and
speech records.

Records available through dealers or direct
from us if there is no dealer in your city.
Free mailing list of new issues. tfo

C. R. S.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave. New York 29, N. Y.

MADE TO ORDER ON
TRANSCRIPTIONS PROFESSIONAL RECORD-
ING MACHINE. YOUR IRREPLACABLE CYLIN-DER AND DISC RECORDS DUBBED ON LATERAL DISCS, AVOIDING BREAKAGE AND WEAR.

PATHE AND EDISON SAPPHIRE NEEDLES, ORIGINAL PATHE STOCK, SUITABLE FOR ELECTRIC OR ACOUS-TIC HILL AND DALE PICK-UPS,
GUARANTEED NEW.

$2.00 each, two for $3.50

Pathe classical records and catalogs wanted, will buy or exchange.

PROF. JAMISON R. HARRISON

Bedford,

Massachusetts tfo

MUSIC BOXES

From January 5th to March 31st I will not be available to answer any mail or do any work on music boxes, etc.
After April 1st I will again be at your service. mhp

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington, Rhode Island

MUSIC BOXES

all kinds

Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired

(Third generation in the music box business tfo)

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

Extra Tune Sheets For Sale.

Parts and Repairs. tfo

NOW OFFERING FOR THE FIRST TIME IN
THIRTY YEARS NEW TUNES FOR THE 15½" REGINA MUSIC BOX.

"White Christmas," "Jingle Bells," "Noel,"

"Hark! The Herald Angels Sing,"

"Santa Claus Is Coming to Town"

Price $3.00 each.

Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342

Hanover,

Massachusetts

While in England, he was a partner of the famous Australian comedian, Albert Whelan, who is still going strong, playing the variety theatres. They preceded the present-day vogue for children's records by making a series of nursery rhymes in which Girard delighted the tots with his animal imitations. And he really could imitate them! At some time during his crowded career, he made a tour of South Africa, and while he was staying in a hotel at Johannesburg he sat up one night, imitating the roars of a lion and scaring the other hotel residents into fits with the fear that a hungry Leo was camping just outside the front door.

That was characteristic of Girard's sense of fun. As Harry Hunting, "Casey's" son, commented to me: "That incident about Girard and the lion in Africa was typical of old Gil. Once I was riding with him in a bus. By ventriloquism, he had a dog yelping under the bus, as though it had been run over, and we were both amused, watching everyone (including Gil and myself) looking under the bus for the unfortunate canine. He was a clever entertainer and always very jolly, even though he suffered from some sort of a serious intestinal ailment, which might have been the cause of his death. He and my father were great pals."

Girard was also an accomplished linguist, with an excellent command of French and German. When the management of the Alhambra theater in London entertained the French fleet 40-odd years ago, the American comedian was engaged to impersonate the distinguished French clown, Pascal. His accent and mannerisms completely fooled everybody, including the sailors.

During Girard's stay abroad, the resourceful Mr. Spencer had called on Al Holt whenever he wanted to make a descriptive sketch, such as "The Barnyard Serenade." But Girard returned home in 1907, and the Edison record list in December of that year contained a cylinder of "Old Dog Sport" with the comment: "This descriptive recitation by Len Spencer, with farmyard and canine effects by Gilbert Girard, excellently recorded, is full of real kindly sentiment." The pair also recorded the saga of Sport for the other companies and did several more sketches together.

Then Girard disappeared again from the American phonograph picture. In 1913 he was in Paris with his friend, Hunting, who was by that time the recording manager for Pathé Freres. But with the outbreak of the World War he returned to the United States and reappeared in the Victor list in October, 1915, by doing the animal imitations in "Circus Day in Dixie," sung by the American Quartet. Len Spencer died in December, 1914, so Girard and Steve Porter teamed up to make a few of the old Spencer-Girard specialties, such as "The Dog Fight" and "Daybreak at Calamity Farm," for Edison's Diamond Discs. Russell Hunting was by this time recording director for Pathé's American branch. He and Girard worked together in a few records and revived the old Nursery Rhymes series.

In December, 1920, Victor listed a twelve-inch record by Girard: "Santa Claus Tells About His Toy Shop" and "Santa Claus Gives Away His Toys." The catalog editor commented: "Older Victrola lovers know Girard. He is coming back, full of Christmas cheer, after a long absence, for two of the most wonderful children's records ever made." A year later there was another twelve-inch record, "Santa Claus Visits the Children" and in December, 1922, a ten-inch disc was devoted to the two-parts of "Santa Claus Tells of Mother Goose Land" — a revamping of the old nursery rhymes idea.

The last record I have been able to find in which Girard took part is a fox-trot, "The Duck's Quack," recorded by Edison in 1923, with the comedian impersonating — what the title would suggest. I have been told that he spent his later years in retirement on a farm in upstate New York.

Just when Gilbert Girard died I don't know. I am not even absolutely certain that he has passed on, but Harry Hunting says he has heard from several sources that his father's old friend is gone. At any rate, he was a most talented impersonator — and I think there can be no doubt that the handsome, black-haired actor, who parted his hair in the middle and let a "bang" droop down above one eye, was a most colorful character!

—O—

THE SIREN

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 26)

galia of the knights, incrusting liturgical bibelots — all gold. Sometimes the gold stands alone; sometimes it is smothered in jewels.

The Cleveland Museum gathered the 300 objects from institutions and collectors of America and Canada, but their origins take one to much more remote places, and to times before the memory of man.

The Siren, attributed to Benvenuto Cellini, was given by a Medici prince to an Indian Mughal Emperor. Captured in the Indian Mutiny of 1857, for years it was in the Rothschild family. A Latin motto on the Siren's tail says "Deceiveth Both Aspect and Soul of the Siren".

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

MELODEONS for sale. Both octagon leg and folding melodeons, all in good playing condition. Descriptions and prices sent on request. Also melodeons, repaired.—Joseph Leighton, 2626 Westfield St., W. Springfield, Mass. f2604

REFERENCE DIRECTORY

$9 a year for three lines

ADVERTISING CARDS

Mary Moore, 32 Gothic St., Northampton, Mass. Buys Advertising Cards of the 80's. Sells Lists to Collectors. 25c each. j684

APPRAISERS

Send to Clark L. Bennett & Associates, Citizens Bldg., Lima O., for value, age and potter of your antique porcelains $1.50 per item. (Also quantity rates.) ap84

AUTOGRAPHS

Rooney, James J. 101-32 116th St., Richmond Hill, L. I., N. Y. Autographs for sale. Musical, literary, theatrical, historical. Bargains! Lists, 3c stamp d74

BUTTONS

Wasson, H. G., Jr., 435 Sixth Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa. Buys presidential campaign medals, ribbons, ferrotypes and celluloid Buttons. ap84

BOTTLES

Gardner, Chas. B., Box 27, New London, Conn. Buy flasks, documents, advertisements and pictures from Early American Glass Works. my84

CIGAR BANDS

International Cigar Band Society, Arthur Abraham, Pub. and Adv. 639 W. 204th St., New York 24, N. Y. ap84

CIGARETTE CARDS

George Goudle, 1712 Main St., Kans. City, Mo. I buy cigarette cards and other advertising items. You will find same in old trunks, attics, storerooms. ap84

DOLLS

Handicraft Shop, 517½ N. Dewey St. North Platte, Neb. Historical and Fictional dolls with portrait heads. Beautifully costumed. Write for price list. n84

MISCELLANEOUS

Old Curiosity Shop, Mabel Orr, 1029 Robson St., Vancouver, B. C. A collector's Paradise. Visit us. ap84

NUMISMATICS

Max B. Mehl, 421 Mehl Bldg., Fort Worth, Tex. Largest coin firm in U.S. Est. 41 yrs. Everything in coins, etc. Send for free 60 pp. Ill. Coin Cat. You'll like it! ja84

RAILROADS

O. Davies, 1702 N. Wells, Chicago 14 buys R.R. time tables, histories, pamphlets, locomotive catalogs, etc. n84

SAVE YOUR HOBBIES

The wealth of information contained in every issue of HOBBIES is too valuable to be thrown around with the consequent danger of loss. This binder is covered with buckram, with the title printed in gold. Its appearance will compare favorably with the handsomest bound books in your library. It will be sent to you postpaid on receipt of $2.50 with a guarantee of perfect satisfaction or money refunded.

Holds 12 Issues

HOBBIES MAGAZINE

2810 SOUTH MICHIGAN AVENUE
CHICAGO 16, ILLINOIS

World-Wide Record and Music Agency

143 E. Garfield Ave.,
Milwaukee 12, Wisconsin
COLLECTORS — RESEARCHERS
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC LABELS
CYLINDERS AND DISCS
OPERA — SPEECH — POPULAR

do not think of her as a Carmen, her singing of the two arias (in German, by the way) reveals understanding and temperament. Excellent.

To son l'umile uncetta is an exceptionally lovely aria and one not sung as often as it deserves to be. Kruseniski sings it very well, but even so she does not efface the memory of Claudia Muzio's melting performance on an Edison disc that also ought to be re-issued. Poveri fiori is a less appealing bit of music, but the Russian soprano delivers it in the emotional style of a born Italian. Kruseniski was a fine artist whose records are rather rare.

As recorded, Burzio's soprano was expressive, but shrill at times. Her discs display much of the temperament and extreme emotion for which she was famous. She must have been an unusually dramatic Desdemona, judging from these samples which I would like more if the singing were sweeter-toned.

A grand basso was Arimondi, big in body, voice and style. The Porter Song discloses his brilliant tones at their best; certainly it is one of his most successful records. His conception of Mephisto's Serenade is effective and forceful, in a tradition very different from that followed by Plancon and Journet, but striking in its own way.

Didur is thrilling. A great voice and a wonderfully vital and dramatic way of singing; his personality emerges vividly, too. These Freischütz arias are relatively unfamiliar and worth knowing, especially as sung in this highly enjoyable recording.

Bassi, I am told, was a pleasing singer. But vocal charm is just what I find most lacking in the few records of his that I have heard, and this one is no exception. Amor ti vieta must be sung with a melting voice and I'm sorry to report that Bassi's doesn't melt me. The brief Siberia excerpt is not particularly effective as heard here.

—O—

Missing Zonophone Numbers

If you have any domestic Zonophone records with the following numbers, would you please list for me name of artist and selection?

11010	11015
11011	12589
12619

These numbers in all probability should belong to recordings by Eugenia Mantelli as yet unlisted, but they may possibly belong to the baritone Taurino Parvis. In any case, if you have a Zonophone record bearing any of these numbers, please do not keep quiet about it!

World-Wide Record and Music Agency

143 E. Garfield Ave.,
Milwaukee 12, Wisconsin
COLLECTORS — RESEARCHERS
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC LABELS
CYLINDERS AND DISCS
OPERA — SPEECH — POPULAR etc.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

JOE BELMONT, "The Human Bird"

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

If the name at the head of this article were Joseph Walter Fulton, it probably would mean nothing to most readers of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists. Yet that is the real name of an accomplished artist whose recording experience probably goes back as far as that of any other man alive, and who is the best known performer who ever won phonograph popularity by making brilliant whistling solos that usually included imitations of bird warblers. In fact, he was frequently called "The Human Bird."

Thousands of collectors of early cylinders and discs think of the subject of this month's sketch as Joe Belmont, and that is what he calls himself. His son, Walter Joseph — Not Joseph Walter! — who helps his father operate a bird store in Radio City, also uses the name of Belmont. But the world-famous whistler was given the name of Joseph Walter Fulton when he was born in Shamokin, Pennsylvania, on July 22, 1876. He simply took the name of Belmont for stage purposes and has used it ever since, both in the theatre and in business.

If you were to do as Quentin Riggs, the Oklahoma City boy, and I did in September, 1947, after we attended John Bieling's party for his fellow veteran recording artists, you would enter Rockefeller Center and wander wearily around for an hour or more until you finally found the Belmont Bird and kennel shop in the concourse of Radio City. Then, if you had the good luck we did, you would enter the store and find, facing you across the counter, a tall, slender, courteous gentleman, with an alert but kindly look, whose youthful bearing makes him appear to carry far less than the weight of his actual years. You would find him so friendly and so full of valuable reminiscences that you probably would term him, as Quentin and I did, one of the nicest persons you'd met during your stay in New York.

Thumbing through the little green notebook in which I hastily scribbled while we were talking with Joe, I find that he told us his parents moved when he was eight from Shamokin to Charlestown (not Charleston), West Virginia, and that it was while living there that he learned to play the piano and to whistle and imitate birds. Young Mr. Fulton was 16 when, as he says, "A man came along and heard me whistling and playing the piano. He got me started on the stage."

Two years later — in 1894, when Joseph W. Fulton had faded out in favor of Joe Belmont — the young whistling virtuoso made his first records for the old Columbia company, which then had its headquarters in Washington. He was not the first performer to make whistling solos. That distinction probably goes to John York Attlee, a Federal government employee, who began making Columbia cylinders in his spare time at home in 1889 or 1890. George Washington Johnson, "the Whistling Coon," also may have been making records by the time Belmont started. Probably Billy Golden, the black-faced comedian, who was also a brilliant whistler, had already begun. But Joe Belmont's fame as a whistler soon overshadowed that of anybody else. He worked for the various companies as they came into existence — during his entire career he sang and whistled for at least 42 recording firms — and was soon particularly famous for his "Mocking Bird" specialty. Joe says, though, that by far the biggest selling record he ever made was his own composition, "Beautiful Birds, Sing On."

By 1900, Belmont was established as one of the most popular of all recording artists. Since he was neither a "straight" singer nor an instrumentalist, his records were classified in a niche of their own. In that year, the Edison company had a group photograph made of 42 of its popular artists (it was reproduced in one of the 1944 issues of Hobbies), and Joe Belmont is labeled No. 1. He is shown wearing a mustache, which makes him look much older than the 24 that he actually was. He soon got rid of the mustache, he says, and has never worn one since. Of all the persons shown in that group photo, I know of only two besides Belmont who are alive as I write. They are John Bieling and Fred Hager. Some of the more obscure performers may still be alive but have dropped out of sight.

It probably will be news to most admirers of Joe Belmont that he was the baritone of the original Columbia Quartette. The group consisted, in addition to Belmont, of Albert Campbell, Jim Reynard and Joe Majors. And one thing in which the genial Joe takes pride is the fact that he spotted young Harry McClaskey — better known to collectors as Henry Burr — as a potential recording star.

"Back in 1902," Joe says, "I was in the old Columbia building at Twenty-seventh and Broadway, talking with George Emerson, one of the recording managers. It was a Saturday afternoon, and George was about ready to go home. While we talked, in walked a stout young fellow with red cheeks, who asked if some test records he had made a few days before had been listened to. After he went out, I told Emerson that he should add young McClaskey to the Columbia Lists — that he had an excellent voice and would be particularly good at singing hymns. Emerson tried the records over, agreed with me, put the boy — he was not over 20 — to work, making cylinders and discs of hymns — and that was how 'Henry Burr' got his start. Of course, he later became the most popular ballad singer the phono-

WANTED

COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

Edison Grand Opera Cylinders
Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonofone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.
Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophones by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40076.
Lys Gauty singing Le quatorze Juillet
ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

317 W. 108th Street,
New York 25, N. Y.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS
by great artists of the past can be bought at
YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All
bidders receive Free of Charge the selling price
of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

SINGLE RARITIES AND ENTIRE COLLECTIONS
— PURCHASED —

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

1135 du Pont Building, Miami 32, Fla.
tfo

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Masoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

Edison

DIAMOND DISC OPERATIC SELECTIONS

WOODYMAY RECORD CO. tfo

73 Roxbury Street, Boston 19, Mass.

graph has ever known." And, Joe said, Burr was made second tenor of the Columbia Quartet, in the place of Reynard, who was an employee of the Columbia company.

Mr. Belmont is so full of fascinating reminiscences that it took a real effort of the will for Quentin and me to tear ourselves away, after we had made an unsuccessful effort to take some snapshots of him. He told us, for instance, that Harry Spencer, brother of the famous Len Spencer, was living in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, about twenty years ago, and was working as a train announcer. Joe wasn't sure whether Spencer, who made some records, including "The Mad Ravings of John McCullough," is still alive. He mentioned, too, that Will F. Denny, a once popular recording comedian, died at the end of a performance in a Seattle, Washington, theatre. Denny bowed to his audience, walked off stage and dropped dead.

He also told us that a briefly popular male quartet some 40-odd years ago was the Big Four, composed of Arthur Collins, Byron Harlan, A. D. Madeira and Joe Natus. Madeira was a native of Minneapolis, Minnesota. George Gaskin, we learned, was a native of Ireland. And a very rare record that certainly would be worth having was one of "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden," made for Columbia by Belmont, Harlan, Frank C. Stanley and the three original Florida Girls. Joe likewise recalled that he, Harlan, Campbell and Dan W. Quinn worked on top of a 15 or 16-story building, making a record and movie of "Massa's in de Cold, Cold Ground," which was shown in Keith vaudeville theatres as one of the pioneer talking picture efforts. One of his favorite later records, "Whistle While You Walk," was written by Belmont after he and Billy Murray were walking along Broadway together, and Billy began softly whistling to himself. Their singing and whistling duet was a big hit when Victor issued it in 1915.

Besides making records in a phonograph career that extended over more than thirty years, Joe Belmont has appeared on the stage in virtually every country in the world — "everywhere," he says, "from the Fiji Islands to Australia." He spent several years in Europe and made many records for English and German companies. In 1908 he made ten records at one session for the Favorite company, one of the many German organizations that tried to capture the British record market prior to the first World war. He did this after the manager, whose name he doesn't recall, but who was probably Karl Harth, had agreed to pay him thirty guineas for the day's work. At first the German said he didn't believe whistling records would sell well in Germany. "But, of course," he added, "if we had something as good as 'Beautiful Birds, Sing On,' we'd be glad to use it." Belmont then broke the astonishing news that he was the composer and singer of that celebrated number — so "Beautiful Birds" was one of the numbers he recorded for Favorite. Jumbo, which used a picture of an elephant as a trademark, was another German company for which he sang.

As late as 1929, Joe made a Columbia record, with the assistance of his Chorus of Feathered Songsters — in other words, his canaries. And today his Radio City Store has its own brand of records, to be used in teaching canaries how to sing.

The veteran whistler was much impressed by the amount of study I've given to old-time records and the artists who made them and said that my lifetime of devotion to my hobby entitles me to be considered "a remarkable man." That encomium was pronounced after I told him I

C. R. S.

Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and
speech records.

Records available through dealers or direct
from us if there is no dealer in your city.
Free mailing list of new issues. tfo

C. R. S.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave. New York 29, N. Y.

MUSIC BOXES

From January 5th to March 31st I will not be available to answer any mail or do any
work on music boxes, etc.
After April 1st I will again be at your service. mhp

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington, Rhode Island

MUSIC BOXES

all kinds

Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired

(Third generation in the music box business) tfo

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

- Extra tune sheets and fine assortment of boxes for sale playing 8", 11", 12 1/4", 15 1/2", 20 3/4" and 27" diameter discs.

- We also offer for sale many fine Swiss music boxes in varied styles and sizes. Complete repairs to all type boxes. tfo

Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342

Hanover, Massachusetts

had deduced before we met that his real name was Fulton, since the composer of his whistling specialties was nearly always listed on record labels as J. W. Fulton. He was also extremely sorry that he hadn't known of John Bieling's party, so that he could be present. Well, Joe, if everything works out right, there's going to be another get-together on "John Bieling Day" in September, 1948, and your admirers are happy to know that you and your pal, Fred Hager, the song writer (who was the first musician to make violin records for commercial use), are planning to be there. So we'll be seein' you!

RECORDS

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ap12086

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. my6698

WANTED: 9½" discs for Stella music box. Also cigarette pictures.—Montclair Gallery, 716 Bloomfield Ave., Montclair, N. J. je6226

RARE AND OLD operatics and other acoustic and electrical out-of-print classical vocals and instrumentals bought, sold exchanged.—The Record Hunter, 1194 Lexington Ave., (81st), New York 28, N. Y. mh126371

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. au128711

RECORD COLLECTORS: Rare operatic, vocal, classical for sale reasonably priced. Send want lists. Cylinders, jazz, popular.—Delano, 349 Lindenwood Ambler, Penna. mh6885

REDUCED Price Sale—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City, N. Y. je12276

OLD MUSIC BOX MELODIES album RB, 3 favorite ballads, 6 sides, Home Sweet Home, Love's Old Sweet Song, Mocking Bird, Silver Threads, etc., reproduced from rare old music boxes on modern phonograph records. $5.25 postpaid.—Bornand Music Box Records, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. my3446

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover Mass. P. O. Box 342, fl28782

MISCELLANEOUS

LESSER MASTERS With Tone. Inexpensive and tonally good hand-made fiddles. Books on the violin invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship. Antique musical instruments. Lists free.—Houghton Music Co., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. sl24812

BACK POPULAR MUSIC to 1850. Ballads. Rags, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, H-3151 High., Denver 5, Colo. my12048

1. Metal, B-flat Boehm clarinet, complete. Like new, with case and music.....$45.00
2. Beaver Accordion (old) and music..... 15.00
3. Child's piano, mahogany case; 10 keys..... 10.00
4. Edison cylinder phonograph; excellent cond., 38 cylinder records, record case, attachments for playing two and four minute records and recorder to make records... 35.00
MRS. CHARLES MILLER
DUNLAP ROUTE, HEMMINGFORD, NEBR.
mlp

WANTED: Old phonographs, cylinder records, music boxes, discs, parts. Catalogs and other books on same.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. je120011

REQUEST mailing list of operatic electrical vocals.—Jacobs, 30 E. 208 St., New York 67, N. Y. mh1001

10,000 OPERATIC Records—For Sale, G & T, HMV, Fonotipias, Victor, Columbia, etc. Send want list to—John Scignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. jly6005

THE LAST of the Cremonas. Booklet listing thirty violins and their makers. Postpaid $1.—Isador Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. dl24431

CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, parts, bought, sold, exchanged. 50 cents for list. Returnable on first order.—A. Nugent, Jr., 100 N. Third St., Richmond, Va. my3873

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6844

MUSIC BOX "Ideal Piccolo", 30x24", approx. 13" high. Solid mahogany case. 4 rolls, 6 tunes each roll. Wedding March, William Tell Overture, etc.—R. P. D. No. 1, Box No. 438, VanKeuren Road, Kingston, N. Y. mh1132

SWISS MUSICAL Units $3.50 postpaid. Musical Wedding-Baby Albums, Music Boxes.—Novelties of Distinction, 131 W. 42nd, New York 18, N. Y. my3662

MUSIC BOXES: Regina, Mira, Criterion, Olympia, Capital. Large selection of Regina 27" and 15½" discs. Edison Diamond Disc, Victor, Columbia, Zonophone records, many operatic. Player and reproducing piano rolls. Beatty parlor organ. Stringed instruments. Novelty music boxes. Every inquiry answered.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. mh3686

WANTED:—Phonograph Cylinders for my personal collection. Duplicates exchanged.—Ben Franklin, Haynesville, Va. Ap3861

MELODEONS for sale. Both octagon leg and folding melodeons, all in good playing condition. Descriptions and prices sent on request. Also melodeons repaired.—Joseph Leighton, 2626 Westfield St., W. Springfield, Mass. mh2604

HAZELTON BROTHERS square grand piano, excellent playing condition, orig. Ivory, $300.—Ruth H. Fenstermacher, 101 Pioneer St., Warren, Pa. mh1331

ANCIENT POLYPHON walnut music box, origin Leipzig, Germany. 10" long by 9" wide and 5½" high. Plays 10" metal perforated discs. Wish add. info. and appraisal.—Mrs. L. Winkler, 567 Delaware, Detroit, Mich. mh1012

A COLLECTION OF SHOES

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29)

leather, embroidered with figures, in different colored silks which surround crescents that are embroidered in silver.

CHINA AND JAPAN

22. Man's shoe of Chinese make, of violet silk with a border of black satin.

23. Small shoe for woman, with a white satin sole and red silk upper with a little butterfly embroidered upon the toe.

24. Man's shoe made in Hong Kong, mounted upon a high patten of wood painted black. This patten is covered with a strip of red varnished leather which incloses the feet.

25. A shoe of Chinese fabrication for lady with small feet, having a white heel, and a black satin upper trimmed with white.

INDIA

26. Shoe from British India, embroidered with flutings of the upper of the shoe, the portion turned over being red in color.

27. Patten shoe from India, raised upon a high leather sole, rounded in front, in the form of an epaulet, and trimmed with different colored satins; bands are provided for holding the shoe to the foot.

28. This shoe was made in the Punjab in British India; it is long in shape and laden with embroidery work in silver.

29. Wooden patten shoe from India, very peculiar in shape, and covered with engraved ornaments.

AMERICA

30. Ancient war moccasin of the North American Indians, made of one piece of skin with designs embroidered upon it in red.

31. Very old moccasin for a child, North America; the skin is folded in Plaits in front.

32. Moccasin for woman, of yellow skin, embroidered with designs in different colored silks, having a strip of blue cotton cloth around the upper of the shoe, to which are attached orange leather thongs to protect the legs.

—O—

THE ANTIQUES OF OLD BARN

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25)

are typical of their time and are fitting reminders of Whittier's well known poem, "Telling the Bees."

The farmer has always been efficient in the possession of sharp cutting tools, as any boy with farm experience at the grindstone can testify, looking back at the times when he had to turn the crank while a sour faced hired man sharpened an axe with nicked edge. Scythes and sickles were not as bad, but much depended upon the mood of the men putting the pressure on the stone.

One may well admire the smooth polish on the big timbers of the barn, located where rubbed by use. There was the "big beam," over which the hay had to be pitched into the mow or "bay" year after year, and the rungs of the stationary ladders to be climbed to reach the filled mows. Old hardwood worn to a polish by the use of hands and feet for years. I wonder whether builders ever take advantage of that polished surface to get desirable effects.

Perhaps people who have no background knowledge about early farm customs are to be commiserated for that lack. There are old farm scenes and practices that have made a lasting impression upon those who knew them. For example, threshing out grain by hand with flails, three men working together would make a lively rhythm, but four men, when the tempo of their strokes became adjusted, would give the barn floor a roll of sound like drumbeat. It would remind one of the time he saw four or five circus roustabouts driving a tent stake with a fluid flow of strokes that sent the stake sinking rapidly into the ground in continuous motion.

CORRECTION FOR THE MARY GARDEN LIST

We've had rather hard luck with the Mary Garden listings printed during the past six months. The most recent misprint to come to my attention was reported by my friend Joe Mazzitelli, New York. It occurred in the paragraph headed Mary Garden Addenda on page 30 of the December HOBBIES. The recording date of the disc coupling My Ship and The Swing printed in the third line from the end of the paragraph reads November 3, 1947. The year should have been 1927, not 1947.

oOo

World-Wide Record and Music Agency

143 E. Garfield Ave.,
Milwaukee 12, Wisconsin
COLLECTORS — RESEARCHERS
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC LABELS
CYLINDERS AND DISCS
OPERA — SPEECH — POPULAR <sup>etc</sup>

Edison

DIAMOND DISC OPERATIC SELECTIONS

WOODYMAY RECORD CO. <sup>etc</sup>
73 Roxbury Street, Boston 19, Mass.

MUSIC BOXES

SPECIALIZING IN THE REPAIR OF MUSICAL BOXES OF ALL TYPES, INCLUDING THE REPAIR OF BIRD BOXES AND BIRD IN CAGE PIECES, ETC.

Choice Music Boxes For Sale. <sup>etc</sup>

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington, Rhode Island

MUSIC BOXES

all kinds

Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired
(Third generation in the music box business <sup>etc</sup>)

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

● Extra tune sheets and fine assortment of boxes for sale playing 8", 11", 12 1/4", 15 1/2", 20 3/4" and 27" diameter discs.

● We also offer for sale many fine Swiss music boxes in varied styles and sizes. Complete repairs to all type boxes. <sup>etc</sup>

Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342

Hanover, Massachusetts

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

GRACE SPENCER, "First Lady of the Phonograph"

I.

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

For a long time, collectors of old records have been puzzled as to the identity of the "Miss Spencer" who sang duets with Harry Macdonough on cylinders and discs made in 1900, or within a few years of that date. Some have believed her to be Elizabeth Spencer, who many years later was one of the favorite Edison stars. Others have held out for Janet Spencer, who made some Victor Red Seal records, despite the fact that the mysterious Miss Spencer was a soprano and Janet Spencer a contralto. But nobody seemed to know anything definite. The records had been made so long ago and were so vague, with their omission of the singer's first name, that the search seemed almost hopeless — especially to collectors like myself who were born after the soprano's recording career ended.

But about a year ago I came upon a 1900 Edison cylinder catalog, containing names of a few records by "the Original Lyric Trio," whose members were listed as Miss Grace Spencer, soprano; Harry Macdonough, tenor, and William F. Hooley, bass. There were likewise a few Spencer-Macdonough duets. Well, that at least gave Miss Spencer's first name, but I had no other information concerning her. Now, though, I am delighted to say that the uncertainty no longer exists. The former Miss Grace Spencer, who was one of the first concert singers ever to make records professionally and who apparently was the first woman to have her voice reproduced on a Victor disc, is still alive and living in New York. In all probability, her recording experience goes back to an earlier time than that of any other surviving woman. That's why I have given her the honorary title of "First Lady of the Phonograph."

I learned of Miss Spencer's whereabouts and was able to communicate with her because of an unusual happening. It began when my friend, Charles Clark, a Wellington, Ohio, dealer in old records, received the following letter from Mrs. George D. Royster, of 45 Wyllys Street, Hartford, Connecticut:

"I am trying to locate some recordings made on cylindrical records by my mother during the years 1895-1900. My mother was a concert and oratorio singer of some note in this country at that time. Her professional name was Miss Grace Preston, and it is known to us that she did make recordings. I have written the Edison Company and the Columbia Company, but their catalogs do not go back that far. My mother passed away this summer, and since the early records made at the height of her career are the only ones she made, I am most anxious to find them, if possible. I would appreciate any information you can give me."

Mrs. Royster's letter was sent to me by Mr. Clark, in the hope that I might have information about the records. I wrote to her, saying that I had never heard of records by any singer named Grace Preston, but also asking if the artist might have used the name of Grace Spencer for recording purposes. I mentioned, too, that I had a couple of Grace Spencer records. Mrs. Royster replied that Grace Preston and Grace Spencer were not the same, but that they had been intimate friends. She said Miss Spencer was still living in New York City. Meanwhile, she wrote to her friend, Mrs. Lewis M. Wilson, of New York, that I had records by Grace Spencer (Mrs. Wilson's mother sent me a note, asking what I would charge for them).

Naturally, I was glad to give her the records, so I shipped them immediately. Both were duets with Macdonough — a nine-inch Zonophone, made around 1900, of "I Will Magnify Thee, O God!" and Victor Monarch No. 1359, "Life's Dream is O'er," recorded, as a date scratched upon the label showed, on April 16, 1902. When I sent the records, I also asked Mrs. Wilson for some information concerning her mother. She not only graciously gave me what help she could, but also had the "First Lady of the Phonograph" write to me, with the result that I shall be able to quote most of the soprano's extremely interesting letter concerning her career.

Miss Spencer, who in 1903 married Dr. Willard Foster Doolittle, a relative of General "Jimmy" Doolittle, wrote:

"Yes, I think I was the first woman artist to record, which came about through my father's friendship with Thomas Edison. My father, General Bird W. Spencer, of Passaic, New Jersey, was a prominent and wealthy man and much opposed to a professional career for me. I studied with Jacques Bouhy in Paris for many years and was finished for concert and oratorio work. I sang as soloist in many of the New York and Brooklyn churches and concerts in Carnegie Hall and elsewhere. Yet my career was uphill work. If you write the Passaic Daily News they may be able to send you a copy of the account of my debut concert there for the benefit of the Passaic General Hospital, in which my father was interested, just after my lengthy studies and travels in Europe.

"Upon returning home with Mr. and Mrs. Gallaud, of Paris, aboard the first Champlain of the French Line, we were wrecked for 15 days off the coast of Newfoundland. The whole town was out to greet us and, overnight, I became a seven days' wonder. Mr. Gallaud's sister married Jean Gounod, the great composer Gounod's son, and they persuaded my father to allow me to finish my education abroad under their guidance. As I was just 18 at the time, this gave me an entree into those artistic and musical circles that few students had. Emma Eames; her husband, Julian Story; the great Massenet, Bemberg, Chaminade — all, and many more, I have met at Madame Gounod's where I was privileged to sing. My voice was a dramatic soprano with a range of two octaves, many said comparable to Emmy Destinn, then at the Metropolitan Opera. I spoke French fluently, of course, and studied diligently, making good progress. My father was delighted with my debut concert, all of which the Passaic Daily News of that day tells most dramatically.

"He was a warm personal friend of Thomas Edison, and when I was approached by the Victor and Edison companies to make some records of my voice, he drove me over to West Orange and presented me to Mr. Edison, who immediately recognized those qualities in my voice which would record well. And so I began my career. I had all the work my voice could stand with those two companies, church and concert work. The opera which Mr. Bouhy hoped I would reach I never did, owing to family objections. I returned to Europe several times to see my dear friends, the Gallauds, and to coach again with Mr. Bouhy, but five years after I married my dear husband, who was a successful physician here, I stopped singing altogether and have never sung since, for to be a truly great artist one must devote one's life to it.

"As for my records, there were many—solos, duets and trios. The list was a long one, and I regret now I did not keep some of them, as there are few today who remember me. My career was short and memory soon dies when one becomes only half great, for I had constant opposition toward my becoming a great artist. I had the voice, education and the ambition to succeed, but I lacked backing. Remember, if you are old enough—let us say 50 years ago—a young woman was lost, socially and morally, who entered a professional career. It was just not done by a well brought up girl, and my father had other plans for me, hence the complete oblivion and 'mystery' as you call it, surrounding my musical career. We obeyed our parents in those days much better than the present day trend—and is the world any better, can we say, for the entire lack of respect and control for the better things in life? Tradition is a great heritage, few realize today.

"Somewhere I shall try to find you an old photograph, if you will return it surely, when I was a bridesmaid for Alice Coard of Plainfield, a pupil of the great Theodor Leschetizky, of Vienna, whom I knew abroad. . . . I do not seem to remember Grace Preston making any records. She had a rare and beautiful contralto voice and sang with much musical intelligence. I don't think she studied abroad. I met her in this country after my return."

Now I cease quoting from Mrs. Doolittle's letter to say that Mrs. Royster tells me she still hopes to find wax cylinders by her mother and will appreciate help from any source. That is why I have given her address near the beginning of this article.

(To be concluded)

—O—

Death of Arthur L. Walsh

Arthur L. Walsh, 57, executive vice president of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., died recently, in a New York hospital.

Mr. Walsh first became associated with the late inventor at the age of 19 when he was engaged to play his violin in direct comparison with the New Edison phonograph, to demonstrate that the tone quality of the reproduced music was identical with that of the original. His keen business sense soon attracted Mr. Edison's attention, and Walsh was made the company's advertising and music manager. For several years he selected all the numbers that were recorded by Edison. His promotion to executive vice president followed. After Edison's son Charles became governor of New Jersey, he appointed Mr. Walsh in 1943 to fill W. Warren Barbour's unexpired term in the U. S. Senate. In 1934-35, Walsh was New Jersey State director of the Federal Housing Administration. He also served as a commissioner of the Port of New York Authority.

Walsh gave up his musical career after becoming an Edison executive, but for pastime wrote a number of popular song successes, including "The Prisoner's Sweetheart" and "As a Porcupine Pines for Its Pork." At Mr. Edison's funeral in 1931, he played a violin solo of the inventor's favorite song, "I'll take You Home Again, Kathleen."

—O—

Folk Song Collection of John Lomax

Carried on by U. S.

John A. Lomax, noted collector of songs and ballads, died recently at the age of 80. His work of collecting is being carried on at the Library of Congress by Duncan B. M. Emrich, chief of the folk lore section.

The collection includes about 40,000 songs on 10,000 records, all stored in the Library. There are songs by American cowboys, southern Negroes, deep sea sailors, hard rock miners, lumberjacks, and in fact, songs of persons in practically all walks of life.

John A. Lomax was assisted in his hobby by his son, Alan. They caused thousands of records to be made to record the songs. With portable recording machines they made the records just as the songs were sung, where the singers had been performing for the amusement of their friends and themselves. The Library of Congress plans to continue this project and is being assisted by such Universities as Wisconsin, Wayne in Detroit, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Utah and Indiana. The collection is being expanded to include tales, legends, herb medicine formulas and traditional cooking recipes, sectional dialect recordings, etc.

In explaining the services of the Library there has been issued 11 albums of folk songs for public purchase at cost. Shortly ten more will be put out. Catalogs may be obtained by writing to the recording laboratory, Library of Congress, Washington.

It is learned from Librarian Emrich that there are at least 50 different versions of "Oh, Susanna," by Stephen Foster. It is pointed out that every ship's company and overland party heading for the California gold fields composed its own verses.

—O—

!! Now Ready !!

The New Catalogue of Historical Recordings

By ROBERT BAUER

Contains 494 pages of listings of classical vocal recordings (lateral-cut discs—no cylinders or vertical-cut discs) issued in Europe and the USA from 1898 to 1908/9.

The new catalogue is a substantial improvement over the first edition of 1938 because it has: two hundred additional pages; birth, debut and death dates and places of many of the artists, strict alphabetical order; two pages of label information; Cloth Binding; etc. etc.

Price $9.75

Remit by Check or Money Order to:

STEPHEN FASSETT
317 West 108th St.,
New York 25, N. Y.

and your copy will be mailed to you direct from England.

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.
2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

Special Sapphire Needles

for playing Hill and Dale records on your regular electric (lateral) phonograph.
Type A for Pathé Records, Type B for Edison Records, Type C for Vocalion Records.

Price $5.00 each.

Transcriptions

Made to order from your records or other sources

Pathé Sapphire Ball Needles

For playing Pathé Records on Hill and Dale machines.

$2.00 each

Pathé Records

BOUGHT, SOLD & EXCHANGED app
PROF. JAMISON R. HARRISON
BEDFORD, MASSACHUSETTS app

C. R. S.

Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of
operatic, theatrical, and
speech records.

Records available through dealers or direct from us if there is no dealer in your city.
Free mailing list of new issues. tto

C. R. S.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave. New York 29, N. Y.

desire of the purchaser. Unlike the Selma Kurz discs of the same vintage, they were not re-issued with new numbers."

oOo

C.R.S. Historical Re-Recordings Numbers 21 through 29

In my review of these eight C. R. S. releases, on page 34 of the March HOBBIES, I explained that their volume level was considerably below normal owing to an error in the re-recording process. Word has just reached me that Jack L. Caidin, sponsor of C. R. S. records, has decided to do over all sixteen sides. Moreover, he will replace any or all of the records free of charge to those who are willing to turn in the old re-recordings for the new ones. It is not necessary to return the entire disc, incidentally, just break out the portion carrying the label and send it to him c/o of C. R. S. Historical Recordings, 2060 First Avenue, New York 29, N. Y. Please note that replacements cannot be secured through dealers stocking C. R. S. records, but only through Mr. Caidin himself at the address already given.

—o—

Edison

DIAMOND DISC OPERATIC SELECTIONS

WOODYMAY RECORD CO. to
73 Roxbury Street, Boston 19, Mass.

MUSIC BOXES

SPECIALIZING IN THE REPAIR OF MUSICAL
BOXES OF ALL TYPES, INCLUDING THE
REPAIR OF BIRD BOXES AND BIRD IN
CAGE PIECES, ETC.
Choice Music Boxes For Sale. to

GEORGE A. BIDDEN
Barrington, Rhode Island

MUSIC BOXES

all kinds
Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired
(Third generation in the music box business) to

A. V. BORNAND
333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

- Extra tune sheets and fine assortment of boxes for sale playing 8", 11", 12 1/4", 15 1/2", 20 3/4" and 27" diameter discs.

- We also offer for sale many fine Swiss music boxes in varied styles and sizes. Complete repairs to all type boxes. to

Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342
Hanover, Massachusetts

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

GRACE SPENCER, "First Lady of the Phonograph" II

By ULYSSES (JIM WALSH)

The letter which I quoted last month from Grace Spencer gave most of the salient facts concerning the career of this gifted singer, who appears to be the first woman ever to make a Victor record and one of the first feminine singers for the phonograph. It is a coincidence that both she and Elizabeth Spencer whose recording career began about ten years after Grace Spencer's had closed, studied with Jacques Bouhy, the distinguished Belgian baritone, in Paris. Artists of the name of Spencer, incidentally, played more than their proportionate part in the early history of the phonograph. Leonard Garfield Spencer (presumably no relation to the others) became the first world-famous recording comedian shortly after the Columbia company went into business in Washington, D. C., in 1889. His brother, Harry, also made a few records. Janet Spencer, the contralto, was well known for her few, but popular, Victor Red Seal records: Elizabeth Spencer, from 1911 to 1926, was one of the most popular singers Edison ever had—and upon Grace Spencer I have already conferred the title of "First Lady of the Phonograph." (I might mention in passing that Elizabeth Spencer was not born into a Spencer family, but married a man named Spencer and continued to use that last name for professional purposes after they were divorced.)

Mrs. Doolittle admits she isn't sure of the dates when she first began making records under her maiden name of Grace Spencer. However, an 1899 Edison record catalog lists the Original Lyric Trio as being composed of Estella L. Mann, soprano; John Havens, tenor, and W. F. Hooley, bass. As we have already seen, the 1900 catalog gives the trio's personnel as Miss Spencer, Harry Macdonough and Hooley, so that seems to indicate the young lady began making records in 1899 or 1900. Macdonough told me years ago that he made his first Edison cylinders in October, 1898, so he and Miss Spencer must have "cut their recording eyeteeth" at pretty nearly the same time. I have not yet been able to find out anything about Miss Mann and Havens, their forerunners in the trio.

Miss Grace Spencer probably made other Zonophone records in addition to the one I sent her daughter, and no doubt she sang on some of the seven-inch Victors, that preceded the 10-inch Monarch issue, besides also singing with Macdonough and the Lyric Trio for Edison. In addition, she says, she made many solos.

It's more than likely that she also made Monarchs in the 5,000 series—the first ten-inch records sold by Victor before the dog trademark was adopted in 1903—but I am unable to find any listed in a mimeographed catalog which the company sent me some years ago of all the single-faced Black Label masters then preserved in the company's files. (Nearly all of these, I have been told, have since been destroyed—presumably so that more space can be available for storing the precious masters of hot jazz and boogie-woogie!)

There are, however, three ten-inch Spencer-Macdonough duets: No. 1359, "Life's Dream Is O'er," which I have already mentioned; 1360, "Home to Our Mountains" (how did it happen that this familiar Trovatore number was sung as a duet for tenor and soprano?) and 1362, "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden," the lilting air from Floradora, which was one of the biggest sellers of those long-gone days. The Victor master list also contains No. 4282, "Elegie," mentioned simply as sung by "Spencer," but Miss Spencer says she originally recorded it. Many popular records of a "standard" nature were later re-made by other singers, after the original artists were no longer available, to take advantage of improvements in recording methods, so "Elegie" afterwards was sung by Elise Stevenson and still later by Elizabeth Spencer, with the same master number being retained. In 1908 or earlier, the "Pretty Maiden" duet was re-made for the same reason, with Miss Stevenson as soprano.

It has already been mentioned that Miss Spencer married Dr. Willard F. Doolittle in 1903. She has only one child, Mrs. Lewis M. Wilson, of New York, who was born ten years after her marriage. Mrs. Doolittle lives at 170 West 73rd street, New York City. Her husband died in June, 1944.

Only a few soprano voices would record satisfactorily around the turn of the century, but it is easy to tell, even from the somewhat worn discs which I sent to Mrs. Wilson, that the former's Spencer's tones had a beautifully clear, pure quality. I suspect that she also sings in two even more worn Victors which I still have: No. 90, "When I Was a Lad" (from "Pinafore"), by the Lyric Trio, on which the scratch is so virulent as to make it almost impossible to understand the words; and the Floradora Sextet, sung by an unidentified mixed chorus. Of course, we have already seen that this was likewise made as a Spencer-Macdonough duet.

World-Wide Record and Music Agency

143 E. Garfield Ave.,
Milwaukee 12, Wisconsin
COLLECTORS — RESEARCHERS
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC LABELS
CYLINDERS AND DISCS to
OPERA — SPEECH — POPULAR

It has been a source of genuinely great pleasure to me to learn that Grace Spencer, concerning whose identity I puzzled for so many years, is still living, and I know that all lovers of the old records and admirers of the gifted men and women who made them wish her the best of health and happiness.

Miss Spencer may be sure that when the pioneer recording artists and their record collectors friends have their annual get-together somewhere in or near New York in September, we'd feel honored by the presence of the First Lady of Phonograph. Consequently, it makes me proud indeed to quote the following excerpt from her letter, which I have saved for the last:

"I shall be very happy to attend your reunion, with my daughter, in September — and please be good enough to send me a copy of the sketch you insert in the magazine." (That I shall certainly do!) And the former Miss Spencer teases me a bit about my inquiry as to whether I might print the date of her birth by saying:

"As to my age, shall I just tell you I am pushing 70, or must I tell you on which side — the sunny or the shady? I leave you to judge that when I meet you. Thank you for your interest and goodness. Very sincerely yours, Grace Spencer Doolittle."

And thank you, Mrs. Doolittle, for providing me with the "materials" for what I'm sure HOBBIES readers will agree has been a most interesting sketch. From the looks of things, as I write this on the evening of December 18, 1947, there will be a large and enthusiastic turn-out of collectors and recording artists ready to pay you homage at that eagerly awaited meeting next September!

!! Now Ready !!

The New Catalogue of Historical Recordings

By ROBERT BAUER

Contains 494 pages of listings of classical vocal recordings (lateral-cut discs—no cylinders or vertical-cut discs) issued in Europe and the USA from 1898 to 1908/9.

The new catalogue is a substantial improvement over the first edition of 1938 because it has: two hundred additional pages; birth, debut and death dates and places of many of the artists, strict alphabetical order; two pages of label information; Cloth Binding; etc. etc.

Price $9.75

Remit by Check or Money Order to:

STEPHEN FASSETT
317 West 108th St.,
New York 25, N. Y.

and your copy will be mailed to you direct from England.

RECORDS

EDISON DISCS, new, lots of fifty, 20c ea. Cylinders, lots of fifty, 20c ea. Old dated catalogs.—Charles Clark, Wellington, Ohio. my1741

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. my6698

WANTED: 9½" discs for Stella music box. Also cigarette pictures.—Montclair Gallery, 716 Bloomfield Ave., Montclair, N. J. au6226

PATHE DISC records wanted, preferably those with engraved labels and starting at center groove. Operatic and classic only.—Henry Herold, 8778 111 St., Richmond Hill, N. Y. je3783

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. au128711

RARE OLD RECORDS: Vocal operatic, popular, Edisons, jazz, for sale reasonably priced. Send your want list.—Delano, 349 Lindenwolde, Ambler, Pa. s6835

REDUCED Price Sale—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City, N. Y. je12276

OLD MUSIC BOX MELODIES album RB, 3 favorite ballads, 6 sides, Home Sweet Home, Love's Old Sweet Song, Mocking Bird, Silver Threads, etc., reproduced from rare old music boxes on modern phonograph records. $5.25 postpaid.—Bornand Music Box Records, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. my3446

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342, f128782

UNUSED EDISON disc records. 50 different $7.50, random selection.—A. E. Larsen, 1213 W. 63rd St., Chicago, Ill. je3662

PHONOGRAPH Records bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. au12276

MISCELLANEOUS

LESSER MASTERS With Tone. Inexpensive and tonally good hand-made fiddles. Books on the violin invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship. Antique musical instruments. Lists free.—Houghton Music Co., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. s124812

BACK POPULAR MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Rags, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, H-3151 High., Denver 6, Colo. my12048

WANTED: Old phonographs, cylinder records, music boxes, discs, parts. Catalogs and other books on same.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. je120011

WANTED: Player piano rolls, standard 88-note; classical only. Write.—F. K. Mac Callum, 1815 E. Rio Grande, El Paso, Texas. je3662

10,000 OPERATIC Records—For Sale, G & T, HMV, Fonotipias, Victor, Columbia, etc. Send want list to—John Scignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. jly6005

THE LAST of the Cremonas. Booklet listing thirty violins and their makers. Postpaid $1.—Isador Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124431

CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, parts, bought, sold, exchanged. 50 cents for list. Returnable on first order.—A. Nugent, Jr., 100 N. Third St., Richmond, Va. my3873

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6844

PORTER LYREHARP, Hudson Fulton Zither, Edison discs, Pershing autographed record.—Winifred Browne, 700 N. State, Chicago, Ill. my1911

PHONOGRAPH CYLINDERS bought for my personal collection. 500 duplicates to exchange.—Benj. Franklin, Haynesville, Virginia. jly3012

SWISS MUSICAL Units $3.50 postpaid. Musical Wedding-Baby Albums, Music Boxes.—Novelties of Distinction, 181 W. 42nd, New York 18, N. Y. my3662

MUSIC BOXES of the disc type in various makes and sizes. Regina, 15½" and 27" discs. Criterion, 20½" discs. Victor, Columbia and Edison Diamond Disc records. Welte-Mignon and 88 note piano rolls. Stringed instruments. All inquiries answered.—Insley C. Looker, S. Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. je3856

MUSIC BOX COMBS repaired by expert. New teeth properly installed and tuned. Cylinders entirely repinned.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. jly3223

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. je3434

FOR SALE: One boxed Graphophone, 11" sq. and 7" high, with horn, and 35 good records dated around 1901. "Josh Billings", etc. Graphophone like new. Please offer.—O. B. Seay, 16 Johnson Building, Augusta, Ga. je3235

FOR SALE: Very old violin made in Cremona 1622. Write — Mrs. Bessie K. Andrews, Duke Power Company, Salisbury, N. C. je3662

SWISS MUSIC BOX, exquisitely inlaid rosewood case, 31" long on matching table; 6 cylinders, 3 selections on each. Completely reconditioned; beautiful tone.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. my1012

GOLDEN AGE SERIES

RE-RECORDINGS

Gemma Bellincioni

No. 1000, 10-in.—$2.00 List
Voi lo sapete....Cavalleria Rusticana
Vissi D'arte ..... Tosca

Celestina Boninsegna

No. 1001, 10-in.—$2.00 List
Vergine degli angeli. Forza Del Destino
D'amor sull'ali rosee.....Trovatore

DEALERS INVITED - DIRECT SALES

HENRY HEROLD <sup>dep</sup>

8778 111 St., Richmond Hill 18, N. Y.

C. R. S.

Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and speech records.

Records available through dealers only.
FREE MAILING LIST OF NEW ISSUES. <sup>etc</sup>

C. R. S.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave., New York 29, N. Y.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

The Death of John Bieling

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

On the morning of Wednesday, March 31, I went to my front door and found a Negro man waiting to hand me a telegram. When I read it, I received news that shocked but didn't exactly surprise me. The message was from George Bieling and said that George's father, John Bieling, the famous pioneer recording artist, had died the day before in his home at 102 Lafayette Avenue, Hempstead, Long Island, N. Y.

Although I knew that John had heart disease and, in an often heard expression, "might go at any time," the news of his passing hit me hard. I still haven't been able to comprehend fully that I shall never see again the lovable old gentleman whom I considered one of my dearest friends. It was made doubly hard to realize because only a week before I had received one of John's genially chatty letters, telling me that he had enjoyed a happy 79th birthday on March 18th — just 12 days before his death — and that he was eagerly looking forward to "John Bieling Day" next September.

Mr. Bieling's death temporarily disrupted plans for observing the Day, when record collectors expected to entertain John and other old-time recording artists with a party. The date had been set for September 10, and the Georgian room of the Garden City Hotel had been reserved, so that John, who lived only a short distance from Garden City, would be able to attend as our special guest of honor. The party was to be an outgrowth of similar events he had given at his home in September, 1946, and 1947, for a group of intimate friends. Because of the great interest in the affair and the considerable burden it imposed upon the ladies of the Bieling family, the collectors had agreed that hereafter they would hold John Bieling Day in some place accommodating a larger crowd and that the expense would be divided among those attending. The artists, of course, would come as non-paying guests.

So a few days after John's death, there was uncertainty about what to do. There was some sentiment in favor of dropping the plans, at least for this year, although most of us felt that our old friend would want us to go ahead and meet in his honor, just as if he were there. There was also serious discussion of transferring the "party" to the Thomas A. Edison laboratory in West Orange, New Jersey. However, this would have been inconvenient to some of the artists who want to attend. So I'm glad to say that it's been decided to go ahead with the Garden City hotel arrangements. During the next several months I shall be busy, writing to a long list of pioneer artists and urging them to attend. Collectors are planning to come from all parts of the country, and anyone who admires the early artists and their work is invited to join us.

There will be a reservation fee — probably of $5.50 — payable by each collector, to help defray the expense of engaging the room, which seats 400 persons and is equipped with a piano, and of serving a meal. Tickets will be mailed by Harry Selinger, 9 Clark Avenue, Oceanside, Long Island, New York, to whom correspondence about the party should be addressed. If you plan to attend, write Mr. Selinger a postal card — not a letter — telling him so and mentioning whether you are a collector. But don't send any money until you are notified. Children under 18 will not be eligible. Persons coming from a considerable distance would do well to reserve rooms in New York City hotels. The Garden City Hotel's rates are from four to eight dollars a day, and rooms must be engaged at least 60 days in advance.

Now, back to Mr. Bieling's death. Biographical sketches of this fine artist appeared in the July and August, 1942, issues of HOBBIES. However, a large number of readers interested in old records have been added in the past half dozen years. For their benefit I'll touch briefly upon his career.

John Henry Bieling was born on March 18, 1869, in New York City's Fourteenth Ward, and he frequently referred humorously to himself as "just an old Fourteenth Ward boy." His father was a carpenter, of German descent. John had to leave school as a youngster to help his father support a large family, and he didn't get a great deal of formal education. But he had an alert, acquisitive mind, which he improved by reading good books (histories were his favorites) and studying at home. As a very young man, he painted stained glass for Tiffany's, but he had become well known as the possessor of a beautiful "top tenor" voice. In 1894 he and three other young fellows — George Gaskin, second tenor; Joe Riley, baritone, and Jim Cherry, bass — formed the Manhasset Quartet, the first male voice ensemble ever to make a record. They sang for the old United States Phonograph Company, in Newark. The quartet worked for about all the pioneer recording firms of the time, but didn't stay together very long. In 1896, it was succeeded by the Edison Quartet, consisting of Bieling, first tenor; Jere Mahoney, second tenor; S. H. Dudley, baritone, and William F. Hooley, bass. Mahoney's health failed and he was succeeded in 1899 by Harry Macdonough. This was the first recording quartet to win world-wide fame, and it became even better known on disc records as the Haydn or Hayden, Quartet. In 1910, the American Quartet was organized. Its members were Bieling and Hooley; Billy Murray, second tenor, and Steve Porter, baritone. The Hayden Quartet disbanded in 1914, when Mr. Bieling had to leave it because of voice trouble, but John Young took his place in the American (which was known as the Premier Quartet on Edison records), and it continued in existence, with various changes of personnel, until 1925. John told me that he believed his voice trouble started because of the large amount of "yipping" he had to do, impersonating a cowboy, in a 1910 Edison record of "A Cowboy's Romance," made by the inexhaustibly inventive Len Spencer, with the help of Ada Jones and the quartet. He could barely speak for several weeks after that cylinder was recorded.

This picture of John H. Bieling was taken in London, August 4, 1902 by Russell Hunting of "Casey Record Fame".

Although he stopped singing, John Bieling was still interested in the phonograph. In 1918 he was a traveling representative of the New York Talking Machine Company, calling on Victor dealers in New Jersey. Two years later he moved to Hempstead from Elmhurst, where he had lived for 16 years, and opened a Victrola shop. He retired from business in 1926. It's interesting to know that, before he lost his voice, John occasionally sang at the Metropolitan Opera, as a supernumerary. Among the operas in which he appeared were Aida and Tosca. He greatly amused me by telling of the time when he was acting an archbishop and had a terrible time keeping his outlandish looking hat from falling off.

John Bieling was unique among recording artists because of the fact that he won fame solely on the strength of his quartet work and his duets with other singers — chiefly Macdonough. In the late 1890's he made Edison cylinders with a contralto, the late May Kelso, and they may have been the first male and female team to do recorded work. After his very earliest days as a record maker, he never had a solo record in any company's catalog. His nearest approach to that probably was Victor 4655, "Let Me Write What I Never Dared to Tell," listed as by "Bieling and Haydn Quartet." Although the obituary notices in New York papers said that Mr. Bieling's recording work was chiefly for Victor and Columbia, the truth is that he sang comparatively little for the latter and that he was known almost entirely as a Victor and Edison artist. One virtually unknown fact about his career, however, is that in the middle 1890's he and George Gaskin made duets for Columbia under the team name of "Gaskin and Livingston."

I met John Bieling for the first time in September, 1946, when I went to Hempstead to attend the first of his parties, but we had been friends by correspondence since 1942. When I first saw John I found it hard to reconcile him, as a small, thin, elderly man, with the pictures the old record catalogs used to contain of a handsome, husky looking young fellow. During his last few years, John gradually lost his appetite and ate so little that he had an almost emaciated appearance. But his blue eyes retained their sparkle, his mind was clear and he kept his sense of humor. His intimate friends, such as his Hempstead neighbor, Bryant Burke, were much afraid that he wouldn't be able to have his party last September or that, if he did, the excitement would tell upon his weak heart, but John had a great time and came through in fine style. During recent months, he had been living in anticipation of next September 10, when his friends would once more be gathered around him.

That was not to be. But he had a foretaste on his birthday of what John Bieling Day would have been. I had sent him a small gift, and he wrote to me on March 23: "My dear Jim: Thanks for the beautiful card and book which you so kindly sent to me for my birthday . . . I must say I had a very fine birthday and wish you could have been here with us. Billy Murray, Bryant, Harry Selinger, all came in and we listened to some of the old records. Harry Selinger very kindly brought his portable machine over. Then I had my whole family with me for the day and, all in all, it sure was very pleasant . . . Bryant and Harry seem to be going along with the affair for September the 10th quite well and I only hope and pray my health is all right, for some days I don't feel as well as others, but of course when you are in your eightieth year you can't ask for too much."

Just a week later John Bieling was dead. He became ill on Monday night and died at about 7 o'clock Tuesday morning. The funeral was held at 8 p. m., Friday, April 2, in the Cronk Funeral Home at Garden City. Burial was in Cedar Grove Cemetery at Flushing, L. I. Mr. Bieling is survived by his second wife, Mrs. Meta Von Oesen Bieling; three sons — Harry F., George B. and Fred W. Bieling; and three daughters — Mrs. Magdalen Meyran, Mrs. Nellie Michener and Mrs. Charlotte Conlin. The service was in charge of a noted record collector and admirer of Mr. Bieling, the Rev. Edward Vesper. Flowers were received from friends and admirers of the singer living in widely scattered places.

I mourn John Bieling's death most sincerely. But I like to recall something he said to me one evening last September, while we sat together in the twilight on his cool front porch. Speaking whimsically but most evidently in earnest, John said: "One of these days that Death Angel is going to tap me on the shoulder and say, 'Come along with me, Bieling! You've been fooling around here long enough!' Then, Jim," he continued,

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 35)

MISCELLANEOUS

LESSER MASTERS With Tone. Inexpensive and tonally good hand-made fiddles. Books on the violin invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship. Antique musical instruments. Lists free.—Houghton Music Co., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. s124812

ANTIQUE HARDMAN 3-legged piano; rosewood case, fine condition; mechanically perfect, price $600, crated. Transportation extra.—Florence Alston, Carson, Iowa. jcl1041

WANTED: Old phonographs, cylinder records, music boxes, discs, parts. Catalogs and other books on same.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. jcl20011

WANTED: Player piano rolls, standard 88-note; classical only. Write.—F. K. Mac Callum, 1815 E. Rio Grande, El Paso, Texas. jcl3662

10,000 OPERATIC Records—For Sale, G & T, HMV, Fonotipias, Victor, Columbia, etc. Send want list to—John Scigiano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. jly6005

THE LAST of the Cremonas. Booklet listing thirty violins and their makers. Postpaid $1.—Isador Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124431

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6844

FOR SALE: Regina, disc type, music box and extra records. Cabinet and machine in perfect condition.—Tom Perrin, Augusta Herald, Augusta, Ga. au3803

PHONOGRAPH CYLINDERS bought for my personal collection. 500 duplicates to exchange.—Benj. Franklin, Haynesville, Virginia. jly3012

ROSEWOOD KIMBALL sq. piano. Excellent condition. Any reasonable offer accepted. Haviland Moss Rose dinner set.—Thearl Smith, Omena, Mich. jcl1331

MUSIC BOXES of the disc type in various makes and sizes. Regina, 15½" and 27" discs. Criterion, 20½" discs, Victor, Columbia and Edison Diamond Disc records. Welte-Mignon and 88 note piano rolls. Stringed instruments. All inquiries answered.—Insley C. Looker, S. Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. jcl3856

MUSIC BOX COMBS repaired by expert. New teeth properly installed and tuned. Cylinders entirely repinned.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. jly3223

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R.I. jcl3434

FOR SALE: One boxed Graphophone, 11" sq. and 7" high, with horn, and 35 good records dated around 1901. "Josh Billings", etc., Graphophone like new. Please offer.—O. B. Seay, 16 Johnson Building, Augusta, Ga. jcl2335

FOR SALE: Very old violin made in Cremona 1622. Write — Mrs. Bessie K. Andrews, Duke Power Company, Salisbury, N. C. jcl3662

SWISS MUSICAL Units $3.50. Musical album stands (plays Wedding March). Music boxes.—Novelties of Distinction, 131 W. 42nd, New York 18, N. Y. au3082

BACK SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Rags, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, H-3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my12698

RECORDS

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. n6698

WANTED: 9½" discs for Stella music box. Also cigarette pictures.—Montclair Gallery, 716 Bloomfield Ave., Montclair, N. J. au6226

PATHE DISC records wanted, preferably those with engraved labels and starting at center groove. Operatic and classic only.—Henry Herrold, 8778 111 St., Richmond Hill, N. Y. jcl3783

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. au128711

RARE OLD RECORDS: Vocal operatic, popular, Edisons, jazz, for sale reasonably priced. Send your want list.—Delano, 349 Lindenwolde, Ambler, Pa. s6885

REDUCED Price Sale—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City, N. Y. jcl2276

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover Mass. P. O. Box 342, f128782

UNUSED EDISON disc records. 50 different $7.50, random selection.—A. E. Larsen, 1213 W. 63rd St., Chicago, Ill. jcl3662

PHONOGRAPH Records bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. au12276

REGINA 20½" metal discs wanted.—George Francis Schait, D. C., 3 Springfield Ave., Cranford, N. J. au3023

Two fine Swiss boxes for sale.

See our ad, Page No. 5.

THE CONKLINS

Make your plans now for attending the CONVENTION of the FANS
of the

PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

TO BE HELD IN NEW YORK CITY.

Full details in the July issue.

Germany, Russia, North Africa and most of North America, gathering material for his drawings. Theodore Roosevelt's enthusiasm for his work helped to open the eyes of the public to his worth. Though many call him an illustrator (just as Hogarth and Rembrandt were labeled at one time), rather than a painter, his pictures are vital and picturesque portrayals, as are his sculptures. Besides these accomplishments, he wrote fresh vigorous prose and among the books he published a few are Pony Tracks (1895); Crooked Trails (1898); Stories of Peace and War (1899); Men With The Bark On (1900); and The Way Of An Indian (1906). He was determined to have all details accurate and had at his home in New Rochelle a huge collection of cowboy outfits, Indian trappings, and army equipment, besides his canvases, bronzes, and sketches. This collection and some of his own work is now in the Remington Art Memorial at Ogdensburg and there at the public library, one will find his library of western history. Some of his work is also in the New York Public Library.

He died very suddenly of pneumonia on December 26, 1909, and was buried at Canton, N. Y. As his epitaph he wanted "He knew the Horse."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 35)

"I'd like to think that when I pass over Jordan I'll start walking up the hill, but before I've gone far I'll see old Bill Hooley coming down. And Bill will say in that deep bass voice of his: 'Why, here's Bieling! Where've you been all this time? The old gang's been looking for you for years! Harry Macdonough and Sam Rous (S. H. Dudley) are right around the corner, and Walter Miller (for many years Edison's recording director) is with them. Walter wants wants us to do twenty rounds of 'The Holy City' and a dozen of 'The Cornfield Medley.' So hurry up and let's get started!"

"And so, Jim," John summed up, "I'll try out my voice and it'll be better than it ever was on earth. And the four of us old Hayden Quartet boys will get our heads together in front of that recording horn, and we'll sing and sing — sing a lot better than we ever did down here! To tell you the truth, I think that would be my idea of Heaven — to have my voice back and go on singing, forever and ever!"

John had tears in his eyes, and I felt them in my own as he drew that fanciful picture. "The Canary," as Billy Murray used to call him, because he never "blasted" when singing into a recording horn, was one of the most lovable of men. If John Bieling Day is held this September, as I hope it will be, those of us who are left will try to have the good time that we know our beloved friend would wish for us, but we'll sadly deplore the loss of him in whose honor the event has been named.

P. O. Box 1097 Providence, Rhode Island

A rare early Windsor arm chair, with a bow back, and unusually comfortable seat, all re-finished in rich natural maple and ready to use. A fine heirloom, early and solid. $80.00

An unusual nodding bisque kitten. She sits up and begs, and she is a lovely, with grey head, back and tail, while her feet are black. She wears a baby blue ribbon around her neck, and her head nods. Approx. 5" tall. Very cute. $21.00

Very beautiful, very small mahogany chest of drawers with delicate scalloped apron and line of satinwood inlay on all drawers and apron. A piece so small it could be used for a lamp table, with darling french feet. It is 32" tall, 17½" deep, and 22" across the front. Has 4 full length drawers. Perfect condition, a beauty! $32.00

A Gibson Girl calendar plate, year 1909. Lovely girl's head in center rich coloring, and in excellent condition. $7.50

A tiny adorable little cream pitcher with rose buds and blue ribbon garland, and wide little spout. It is 2½" tall. An old one. $5.50

An extremely fine old Staffordshire trinket box. It is an old square piano, and the music is open on the music rack, and the coloring is rich, and it is in perfect condition. The piano is rosewood and back of the music rack is more music in pink and blue covers. It is 4" long, 3" tall and 2½" deep. $15.00

Another of those large hinged top old iron match boxes that hang on the wall or sit on a table as preferred. This one has a handsome dog heavily embossed on cover. Big enough for cigarettes. $7.50

A deep handsome walnut frame with a gold liner all in perfect condition. Measures outside 40" long, by 28" wide. Inside opening 34" long by 23" wide. Grand for mirror. Very rich. $16.00

Sweet old china salt shaker, with seascape painted on it, sailing ships, a rock coast and castle. Lovely colors. 4" tall. $4.00

Unusually lacy iron trivet, round, with 5 little paw feet. Measures 5½" across. A nice one and old. $4.50

Beautiful deep blue plate, early Staffordshire, perfect condition. Allover color, fruit and flowers. A honey! $10.00

Original print by Baillie "The Life and Ago of Man". Unusually brilliant colors. Perfect condition, appropriately framed in old pine frame refinished. Overall measurements 17 by 13". Fascinating picture showing stages man's life from cradle to grave. Quaint and amusing. $9.00

All Prices Net No C. O. D.'s Carrying Charges Extra Jec

WE WILL BUY
YOUR ENTIRE ANTIQUE STORE OR COMPLETE COLLECTIONS OF ANY KIND FOR SPOT CASH

MUSEUM STORES
St. Augustine, Fla.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

FREDERIC C. FREEMANTEL

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

So many of the early recording artists are no longer with us that it's especially pleasant to write about one still alive, in excellent voice and carrying on his professional activities with a vigor and enthusiasm that would be noteworthy in a man half his age.

I haven't yet met Frederic C. Freemantel, but I hope that he will be one of the welcome guests at the meeting of recording artists and record collectors to be held next September in the Garden City hotel on Long Island, New York. Even without the pleasure of personal acquaintance, it has been easy to deduce from correspondence and printed matter that, as well as being a fine singer and teacher, Mr. Freemantel is a remarkable man in other ways. He is also probably unique among Pioneer Recording Artists for being a member of a family listed in "Burke's Peerage" as among the British nobility.

This distinguished tenor's family name actually is Freemantle and is pronounced "free-mantle," as it is spelled. The singer explains, however, that during his entire professional career he has spelled the name as Freemantel and pronounced it "freeman-TELL," because the latter pronunciation "seems to lend itself to a more professional accent."

Frederick Charles Freemantel was born in England some 75 years ago. In 1881 he began his musical career as a choir boy in St. Bennett and All Saints Church, London. While still a child he sang at many of the Choir Festivals in Westminster Abbey and

St. Paul's Cathedral, under the training of Sir Joseph Barnby, and was one of the choristers especially chosen to sing at the great Jubilee celebrations held in St. Paul's for Queen Victoria. Later, he became interested in band and orchestral music and learned to play the cornet, trumpet and other brass instruments. After his voice changed, he resumed his studies with a succession of English and continental teachers and, while in his early twenties, made a series of concert and oratorio appearances, from 1896 to 1900, in Canada and the United States. After engaging in special studies at Western University in Pittsburgh, he was appointed director and conductor of the University Glee Club, the Carnegie Glee Club and the Apollo Club. He also appeared as soloist with the Pittsburgh Orchestra, conducted by Victor Herbert.

Soon afterward, Mr. Freemantel was appointed tenor soloist at the Madison Avenue Baptist church, New York, and served for five seasons as chorus master and assistant musical director of the Ocean Grove (N. J.) music festivals. During the festivals he appeared frequently as tenor soloist on the same platform with operatic notables, including Caruso, Sembrich, Schumann-Heink, Nordica, Edward Johnson and Herbert Witherspoon. He was the first tenor to essay a role in the Philadelphia Operatic Society, now the Philadelphia Opera Company. He sang Rhadames in "Aida" and "Raoul" in "The Huguenots" and had the leading part in an opera, "Hoshi San," written by John Luther Long, the librettist of "Madam Butterfly," with music by the Russian composer, Wassili Leps.

The recording experience of Mr. Freemantel — or Dr. Freemantel, as he is more generally known — began in 1907 when he was engaged by Victor to make a series of discs. Despite his extensive operatic and oratorio experience, he was not much called upon for that type of music, but instead his recording work was largely composed of hymn singing. His photograph appeared in the September, 1908, Victor catalog, with the following comment:

"Dr. Freemantel is an educated and experienced musician, and has a voice of rich quality and great range. He is the tenor soloist of the Cathedral in Philadelphia and is assistant director of the musical festivals at Ocean Grove."

All the Victor records then listed by Dr. Freemantel were single-faced. Three were 12-inch: 31691, "Ave Maria" (Franz Abt), sung in Latin; 31629, an Easter hymn, "The Resurrection" (Holden); and 31627, "Then You'll Remember Me," from Balfe's "Bohemian Girl." His 10-inch records consisted of 5068, "La donna é Mobile," from "Rigoletto," sung in Italian; and the following hymns: 5104, "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me" (Gould); 5141, "My Mother's Prayer" (Weeden); 5194, "Over the Line" (Phelps); 5261, "Shall You? Shall I?" (McGranahan); 5142, "Softly and Tenderly" (Thompson), and 5341, "The Ninety and Nine" (Sankey.)

After Victor introduced its double-faced records late in 1908, some of Dr. Freemantel's earlier discs were reissued in the double form, as were a few new numbers. Included in the double-faced list were: 16007, "My Jesus, I Love Thee," coupled with "Jesus, I am Resting," by Harold Jarvis; 16009, "Lord, I'm Coming Home," with "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," by Frank C. Stanley; 16532, "The Ninety and Nine," with "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," Hayden Quartet; 16533, "My Mother's Prayer," with "Lead, Kindly Light," Trinity Choir; 16742, "Jesus, Saviour Pilot Me," with "Nearer, My God to Thee," Hayden Quartet; 16743, "Softly and Tenderly," with "The Old-Time Religion," Hayden Quartet; and 35048 (12-inch), "Then You'll Remember Me," with "I'll Sing Thee Songs of Araby," by Harry Macdonough.

The first, and apparently only, two-minute Edison cylinder made by Dr. Freemantel was issued in October, 1908, about the time Victor was including some of his numbers in its first 160000 double-faced list. The Edison was No. 9962, "Ah! So Pure!" from "Martha," and was thus described: "A new singer in an old, old favorite. Mr. Freemantel has a sympathetic tenor of remarkable range, his tones in the upper register being especially pure and well sustained. His interpretation of Flotow's classic is masterly, to say the least."

When I asked Dr. Freemantel for some reminiscences of his recording experiences, he wrote:

"I did, as you say, record for the old Edison people on those cylinders, but not too much. I objected to the speed with which they wanted us to sing the things. The Victor folks were more reasonable. The Victor recording was done at that time in Camden, in one of the small cottages which then comprised the plant. And, believe me, it meant that you had to sing if you wanted your voice to record. It was nothing like these days of 'crooning.' . . . Really, I didn't know much in those days. At least it seems so today, but, of course, we thought we knew it all. That seems to be a part of the 'tenor get-up.' I know some youngsters today who think they are on top, but they will wake up some day."

Dr. Freemantel says his only appearance in opera in New York was in scenes from Meyerbeers's "Le Prophète." After several successful years as a singer and teacher in the East, he returned to London for study and research. Although his Victor list was not a long one, the numbers he had recorded were so much of the "standard" type as to let him keep his rank for years among the favorite artists. But during his long stay abroad, defects apparently developed in the matrices of his records, for they were re-made by Henry Burr and were reissued, at first under Burr's real name of Harry McClaskey and, a year or two later, with the more familiar Burr nom de disque.

The Freemantel recordings give no idea of the tenor's greatest musical interest, the little known songs of Beethoven, concerning which he long ago established himself as probably the world's foremost authority. He has given several recitals of Beethoven songs in New York, and they have won praise from eminent critics. In recent years, Dr. Freemantel has been most active as a vocal teacher, both in person and by correspondence. Many readers will recall seeing his advertisements in the New York Times and other publications. Within the past year or so he has published a book, "High Tones and How to Sing Them" and has kindly sent me an autographed copy. One of his latest achievements is a course on public speaking, illustrated by twelve 12-inch vinylite Victor records. Concerning the new course and its accompanying records, the veteran tenor wrote to me:

"I have just had the most thrilling experience of my life. I have just completed recording twelve 12-inch records for another course of mine . . . and to my mind they are wonderful records. If my voice, years ago, was half as good as it sounds on these records today, I should have been one of those 'Red Seal' boys you speak of. When they are pressed I should like to send you one or two, and then — you can compare with my old records . . . I'm more active than I've ever been in my life, and my voice is in supreme condition . . . The spirit of youth is reflected in everything that I am doing, so I can say from the bottom of my heart, 'Thank God for America.'"

As he had said he would, Dr. Freemantel sent me two of the records to be used in his public speaking course. I can echo his statements about the quality and condition of his voice. It's unfair, of course, to compare modern, electrically-amplified recording with the "horn method" used more than 40 years ago, but the voice quality of his latest discs is remarkably fine for a man more than 70, and sounds much more rounded and sonorous than on his old records. Frederick Freemantel still has a voice and knows how to use it. I have had room to touch only upon the more outstanding features of this fine artist's long career, but I'm sure all the readers of HOBBIES will join me in wishing him many more, active years of full achievement. I know that those who plan to take part in this year's observance of "John Bieling Day" will be hoping to meet him at Garden City.

RECORDS

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. n6698

WANTED: 9 1/2" discs for Stella music box. Also cigarette pictures.—Montclair Gallery, 716 Bloomfield Ave., Montclair, N. J. au6226

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. au128711

RARE OLD RECORDS: Vocal operatic, popular, Edisons, jazz, for sale reasonably priced. Send your want list.—Delano, 349 Lindenwoide, Ambler, Pa. s6885

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f128782

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. au12276

REGINA 20 3/4" metal discs wanted.—George Francis Schall, D. C., 3 Springfield Ave., Cranford, N. J. au3023

REDUCED PRICE SALE— Recordings 39c.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City, N. Y. jcl2487

WANTED 20 3/4" and 27" Regina discs "When You and I Were Young, Maggie", "Silver Threads Among the Gold", "The Band Played On." What titles have you?—Harry Happer, Pleasant Plains, Ill. s3604

MISCELLANEOUS

LESSER MASTERS With Tone. Inexpensive and tonally good hand-made fiddles. Books on the violin invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship. Antique musical instruments. Lists free.—Houghton Music Co., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. s124812

2000 UNSORTED cylinder records and Edison machine. All from old estate: operatics, vocals, etc. Best offer takes all. Cash or stamp collection.—Aztec Supply Co., Rock Island, Ill. jv1181

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. s3832

FOR SALE: Edison Diamond Disk phonograph in excellent condition and 50 records, $25 express collect.—Robert C. Moon, 812 Washington St., Tallahassee, Florida. s3223

COLLECTION OF 66 old and classical records, single-faced, to the highest bidder. List on request, stamp please.—Mrs. Eugene Loe, Beardstown, Ill. jly1161

BACK SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Bal-lads, rags, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my12058

AMERICAN COLLECTORS are invited to subscribe to The Record Collector

Monthly Magazine of the Bol Canto Club, England.
The only periodical entirely devoted to the hobby of collecting celebrity vocal recordings, interesting articles, discographies of famous singers, worthwhile discussions.
Sample 30 cents. Subscription $3.00.
J. DENNIS

J. DENNIS, 1 Pine View Road,
IPSWICH, Suffolk, England.

10,000 OPERATIC Records—For Sale, G & T, HMV, Fonotipias, Victor, Columbia, etc. Send want list to—John Scignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. jly6005

THE LAST of the Cremonas. Booklet listing thirty violins and their makers. Postpaid $1.—Isador Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124431

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6844

FOR SALE: Regina, disc type, music box and extra records. Cabinet and machine in perfect condition.—Tom Perrin, Augusta Herald, Augusta, Ga. au3803

PHONOGRAPH CYLINDERS bought for my personal collection. 500 duplicates to exchange.—Benj. Franklin, Haynesville, Virginia. jly3012

MUSIC BOX COMBS repaired by expert. New teeth properly installed and tuned. Cylinders entirely repinned.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. jly3223

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. d6868

SWISS MUSICAL Units $3.50. Musical album stands (plays Wedding March). Music boxes.—Novelties of Distinction, 131 W. 42nd, New York 18, N. Y. au3082

FOR SALE: Weber sq. piano, carved legs, usable condition $150, crated — Mary W. Greene, Clinton, Wis. s3422

WANTED — Melodian Music Rack, state width.—A. A. Houston, 754 Grain Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn. jly119

A Famous Violin

Ole Bull, the famed Norwegian violinist, owned one of the rare Stradivarius violins. The violin, made in 1687, was one of eight inlaid violins made by the master, Stradivarius.

When Ole Bull came to America on a concert tour after the Civil War he brought with him the violin. During one entire winter he lived at Cambridge, Mass., a neighbor of Longfellow's. At that time the poet was writing "Tales of a Wayside Inn," and Ole Bull was included in the group as "the Musician." Longfellow undoubtedly heard Mr. Bull play many times as this reference in his famous work indicates:

"The instrument on which he played
Was in Cremona's workshop made
By a great master of the past,
Ere yet was lost the art divine.
Fashioned of maple and of pine
That in Tyrolian's forests vast
Has rocked and wrestled in the blast,
Exquisite was it in design,
Perfect in each minutest part,
A marvel of the luteist's art:
And in its hollow chamber, that,
The maker from whose hands it came
Had written his unrivaled name:
'Antonius Stradivarius.'"

From Ole Bull's hands the violin passed to John Hart, a well known London collector, then to the collections of Charles Plowden and C. Oldman. At the death of Mr. Oldman it was bequeathed to the British Museum, but Ysaye, Sauret, Wilhelmj and other violinists urged that this beautiful instrument should be restored to the musical world. Not long after its withdrawal from the British Museum, Mr. Kochanski, attracted by its tone and beauty, purchased it for his own use.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

REINALD WERRENRATH

My chest expanded a couple of inches when I read a letter in which Reinald Werrenrath, the distinguished former baritone of the Metropolitan Opera, said that he is planning to attend the John Bieling Day party in the Garden City, Long Island, hotel on Friday, September 10th. Because Mr. Werrenrath undoubtedly is one of the most outstanding singers who means to attend the first large-scale meeting of pioneer recording artists and their admirers, I think it will be well to insert this article in advance of the party.

Reinald Werrenrath was born in Brooklyn on August 7, 1883. His father was George Werrenrath, a native of Copenhagen, Denmark, who was famous in Europe as a tenor.

Collectors' and Music Lovers' PARADISE

- Five decades of classical vocals and instrumentals. Specializing in G&T, Zonophone, Fonotipia, Favorite, etc. . . . also inexpensive reissues and rerecordings.
- Fine line of out-of-print singles and albums and pre-war pressings at premium prices.
- Full line of current classical records and albums at regular list prices, including many hard-to-find records.
- Authorized dealers RCA-Victor, Columbia, Decca, English Decca, Parlophone, London Records, CRS, Herrold, Cetra, Vox, Muscraft, Alco, International, etc.

Order your new classical releases and your rare collectors' items from a reliable store and mail order house.

The RECORD HUNTER

1194 Lexington Ave., near 81st Street,
New York 28, N. Y.

Exquisitely inlaid rosewood music box, 36" long. The 17 3/4" cylinder is about 4" in diam. and plays 8 tunes. Zither attachment, large double springs, plays half hour with one winding. Beautiful tone and arrangement of music. Write for program and price.

★O★

A. BORNAND

333 Fifth Ave., Pelham 65, N.Y.

He appeared in the principal opera houses of Scandinavia, Germany, Italy and England, before coming to the United States in 1875 to sing at Plymouth church, Brooklyn, where Henry Ward Beecher was pastor. Henry Camp, a well-known American basso, was the church's choir-master. George Werrenrath obtained living quarters in Camp's home, and fell in love with the choir-master's third oldest daughter, an accomplished soprano. They were married, and became the parents of Reinald.

The baritone attended public schools in Brooklyn, and was graduated from Boys High School in 1901. In 1905 he was graduated from New York University. The university gave him the degree of Doctor of Music in 1932 and in 1945 he received the alumni award for meritorious service. While at N. Y. U., Werrenrath was leader of the glee club for three years, before being succeeded by his former room-mate, Deems Taylor. He resumed leadership of the glee club in 1906 and 1907. The baritone had already been singing in Brooklyn churches and male quartets since 1899, and has a clipping from the Brooklyn Eagle of May 10, 1899, terming him "a singer of great promise." He made his "big time" debut at the Worcester, Mass., Festival of September, 1907, when he appeared in a Wagnerian program with Ernestine Schumann-Heink, George Hamlin, Emilio de Gogorza and other famous opera and concert stars. He was re-engaged for the season of 1908 to create the title role in the American premiere of Sir Edward "Caractacus," and then filled engagements in New England and other Eastern States. In the spring of 1909 he was the soloist on tour with the Chicago Symphony, and in 1915-16 he toured for three months with Geraldine Farrar. Mr. Werrenrath (or Dr. Werrenrath, as his degree entitles him to be called) made his debut at the Metropolitan as Silvio in "Pagliacci," with Caruso, Easton and Scotti on February 19, 1919, and sang a total of six weeks during the following two seasons. Besides Silvio, his favorite roles were Valentine in "Faust," Amonasro in "Aida" and Escamillo in "Carmen."

Mr. Werrenrath has sung with every major symphony orchestra in the United States, has appeared many times at virtually every important music festival, and has made more than 3,500 concert appearances—probably more than any other living American artist. He made a European tour in 1913, with Frank LaForge as his accompanist, and also toured Europe in 1920, 1921, 1924 and 1928.

In more recent years, the baritone, who lives in New York City, has been kept extremely busy, teaching and conducting in four cities and traveling almost 900 miles a week, in addition to appearing in recitals. His main studio is at Carnegie Hall, but he teaches weekly at the Washington, D. C., Musical institute, and the Conservatories in Albany and Troy, N. Y. He says that he has been a conductor about as long as he has been singing and is "very happy as director of the famous Mendelssohn Club of Albany and the National Press Club Chorus of Washington."

REINALD WERRENRATH

Mr. Werrenrath made his first Edison records in 1903, when he was 20, as the baritone of the Criterion Male Quartet. However, the first Criterion Quartet record wasn't issued by Edison until January, 1905. It was 8866, "Little Tommy Went a-Fishing." Members of the Criterion, besides Werrenrath, were Robert R. Rainey, first tenor; William A. Washburn, second tenor; and Walter A. Downie, basso. As time went on, the quartet's personnel changed completely. During its best-known period it was composed of John Young, Horatio Rench, George W. Reardon and Donald Chalmers. John Young, who is also coming to the Garden City party, told me some years ago that the then existing Criterion Quartet was descended from the one founded by "the famous baritone, Mr. Reinald Werrenrath." Besides making a few Edison records, the early Criterion also did some singing for Zonophone and Columbia. Dr. Werrenrath recalls, too, that he made Zonos with another male quartet, of which Geoffrey O'Hara, the song writer, was second tenor.

In August, 1907, Edison issued the first solo record by Werrenrath. It was 9604, "My Dear," a sentimental song with words by Dave Reed, Jr., and music by the leading ballad writer of the period, Ernest R. Ball. Said the catalog: "Mr. Werrenrath makes his first appearance as one of our soloists in this song, and it is safe to prophesy that he will soon become a prime favorite. He starts off well with his first song, for 'My

'Dear' will be as popular as its composers' great success, 'Love Me and the World is Mine.' . . . The melody is very tuneful, and Mr. Werrenrath's sympathetic, full baritone voice is admirably suited to the charming sentiments of the words."

The young singer recorded for Edison for two or three years and made some four-minute Amberol records, later incorporated into the unbreakable Blue Amberol series. He also sang baritone occasionally in the Knickerbocker Quartet, whose personnel varied according to whatever singers were available when a quartet record was scheduled. For instance, "The Old Oaken Bucket" was by Young, Werrenrath, Harvey Hindermeyer and William F. Hooley. Hooley is dead, but the other members of this group are all expected to be on hand for John Bieling Day.

But it was with Victor that Werrenrath was longest and most intimately associated. He says that, after the Worcester Festival, deGorza arranged for him to have a Victor audition, which resulted in his singing for the company from 1908 to 1929. His first Victor solo was listed in the supplement for July, 1909, and was No. 31738, a twelve-inch, single-faced record of "Danny Deever," a number with which he has been identified since almost the beginning of his career. The catalog editor, Sam Rous, wrote: 'It is with pleasure that the Victor announces an arrangement which enables it to present records by this well-known baritone. Mr. Werrenrath has chosen for his first number Damrosch's well-known setting of the famous Barrack Room Ballad of Kipling's, which he delivers in a highly dramatic way; giving one of the most graphic and realistic renditions which has ever been heard on the concert stage.'

The baritone's long and prosperous association with Victor was now well under way. He soon became an exclusive Victor artist. But here is something he wrote me which I hadn't suspected and which will come as a surprise to practically all record collectors, especially those who cherish Hayden Quartet discs: "The name of Johnny Bieling evokes some of my best and oldest memories. You may not know that in my earliest days with the Victor Company, Sam Rous, the baritone of the Hayden Quartet, was made editor of the catalog. Finding his new job was a busy one, I was made the baritone, with Johnny, Jack Macdonald (Harry Macdonough) and Bill Hooley, and sang with them for several years. This makes me the sole survivor, as Sam is gone." The Victor company never announced to the public that the quartet personnel had been changed, and the picture in the catalog always showed "Dudley" as the Hayden baritone. However, several records, such as "Dear Delightful Women," "The Orange and Black" and "Old Nassau," were issued as by Werrenrath and the Hayden Quartet, and I have a few records, listed only as being by the quartet, in which Werrenrath takes the lead. But I had always assumed that, through some slip-up, he wasn't given label credit, and hadn't supposed that he was actually the Hayden's baritone for several years. This information comes as a real collector's item! In those early days, Werrenrath was also the duet partner of that excellent tenor, the late Reed Miller.

Singing with the Hayden was only a small part of the concerted work Mr. Werrenrath did for Victor. For 15 years he was the baritone of the Victor Light Opera and Opera Companies (or the "Uproar Companies," as Olive Kline, another member, jokingly refers to them.) He was also the baritone of the Orpheus Quartet, whose other members were Lambert Murphy, Macdonough and Hooley. He sang in the Trinity Choir and in the Lyric Quartet (Macdonough, Werrenrath, Kline and Elsie Baker.) And he is the only artist who started on the lowest-priced Black Label records, and worked his way up through the single-faced Purple and double-faced Blue Labels to the dignity of being a Red Seal star. It's worthy of mention, too, that for a good many years a Werrenrath record was the last to appear in the Victor's alphabetical catalog. This was a German version of a Hugo Wolf song, "Zur Ruh", "Zuh Ruh", whose title was translated as "To Rest."

The baritone's first Blue Label record was issued in August, 1915. It was sung in Italian and, like many of Werrenrath's records of that period, was intended especially for educational use in public schools. Previously, however, he had appeared on a Red Seal record—a version of the Rigoletto Quartet, issued in November, 1914. The other artists were Lucrezia Bori, soprano; Josephine Jacoby, mezzo-soprano, and John McCormack, tenor. Incidentally, Mr. Werrenrath says he was told that, among the higher-priced records, his sold second only to McCormack's.

For four years Mr. Werrenrath's records appeared in the Blue Label series, although he occasionally made a Black Label offering under the nom de disque of Edward Hamilton. Then in December, 1919, he became one of the glamorous Red Seal galaxy, when his single-faced record of "Molly," an Irish love song by

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 37)

IRCC

- Unique vocal and dramatic historical recordings.
- Exclusive first editions and re-recordings.

Founded 1932.

International Record Collectors' Club

318 Reservoir Ave., Bridgeport 6, Conn.
aup

MISCELLANEOUS

LESSER MASTERS With Tone. Inexpensive and tonally good hand-made fiddles. Books on the violin invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship. Antique musical instruments. Lists free.—Houghton Music Co., 12 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. s124812

SWISS MUSIC BOX, exquisitely inlaid rosewood case, 31" long on matching table; 6 cylinders, 8 selections on each. Completely reconditioned; beautiful tone.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. au1012

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. s3332

FOR SALE: Edison Diamond Disk phonograph in excellent condition and 50 records, $25 express collect.—Robert C. Moon, 812 Washington St., Tallahassee, Florida. s3223

HAVE YOUR OLD violin appraised for insurance or closing an estate. You may own a masterpiece. Fee $5.—Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 58 S. W. 27th St., Coral Gables, Florida. jly120041

BACK SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Bal-lads, rags, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my12998

MELODEONS—Reed Organs. Bought, sold, repaired.—C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond Ave., Grand Rapids 6, Mich. my12219

SMALL SWISS Music Box (new) with 15 discs $30. Additional tunes, 60c each. Regina tune discs, 15½", 20¾", 27", Mira 18½", Criterion 20½". Piano rolls, 65 note (1891 to 1906), also 88 note and Welte-Mignon. Wanted any lateral cut recordings of "Silent Night", also Mira 18½" discs. Will exchange No. 1 lists of Regina, 15½" tune discs for other original lists, any make, any size.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. s3525

THE LAST of the Cremonas. Booklet listing thirty violins and their makers. Postpaid $1.—Isador Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. dl124431

FOR SALE: Regina, Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6844

FOR SALE: Regina, disc type, music box and extra records. Cabinet and machine in perfect condition.—Tom Perrin, Augusta Herald, Augusta, Ga. au3808

FOR SALE: Knabe-Gayle Piano, over hundred years old; solid rosewood case. Make me offer.—Ms. W. F. A. Rash, Statesville, N. C., Rt. 7, Box 480. au1091

MUSIC BOX COMBS repaired by expert. New teeth properly installed and tuned. Cylinders entirely repinned.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. o3223

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. d6888

SWISS MUSICAL Units $3.50. Musical album stands (plays Wedding March). Music boxes.—Novelties of Distinction, 131 W. 42nd, New York 18, N. Y. au3082

FOR SALE: Weber sq. piano, carved legs, usable condition $150, crated — Mary W. Greene, Clinton, Wis. s3422

ROSEWOOD Square Piono, Vose, excellent tone. Also Esty organ; both in perfect condition. Make offer. — D. Phillips, 158 East Ave., Norwalk, Conn. au1571

For Sale—10 electric coin-operated piano orchestras and Virtuosos. Also 1,500 new Edison disc records at 10c each in quantities. Would like to buy extra music rolls for the above pianos and music boxes. — Lewis J. Kerstein, 32 South St., Freehold, New Jersey. o3048

An old toadstone ring.

in 1569, says—"There is to be found in the heads of old and great toads a stone they call borax or stelon;" and he adds—"They, being used as rings, give forewarning against venom." Their composition is not actually known; by some they are thought to be a stone—by others, a shell; but of whatever they may be formed, there is to be seen in them, as may be noticed in the engraving, a figure resembling that of a toad, but whether produced accidentally or by artificial means is not known, though, according to Albertus Magnus, the stone always bore the figure on its surface, at the time it was taken out of the toad's head. Lupton, in his "1000 Notable Things," says—"A toadstone, called crepudina, touching any part envenomed, hurt, or stung with rat, spider, wasp, or any other venomous beast, ceases the pain or swelling thereof." The well known lines in Shakespeare are doubtless in allusion to the virtue which Lupton says it possesses:—

"Sweet are the uses of adversity;
Which like a toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head."

Ben Jonson also in the Fox, has,—

"Were you enamoured on his copper rings,
His saffron jewel, with the toadstone in't?"

and Lyly, in his Euphues—

"The foule toad hath a faire stone in his head."

The ring pictured here is a work of the 15th century, and is considered to be a very perfect specimen.—From an Old Book of Wonders

—o—

CLASSIFIED AD RATES
8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

Old Gold and Silver Shoppe

P. O. Box 142

R. E. JELLISON, Prop.

HAZARDVILLE, CONNECTICUT

Established 15 years

MAIL TO BE HANDLED AT THIS ADDRESS WHILE IN NEW ENGLAND.

ANTIQUE JEWELRY

1. Pair of chain mesh bracelets, heavy gold filled, 5/16" wide. Slide has 3 halved pearls in center of heavy, ornate backing. Each has a 6-strand tassel. $36.00
2. Beautiful chain mesh bracelet, 14-K solid gold, 1/4" wide. Chased small slide and end of black enamel. Very dainty. Minor repair of chain mesh near the slide. 36.00
3. Old rough cut garnet beads, 16", 18" and 28" long. Each 10.00
4. Small, round, genuine, graduated coral beads, 18" long. True coral color. 9.00
5. Coral pin, 14-K solid gold backing; carved flowers, leaves, fruit and baby's head. True coral shade 10.00
6. Distinctive picture of George Washington, oval, handpainted on porcelain; gold filled over silver frame, 1 1/2 x 1" 10.00
7. Attractive 10-K solid gold crescent pin, 1 1/2" long. 6 Pearls and 6 blue sapphires set alternately across face of crescent. 12.00
8. Unusual topaz bar pin, 2 1/4" long. Topaz in center is 3/4" long with parallel facets. Brown agate on each end of topaz joined by a band of 10-K solid gold. 12.00
9. Lady's star sapphire ring, 14-K solid gold Tiffany 6 pronged mounting. Star sapphire is oval to round in shape and is slightly better than 1/4" in diameter. Color of stone is between light pink and orchid and star is well centralized. 48.00
10. Marquis type rose diamond, 14-K cluster ring, 5/8" across top. 17 Rose diamonds forming clusters. Size 4 36.00
11. Oval shaped, 10-K solid gold rose diamond cluster ring. Large rose diamond, 3/16" diam. in center surrounded by 12 small rose diamonds 36.00
12. Exquisite handpainted picture of Ruth on porcelain, 14-K solid gold rope effect mounting, 1 7/8 x 1 1/2". A buy at 25.00

STERLING AND COIN SILVER

1. Attractive cut glass inkwell. Chased sterling silver round hinged top. Glass is 2 3/8" square. Perfect condition. 10.00
2. Late sterling silver cigarette box, 4 1/4" long x 3 1/4" wide. Wood lining and hinged top 12.00
3. Heavyweight grape shears, sterling silver entirely, chased handle, 6" long. 12.00
4. Late heavyweight candy dish in sterling silver, leaf shaped with 9 large scallops around dish. Can be used as large ash tray. 6 1/4 x 4" 9.00
5. Pie knives, New Southern rose pattern by Manchester, ornate floral sterling handles, chrome over steel flat blades. Each 4.25
6. Tea caddy spoons, all old, unusual and attractive, heavyweight sterling silver. Each 5.00
7. Sterling silver thimbles, size 7. Each .60
8. Sterling silver pierced, late salt spoons. Each .90
9. 4 Piece tea set: teapot, coffee pot, sugar and creamer, late, plain, perfect condition, silver plate on copper, no initials. Will put in matching tray, plain, 24x12" (nick on edge of tray). All for 36.00

All of the following are old sterling silver flatware patterns, reconditioned and have no initials.

10. POINTED ANTIQUE pattern by Reed and Barton, 12 teaspoons, ea. $2; 12 demitasse spoons, ea. 1.80
11. IRIS pattern by Durgin, 6 ice cream spoons with Tines, ea. 2.00
12. REPOUSSE pattern by Kirk, large steak set, knife and fork, pr. 9.00
13. ROSE pattern by Steiff, 6 salad forks, ea. $3.95; 1 teaspoon 2.00
14. VIRGINIA CARVEL by Towle; 3 dessert spoons, ea. $3; 1 pickle fork 3.00
15. LADY CONSTANCE by Towle; 6 knives, ea. $3; 4 luncheon forks, ea. $3; 4 dessert spoons, ea. $3; 8 teaspoons $1.50; 1 sugar shell $3; 1 butter knife $3; 1 butter spreader 2.50
16. PRISCILLA ALDEN by Watson, large pierced tomato server 3.00
17. ORLEANS pattern by Watson, 12 spoons 3.95
18. WASHINGTON pattern by R. Wallace and Son, 6 butter spreaders, ea. 3.00
19. FURITAN pattern by Wallace, 1 luncheon fork 3.00
20. VIOLET pattern by Wallace; sugar shell $3; 2 dessert spoons, ea. $3; 6 teaspoons, ea. 2.00
21. LOUIS XV by Whiting Division of Gorham; 1 butter knife $3.50; 1 fish fork $3.50; 1 old style pie server, 9" long 9.00
22. LILY OF THE VALLEY by Whiting, 1 teaspoon 2.00
23. BERRY patt. by Whiting, 4 teaspoons, ea. 2.00
24. BUTTERCUP pattern by Gorham; 1 dinner knife $3.95; 1 dinner fork $3.95; 1 table serving spoon $4.50; 2 dessert spoons $3; 1 cream soup $3.50; 2 teaspoons, ea. 1.80
25. IMPERIAL CHRYSANTHEMUM by Gorham; 6 heavyweight dessert spoons $3.50; 2 teaspoons, ea. $2; 1 jam or small berry server 8.00
26. PLYMOUTH pattern by Gorham; 1 cream ladle $3.95; 6 butter spreaders, ea. 3.00
27. VERSAILLE pattern by Gorham, 1 luncheon fork 3.95
28. FAIRFAX pattern by Gorham; 1 spread line serving fork, 6" long $5; 6 tea knives, ea. $3; 1 sugar shell $3; 12 salad forks, Old English "L" engraved, ea. $3; 1 large cold meat fork, 9" long 9.00
29. VIRGINIANA by Gorham; 7 luncheon forks, ea. $3.95; 1 small 3 tined fork, 6" long 5.00
30. OLD COLONIAL by Towle; 6 luncheon forks, ea. $3.95; 4 dinner knives, ea. $3.95; 1 cream soup spoon $4.50; 2 teaspoons, ea. 2.00

Many other odd pieces in sterling silver old patterns. Write your wants. Sterling silver souvenir spoons in teaspoon. Five o'clock teaspoon and demitasse size, each $1.50.

M. Y. G. U. A. N. T. E.

1. Add 20% Federal Excise Tax to price unless dealer. 2. Please send check or M. O. with order. 3. All items sent insured. No C. O. D. Please add stamps and insurance charges. 4. Immediate refund on prompt return of any item not to your approval.

SILVER

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 35)

cause it had been founded by the independent Quakers it had a character of its own, and copied old world ideas less than any other early large city.

It was the Philadelphia of Benjamin Franklin, when it was the capitol, of Robert Morris, of Aaron Burr, and often visited by Lafayette.

To serve tea was as fashionable as to give cocktails to one's friends to-day.

Helen S. Foote, assistant curator of decorative arts of The Cleveland Museum of Art, Cleveland authority on silver, says that the teapot would be known anywhere as a piece of Philadelphia silver by the little pierced gallery railing which goes around the top of the pot. Early American silver of no other locality has this feature.

According to tradition, when Dr. Edwards was an old widower, he lived with a family named Robertson who had come to Philadelphia from Scotland, had been naturalized and was connected with the U. S. Mint. At Dr. Edward's death he bequeathed his teapot to the Robertson family. It was from a direct descendant that The Cleveland Museum purchased it.

You can see it in the Museum, (any day but Mondays) in the northeast alcove of Gallery I, where are quantities of fine silver pieces of the Museum's collections.

—o—

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 33)

Rida Johnson Young and Victor Herbert, came out. And he remained one of the most popular Red Seal singers during the remainder of his recording career. Several other singers, including Kline, Baker, Murphy and Lucy Isabelle Marsh, also appeared on Red Seal records as well as on Black and Blue labels, but became Red Seal artists only after the Blue Label had been discontinued. Werrenrath was the only one to work his way up in the manner of an Alger hero while all types of labels were still in use.

With all his achievements, Reinald Werrenrath is a modest man. He humorously says that he has "the typical old gaffer's love of reminiscing," and adds that he "certainly got all the breaks, and was more or less a pet of Cal Childs," who was for many years the head of Victor's Red Seal recording activities. His career has been one of the most interesting and outstanding of any American singer of his time, and I'm earnestly hoping that nothing occurs at the last minute to deprive me — and many of his other admirers — of the pleasure of having him with us at Garden City.

Calling All Collectors

Get ready for the big event of the year:

The CHICAGO ANTIQUES EXPOSITION & HOBBY FAIR
— STEVENS HOTEL —

October 8-13, inclusive

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

SYLVESTER LOUIS OSSMAN, "THE BANJO KING" I

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

When the biography of Eugene Carl Rose appeared, I remarked that, in the early days of the phonograph, instrumentalists as a rule didn't arouse the same personal feeling as makers of vocal records. For every disc or cylinder buyer who concerned himself with the identity of a flute virtuoso, a trombone player or a xylophonist, there probably were a hundred who thought of their favorite comedians and ballad singers as treasured friends. That, I think, was largely true because the human voice is a so much more intimate thing than any musical instrument can be, no matter how well it is played. Not only that, but vocal records ordinarily came out better on the old-time machines than the instrumentals.

But Sylvester Louis Ossman, Sr., was an exception to this rule. And here I'm pausing long enough to imagine the bewilderment the average collector of old records will feel when he sees Mr. Ossman's name printed as I have given it at the head of this article. Throughout his career, the "Banjo King" called himself by the shortened form of Vess L. Ossman, and probably few of his admirers have suspected that wasn't the name he was christened with.

Name changes aside, however, for more than half a generation, beginning in the 1890's, the banjo was not only the most popular recording instrument, but Vess Ossman was the best selling maker of instrumental records and one of the top recording performers of his time. He was so popular and such an accomplished artist, in fact, that if I were now compiling a list of the "Supreme Fifteen" pioneer record makers, such as I published in HOBBIES a few years ago, I'd probably drop one of the names I included then and include Ossman. When the banjo was mentioned during Vess's heyday, the average record buyer thought, as a matter of course, of the brilliant player who was known to his fellow artists by the expressive nickname of "Plunks." A good many years later, after he provided the accompaniment to Arthur Collin's record of "When Uncle Joe Plays a Rag On His Old Banjo," he was also sometimes referred to as "Uncle Vess." But "Plunks" was his more popular nickname, and one of his early Victor records, No. 1664, which I'd very much like to find, was called "Old 'Plunks' New Coon Song Medley."

It wasn't that Mr. Ossman lacked competition. I'm not certain that he was the first musician to make banjo records for commercial use. While the old Columbia company still had its headquarters in Washington, D. C., it issued a cylinder record catalog for 1896, in which 15 Vess Ossman records were listed with the comment: "Mr. Ossman is without doubt one of the finest banjoists in the world. His records are wonderfully loud. They all have the true banjo tone." But at the same time Columbia was also making banjo duets by two well known Washington players, Cullen and Collins. And I have seen a seven-inch Berliner disc, dated October 18, 1896, on which one Steph Clement gives a banjo rendition of "Mittoam Gallop." After 1900, too, a young fellow named Fred Van Epps (that was the way his name appears to have been spelled at first, but it was soon shortened to Van Eps) pushed himself forward as one of the leading banjoists and record makers. Also in the running was Ruby Brooks, who made Edison cylinders until his death in 1906.

And the English phonograph companies of the early 1900's likewise had a banjoist whom they sometimes termed the world's greatest. He was Olly Oakley, whose recording career lasted longer than either Ossman's or Van Eps's, and who may still be alive and making an occasional record. Other well-known English banjo players were Joe Morley, Charlie Rogers, Alfred Cammayner, Emile Grimshaw, John Pidoux and Burt Earle. Except among "hill-billy" players, the banjo has been almost obsolete in the United States in recent years, but it's good to note that, thanks to Harry Reser's Apollo record of "Banjo Boogie," and Art Mooney's version of "I'm Looking Over a Four-Leaf Clover," it's now making a comeback. From 35 to 50 years ago, it was certainly the most popular instrument, aside from the piano, in both the United States and England.

In view of his formerly great popularity, which has made him a prominent figure in phonograph folk lore, it's surprising how long it took me to learn the important facts of Vess Ossman's life story. Not until I recently entered into correspondence with his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Vess L. Ossman, Jr., of St. Louis, and his daughter, Mrs. Annadele Mulligan, of San Pedro, California, was I able to obtain such vital statistics as the date of the "Banjo King's" birth and death. Both Mrs. Helen Ossman and Mrs. Mulligan have been most kind about helping me to write a more comprehensive sketch of Mr. Ossman than would otherwise have been possible, and I deeply appreciate their aid.

Until a few weeks ago, the nearest I had come to a biographical sketch of the "Banjo King" appeared in the Columbia Record, the Columbia Company's "house organ," for June, 1904. It was accompanied by a photograph, and read:

"We present, herewith, a picture of Mr. Vess L. Ossman, whose banjo records have won fame for him wherever the graphophone is used. He is, no doubt, one of the finest, fastest and most accurate players the world has ever known. With him banjo playing is an art, and no one, whose knowledge of banjo music is confined to hearing some unskilled amateur's tum-tumming, has any conception of the amount and quality of music—real music—which Mr. Ossman produces on his favorite instrument.

"A London critic, himself a banjoist, once said to Mr. Ossman that when he heard him playing he felt inclined to go home and burn his banjo. Mr. Ossman promptly replied, 'When I hear a better player than myself I work all the harder.' No doubt hard work and infinite patience form the basis of the masterly skill acquired by Mr. Ossman, and which has secured for him the distinction of being called upon to entertain President Roosevelt, King Edward VII, President Henry of Battenburg, Senator Chauncy M. Depew, the Duchess of Lanchester, and many other prominent people. No collection of graphophone records is complete without one or more of Mr. Ossman's wonderful banjo records. They are so clean, so full of harmony, and so far superior to the average player's work, that hearing one inspires a desire for more of them."

A highly complimentary statement—but it says nothing about Mr. Ossman's birth date, birthplace, or nationality—information which, after a great deal of investigation, I am now able to give. First, I shall quote from the letter written to me by his daughter, Mrs. Mulligan:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: I shall be happy to give you what little information I can regarding my father, but as I was his youngest daughter and he died when I was fifteen, there is very little I remember. However, he was born on August 21, 1868, in Hudson, New York, son of Frederick and Anna Ossman. My mother was born in Hyde Park, New York, on March 8, 1871. Her maiden name was Eunice Smith." The letter then gives some information concerning Mr. Ossman's musical associates, which I shall refer to later. Mrs. Ossman died in San Pedro about 19 years ago.

Mrs. Mulligan's letter may be supplemented by these notes from Mrs. Vess Ossman, junior:

"Mr. Ossman has been dead for 25 years . . . He died December 8, 1923, and is buried in Valhalla cemetery, St. Louis, Mo. . . He collapsed

RARE OLD VIOLIN
Giuseppi Gaspare, 1517,
Good Condition. $8,000.

Owner R. C. ADAMS
Rosharon, Texas

while playing an extra show for charity at a theatre in Minneapolis, Minn., and died one week later.

"I know from my husband, Vess, Jr., that Mr. Ossman played two command performances for the King of England in 1903 or 1904 . . . He started playing banjo at the age of twelve. Why he took up the banjo I do not know, but a sister also played. She died at the age of sixteen. His father owned a bakery, raised a large family, and was of German extraction.

"The children of Mr. Ossman were Vess, Jr., Raymond and Annadele, and three who died in infancy. Grandchildren: Vess III, Felicity Carol and Helen Frances, children of Vess, Jr.; Eunice, Raymond, Jr., Nadine and Ethel, children of Raymond; and Glorian, Timothy and Rosemary, children of Annadele. Raymond has three grandchildren."

Mrs. Ossman adds: "We have several of Mr. Ossman's records, and I have tried many times to find more for my children, without success." She assures me that she would be very grateful if readers of HOBBIERS, who have duplicate Vess Ossman records, or others by him that they can spare, would send them to her, to be included with the family collection. Her address is:

Mrs. Helen Ossman, 5365 St. Louis Avenue, St. Louis 20, Missouri.

Next month I shall begin tracing the Banjo King's career in detail.

(To be continued.)

MISCELLANEOUS

LESSER MASTERS With Tone. Inexpensive and tonally good hand-made fiddles. Books on the violin invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship. Antique musical instruments. Lists free.—Houghton Music Co., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. s124812

11 1/2 INCH DISCS for Criterion music box. Also classical rolls for Duo-Art player piano. State price.—L. A. Rear, 1103 Monterey Road, South Pasadena, Calif. s1281

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. s3832

FOR SALE: Edison Diamond Disk phonograph in excellent condition and 50 records, $25 express collect.—Robert C. Moon, 812 Washington St., Tallahassee, Florida. s3223

HAVE YOUR OLD violin appraised for insurance or closing an estate. You may own a masterpiece. Fee $5.—Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 58 S. W. 27th St., Coral Gables, Florida. Jly120041

BACK SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, rags, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my12998

MELODEONS—Reed Organs. Bought, sold, repaired.—C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond Ave., Grand Rapids 6, Mich. my12219

SMALL SWISS Music Box (new) with 15 discs $30. Additional tunes, 60c each. Regina tune discs, 15 1/2", 20 3/4" 27"; Mira 18 1/2", Criterion 20 3/4". Piano rolls, 65 note (1891 to 1906), also 88 note and Welte-Mignon. Wanted any lateral cut recordings of "Silent Night", also Mira 18 1/2" discs. Will exchange No. 1 lists of Regina, 15 1/2" tune discs for other original lists, any make, any size.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. s3526

Old Walking Sticks

From an old BOOK OF WONDERS

It would seem that at the present time the fashion of carrying walking-sticks has to a considerable extent "gone out". So great is the bustle in our city thoroughfares, that the use of a staff, except by those who are lame, is seldom adopted by business people. Professional men still affect the custom, however; and your City man, although he may repudiate the use of a walking-stick in town, straps a good sapling to his portmanteau whenever he has a chance of getting amongst the woods and green fields. About a century and a-half ago everybody carried a cane. Dr. Johnson, Oliver Goldsmith, and a host of others, considered a good stick as necessary as a coat; and a collection of these staves would, if they could be had at the present day, be valuable, not only as relics, but also as an indication of the characters of the owners, perhaps.

In former times, a golden-mounted stick or staff was commonly used by both the male and female heads of families. Queen Elizabeth carried one of these towards the end of her life. They were then more frequently used, however, as a sign of authority than for any other purpose.

The staff was a weapon long before flint-headed arrows and such-like instruments were invented. Sheriffs, and others high in authority, have wands or staffs borne before them on important occasions; the bishops' pastoral staff is as old as episcopal authority.

THE LAST of the Cremonas. Booklet listing thirty violins and their makers. Postpaid $1.—Isador Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124431

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6216

MUSIC BOX COMBS repaired by expert. New teeth properly installed and tuned. Cylinders entirely reprinted.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. n3863

FOR SALE, cylinder phonographs with horns, old record catalogues.—Charles Clark, Wellington, Ohio. s1401

MUSIC BOX COMBS repaired by expert. New teeth properly installed and tuned. Cylinders entirely reprinted.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. o3223

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. d6388

SWISS MUSICAL UNITS $3. Musical Albums, Boxes.—131 West 42nd, New York 18, N. Y. n3281

FOR SALE: Weber sq. piano, carved legs, usable condition $150, crated — Mary W. Greene, Clinton, Wis. s3422

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, disc, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. 16616

For Sale—10 electric coin-operated piano orchestras and Virtuosos. Also 1,500 new Edison disc records at 10c each in quantities. Would like to buy extra music rolls for the above pianos and music boxes.—Lewis J. Kerstein, 32 South St., Freehold, New Jersey. o3048

In former times the running footmen, who, in a body of half-a-dozen, on each side of a carriage ran to alarm robbers and to assist the lumbering vehicle out of the ruts, were well armed with stout staves. At the present time they are still carried by the Plush family, although the use of them is not so clear. In the royal state processions, the footmen with their staves walk as in former days, and we should be sorry were these little bits of ceremony dispensed with, inasmuch as they bring to recollection a former condition of things, which makes us feel comfortable by comparison.

Monstrous sticks have been preserved by dealers in London, and put as a sort of sign at the doors of umbrella and walking-stick dealers. These were, however, a century ago, common enough, and might have been seen by the hundred together, borne by tall footmen behind ladies dressed in the old hooped dresses which we are trying now to imitate. At that time there was also a taste for various kinds of monsters, in China, wood, and other materials. Monkeys and pug-dogs were made pets of, and the sticks of the footmen fashioned into such ugly forms as no modern bogey ever dreamed of.

Many clubs, sticks, maces, or whatever they be called, were about six feet high, and were in parts painted and gilt. One illustration we have seen is an elm-sapling, and the natural bumps have been taken advantage of by the artist to model a sort of Moorish head, with ornamental covering; lower down, the knobs are fashioned into terrible heads, in which are mounted glass eyes of various and impossible colours.

No doubt before long these staves, which might be necessary for the protection of the ladies from the "Mohawks" of the time, will have disappeared and people will look with curiosity at Hogarth's representation of them. Perhaps good specimens of such objects, which have passed out of use, would be worthy of a place in our national museum.

—O—

Bank Book

"A Handbook of old Mechanical Banks" has just been brought out by John D. Meyer, retired Pennsylvania banker, who has "hobbed" along this line for many years.

His book does not go into the equation of values but does list, pictures and describe the various types of novelties in this fascinating pursuit of 100 years ago.

He gives a never-before published list of hear-say banks that have never been located and are put down as a waste-of-time lure to the collector.

There are also pictures of the factories where the banks were made as well as complete illustrations of all the known specimens. It will find a welcome niche in every collectors' library because the author covers his subject in authoritative and entertaining style.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

SYLVESTER LOUIS OSSMAN, "The Banjo King" II.

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Sylvester Louis Ossman, "The Banjo King," at the height of his career.

How long ago Sylvester Louis ("Vess") Ossman began making records and whether he acquired the designation of "the Banjo King" before or after first appearing on cylinders is a matter of conjecture. It's certain that by 1898 he was established as one of the handful of pioneer recording artists whose work had already gained wide popularity, and that his services were eagerly sought. In keeping with the prevailing taste of the period, he recorded mostly negro songs, lively ragtime ditties and marches, but what he played was performed with true artistry. Probably his banjo solos of the late '90's and early 1900's express the go-ahead optimism and accelerated tempo of the American life of those days as effectively as anything could.

Ossman was one of a group of artists who signed exclusive contracts with Columbia in October, 1898. The late Dan W. Quinn lent me a faded photograph, showing the performers standing, with the three Emerson Brothers, who were recording experts, in front of the company's Bridgeport factory. In the first row are Clyde Emerson, George Graham, Len Spencer, Mr. Ossman, Mr. Quinn and George Emerson. George J. Gaskin is sitting above them on a platform. Behind Gaskin are George Schweinfest and Victor H. Emerson, and to Gaskin's right are Steve Porter and Russell Hunting. The exclusive contract lasted only a year or two—probably two, because Ossman was not included in a group photo of Edison artists made in 1900. Quinn, however, is in the Edison picture.

Besides cylinders, Ossman made Berliner discs and was one of the first Victor artists. I have said that the Banjo King is a prominent part of phonograph folk lore. His latest appearance in this role was made in October, 1946, when the Victor company held elaborate ceremonies to commemorate the passing of its one billionth record. An R. C. A.-Victor advertisement in Life for October 26, 1946, said: "The oldest master record in R. C. A.-Victor's huge library was made on January 21, 1901. It is a banjo solo, played by Vess Ossman, 'Tell Me, Pretty Maiden.'"

A few weeks later the New Yorker gave a gently satirical account of the celebration. The one billionth record was supposed to be a coupling of "The Stars and Stripes Forever" and "Semper Fidelis" marches, played by the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. The record was to be presented to the U. S. Marine Corps, because John Philip Sousa, composer of the marches, led the U. S. Marines band from 1880 to 1892. But, according to the New Yorker, a mistake was made which caused the wrong label and master to be brought out for the "Stars and Stripes Forever" side, so that what actually was pressed was Ossman's "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden," already mentioned as the first 10-inch instrumental number recorded by Victor. The following is quoted from the New Yorker:

"Why, that's by Vess Ossman, the old Banjo King!" Mr. Fink (one of the pressing machine operators) exclaimed. One of the other pressers said: 'Somebody's made an awful mistake. Too late to change things now, though. Anyhow, they're going to gold-plate the record, and once it's been gold-plated it can't be played. The Marines'll never know the difference!'"

As early as 1899, Vess Ossman had made a working agreement with Arthur Collins and played the accompaniment for some of Collins' negro songs recordings. One of the best known was the Edison cylinder of "All Coons Look Alike to Me," which had this announcement by Collins: "'All Coons Look Alike to Me.' Sung by Arthur Collins, with banjo accompaniment by Mr. Vess L. Ossman. Edison record." More than a decade later, Collins' partner, Byron G. Harlan, was dangerously ill of typhoid fever, Collins made several solos for Victor, with Ossman's banjo substituting for the lack of Harlan.

Another of Ossman's early associates was Len Spencer. The amazingly ingenious and versatile Len wrote a series of comic dialect sketches in which he did the talking and singing while Ossman played the banjo. Some of these, recorded on both seven and ten-inch discs, were "Banjo Lize," "Hot Times on the Levee" and "The Nigger and the Bee." In those days, Negroes were considered fair game for ridicule, good natured or otherwise, and their sensibilities lacked the protection they are justly given today when such terms as "nigger," "coon" and even "darky" are not permitted on radio networks.

Mr. Ossman also made a number of duets with another of Spencer's associates, Parke Hunter, a versatile musician who seems to have been able not only to play the banjo but almost any other instrument. Still another of Vess's duet partners was William ("Bill") Farmer.

By the early 1900's, Vess Ossman's fame was world-wide. In 1903 he made his second concert tour of England, after having previously been over in 1900. In those days, a New York musical instruments dealer, John A. Haley, was proud that the Banjo King bought his strings from him. He issued a circular quoting extracts from several of Ossman's letters, such as: "New York City, September 12, 1899. Dear Sir: The Banjo Strings received, and they have proved satisfactory in every particular. Sincerely yours, Vess L. Ossman, Banjoist. Banjo Studio, 121 West 125th St."

On April 24, 1900, Ossman wrote to Haley: "I sail for London May 2, to play at the Big Concert. Send my order of strings at once, also two dozen of your J. A. H. Banjo

SPECIAL SAPPHIRE NEEDLES

FOR PLAYING HILL AND DALE RECORDS ON ELECTRIC (Lateral) PHONOGRAPHS

Type A for Pathé Records.

Type B for Edison Records.

Price $5.00 each.

Pathé Sapphire Ball Needles

For playing Pathé Records on Hill and Dale machines.
$2.00 each.

Edison & Pathé Records

BOUGHT, SOLD AND EXCHANGED.

ALSO COLUMBIA CYLINDERS.

PROF. JAMISON R. HARRISON

BEDFORD,

MASSACHUSETTS

C. R. S.

Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and
speech records.

Records available through dealers only.
FREE MAILING LIST OF NEW ISSUES.

C. R. S.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave., New York 29, N. Y.

Bass Strings. Sincerely, Vess L. Ossman."

On June 27, 1900, Ossman wrote another letter to Haley: "Have returned from London. I was a 'big hit' there. I distributed some of your strings to players on the other side, and they were all as much pleased with them as I was. Undoubtedly, your strings are the best strings I ever put on my banjo. I do not know of any strings that can compare with them, and I have used all kinds. Sincerely yours, Vess L. Ossman, Banjoist, Banjo Studio, Room 52, A. B. C. Building, 67-69 West 125th Street."

To these letters, Mr. Haley added the following note: "Mr. Vess L. Ossman is undoubtedly the greatest and most popular Banjoist in the world. He was selected as the representative Banjo Soloist of America at National Export Exposition, Philadelphia, Pa., Nov 29th, 1899. He also received the greatest reception ever accorded an American in

RECORDS

MUSIC BOX DISCS in various makes and sizes. Wanted Mira, 1 1/2" and Regina 20 1/4" discs.—Insley C. Looker, So. Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. o1002

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. n6698

RARE OLD RECORDS: Vocal operatic, popular, Edisons, jazz, for sale reasonably priced. Send your want list.—Delano, 349 Lindenwold, Ambler, Pa. mh6276

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lionel G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover Mass. P. O. Box 342. n28783

REDUCED PRICE SALE—Recordings 89c.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City, N. Y. je12487

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. s120821

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. s12407

CYLINDERS WANTED. Pathe, Edison, Columbia. Operatic and classic only; 2 minutes, 4 minute wax and amberols. Edison, Pathe, Columbia catalogs.—Henry Herrold, 8778 111th St., Richmond Hill 18, N. Y. o3604

AUCTION AND SALE of opera records. Send for free list. Used opera records wanted.—Sigmund Luzinas, 3229 S. Wallace St., Chicago 16, Ill. o3253

UNUSED EDISON disc records, 50 different $7.50, random selection.—A. E. Larsen, 1213 W. 63rd St., Chicago, Ill. o3252

CYLINDER RECORDS bought for my personal collection. 500 duplicates to exchange.—Benj. Franklin, Haynesville, Virginia. o3012

Wanted: Records of John McCormack on the following labels: G&T, Odeon, Columbia, Columbia-Fontopia, Okeh and Regal Zonophone or Pathe. Also have for exchange many domestic and foreign rarities and Victor catalogues from 1909.—H. McCann, 1229 Dean St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. o1825

London, May 10th to 12th, 1900."

The circular likewise contained a testimonial from Fred F. Van Epps, who was just beginning to be known as a recording artist and who was to become Ossman's foremost rival for the title of the greatest banjo player. Van Epps (or Van Eps, as he is now) lived in Plainfield, New Jersey, where today he is a prosperous manufacturer of radio equipment. He wrote: Dear Sir: Strings received, and after giving them a good test I find them to be just the kind that I have been looking for to use for my Phonograph and Concert playing. Now, as I know your special strings are strong and also have a good clear tone, I will use them exclusively. Very truly yours, Fred F. Van Epps, Banjoist. Studio, 60 Westervelt Avenue."

Still another player who said kind things about Haley's strings was Joseph Cullen, described as "the famous teacher and soloist of Washington, D. C." Cullen was a member of the duet team of Cullen and Collins, whom I have already mentioned as makers of Columbia cylinders fifty years or more ago.

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: HAND ORGAN paper rolls, all sizes.—George Francis Schait, Chiropractic, 3 Springfield Ave., Cranford, N. J. o3832

Swiss music movements, assorted tunes $2.30. Direct from manufacturers agent.—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, N. Y. n3063

ELEVEN THOUSAND different vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. s126351

NOW AVAILABLE for the collector. A new history of the phonograph; prepared by a graduate assistant in the history department of Indiana University. In pamphlet form 55c postpaid. Send money order or stamps to—Allen G. Debus, 846 Wagner Rd., Glenview, Ill. o1633

HAVE YOUR OLD violin appraised for insurance or closing an estate. You may own a masterpiece. Fee $5.—Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 58 S. W. 27th St., Coral Gables, Florida. jly120041

BACK SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Bal-lads, rags, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my12998

MELODEONS—Reed Organs. Bought, sold, repaired.—C. Sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond Ave., Grand Rapids 6, Mich. my12219

"CHINAMAN BELL BOX" for sale: Antique Swiss music box, exquisitely inlaid rosewood case 27" long; set of 6 bells struck by 3 Chinese figures. Plays 10 tunes. Restored to perfect condition.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham 65, New York. d3046

FOR SALE. A C. Fairbanks mandolin and leather carrying case, excellent condition; price $25.—C. E. Holbrook, R.F.D. 4, Attleboro, Mass. o1861

WANTED: Music Rolls for mechanical orchestra player manufactured by Western Electric Piano Company. These rolls were manufactured by the Clark Orchestra Roll Co. of De Kalb, Illinois, now out of business.—Harry Homeyer, Deckers Resort, Deckers, Colo., via Sedalia. d3235

WANTED: Player piano rolls; standard 88-note, classical only; and RCA-Victor Long Playing "Program Transcription" records; 33 1/3 RPM. Write—F. K. MacCallum, 1815 E. Rio Grande, El Paso, Texas. d3422

On the following page I shall tell something about Vess Ossman's visit to England in 1903 and quote the more interesting portions of a long article about him which appeared in an English magazine.

THE LAST of the Cremonas. Booklet listing thirty violins and their makers. Postpaid $1.—Isador Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 165 E. Ohio, Chicago, Ill. d124431

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6215

MUSIC BOX COMBS repaired by expert. New teeth properly installed and tuned. Cylinders entirely reprinted.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. n3863

MUSIC BOX COMBS repaired by expert. New teeth properly installed and tuned. Cylinders entirely reprinted.—A. Bornand, 333 5th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. o3223

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. d6368

SWISS MUSICAL UNITS $3. Musical Albums, Boxes.—131 West 42nd, New York 18, N. Y. n3281

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, disc, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. f6616

For Sale—10 electric coin-operated piano orchestras and Virtuosos. Also 1,500 new Edison disc records at 10c each in quantities. Would like to buy extra music rolls for the above pianos and music boxes.—Lewis J. Kerstein, 32 South St., Freehold, New Jersey. o3048

HOUGHTON MUSIC CO., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne 2 England. Antique instruments of Music, old violins, etc., books on the violin, invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship, music for violin, viola, cello; chamber music for strings. Prints and portraits of musicians. Min. scores. Catalog free. s128632

I have some very rare music boxes. One is a large box with a singing bird in its nest, in view. Plays 6 airs; a museum piece. Other boxes with from 1 to 10 cylinders, with or without organ. Matching tables. Also a Violano Virtuoso, self-playing violin; 48 airs. Singing birds in cages and boxes. Whistling figures. Every item perfect.—J. Poelman, 78 W. 103rd St., New York. d30861

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosorjak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

112 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

When Vess Ossman went to England in 1903, the trip was made at the request of Clifford Essex, a well known musical instrument dealer and publisher of instruction books. In October of that year, Essex brought out the first issue of a monthly magazine which he called "B. M. G. — a Journal Devoted to the Banjo, Mandoline and Guitar." The feature of the first issue was a long interview with the American Banjo King, written by the editor, Home Gordon. The style is downright irritating, with its frequent unnecessary use of capital letters and Gordon's insistence upon giving Ossman's conversation a pronounced British flavor. Some parts of the article are of no particular interest now, but I shall quote the more readable sections, omitting Mr. Gordon's eccentricities of type:

"There was no hesitation as to whom should be asked to furnish the subject of the first interview of B. M. G., for Mr. Vess Ossman, the finest banjoist of America, and the warm friend of Mr. Clifford Essex and myself, was in London. There could be no other who would furnish a conversation fraught with so many topics that will interest our readers, and no one else that we have so much delight to honor. . . . It is to be our business to provide absolutely the most interesting topics for our readers, and we can conceive none to surpass a talk with Mr. Vess Ossman. By now his name is a household word to musicians on both sides of the Atlantic, but all the value of his experience and knowledge has not previously been published.

"Mr. Vess Ossman strikes you as every inch a man. There is grit, determination, and power in his handsome, good-humored features. Clean shaven, with hair waving over a high, broad forehead, eyes brown, honest and returning your gaze frankly, twinkling humor as some funny story arouses his sense of fun, a sensitive mouth and a frank, open countenance, he is one in a thousand. He talks admirably, with a quick laugh, throwing up his head a trifle the while. Of medium height, above rather than below the average standard, quietly dressed, you know him to be an American gentleman, literally one of the best. . . . Frankly, one more loyal or considerate, one better to deal with, one more willing to give than to receive, a shrewder, better, more cheery, more honourable as friend, comrade, and fellow-musician, it is impossible to mention. If this seems a eulogy, it is thoroughly justified, and I take this, the sole possible public occasion, for putting on record how tremendously Mr. Vess Ossman is appreciated in England. I venture to quote the description I wrote in June, 1900, of his first concert appearance in this country:

"The visit of this great American banjoist is solely due to an invitation from Mr. Clifford Essex, and the guest of the night met with a cordial welcome from all parts of the house when he stepped onto the platform. The first bars he enunciated proved the hand of a master, and undoubtedly he is one of the grandest players ever heard. He started with a spirited performance of Moszkowski's "Bolero" and, despite the pace and difficulty of the piece, he performed it to perfection. Then came his own "Ragtime Medley," the most captivating composition conceivable. Bristling with fresh effects, and with octave passages and syncopation in every line, Mr. Vess Ossman was nothing less than superb. He brought down the house, in a fashion unparalleled in St. James's Hall, and the encore was absolutely irresistible. It is no exaggeration to say that the characteristic piece which was named "Whistling Rufus" added to the enthusiasm. The audience thundered out applause, and after four recalls, Mr. Vess Ossman had to yield once more and give another quaint negro melody called "Smoky Mokes." Still his welcome was not over, and twice more he had to come forward before he was reluctantly allowed to finally retire. . . .

"The crowded audience at Kensington Town Hall last May, at Mr. Clifford Essex's enormously successful concert, enthusiastically endorsed the verdict of three years ago; indeed, the general impression was that Mr. Vess Ossman played better than ever. Perhaps the finest exposition he gave was at a cheery little evening gathering at Clifford Essex's studio. . . . To a select coterie of experts Mr. Ossman played in a manner which defied description. He told us that for days he had been making phonographic records at a big salary. But it was the general opinion that if the machine could have received his playing on that evening, it would have permanently preserved some record playing. It is, however, high time to clear the way for Mr. Vess Ossman, himself, and to let him talk. . . .

"Oh, I'll talk! Where shall I start?"
 "Birth and education."
 "Former, on Hudson river, 1868; latter, the best I could reach — really started learning after my education was finished."

"Like a good many more of us. Banjo?"

"Practice does it. Ten hours a day for three years. Four hours a day pretty nearly all the year round even now. Tell your readers to practice. Scales are the foundations of music, and, in addition, they are the foundation of dexterity on the banjo. So let no one, teachers or pupils, neglect them."

"Any special reasons to give for your own playing?"

"Well, when I was fairly big at the banjo I signed on for three years to the Columbia Phonographic Company (this, of course, should be Columbia Phonograph Company—U. W.) to give them one hundred records a week. You have to pick hard and keep the same volume of tone all through a piece, combined with absolute accuracy. That makes a superb foundation on which to put light and shade for concert work and fairly kills nervousness. . . . Most players prefer the keys of G and C; I do not. My favorite is F, and I always like to play in flats — they are not only softer, but higher, and he ran through the scale of six flats at a tempo presto. I also always like to employ octaves freely — of course, avoiding consecutive octaves in my harmonical progressions."

"Do you elevate your bass strings?"

"Absolutely never. After reasonable practice it is just as easy to play octaves on a bass string tuned to C as to D, though I grant that the opinion of many of the best players differs from mine on this point. . . . I have one habit which is in direct violation with conventional tenets. . . . I make notes on the fifth string. I mean to say, I will play A, B, C above the clef and higher notes on the high G string. I am also addicted to grace notes and appoggiatura, and for these, when I can, I like to use the fifth string. The snap comes especially clean from it, because it is technically so taut."

"Do you go in for double fingering?"

"I think it is imperative," and he played me a scale in three flats, in which this method was used throughout. . . . I have something to say about other peoples' ways, and my grumble is at their neglect of the metronome. It is the playing of marches, two-steps, cake walks, etc., in unsuitable time which makes them sound ridiculous. Such a splendid player as Joe Morley, for example, may be instanced. He picked up "The Favorite March" and made nothing of it, though note perfect. . . . because he did not play it with the strongly marked accent and rhythm characteristic of two-step time."

"How do you find the banjo over here?"

"I have played several dates at the Palace, Tivoli and Alhambra, three magnificent halls, and at each I have had a wonderful reception. Everybody I come across appreciates the banjo. Since I was here last I should say the banjo has made big strides in England. In fact, you are on the eve of a banjo boom, and all that is needed is something to centralize banjoists in England."

"More banjo clubs are needed. In them the merest tyro and finest performer can all take a share, and it means the raising of the standard of playing, the diffusion of music, and general increase of enthusiasm."

"How does the status of the banjo in England compare with it in America?"

"Better than ever before. In some ways the banjo is not so well off in America as over here. Farland, in his way, is a wonderful player, but he has gone near killing the banjo on the concert stage, and today you don't hear much concerted banjo music in public." (Note: This reference is to Alfred A. Farland, a veteran American banjoist, who tried to adapt the instrument to classical music. He made one Edison Diamond Disc — a transcription of

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 57)

This photo taken at Jim Walsh's home in Vinton, Virginia, shows the writer of "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" all set to give his "Walsh's Wax Works" program, heard from WSLs, Roanoke, each Monday at 9 P. M. (The WSLs wave length is 610). Photo by Pearsall Studio, Roanoke, Va.

MARIE HULL

MARBLE HALL GRAND ISLAND, N. Y.

Just across the river from Buffalo.

Only 10 Miles From Niagara Falls.

Telephone Grand Island 16.

At last we are moved to Marble Hall and I must confess a little lazy about getting our large collection unpacked and ready for the fall trade. We find ourselves wanting to do nothing but sit on the wide veranda and gaze at the river as it flows past our front door. It is so beautiful out here on the Island, it is almost unbelievable, but come and see for yourself . . . It is worth a trip to Buffalo just to see Marble Hall.

We hope to be unpacked by October first. We have a complete line of fine old china, porcelain, lamps, vases, brass, iron, authentic pattern glass early flint glass, genuine Waterford cut crystal, fine furniture, etc. We sell no reproductions.

When you make that trip to Niagara Falls this fall, do not fail to visit Marble Hall as it is one of the show places of the Niagara frontier.

Sorry, owing to our many duties, we will be forced to show our collection only by appointment. Please call Grand Island 16, or write Marie Hull, Marble Hall, Grand Island, N. Y. Collectors and Dealers Welcome.

NOBLE'S ANTIQUES

3078 No. 40th St.,
Milwaukee 10, Wisconsin

Collection 42 pieces Pan. Forget-me-not	write
Pr. Fan, Daisy salt and pepper	$ 8.00
Amazon footed stool	4.00
Wines: 2 Jacobs Ladder, each	$3.50; three
Lullseye Var., each	2.50
Pavonia: etched tumbler; 2 plain wines, each	3.50
Double Spear creamer $4; Actress jam jar	12.50
Plates: Wh. and Barley, 8 1/2" $7.50; Festoon, 8 1/2" $5.50; Dia. Medallion 10" $6; M. G. Three Kitten	5.00
Classic: Creamer $18; cov. butter	18.50
Deer & Pine cakestand, 11"	13.50
M. G. cakestand, floral	10.50
Blue B&D Canoe, Lee 169	17.50
8 Cut Glass 2 1/2" whiskeys, each	3.00
Caramel Slag T.I.P. hold	4.50
Pair Mercury tobacco, 4"	6.50
2 Early store hanging lamps, tin shades, brass founts, burnished. Pine ones, each	30.00
Large brass buggy lantern, burnished	18.50
Rare: blue 7" M.G. hen, Sandwich type, original eyes	35.00
Pink Satin bead drupe vinegar cruet, frosted handle. Very fine	35.00
Cranberry Inv. T.P. bulbous pickle relish in fine elaborate silver stand; tongs	40.00
Rare Jasper WW shaving mugs	write
Pair brass andirons	30.00
Haviland set of 8-80 pieces	125.00
Fine large 3 drawer cherry chest—Rare large music box, fine, 4 cylinders, 6 tunes each	350.00

ELLEN HANNISCH

4332 N. 38th Street, Milwaukee 9, Wis.

1. Canary Wildflower tumbler	$ 6.50
2. Four nice sterling demitasse souvenir spoons, each	1.25
3. Garnet stickpin chatelaine type	0.50
4. Lovely cut glass creamer and sugar, unusual shape	8.50
5. Cut glass water bottle: Pinwheel design	4.50
6. Pr. blue Jasperware plaques, 4 1/2" dia. Ea.	5.50
7. Green Jasperware plaque, 6" dia. Very nice	7.50
8. 2 Gr. Jasperware plaques, 4 1/2" dia., ea.	5.50
9. Jasperware trinket box, heart shape, gr., very nicely done, lovers, flowers, etc.	8.50
10. Jasperware plaque, 7 1/2" diameter. Head of Indian	6.50
11. Majolica plate, 9 1/2"; large green leaves and grapes	3.75
12. Bennington mug, 3 1/2" high. Exceptionally nice one	4.50
13. Wooden coffee grinder lamp, refinished, complete with nice shade	7.50
14. Milk glass cake stand, 9". Nice floral dec.	10.50
15. Swirled Milk glass bottle, nice original stopper, some gold, 10" high	5.50
16. Bavarian tea set: teapot, cov. sugar, creamer. Nice rose garlands, touches of gold	12.50
17. Seven Haviland Limoges plates, 7 1/2". Lovely rose pattern. Each	1.25
18. Theo. Haviland Limoges. Raised ribbon border; violets and green fern dec. Gold ribbon handles: 6 plates 10", oval cov. veg., round cov. veg., 3 platters, 9 1/2", 14", 19", gray. All perfect but 19" platter has chip	30.00
19. Lovely large Haviland cov. soup tureen, same pattern as above; 3 qt. capacity	12.50
20. Pitcher, 8", white Ironstone. Md. Dresden	4.50
21. 6 Chelsea plates, 8", each	1.00
EXPRESS COLLECT	0

THE OLD WALLINGFORD HOUSE

Antiques, Guests — Tel. 239

21 York Street, Kennebunk Village, Maine

DORIS HOLMES WILSON

FURNITURE—Prices include crating
Pine spool cradle $12.50; pine spool crib $17.50; pine spool beds $17.50; pine lift top commodore $13.00
Walnut slipper rocker, perfect structurally, but needs upholstering. 25.00
Pr. late Vict. walnut side chairs. Each 17.50
Mahogany Empire secretary, solid doors (not glass). A few tiny pieces of veneer off, otherwise good condition. 85.00

CLEAR PATTERN GLASS

Creamers, $4.00 each: Esther, Prisms with ball and button, Slashed Swirl, Teardrop and Thumbprint variant, Fancy cut.
Cordova syrup, pewter top $5.00.
Loop & Pan milk pitcher $4.50.
Sugar and creamer sets in paneled rib $7.50; Alabama (open sugar) $5; Flora in vaseline $7.50; Min. Sawtooth $4.50.
Goblets, $2.00 each: Loop, Honeycomb, Baby Thumbprint (3 rows).
Open Composites: Barred Forget-me-nots $6.50; Pressed Block $10.
Three Ashburton honeys, $2.00 each.
Vict. water set, pr. gl. pitcher and 6 tumblers, all have wide gold borders.
White Ironstone: cov. oval veg., blackberry design, very nice $7.50; open oblong veg., plain $1.00; mulberry oblong veg. $5; all white wash bowl & pitcher $5; same in platter $5.
Castors: pewter, 3 Gothic bottles $12.50; silver 5 matching bottles $15; unusual mercury base w. cl. gl. holder, 6 matching bottles $15.
Set of 4 fruit plates, pastel borders, diff. fruit, each $5. Same in sauce dishes.
Three heavy china mugs, diff. fruit on each $4 each. Beautiful fruit bowl, open leaf border, leaves in deep pink, gold and white, fruit center, $18.00.
Three piece green Wedgwood tea set, tiny chip on rim of pot $45.
Two prs. of blue Lacy Sandwich curtain tie-backs, $8.50 pair.

Shipping Charges Extra. 00

REGINA ANN DONOHUE

R. F. D. No. 1, Concord, Mass.
Red Block Diamond, tumbler 4.75
Shell and Jewel cov. sugar 6.50
Fruit Bowl, H. P. (all over) "Empire" 7.50
Brass Bucket, heavy, burn., app.; 12 1/2"x8" 12.50
Tip Top Table, tiger stripe marble; snakefoot base. Pine top, 31" diam. Unnot. mend one foot, beautifully refin., crated 60.00
Colt, 1851 Navy engraved Presentation, with ivory grips 75.00
Buttons: "Gardens at Karmak", brass, each 1.25 00

CEMENTIQUE

Miracle Cement For Antiques

STICKS PRACTICALLY ANYTHING TO ANYTHING

$1.00 per Bottle postpaid. Guaranteed.

HUKILL'S ANTIQUE CORNER

807 E. Jefferson Blvd., South Bend 17, Ind.

Write for List of Authentic Antiques 00

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 38)

"Carnival of Venice."—U.W.)

"What, then, are the recent American developments?"

"There are more private engagements than ever I previously recollect among the best people. . . I played a few months back before our President. Sat down and pulled out 'Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight.' Now, that is Roosevelt's own pet tune. He chuckled, and the rest cheered, and we were all on good terms in five minutes. A London experience was on the same lines. I went with Essex, Morley, and young Charlie Rogers to play at the Carlton Hotel at the big 'send-off' banquet for Sir Thomas Lipton, given by Mr. George Wilson and some prominent Americans in London. We sat down and gave them 'Whistling Rufus,' when some one immediately said, 'Ah, that sounds like home.' Then our host asked for 'Mr. Dooley,' and we reeled that off. . . The footmen produced bones and tamborines, which were handed round to the company assembled, irrespective of sex. Away we went, tune on tune, and they keeping the time and adding immensely to the effect, as well. The guests loved it; so did we. It lasted until two in the morning, and they had us half a dozen times more this season."

"What is this I've heard about the banjo being introduced at dances?"

"At all our smart dances now they have the band to play waltzes, and they have three or four banjos playing with a piano to do the polkas and two-steps, which are the rage. It is thought that the banjos give the marked rhythm better, and it is quite usual at the end of a good dance for the guests to loudly applaud the banjos. . . The American market is quite as good as it ever was for published music. Half the women and a quarter of the men in all grades of society can play the banjo. It's the concert work over there that flags. Writing music, making records, and also the reading matter all flourish. . . There are no new players in America or Canada of the first rank. Certainly, no one coming on like Charlie Rogers. Is not that boy a marvel? He was a promising lad three years ago when I was over. Then he seems to have adopted me as his model, and I give you my word he is almost up to me. We've had many grand times over here. Mind you, I say I am coming again next year. . . Meanwhile, you'll have to mail me fifty copies at least of each issue (of B. M. G.) for my friends in the States."

The editor's interview concluded:

"So, with cordial friendship, let me take leave of a prince of good fellows and a master of his art." And let me say that I suspect Mr Ossman was misquoted in that statement about half the American women and a fourth of American men being able to play the banjo. There never has been a time when so large a percentage of the American people play any instrument. The first woman I know of to have made a banjo record was Shirley Spaulding, who played a few numbers for Edison in the early 1920's.

(To be continued.)

Goldbrite

Cleans, Preserves, Polishes all Metals
BRIGHT AS GOLD

SAMPLE 16-OUNCE BOTTLE

For BRASS, BRONZE, COPPER, PEWTER

GOLDBRITE PRODUCTS

Postpaid Box 972 CINCINNATI 1, OHIO

JOBBERS AND DISTRIBUTORS
WRITE FOR EXCLUSIVE FRANCHISES

do not feel that Mr. Debus has omitted anything really essential to an elementary work of this kind. His is a straightforward, factual outline of the history of the phonograph and the phonograph industry from Edison's original invention of 1877 up to and slightly beyond the advent of electrical recording in 1925. The sources of information are given in a 2½ page bibliography, so that any one interested in going more thoroughly into the subject will find an excellent reading list to help him on his way. (Note—This pamphlet may be obtained from the author for the sum of 50c. Address Allen G. Debus, c/o Modern Boxes Inc., 4949 North Pulaski Road, Chicago, Illinois.

Address all mail for
WOODYMAY RECORD CO.
to Box 33, <sup>116</sup>
Roxbury Post Office, Boston, Mass.
Store located at 73
Roxbury St.

MUSIC BOXES
SPECIALIZING IN THE REPAIR OF MUSICAL
BOXES OF ALL TYPES, INCLUDING THE
REPAIR OF BIRD BOXES AND BIRD IN CAGE PIPES, ETC.
Cholo, Music Boxes For Sale. <sup>116</sup>
GEORGE A. BIDDEN
Barrington, Rhode Island

MUSIC BOXES
all kinds
Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired
(Third generation in the music box business. <sup>116</sup>)
A. V. BORNAND
333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

Collectors' and Music Lovers'

PARADISE

- Five decades of classical vocals and instrumentals. Specializing in G&T, Zonophone, Fonotipia, Favorite, etc. . . . also inexpensive reissues and rerecordings.
- Fine line of out-of-print singles and albums and pre-war pressings at premium prices.
- Full line of current classical records and albums at regular list prices, including many hard-to-find records.
- Authorized dealers RCA-Victor, Columbia, Decca, English Decca, Parlophone London Records, CRS, Herrold, Cetra, Vox, Musicraft, Alco, International, etc.

Order your new classical releases and your rare collectors' items from a reliable store and mail order house.

The RECORD HUNTER

1194 Lexington Avenue,
near 81st Street,
New York 28, N. Y. <sup>116</sup>

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

SYLVESTER LOUIS OSSMAN, "The Banjo King" III

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

The 1903 issue of B. M. G., the English musical magazine from which I quoted last month, contained the music of Vess L. Ossman's famous "Dixie Medley." Oddly enough, when Ossman recorded the composition for Victor two years later, it was called "Turkey in the Straw Medley," and probably was the great banjoist's best selling record. On the other hand, when Fred Van Eps made records of the same number for many other companies, he called it "Dixie Medley," as "The Banjo King" had done in the beginning.

A few other items in B. M. G. are of enough interest to be touched on here. Despite Vess Ossman's fame as a banjo player, he is seldom thought of as a composer, but Clifford Essex advertised several of Vess's original numbers, including "Favorite March," "Dixie Medley," "Cupid's Arrow (Polka de Concert)," "Leisure Moments (Gavotte de Concert)," "Hot Foot Sue," "Wheelmen's March," "White Huzzars Two-Step" and "Honolulu Cakewalk." Also included were advertisements of several mandolin solos written by the famous early American recording artist, Samuel Siegel; Siegel's "Book of Special Mandolin Studies," and a book of banjo studies by Ossman's associate, Parke Hunter.

Two other notes concerned Mr. Ossman's triumphal visit. One said, "Mr. Vess Ossman has long ago landed in New York. His appearance before His Majesty the King was a grand finale to his English visit." And under the head of "B. M. G. Clubs and Orchestras," the magazine's publisher, Clifford Essex, wrote: "When Vess Ossman was over here we had two or three banjo evenings at my studio, and nothing was more appreciated than what Vess called 'the club,' which consisted of about eight or ten banjos, including Charlie Rogers, Joe Morley, Burt Earle, myself, and Ossman. The latter had a wonderful way of binding the whole together by a rhythmical marking of the bass string. Needless to say we did not play 'classics,' but I can answer for such numbers as 'Smoky Mokes,' 'Whistling Rufus,' 'Mosquito Parade,' 'Rolf's Two-Step,' 'Dixie Medley,' 'Favorite March,' etc., for any who care to try the experiment."

I have already quoted from the June, 1904, issue of the Columbia Record. In October, 1904, the same magazine published an article, "No Reproduction Better Than That of the Banjo," in which this comment was made: "It is generally conceded that no instrument comes out a graphophone better than the banjo. Mr. Vess L. Ossman, whose records are known wherever the graphophone is used, is no doubt one of the finest and most accomplished players in the world. An accomplished London banjoist once said, after hearing Mr. Ossman play, that he was sorely tempted to give up trying to play the banjo, and that he thought seriously of going home and burning up his instrument. No collection of graphophone records is complete without a few specimens of Mr. Ossman's wonderful records. Try 'Rag Time Medley'—cylinder No. 3830—or 'Tell Me, Pretty Maiden'—disc No. 255—and you will be certain to order others. They are the best banjo records—all of them—that have ever been and are a surprise to those who haven't heard them." And in June, 1905, this house organ said: "Vess L. Ossman's banjo records have made him famous from one end of the world to the other. Ossman is the greatest banjo soloist who has ever played for talking machine." These quotations help to explain the great popularity the Banjo King enjoyed. The banjo was not only an enormously popular instrument, but it recorded so well that something of the player's individuality and personal traits could be detected by the casual listener.

Meanwhile, in 1904, Mr. Ossman, who was a hard worker as well as an accomplished artist, not satisfied with doing solo work and playing accompaniments for singers, had formed the Ossman Banjo Trio. (He had already made duets with Parke Hunter.) Here is the comment of the New Phonogram on the trio's first Edison cylinder, "I've Got a Feelin' For You": "Another novel feature of the November-December list. It is a banjo trio played by Messrs. Ossman, Hunter and Farmer. Beyond question this is one of the best banjo records ever made. Even those who do not ordinarily care for the music of this instrument cannot fail to like this record." As an owner of that ancient Edison cylinder, I can endorse this statement!

Then came that all-time Ossman best-seller which I have already mentioned, Victor 4424, "Turkey in the Straw Medley." It included Vess's arrangement of "Dixie," "Arkansaw Traveler," "Sailor's Hornpipe" and "Turkey in the Straw," and created a sensation, although in the original recording the sound of the banjo was considerably impaired by the too loud orchestral accompaniment. When Victor brought out double faced records, the medley was re-made with a piano accompaniment and listed as No. 16390. It stayed in the catalog, selling consistently, until after electric recording was introduced. Several other early Ossman records, such as the tuneless

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

- Extra tune sheets and fine assortment of boxes for sale playing 8", 11", 12 1/4", 15 1/2", 20 1/2" and 27" diameter discs.

- We also offer for sale many fine Swiss music boxes in varied styles and sizes. Complete repairs to all type boxes.

Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342*Hanover, Massachusetts*C. R. S.*Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and speech records.

Records available through dealers only.
FREE MAILING LIST OF NEW ISSUES.

C. R. S.*HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave., New York 29, N. Y.

!! Now Ready !!*The New Catalogue of Historical RecordingsBy ROBERT BAUER

Contains 494 pages of listings of classical vocal recordings (lateral-cut discs—no cylinders or vertical-cut discs) issued in Europe and the USA from 1898 to 1908/9.

The new catalogue is a substantial improvement over the first edition of 1938 because it has: two hundred additional pages; birth, debut and death dates and places of many of the artists, strict alphabetical order; two pages of label information; Cloth Binding; etc. etc.

Price $9.75

Remit by Check or Money Order to:

STEPHEN FASSETT

318 West 102nd St.,

New York 25, N. Y.

and your copy will be mailed to you direct from England.

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

"Peter Piper," also were re-made with piano support.

In 1906, Vess came through with another innovation—the Ossman-Dudley Trio, consisting of himself as banjoist, and two other talented players, one a master of the mandolin and the other of the harpguitar. The guitar player may have been Roy Butin or it could have been Parke Hunter, who could play just about anything. The mandolinist must have been named Dudley, but I've never been able to find out WHAT Dudley. At one time I suspected the late S. H. Dudley, the Hayden Quartet baritone, but he assured me it wasn't he. That there was a "Mr. Dudley" is shown by the Edison cylinder list for December, 1910, in which "The Entrance of Topsy" scene from "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is listed by Len Spencer and Company. The cast of characters includes "Messrs. Ossman and Dudley" as banjo players. I asked Mrs. Mulligan, Mr. Ossman's daughter, if she knew anything about Dudley, and she replied: "I recall Pop speaking of 'Dudley,' but remember nothing about him, nor can I help you with any additional information about Parke Hunter."

The Ossman-Dudley Trio made several catchy records, the most popular of which was their Victor of "St. Louis Tickle"—certainly one of the most captivating bits of ragtime ever put on wax. Other good sellers were "Chicken Chowder," "Dixie Girl" and "Koontown Kaffee Klatsch." The Victor record catalog for September, 1908, commented on the trio's records:

"A novel feature of our instrumental list, which has been a most successful one. Trios by banjo, mandolin and harp-guitar—very loud, yet without a suspicion of harshness. Mr. Ossman, whose ability as a banjoist is well known, has associated himself with two famous players of string instruments, and the combination has made some extremely pleasing records. The harp-guitar gives a support to the other instruments which is decidedly effective." The same catalog mentions Roy Butin as "the best American player on the harp-guitar," which makes me believe Ossman would naturally have sought him for the trio. Also in the 1908 catalog is a photo of Ossman, with the cut lines: "Mr. Ossman is one of the finest banjoists in America, and has been justly called the 'Banjo King.' His performance on this popular instrument is little short of marvelous in its precision and the ease with which he masters the most difficult passages."

A statement to the same effect was made in the catalog issued in 1912 by the short-lived United States Record Company, which made an excellent indestructible cylinder for a couple of years:

"Vess L. Ossman (is) familiarly known as 'The Czar of the Banjo.' He played three seasons at the Daly Theater, New York. Mr. Ossman conducts a lyceum, where he engages talent for the leading clubs and festivals. He has also become very prominent as a teacher of the banjo."

It's amusing to note that the United States company "promoted" Mr. Ossman from being the "King" to the rank of "Banjo Czar." And it should not be overlooked that when Frank C. Stanley's fellow recording artists gave a memorial concert as a tribute to their departed comrade early in 1911, Ossman was the only instrumentalist who was called on for a solo.

(To be continued)

RECORDS

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. n6498

RARE OLD RECORDS: Vocal operatic, popular, Edisons, jazz, for sale reasonably priced. Send your want list. —Delano, 349 Lindenwolde, Ambler, Pa. mh6276

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 8, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342, fl28782

REDUCED PRICE SALE—Recordings 89c.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City, N. Y. je12487

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. sl20821

PHONOGRAPH Records bought. —E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. sl2407

CYLINDERS WANTED. Pathe, Edison, Columbia. Operatic and classic only; 2 minutes, 4 minute wax and amberola. Edison, Pathe, Columbia catalogs. —Henry Herrold, 8778 111th St., Richmond Hill 18, N. Y. n3604

AUCTION AND SALE of opera records. Send for free list. Used opera records wanted.—Sigmund Luzinas, 3229 S. Wallace St., Chicago 16, Ill. ja3253

UNUSED EDISON disc records. 50 different $7.50, random selection.—A. H. Larsen, 1213 W. 63rd St., Chicago, Ill. ap6675

World-Wide Record and Music Agency

143 E. Garfield Ave.,

Milwaukee 12, Wisconsin

COLLECTORS — RESEARCHERS*FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC LABELS*CYLINDERS AND DISCS*OPERA — SPEECH — POPULAR*"The Curious History of Music Boxes"By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF*MUSIC BOXES

412 PAGES — 138 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to

Lightner Publishing Corp.

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM*HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Another Memorable "John Bieling Day"

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Grace Spencer winds an Edison cylinder phonograph displayed by Bryant Burke, of Hempstead, at the "John Bieling Day" recording artists' party. Eugene Rosa and Billy Murray are looking on.

The Vess Ossman series will be resumed next month. It has been interrupted so that I may give this account of the third annual John H. Bieling Day party, at which record collectors joined in honoring the Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists who were our guests for the occasion. As had been planned, the party was given on Friday, September 10, in the Garden City Hotel at Garden City, Long Island, New York. In spite of the handicap of a rainy day, which undoubtedly kept some collectors and artists at home, everyone present seemed to feel that this first get-together on a large scale was a great success.

No doubt you recall that John Bieling, the first tenor of the famous Edison, Hayden and American male quartets, gave a party at his home in Hempstead, Long Island, on September 10, 1946, for a few of his fellow pioneer recording artists and collector friends. There was an even larger party in 1947. When it became apparent that the yearly meeting was becoming too large to go on being held in the Bieling home, some of the collectors agreed to have this year's party in the Garden City Hotel and to call it "John Bieling Day" in honor of their friend who originated the custom. Mr. Bieling died last March 30, but his friends felt that he would want the party to be held, and an arrangements committee was set up. It consisted of Bryant Burke, of Hempstead; Harry Selinger, of Oceanside; the Rev. Edward Vesper, of Queen's Village; and the writer of this article. The Long Island group handled the almost countless on-the-spot arrangements that had to be made in connection with the party, while I wrote letters of invitation to artists and sent publicity to newspapers and magazines. The New Yorkers received invaluable aid from Mr. Bieling's wife, Mrs. Meta Bieling; his son, George, and other members of the Bieling family. Anyone not directly connected with the party can have little conception of the amount of hard work that was required to make it the success it turned out to be.

Of course, there were some disappointments. The rainy weather prevented many snapshots from being taken, other than those which Al Debus, a young Glenview, Illinois, collector, made by using flash bulbs. John Young ("Harry Anthony"), the tenor of the old-time "Anthony and Harrison" duet combination, had promised to come, but the death of a nephew kept him away. His former partner, Frederick Wheeler, ("James F. Harrison") also couldn't be present. Others who had been expected but found at the last moment that they couldn't make it were Charles Harrison, Fred Van Eps, Harry Reser, Harry C. Browne and George Wilton Ballard. We hope that they can be at next year's party, which probably also will be held at Garden City, and that a good many other artists — including Wilfred Glenn, John H. Meyer, Frank Croxton, Emilio De Gogorza, Elise Stevenson, Lambert Murphy and Charles Hart — who "missed out" this time will join us in September, 1949. I was disappointed, too, that my old friend Joe Franklin, who gave the party valuable publicity on his "Antique Record Shop" program from WMCA, New York, couldn't be there.

But there was certainly reason for gratification at the number of artists who were on hand, and the considerable trouble and effort some of them went to, in order to join us. Here is the list — and I sincerely hope that I haven't overlooked anyone:

ELSIE BAKER, for many years the most popular Victor contralto.

FRANK E. BANTA, distinguished radio pianist, formerly with the Eight Famous Victor Artists, whose father, Frank P. Banta, was one of the first accompanists and orchestra conductors for the pioneer phonograph companies. The senior Banta died in 1904.

JOE BELMONT, whose recording career as a whistler goes back to 1894.

AL BERNARD, one of the greatest of blackface comedians and writer of many big song hits.

FREDERIC C. FREEMANTEL, famous concert tenor and teacher, and Mrs. FreemanTEL.

FRED HAGER, first man to make a commercial violin record; one of the earliest conductors of recording artists, and composer of many songs and descriptive specialties.

ARTHUR HALL, one of the most popular "free lance" recording artists of the 1920's and Mrs. Hall.

EDITH HELENA, former star of the Aborn Opera Company. This coloratura soprano with the marvelous voice range made Berliner records in 1898.

HARVEY HINDERMEYER, one of Edison's most popular tenors.

IRVING KAUFMAN, among the most prolific recording artists, who is still popular as a radio and night club entertainer.

OLIVE KLINE, formerly Elsie Baker's duet partner and for many years among the most popular Victor sopranos. She was accompanied by her husband, J. W. Houlihan.

LUCY ISABELLE MARSH, another of the top-ranking Victor sopranos with her husband, Dr. W. C. Gordon.

BOB MILLER, native Tennessean and music publisher, who wrote and recorded many of the biggest folk tune hits, such as "Eleven Cent Cotton."

BILLY MURRAY, for almost a generation the most popular and biggest selling recording artist.

WILL OAKLAND, the great vaudeville and minstrel counter-tenor, who still has a wonderfully clear, sweet voice.

DICK ROBERTSON, one of the best present-day singers of popular songs and a writer of many hits.

CARSON ROBISON, former partner of the late Vernon Dalhart in recording folk tunes, and one of the outstanding writers and singers of topical and Western type songs. He was accompanied by Mrs. Robison.

EUGENE C. ROSE, the flute virtuoso, was present, with Mrs. Rose. "Gene" made experimental records for Edison in 1889.

WALTER SCANLAN (better known to many collectors of old records as Walter Van Brunt), now a production manager at ABC, but from 1908 to the early 1930's one of the most popular of recording tenors.

GRACE SPENCER, (Mrs. Willard Foster Doolittle), who made cylinder records for Edison in 1897 and is believed to have been the first woman to sing for Victor. She was accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Lewis M. Wilson.

AILEEN STANLEY, famous star of the Keith vaudeville circuit, who began making records in 1920 and became Billy Murray's duet partner in 1922. Her husband and business manager, Robert N. Battenuth, and her protegee, a beautiful teen-age blonde, Aileen Stanley, Jr., came with her.

REINALD WERRENATH, distinguished concert baritone and teacher, who formerly sang with the Metropolitan Opera. Mr. and Mrs. Werrenrath made a long and fatiguing drive from their summer home at Ellenburg Depot, N. Y., and arrived at the party after having had almost no time to rest. I hope that the appreciation of the collectors was sufficient to reward them and Mr. and Mrs. Houlihan, who had a similar long drive from their summer quarters on Lake George.

In addition to the artists, Mrs. Byron G. Harlan, widow of the famous comedian, honored us with her presence, and Harry Hunting, accompanied by Mrs. Hunting, was on hand. Harry's father, the late Russell Hunting, was one of the first recording artists, and his early cylinders of "Casey" monologues were among the biggest sellers of their day. Russell Hunting was also one of the foremost recording experts and frequently had his son's assistant in his work. Harry showed me what is probably the oldest record catalog in existence — one which had belonged to his father — as well as much other material which I wish I could have spent hours in studying. But I was kept so busy, giving information to newspaper people and handling publicity, that I didn't have a chance to talk with anyone as much as I would have liked. Fred Hager, too, showed me a collection of catalogs that made my mouth water.

Also among those present were the recording manager of MGM records, Frank Walker, and Mrs. Walker, who came with Mr. and Mrs. Carson Robison and three veterans of the Thomas A. Edison organization — Bill Hays, Fred Rabenstein and Andy Weber. Mrs. Bieling, of course, was with us, as were John Bieling's several sons and daughters, a number of grandchildren, and other members of the Bieling family.

On the morning of that historic September 10, Bryant Burke, Harry Selinger and I reached the hotel shortly after 9 o'clock. For the first few minutes nothing much happened, but then the collectors and artists began arriving in such numbers that we were kept busy trying to meet them all. Bryant and I had planned to have breakfast in the hotel, but once the excitement was under way there wasn't a chance of that.

I believe the first collector to report was Charlie Hodgdon, who, with his wife, Mary, came from Newburyport, Mass. Several others appeared soon afterward. I think Mrs. Doolittle was the first artist I met. Madame Helena came a few minutes later. She was accompanied by her friend, Mrs. Grace Tully, who learned of the party through Danton Walker's column in the New York Daily News and wrote to me for information. Mrs. Tully gave me some home recordings of Madame Helena's voice, and they reveal her to be still an accomplished singer, as well as a woman of charming personality. But that praise about having a charming personality could be extended to all the artists. It would be hard to find their equal among any other group of celebrities for cordiality and genuine, unaffected friendship. For instance, Frank Banta, Al Bernard and Harvey Hindermeyer were all thoughtful enough to bring me photographs of themselves.

One amusing incident occurred when Elsie Baker pretended not to recognize Reinald Werrenrath, and jokingly inquired: "You're not the man who was coming all the way from California to meet me, are you?" Whereupon, Dale Miller, who had driven from Long Beach, California, for the party, and had all sorts of trouble on the way, overheard remark and spoke up. "No," he said, "I'm the man from California." And Dr. Werrenrath exclaimed, "A perfect cue!"

Eventually, the Rev. Mr. Vesper took the stage as master of ceremonies and gave a brief explanation of the origin of John Bieling Day.

He then said that records made by the guest artists would next be played, in approximately chronological order, based on the years in which the performers first recorded. That gave Eugene Rose the honor of leading off, with an excellently recorded flute solo. Joe Belmont was next with a whistling specialty, and, after it had been played, Joe came forward and gave an interesting talk on his early recording experiences. Fred Hager, Billy Murray, Grace Spencer, Edith Helena, Reinald Werrenrath and Harvey Hindermeyer were also heard from in recorded form, before the announcement was made that luncheon was ready. Since the party was running behind schedule, the record playing wasn't resumed after the meal. My own opinion is that it would be better to drop the recorded part of the program in future years. There isn't time enough, as we learned, to include something by each artist, and I believe that it would be better to get together and talk about our common interests than to spend part of the time listening to records.

During luncheon, Ed Vesper told me that he was tired and asked if I would take over as master of ceremonies after we had eaten. I agreed, but before I could go into action, I was told that James Thrasher, a reporter for the NEA Feature Service, wanted to see me. I had to go talk with Mr. Thrasher, who wrote a feature story that was sent to 750 newspapers, and Ed then pulled a stroke of genius. He asked Irving Kaufman to do the M. C.'ing job, and Irving, with his accustomed ability, obliged. And that brilliant humorist was a hundred times more effective than I could possibly have been. He seated himself at the piano and gave us a performance typical of those he does in the New York night club at which he and his wife, Belle, star. I'm sure that no one who was there can forget Irving's side-splitting rendition of "Mo, the Schmo" or his impersonation of Frank Sinatra.

Irving also called on his fellow artists, and out of pure friendship they gave us a performance that in itself was worth far more than the $5.50 registration fee which the collectors had paid, to meet the expense of engaging the hotel's Georgian room and serving the meal. I'm sure all of us deeply appreciated the opportunity of being present at such a remarkable good will offering. Frank Banta, one of the most congenial, likable fellows I've ever met (and I'd been wanting to meet him for many years) not only gave us some piano solos but was untiring in accompanying the singers. I can't list all the details of the program, because I was constantly being called out of the room and probably saw less of it than almost anyone else, but Al Bernard gave a couple of blackface numbers, including his Edison Diamond Disc classic, "My Dawg." Arthur Hall, who is as unaffected friendly and agreeable as anybody I know, chose a number that couldn't have been any more appropriate — Ernest R. Ball's beautiful ballad, "Here's Love and Success to You." Carson Robison sent the crowd into hysterics with his rendition of his own composition, which is a best selling MGM record, "Life Gets Teejus, Don't It?" He gave me an autographed copy of the disc. Aileen Stanley sang "Gotta Get a Girl" with the freshness and youthful vocal quality of a girl of 20, and Aileen, Jr., who has been trained to sing in authentic Aileen Stanley manner, captivated us with her rendition of several classic Aileen successes, including "Let It Rain — I'll Be in Virginia in the Morning." Irving asked Billy Murray to join Aileen in one of their old-time duets, but "The Boss," who was having trouble with low blood pressure and wasn't feeling up to par, explained that, under doctor's orders, he was "in drydock," and couldn't sing. But he did walk up to the platform for a reunion with Aileen. Many of those present considered it to be the high spot of the party when Aileen threw her arms around Billy and kissed him. I had to miss it. I had just been called out of the room to talk with somebody! But Al Debus took a flash exposure of the preliminary stage of the embrace, and has sent me a print of it. Bob-Buttenuth played fine piano accompaniments for both Aileens.

It was unfortunate that some of the artists had to leave early. Doctor Freemantel, whose snow-white hair and white mustache won him many nominations for being the most distinguished looking man at the party, explained that he and Mrs. Freemantel were obliged to return to their school of vocal instruction in New York. I wish he could have stayed long enough to sing for us. Walter Scanlan also had to hurry back to his ABC job immediately after lunch. We were also disappointed that Will Oakland and Dick Robertson couldn't stay for the entire program, because we had hoped to hear them sing.

One of the outstanding events of the afternoon was a long and amusing talk by Reinald Werrenrath on various musical subjects. He reminisced about his friendship with John Bieling and his associations with the Hayden Quartet. He also paid his not too respectful respects to what he called the "lousy" present-day popular songs and the even worse "artists" who make moaning, gargling noises when they allegedly sing them.

And one of the most gratifying features of the day was the hit made by my friend Willie DuPree, who works with me at radio station WSLs, in Roanoke, Virginia, when he isn't attending Howard University. Willie is an 18-year-old Negro boy whose beautiful tenor voice has won him wide popularity in Southwest Virginia. I believed that if he went to New York and sang for the artists attending the party, he might receive some encouragement and good advice. And he did. Willie sang the familiar ballad, "Homing," and acquitted himself well, though he told me afterwards that he was almost overcome by the honor of being accompanied by Frank Banta. "Mr. Banta played so brilliantly," he remarked, "that I felt that I ought to stand there and listen to him, instead of trying to sing." He was also naturally a bit self-conscious about being heard after so many famous artists entertained. Reinald Werrenrath, who had been about to leave, stayed especially to hear the young fellow sing. The former Metropolitan Opera star told Willie that he has a naturally sweet voice and a true feeling for singing and, with proper training, should go far as a concert artist. Several other artists also gave him similar encouragement and advice, as did the editor of the American Record Guide, Peter Hugh Reed. Incidentally, Willie had a great time when the Rev. Mr. Vesper and the "Woodymay Wizards," John L. Norton, senior and junior, took him with them to West Orange, New Jersey, for a visit to the Edison laboratory. Being thoroughly tired out, I decided to skip my scheduled visit to Edison.

The party had broken up late in the afternoon and I was just about to leave the Garden City Hotel when I was told that I was wanted on the phone. To my surprise, the person calling me was Taylor Grant, the well-known newscaster for the American Broadcasting Company. Taylor had learned of the party from Walter Scanlan, and wanted to know if I would talk about it on a network television program the following Saturday night. I agreed, and Dale Miller, George Bieling and I drove to Radio City the next afternoon, taking with us an Edison Standard cylinder phonograph which its owner, Bryant Burke, had displayed at the party. I played Billy Murray's 1906 record of "You're a Grand Old Rag" and was interviewed by Mr. Grant about the party. So my face was seen by television from Boston to Richmond.

I only hope that it didn't look as exhausted as the rest of me felt. I was already tired before I left Virginia, and by the time I returned home that I set a new record for myself by sleeping 25½ hours at a stretch. But it was a great vacation trip and a great party — and I'm sure that we'll have an even bigger and better meeting in September, 1949!

C. R. S.

Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of
operatic, theatrical, and
speech records.

Records available through dealers only.
FREE MAILING LIST OF NEW ISSUES.

C. R. S.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave., New York 29, N. Y.

Here's the Book You've All Been Waiting For
MUSICAL BOXES by John T. Clark, 12mo, cloth binding, 72 pp., illustrated, 18 plates. London, 1948. Includes data on automatic organs and mechanical singing birds, both antique and modern. A must book for anyone interested in this field of collecting.
Price $4.50.

BLACK ARCHER PRESS
3002 N. Cicero Ave., Chicago 41, Ill.

RECORDS

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, Room 1108, 8 W. 40th St., New York 18, N. Y. my64201

RARE OLD RECORDS: Vocal operatic, popular, Edison's, jazz, for sale reasonably priced. Send your want list. —Delano, 349 Lindenwold, Ambler, Pa. mh6276

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items. —Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342, fl28733

REDUCED PRICE SALE—Recordings 89c.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City, N. Y. je12487

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. s120821

PHONOGRAPH Records bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. s12407

AUCTION AND SALE of opera records. Send for free list. Used opera records wanted.—Sigmund Luzinas, 3229 S. Wallace St., Chicago 16, Ill. ja3253

UNUSED EDISON disc records. 50 different $7.50, random selection.—A. E. Larsen, 1213 W. 68rd St., Chicago, Ill. ap6676

Vocal operatics at auction and fixed prices.—H. Mc Cann, 1229 Dean St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ja3063

ELEVEN THOUSAND different vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. n126351

CYLINDER RECORDS bought for my personal collection. 500 duplicates to exchange. — Benj. Franklin, Haynesville, Virginia. f3042

FOR SALE: Used classical records; vocal and instrumental. — Ray Hanna, 2729 Horton St., Rockford, Ill. d1021

OLD MUSIC BOX Melodies for Christmas. Actual recordings of rare old music boxes. Album RB 1, 6 sides, Silent Night, O-Sanctissima, Adeste Fideles, Ave Maria, 3 old waltzes and 3 operatic airs $4.25. Album RB 4, 4 sides, Jingle Bells, Santa Claus is Coming to Town, White Christmas and First Noel $2.50. Postpaid.—Bornand Records, 333 5th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y. d1694

MISCELLANEOUS

Swiss music movements, assorted cunes $2.30. Direct from manufacturers agent. — Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, N. Y. f3084

HAVE YOUR OLD violin appraised for insurance or closing an estate. You may own a masterpiece. Fee $5.—Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 58 S. W. 27th St., Coral Gables, Florida. jly120041

BACK SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, rags, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my12998

(CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE)

SANDAL-WOOD GUITAR

San Domingo mahogany case;
dates back to 1800, pedigreed.

J. F. PIZZITOLA

89 E. Alvord St., Springfield 8, Mass.

material becomes pliable, then place between two pieces of plate glass (at least 12" by 12" in size) and allow to cool. It will then be flat and should stay that way. Important: The safest way to heat the record is to place it on a flat surface and leave for a few minutes in full-strength summer sun, but watch closely lest it melt!

(To be continued)

VICTOR HERITAGE SERIES

ENRICO CARUSO

- 15-1036 Martha — M'appari/Favorita — Spirito gentil
- 15-1037 Don Sebastiano—Deserto in terra/Gli Ugonotti—Bianca al par di neve alpina
- 15-1038 La Boheme—Io non ho che una povera stanzetta/Macheth — Ah, la paterna mano
- 15-1039 Samson et Dalila—Vois ma misere, helas/Nero—Ah, mon sort
- 15-1040 La Danza: Tarantella Napolitana/Feneste che lucive.

Collectors' and Music Lovers'

PARADISE

- Five decades of classical vocals and instrumentals. Specializing in G&T, Zonophone, Fonotipia, Favorite, etc. . . . also inexpensive reissues and rerecordings.
- Fine line of out-of-print singles and albums and pre-war pressings at premium prices.
- Full line of current classical records and albums at regular list prices, including many hard-to-find records.
- Authorized dealers RCA-Victor, Columbia, Decca, English Decca, Parlophone London Records, CRS, Herrold, Cetra, Vox, Musicraft, Alco, International, etc.

Order your new classical releases and your rare collectors' items from a reliable store and mail order house.

The RECORD HUNTER

1194 Lexington Avenue,
near 81st Street,
New York 28, N. Y. etc

FOR SALE

Old time recordings on discs, cylinders popular, classical. Also cylinder machines, parts. Catalog on request. d49c

R. L. POLEY

1124 S. University, Denver 10, Colo.

CYLINDER RECORDS

2-4-Minute, wax, EDISON, COLUMBIA, ETC. CYLINDER, PHONOGRAPHS, HORNS, PARTS, MUSIC BOXES, SINGING BIRDS, OR ANY BOOKS, OR CATALOGS PERTAINING TO ABOVE.

Bought - Sold - Exchanged

Send full description, size, weight, condition and best dealers resale prices on any of the above you have to sell, or send 50 cents for our complete list of all above that we have for immediate shipment. (50c returnable on first order of $5 or more.)

A. Nugent, Jr.

100 N. Third St., Richmond, Va.

Wanted to buy: old handuffs, legions, viewcards of early airplanes, fire engines, circus, 1893 Exposition or locksmith key machines or equipment, books and literature on any of these items. Jax

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

SYLVESTER LOUIS OSSMAN, "The Banjo King." IV.

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Vess Ossman dominated the list of American recording banjoists for a good many years, but his name began to appear in the phonograph companies' monthly supplements less frequently after 1910. From that time on, his great rival, Fred Van Eps, forged steadily to the front. Fred made a few Edison cylinders around the turn of the century, but his Victor debut didn't occur until 1910, and he began to play for Columbia at about the same time. Perhaps Mr. Ossman began to devote more of his time to his lyceum and teaching. Possibly he resumed his foreign travels. Mrs. Vess Ossman, Jr., has sent me a photograph of "Ossman's Singing and Playing Orchestra," with a note saying that the picture was made around 1912. This may be another good explanation of Vess's largely dropping out of recording activities for a number of years. The organization consisted of the senior Ossman; his son, Vess, junior, who had also become an expert banjoist; and unidentified violinist, 'cellist and drummer, and a pianist. Mr. Ossman's daughter, Mrs. Mulligan, has identified the latter as "a Jewish fellow named Max Lichenstein. He was a wonderful musician and a very kind and likable young man."

At any rate, and whatever the reasons may have been, Mr. Ossman made only a few records from 1911 to 1916. Van Eps, who used a steel-backed instrument to throw the banjo tone strongly into the recording horn, was much the more active of the two in the phonograph field. Today, if you want to get a lively argument started at any gathering of collectors of old-time popular records, all you have to do is say that Ossman was a better banjoist than Van Eps, or vice versa. The Van Eps partisans insist that their man's playing, reinforced by his steel-backed instrument and his use of a pick, was more "brilliant" than Ossman's. Vess's supporters come back that his performance sound more like "a real banjo" and that no other player has ever exceeded his technical skill.

When such a controversy arises, I maintain a benevolent neutrality, and content myself with saying that I think both Vess and Fred were about as fine in their way as it's possible for anybody to be. But as a small boy I was a fanatical Ossman adherent and wouldn't even admit that Van Eps was good. Banjo music (which I love to this day) seemed the highest expression of rhythm, and Vess L. Ossman was my ideal of the greatest musician alive. When I founded, or imagined I did, the Walsh Talking Machine Company and pretended that I was the world's greatest manufacturer of records, the catalog which I wrote by long hand in a five-cent pencil tablet contained no banjo playing other than that of my hero, Vess.

In 1913 Victor listed one or two Ossman records, including the appropriately titled "A Little Bit of Everything Medley," but his name was absent from the 1914 and 1915 monthly supplements of all the leading companies. However, in 1916, Vess was back in the field where he had been supreme, making records for Victor, Columbia and Edison. The supposition that he had been out of the country for a part of the time is favored by Victor's comment on his record of "Good Scout—One-Step" and "Universal Fox-Trot," which came out in March, 1916: "Two new renditions by this skilled banjoist, who has played all over the world. Two lively new compositions have been selected for Mr. Ossman's reappearance with the Victor, and both can be used for dancing if desired."

At about the same time, Ossman entered the recorded dance music field by bringing forward his Banjo Orchestra. A photograph published in an Edison booklet shows that this was not the same group as Ossman's Singing and Playing Orchestra. There are only five players instead of six and the second obviously is not Vess, junior, but is a stout, apparently middle-aged man. Max Lichenstein is still the pianist and the drummer remains, but the violinist and 'cellist have given way to a saxophone player. Van Eps also had a banjo orchestra, which made records for a couple of years before Ossman's came into the picture, and Burt Earle recorded with a similar group for Pathé. There was also the Sisty and Seitz Banjo Orchestra, which made a couple of Edison records.

Just when Mr. Ossman's association with the Record Maker Troupe (later the Eight Famous Victor Artists) began I don't know, but he was appearing with the aggregation in April, 1917, as a clipping sent to me by his daughter-in-law shows. The troupe, managed by Henry Burr, then had this remarkable collection of talent: Billy Murray, tenor comedian; Burr, Albert Campbell and Byron G. Harlan, tenors; Arthur Collins, baritone comedian; John H. Meyers, bass; Ossman, banjo; and Theodore Morse, composer of innumerable popular songs, piano accompanist. A man who heard the eight give a concert says he was impressed by Ossman's youthful appearance, despite the fact that he was almost 49 years old and had been making records for more than twenty years. The Southern audience of which my informant was a part, loved banjo music, and when Vess struck up the favorite "Turkey in the Straw Medley," the masculine

MUSIC BOXES

From January 5th to March 31st I will not be available to answer any mail or do any work on music boxes, etc.
After April 1st I will again be at your service.

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington, Rhode Island

mhc

MUSIC BOXES

all kinds

Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired
(Third generation in the music box business)

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

C. R. S.*Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and
speech records.

Records available through dealers only.
FREE MAILING LIST OF NEW ISSUES.

C. R. S.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave., New York 29, N. Y.

Address all mail for

WOODYMAY RECORD CO.

to Box 33,

Roxbury Post Office, Boston, Mass.

Store located at 73
Roxbury St.

!! Now Ready !!

The New Catalogue of Historical Recordings

By ROBERT BAUER

Contains 494 pages of listings of classical vocal recordings (lateral-cut discs—no cylinders or vertical-cut discs) issued in Europe and the USA from 1898 to 1908/9.

The new catalogue is a substantial improvement over the first edition of 1938 because it has: two hundred additional pages; birth, debut and death dates and places of many of the artists; strict alphabetical order; two pages of label information; Cloth Binding; etc. etc.

Price $9.75

Remit by Check or Money Order to:

STEPHEN FASSETT

318 West 102nd St.,

New York 25, N. Y.

and your copy will be mailed to you direct from England.

portion of the crowd rose to its feet and gave "rebel yells." The Banjo King took about a dozen bows and had to play several encores. His part of the program was the biggest hit of the evening.

Ossman played the banjo accompaniment in the 1917 Edison record of "The Laughing Song," by Edward Meeker and the Empire Vaudeville Company, but he seems to have made no records after that year. He probably left the troupe late in 1917, when Collins and Harlan also ceased to be members. Van Eps took his place and remained with the group for several years, before being succeeded by probably the greatest of all saxophone players, the late Rudy Wiedoeft.

This seems to be a good place to insert a quotation from one of Mrs. Vess Ossman, junior's letters:

"Mr. Ossman lived in New York City for many years and had bands at many of the leading hotels. In later years, when I first met him, he had come to Indianapolis, Indiana, and Dayton, Ohio, for Mr. Bennett Gates (owner of hotels in those cities), for a season's engagement and remained five years at the Severin Hotel, Indianapolis, and the Miami, Dayton. He had just returned to vaudeville for a short time when he passed on."

As early as 1917, Victor had begun to re-make many of its older records—because defects had developed in the masters or to get the benefit of better accompaniments. This was particularly true of those by the Hayden Quartet, which had disbanded when John Biehling, its first tenor, quit singing in 1914. As time went on, most of the records that remained in the catalog by such favorites as the quartet and its second tenor, Harry Macdonough, were done over by other singers — although Macdonough for several years was head of the company's artist and repertoire department. He probably just didn't want to sing any more. Perhaps the most surprising re-make was one of the twelve-inch record No. 35095, "Medley of Foster Songs," by the Peerless Quartet. In 1923 when the Peerless was still the most popular male quartet and was under exclusive Victor contract, this number was done over by the Criterion Quartet — most likely the Peerless was away on one of the Eight's three-month concert trips.

Ossman's records soon began to fare like those of the pioneer vocalists. The 1920 Victor catalog contained several of his favorites, such as "Turkey in the Straw Medley" and "A Bunch of Rags" (he had originally made the latter in 1902), played by Van Eps. Undoubtedly this was because Ossman was at that time settled in the Middle West and was not conveniently available for re-makes if anything went wrong with the original. Probably, too, the fact that the Record Makers had changed their name to the Eight Famous Victor Artists with Van Eps as one of their stars made Victor want to give Fred as long a list as possible. However, Columbia also had most of its Ossman records done over by Van Eps. In 1924, the Victor catalog contained only one Ossman record, "The Buffalo Rag." It was dropped in 1925, the year that electric recording began and after the Banjo King had died. The decline of the banjo's popularity had already begun, although Van Eps made a few electrically recorded numbers, and tenor banjo solos by a newcomer, the agile-fingered Harry Reser, sold well for years. Just a few months ago Reser made his first banjo record in 14 years — his Apollo disc of "Banjo Boogie." Another popular tenor banjo soloist was Eddie Peabody — who sometimes called himself "the Banjo King"!

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

142 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO

● Extra tune sheets and fine assortment of boxes for sale playing 8", 11", 12 1/4", 15 1/2", 20 3/4" and 27" diameter discs.

● We also offer for sale many fine Swiss music boxes in varied styles and sizes. Complete repairs to all type boxes.

Send card to be placed on our mailing list

P. O. Box 342

Hanover,

Massachusetts

ST. AUGUSTINE

Invites You

January 23-27, incl.

to the

ANTIQUES SHOW

in the

LIGHTNER MUSEUM

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

SYLVESTER LOUIS OSSMAN, "The Banjo King"

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Mr. Vess L. Ossman, junior's letter, already quoted, shows that Mr. Ossman returned to the stage in 1923, after five years of leading dance bands for hotels in Indianapolis and Dayton. He and Vess, junior, then went into vaudeville as a Banjo duet team, where they were highly successful for several months. But then came tragedy, when the elder Ossman suffered a severe heart attack while the pair was playing an engagement for a Minneapolis, Minnesota, theatre.

Under the heading of "Musician's Contribution to Charity Nearly Cost His Life; Son 'Carries On,' Hiding Heartache Under Smiles," a Minneapolis paper in November, 1923, printed the following:

FOR SALE

Old time recordings on discs, cylinders popular, classical. Also cylinder machines, parts. Catalog on request.

R. L. POLEY

1124 S. University, Denver 10, Colo.

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

142 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

• Extra tune sheets and fine assortment of boxes for sale playing 8", 11", 12 1/4", 15 1/4", 20 1/4" and 27" diameter discs.

• We also offer for sale many fine Swiss music boxes in varied styles and sizes. Complete repairs to all type boxes.

Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342

Hanover, Massachusetts

"Back of the gay scenes which served as a background for the brilliance of the Charity ball Tuesday night, a little drama was enacted, unwitnessed by the public. In the midst of the gaiety of one of the social season's premier events, near tragedy appeared for a moment. Then merriment was resumed.

"The two Ossmans, father and son, appearing at a local theatre during the week, had volunteered their services for the evening — their contribution to charity. Skilled players on the banjo, their music was added to that of the orchestra. Some way, the music these two musicians played that night was a trifle different than that which throughout the week drew the applause of the theater-going public. Strains of pure musical beauty, as well as the "jazz" chords suitable for dancing, issued from their instruments.

"Suddenly the figure of the elder Ossman was seen to grow limp. Faintness seized him, and he was unable to continue. In a moment he had become seriously ill. He was taken to a local hospital where his condition was announced as critical. The next night, theatre-goers heard but one artist play where two had performed before. With his father dangerously ill, Vess Ossman, jr., alone 'put over the act.' None in the audience guessed the near heartbreak behind the smiles with which he received their applause. Skilled fingers produced music; his thoughts were with his father.

"Thanksgiving day held a peculiar significance for the two Ossmans, for that day Mr. Ossman, Sr., was released from the hospital, weak but out of danger. He will be able to resume work next week. And Thanksgiving night, patrons of a local theatre were enthralled by the playing of the younger Ossman."

But it turned out that the newspaper's reference to the elder Ossman being out of danger, was sadly ironic. He had another heart attack and died a few days after his return to the stage. Here is the death notice published in a Hudson, New York, paper, shortly after The Banjo King's death on December 8, 1923:

"Banjoist Vess Ossman is dead. Succumbs to heart attack while on tour — was native of Hudson. — Word has been received here of the death of Vess Osman, Sr., 55, former leader of the Ossman's orchestra at the Miami Hotel, Dayton, Ohio, who died Thursday night at 11 o'clock at Fairmount, Minnesota. His death followed an attack of heart disease.

"Mr. Ossman died shortly after taking part in the performance in a B. F. Keith's vaudeville house in Fairmount, where he was billed with his son, Vess Ossman, Jr., in a musical act.

"Mr. Ossman and his son left Dayton about six months ago to fill a contract with the B. F. Keith western vaudeville circuit for the season. For the last four years he had been engaged by the Miami hotel, conducting a dance orchestra in the grill room.

"Mr. Ossman was born in Hudson, N. Y., and lived here until he was 12 years old. His musical career started in his early days when he traveled the country with musical shows, playing the banjo. He has followed the musical profession all of his life, playing in several different countries in the last twenty-five years. Several years before going to Dayton he played before King George of England and royalty of other countries.

"During the early stages of the talking machines, Mr. Ossman was noted for making the first banjo record in New York for the Victor Co. While making the vaudeville tour with his son, his wife, Mrs. Eunice Ossman, and daughter, Annadele, made their home in Dayton, in the Riverside apartments.

"Vess Ossman developed his talents as a musician and banjoist in early youth, taking his first lesson from Fidell Wise, of this city. He soon became recognized as a leader in the playing of this instrument, and he was generous in playing at many entertainments and gatherings about Hudson in his youth. His talent soon called him to New York City, where he made his home until moving to Dayton. Several times he came back to Hudson for concert engagements, playing one season at the Hudson fair, and at the Y. M. C. A., in a concert with Mrs. J. Bartlett Hydorn, of Albany. His last appearance was when he was brought to Hudson by Rogers Hose Co., along with several prominent names on phonograph records. He is survived by his wife,

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

Collectors' and Music Lovers' PARADISE

- Five decades of classical vocals and instrumentals. Specializing in G&T, Zonophone, Fonotipia, Favorte, etc. . . . also inexpensive reissues and rerecordings.
- Fine line of out-of-print singles and albums and pre-war pressings at premium prices.
- Full line of current classical records and albums at regular list prices, including many hard-to-find records.
- Authorized dealers RCA-Victor, Columbia, Decca, English Decca, Parlophone, London Records, CRS, Herrold, Cetra, Vox, Musicraft, Alco, International, etc.

Order your new classical releases and your rare collectors' items from a reliable store and mail order house.

The RECORD HUNTER

1194 Lexington Avenue,
near 81st Street,
New York 28, N. Y.

four children, and a sister, Mrs. John T. Arkinson, of Mamoroneck, N. Y. A few month ago, Augustus, an elder brother of Vess, died, Gus being for many years the chief train dispatcher in the New York Central terminal."

As has already been related, Mr. Ossman was buried in Valhalla Cemetery, St. Louis, Missouri, the city in which his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Vess Ossman, Junior, still lives. The program of the Missouri theater of St. Louis announced on December 8, 1923 (the day the banjoist died) that he and his son would play there Christmas week. Through an error, they were listed as "V. L. Ossman and Brother," instead of Son.

Vess Ossman's last appearance in a record list came in 1926, when he had been dead almost three years. Edison, which had made a wax Amberol cylinder of a "Banjo Medley" (No. 250) by him in 1909, re-issued it 17 years later as Blue Amberol No. 5377. I'm still looking for a copy of the Blue Amberol version.

His son, Vess, junior, like his father, was not destined to a long life. After the elder Ossman's death, the young man continued to be well known for several years as a banjoist, but he eventually went to St. Louis, where he died on January 22, 1942. He, too, was a victim of a heart attack. On February 7, 1942, The Billboard published the following notice of his death:

"Vess Ossman, 49, until eight months ago, operator of the Missouri Theatrical Agency, St. Louis, (died) in the St. John's Hospital, that city, January 22, of heart disease. He was previously a musician in musical comedy and vaudeville. Services, January 24, at Blessed Sacrament Catholic Church, St. Louis. Survived by his widow, Helen, and two daughters."

Actually, the younger Ossman was survived by a son, Vess III, in addition to his daughters. And it will be noticed that The Billboard entirely omitted any mention of his father, who, a generation before, had been one of the best known and most popular musicians in the world.

However, record collectors are not so oblivious of a great artist's brilliant achievements as was "The Bible of the Show Business." There must be hundreds of admirers of the one-time Banjo King who never miss an opportunity to acquire a good copy of one of his records. And I hope that — thanks again to Mrs. Vess Ossman, junior, and the banjoist's daughter, Mrs. Mulligan — these sketches have succeeded in demonstrating that Sylvester Louis Ossman, senior, was one of the most important and colorful of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists.

EDISON CYLINDER record phonograph, 30" brass horn, 45 classical and novelty records. Write — Adelaide E. Kramer, 1319 S. Kostner Ave., Chicago. f1061

OPERATIC RARETIES. 10,000 European G&T, Fonotipia, and HMV records of Escalais, Cortis, Zenatello, Scaramberg, etc. Free monthly lists.—Topalian, 348 - 40th St., Brooklyn, N. Y. ap3483

THE ARISTOCRACY OF THE CIRCUS

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 29)

was featured in the aerial ballet; Ortans and five of her brothers took part in a top-flight teeterboard acrobatic act, and Lucio was featured with his brothers, and wife, June, in the family bareback riding act, the greatest in circus history, many critics agree.

Half dozen years ago, Uncle Pietro's branch of the family appeared in Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey circus, with a revival of the leaps over elephants and other objects, led by Adolfe, outstanding tumbler. That year, there were 22 performing Cristianis in the personnel of the show.

Now this branch of the Cristiani family, joined by members of "Papa" Ernesto's brood, are the star performers of King Brothers Circus. The Cristianis brothers perform their leaps over elephants and other objects, Cosetta and Chita Cristiani, appear in bareback riding acts, and the members of the families join for a featured teeterboard acrobatic act.

The Cristianis make their home in Sarasota, Florida, where they own seven houses. But only "Papa" Ernesto's name appears in the telephone directory, for he remains the nominal head of the family.

Few are the popular nationally circulated magazines which have not featured articles on the colorful Cristiani family, and hundreds of photographs of these remarkable artists performing their sensational feats have appeared in the public prints.

Lucio is the only bareback rider to accomplish some of his outstanding feats, such as turning a somersault from one horse to another, and immediately going into a second somersault to a third horse. The Cristianis perfected an unparalleled feat, when five of the brothers race across the ring, and leaping into the air at the same time, mount a cantering horse.

Ortans Cristiano mounts a four-high somersault from a teeterboard with such exquisite artistry, critics rave about her accomplishment, and Daviso's wife, known as La Louisa, is one of the most talented high trapeze performers, ever seen in an American arena, the closest rival to the late Lillian Leitzel, the circus world has known.

There is every reason to believe that the circus tradition will be carried on in America for many years by the Cristianis. Of Ernesto's and Pietro's 17 children, all but one, a lawyer in Italy, are circus performers in America, and naturalized citizens. Furthermore the in-laws are circus performers, too, and at present there are 12 grand-children, all of whom are being groomed to be acrobats, aerialists and bareback riders.

PAILLARD MUSIC BOX, with mandolin attachment; 10 cylinders, 18½" long; 60 arias. Mounted on double chested, burled walnut, inlaid 6 drawer cabinet. Excellent condition. History.—J. Poelman, 78 West 103 St., New York. fe1042

CERAMICS

- ★ A Hobby in your own home
- ★ Profit by your own creations
- ★ An ancient art that enables you to express your own ideas in everlasting pottery.
- ★ Inexpensive — For a trial, beginners can even use the kitchen oven to fire some clays and glazes.

Ask for our new, instructive pottery circular, showing clays, glazes, molds, kilns and kiln materials.

W. A. MAURER CO.
316 W. Grand Ave.
Chicago 10, Ill.

"HOW TO RESTORE ANTIQUES"

First practical book published on how to finish and restore old furniture, repair old clocks, join metals, use old-time stenciling, restore antique art, etc. Easy to follow photographs help you to "do it yourself" and save money.

Only $4.00

mh94c

PRODEX CO., 509 Fifth Ave., N. Y. C. 17

GOLDFLEAF

Fascinating Art-Hobby

IMMEDIATE HOME MONEY MAKER

GOLDFLEAF frames, mirrors, glass ware, baby shoes, etc., into valuable, beautiful art pieces. Thrilling and profitable craft easily learned. Metal-leaf-Craft Kit: complete with 100 (6") Italian gold-colored leaves, special leaf tip, 2 camel-hair brushes, 8 ounce container leaf fluid—Complete Instructions. ONLY $5.95 Postpaid.

PRODEX COMPANY, 509 5th Ave., N. Y. C. 16
BOOK "Gold With Goldleaf" 50c.

ANTIQUE A MONTH

• CLUB •

Box 86

Send your name and address on a penny card for information about this thrilling new club. Tell us what you collect.

Corsicana, Texas

Everything Old.

No Dues — No Strings.

Second OKLAHOMA CITY ANTIQUE SHOW AND SALE

April 19, 20, 21 & 22

Hall of Mirrors - Municipal Auditorium

Only few booths available!

Mr. & Mrs. G. Furrow, Managers
3719 Free Ferry, Ft. Smith, Ark.

United States. These include a recording of Vesti la giubba by Pertile from Italian HMV (DB1118) released on Victor as 9794, coupled with Un di all' azzurro spazio from Andrea Chenier; Di quella pira from Il Trovatore by Pertile, Nessi & Lattuada and Ah si ben mio from the same opera by Pertile were issued in Chile on Victor 9795, from HMV DB 1198. The Rigoletto finale and Dunque io son from Il Barbiere by Dal Monte and Montesanto are available on Victor 13901. The two sides were coupled differently as DB 2124 and DB 2125. Incidentally, DB 2124 was released by Victor in Brazil as 11-8516, while DB 2125 was released in the Argentine as 15921. It is too bad that these records were never made available in the United States. I was disappointed to find that the fabulous electrical recording of the finale to Carmen by Maria Gay and Giovanni Zenatello (this was recorded at Camden) on Victor 7314 has been withdrawn. Incidentally, this record was listed in the local catalogs and on some labels as by Maria GRAY instead of Maria Gay! One copy which I found was thus mis-labeled.

The one day I had left to visit Valparaiso turned out to be a holiday with all shops closed, so I did not have the opportunity to test the potentialities of this coastal city. My one day in Lima, Peru, was only partially fruitful. Peru does not have its own record plants, and depends on imports from the United States for all classical records. In the old days, special Latin American catalogs in Spanish were available from the U. S. Export division of Victor and Columbia, but today those countries which do not have their own factories order from the domestic U. S. catalogs.

Thus you will see that my trip home was fairly exciting from the record collecting standpoint, but there is still one catch. The amount of red-tape involved in exporting from the Latin American countries is something terrific. The records which I purchased in Buenos Aires over one year ago are still awaiting a myriad of papers before they can leave the country, and those shipped from Chile have still to be heard from, so I will not accept congratulations on my South American "finds" until they are safely in California!

N. B.: Mr. Moran's account of his visit with red seal artist Cristina Soro will appear in an early issue of HOBBIES.

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

143 PAGES — 183 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

FRANK C. STANLEY. I.

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

More than once, in publishing these biographical sketches of pioneer recording artists, I have made clear my regret that much of my information ordinarily must be collected at second, third or fourth hand. No matter how good my intentions, it remains hard to keep inaccurate statements from slipping in. However, now that I am undertaking the life story of one of the greatest of the "popular" recording artists — a man whose name belongs on anybody's list of the 15 or 20 most accomplished performers who ever sang into a recording horn — I am happy that I shall not have to depend upon indirect and possibly erroneous sources. In gathering material about the late Frank C. Stanley, I have had the gracious assistance of his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth A. Grinstead, of Wickford, Rhode Island, and his daughters, Mrs. Elizabeth G. Repelow and Mrs. Elaine Powell, who still lives in "the Oranges," the New Jersey community in which their father was born and in which he made his home for his nearly 42 years of life.

Some eighteen months ago I began work on a series about Frank Stanley, which I submitted for checking to Mrs. Repelow and she passed on to her mother. The articles were based on published material, but they proved to contain so many unintentionally wrong statements that I decided to begin all over, and asked Mrs. Grinstead and her daughters to provide additional aid. This they have so generously done — especially Mrs. Grinstead, for her daughters were only small children when their father died in 1910 — that I expect this to be the most accurate and complete series that has yet come from my typewriter. It will also be more extended than any that will follow, for no other pioneer of Frank Stanley's stature remains to be considered. Of the old-time recording artists whom readers of HOBBIES elected a few years ago to the ranks of "the Supreme Fifteen," only Stanley and Cal Stewart, the beloved "Uncle Josh," remain for consideration. There is plenty of interest to be told concerning Calvin Edward Stewart, but his story will hardly occupy as much space as that I plan to allot to Frank Stanley. In passing, I may say that I shall quote from some of the published articles in which Mr. Grinstead's wife and daughters found mistakes, but when I do I shall carefully point out the wrong statements.

Perhaps, in order to give a bird's-eye view of the life and achievements of the artist whose real name was William Stanley Grinstead, but who was known throughout his singing career as Frank C. Stanley, (I'll explain later how that name was chosen for recording purposes), I can't do better than quote the death notice which appeared in the Newark Evening News for December 13, 1910. Under the heading of W. S. GRINSTED, NOTED SINGER," with the sub-heads, "Orange Alderman Dead of Pneumonia After Illness of Only Six Days" and "Sang in Waldorf Last Week," the Newark paper said.

Frank C. Stanley, (age 38), as he appeared in March 1907, at the peak of his career.

"Alderman William Stanley Grinstead, of Orange, who was one of the best known bass singers in this section of the country, died at his home, 199 High Street, last night, after an illness of less than a week. Last Tuesday night (December 6) he was the leading soloist at a concert given in the Waldorf Astoria, and when he returned home he complained of a severe cold. His condition became so serious that it was necessary to call Dr. J. Hammond Bradshaw early the next morning. Later in the day the physician found that Mr. Grinstead was suffering with pleurisy and pneumonia.

"During the latter part of the week Mr. Grinstead's condition gradually grew worse, and on Saturday night his relatives began to lose hope for his recovery. On Sunday afternoon, however, he seemed to revive somewhat, and was able to secure some sleep on that night. Yesterday afternoon peritonitis developed, and the end came five minutes before midnight.

"Alderman Grinstead was the son of the late Augustus T. Grinstead, who for many years was president of the Orange Board of Education. Like his father, he was deeply interested in the Orange school system and other public affairs. He was elected a school commissioner in 1906, and served one term. Last year he was elected a member of the Common Council on the Democratic ticket, securing the largest majority ever given any candidate in the Fifth Ward of Orange. Although a loyal Democrat, Mr. Grinstead was absolutely fearless in advancing his opinions or in taking a stand on any public question.

Mr. Grinstead was perhaps best known as a professional singer. Possessing a deep bass voice of remarkable range and power, which was carefully trained during his boyhood, he devoted his whole life to music. For several years he was the bass soloist in the Central Presby-

MUSIC BOXES

From December 28th to March 15th I will not be available to answer any mail or do any work on music boxes, etc.

After March 15th I will again be at your service.

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington, Rhode Island

mhc

MUSIC BOXES

all kinds

Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired

Third generation in the music box business

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

C. R. S.*Historical Records

Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and speech records.

Records available through dealers only.

FREE MAILING LIST OF NEW ISSUES.

C. R. S.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

2060 First Ave., New York 29, N. Y.

Address all mail for

WOODYMAY RECORD CO.

to Box 33,

Roxbury Post Office, Boston, Mass.

Store located at 78
Roxbury St.

Records and Record Catalogs For Sale

I have a number of classical vocal records, mostly accoustics, to dispose of, but no time to list. Please send me your want lists. Collectors living in the New York City area may telephone (Riverside 9-1574) between 10 A. M. and 10 P. M. to arrange appointment for inspection of records and catalogs.

ALSO FOR SALE

THE OSCAR SAENGER COURSE IN VOCAL TRAINING

—For Mezzo-Soprano and for Tenor—10 double-faced records in ea. set. Excellent cond. Send your offers. Special consideration given Collectors.

The new catalog of
Historical Records.

by Robert Bauer.

Contains 494 pages listing vocal recordings issued in the United States and Europe from 1898 to 1908/09. Remit $9.75 to me by check or money order and your copy will be mailed to you direct from England. Note: Have a few copies of the original 1938 edition for sale at $3.50 each, postpaid.

STEPHEN FASSETT

318 W. 102nd St., New York 25, N. Y.

terian Church, New York, and under the name of Frank C. Stanley he was known all over the world as a singer for phonograph records. Wherever phonographs are used the records having the bass and tenor duets by Mr. Grinsted and Byron G. Harlan are in popular demand. During the delirium of his illness he frequently sang.

"At various times during his professional career as a bass soloist, Mr. Grinsted sang in Brick Presbyterian and Calvary Methodist churches, East Orange, as well in a number of New York and Brooklyn churches.

"A special meeting of the Orange City Democratic Committee will be held tomorrow night to take action on Mr. Grinsted's death.

"Mr. Grinsted was born in Orange, and if he had lived until December 29, would have been forty-two years old. Shortly after his graduation from the Orange High School in 1886 he secured a position as clerk in the Second National Bank of Orange. His position was advanced until he became paying teller, and he resigned this position in 1902 to devote all his time to music. He married Miss Elizabeth A. Griffing, of Orange, who survives him with two sons and two daughters. His children are: W. Stanley Grinsted, Jr., Elizabeth Grinsted, Allen Grinsted and Elaine Grinsted. One brother, C. Burr Grinsted, also survives him.

"In 1904 Mr. Grinsted became a member of Corinthian Lodge, No. 57, F. & A. M., and has since been an active Free Mason. He was a Knight Templar, having been a member of a New York Commandery. He was also a member of Orange Lodge, No. 135, B. P. O. Elks.

"Mayor Arthur B. Seymour has issued a call for a special meeting of the Common Council for tonight to take action on Mr. Grinsted's death. The Mayor also had the flag at Military Common placed at half-mast, and has issued instructions to have the public buildings draped in mourning for thirty days. All the city offices in Orange will be closed during the funeral services.

"The services will be held in the First Presbyterian Church, Orange, on Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock, and will be conducted by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Charles Townsend. The interment will be in Rosedale Cemetery. On account of the death of Alderman Grinsted the testimonial banquet which was to have been given Alderman William A. Calhoun and Joseph A. Birkholz, the retiring members in the Common Council, on Saturday night, has been indefinitely postponed."

The Newark paper commented editorially that same day: "In the death of Stanley Grinsted, Orange loses a valuable citizen, and many individuals lose a true friend. He had a wide circle of acquaintances in the Oranges, where he was born and had always lived, and his popularity was of the genuine kind. As a public official, in the Common Council, he was aggressive and active, and earnest in the public interest. His death is sincerely regretted, and the expressions of sympathy for his family are general and genuine."

These two articles show unmistakably the admiration and warmth of feeling which the people of Orange felt for their distinguished singer-citizen — and today, in spite of the fact that more than 37 years have passed since his death, thousands of collectors have the same warm sentiments for the basso whom many of them consider to have had the greatest vocal gifts of any pioneer recording artist. I have yet to meet anyone who does not like Frank Stanley's reproduced voice. On the strength of natural equipment and interpretative gifts, including an almost amazing versatility, he deserved to rank with the great singers of his time. As more than one connoisseur of operatic music has remarked to me: "Frank Stanley ought to have been up there with the Red Seal crowd." And that leads me to remark that one of my treasured possessions is a rare old poster, about forty years old, showing photos of 19 Victor Red Seal artists, which once belonged to Frank Stanley. His daughter, Mrs. Repelow, presented it to me when I spent an afternoon at her home in September, 1947.

(To be continued).

Notes on Music Boxes and Their History

By GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Music boxes were first invented around 1750. The first mechanisms were tiny creations and set in items like watches, ornate boxes, bottles, seals, etc. They played one tune and later two tunes. These first music boxes had individual teeth tuned to a single scale and were set in an arc. A disc with steel pins revolved, the pins contracted the teeth and thus music was produced. The first of the small type music boxes with the cylinder appeared around 1790. These had cylinders from two and one half to three inches in length and the combs were made in sections. First the combs were made up of individual teeth, each held in place on its brass base by an individual screw. Later the combs were in sections of from four to five teeth to the section and usually fourteen sections to the comb. The mechanical detail of these miniature pieces is most exacting and each part was individually made, pinned and screwed into place.

Around 1820 the combs were made of one piece of steel mounted on a brass base. These machines usually played two tunes. The tunes were changed by moving a lever on the front of the box. The cases to these miniatures were made of a variety of materials. Some had lithographed tin cases, others were of bone, tortoise shell, ivory and a type of hard rubber. Many had curved transparent covers entirely enclosing the works. Some had lithographed views of village scenes, battle scenes, etc. Others were embossed with floral designs, masonic insignia, some were made of carved ivory and bone and a few were dated. Many had the maker's name stamped into the bed plate, while others had a mark stamped on the comb or bed plate and this mark tells who made the piece, if one is familiar enough with the various marks, etc. I have more than thirty of these early miniatures in my collection.

The later type miniatures playing up to six and eight tunes changed tunes automatically. This was made possible with the invention of the star wheel. During this period the trend of casing the mechanisms changed and they were installed in

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

FRANK C. STANLEY II

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

When I set about writing this series, I asked the reference department of the New York Public Library what material its files contained about Frank C. Stanley, and received the following paragraph, which may be used to supplement the already quoted death notice from the New-Ark Evening News:

"Frank C. Stanley, whose real name was W. Stanley Grinstead, was born in 1868 and died on December 13, 1910. (This date should be December 12.—U. W.) He had a baritone voice and sang in public for many years. He was among the first to sing into the Edison phonograph and in his later years made that his main work. At the time he began singing in public, Stanley was a teller in the Second National Bank of Orange, New Jersey, but he gave that up to devote himself wholly to music. He did much recording for the Victor company in widely different ways, standard and sacred songs, popular songs, Yankee comedy and with the Peerless Quartet, of which he was the organizer and basso. He was married and had four children."

Mrs. Grinstead points out that singing for "the Edison phonograph" was not her husband's main work, since he was a free-lance throughout his recording career and sang for virtually all American talking machine companies. As a matter of fact, he sang much more for Victor and Columbia than for Edison, and once quit the latter company altogether for a considerable period after a financial disagreement.

The Victor company was the first to announce the death of one of its most popular and gifted staff members. In the February, 1911, record supplement, under the heading of "A New Ballad By the Peerless," the late Sam Rous (S. H. Dudley), the catalog editor, revealed the news of Stanley's death, while incidentally commenting on single-faced record No. 5817 "Sweetness," composed by Creamer and Lemonier:

"As this record is being prepared for the February Bulletin, the sad news has come to the editor of the death of Stanley Grinstead, or as he was known to the Victor public, Frank Stanley. Mr. Stanley was one of the best known and most popular of record makers, his fine voice and genial disposition making him a favorite with all; and his death is a sad blow to his family and his associates. Mr. Stanley was the organizer and basso of the Peerless Quartet, and this record represents almost the last work of the organization before his fatal illness."

Edison's announcement didn't appear until the April issue of the New Phonograph, but it constitutes an excellent brief biographical sketch:

"W. Stanley Grinstead, known professionally as 'Frank C. Stanley,' died at Orange, N. J., on December 12th, 1910, of pleuro-pneumonia, the result of a cold contracted at a recital in the Waldorf Astoria, New York City. Mr. Grinstead was forty-one years of age, and is survived by a wife and four children. At the time of his death he held the position of Choirmaster of the Central Presby-

MUSIC BOXES
SPECIALIZING IN THE REPAIR OF MUSICAL BOXES OF ALL TYPES. INCLUDING THE REPAIR OF BIRD BOXES AND BIRD IN CAGE PIECES, ETC.
GEORGE A. BIDDEN
Barrington, Rhode Island mhc

MUSIC BOXES
all kinds
Bought, Sold and Expertly Repaired
(Third generation in the music box business tfo)
A. V. BORNAND
333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

C. R. S.
Historical Records
Re-issues and re-recordings of operatic, theatrical, and speech records.
Records available through dealers only
FREE MAILING LIST OF NEW ISSUES. tfo
C. R. S.
HISTORICAL RECORDS
2060 First Ave., New York 29, N. Y.

Address all mail for
WOODYMAY RECORD CO. tfo
to Box 33,
Roxbury Post Office, Boston, Mass.
Store located at 73
Roxbury St.

RECORD LIBRARY
NEW AND OLD RECORDINGS
Send for Free Catalogue
RUSSELL L. POLEY d916
1124 S. University Blvd., Denver 10, Colo.

Collectors' and Music Lovers'
PARADISE
● Five decades of classical vocals and instrumentals. Specializing in G&T, Zonophone, Fonotipia, Favorite, etc. . . . also inexpensive reissues and rerecordings.
● Fine line of out-of-print singles and albums and pre-war pressings at premium prices.
● Full line of current classical records and albums at regular list prices, including many hard-to-find records.
● Authorized dealers RCA-Victor, Columbia, Decca, English Decca, Parlophone London Records, CRS, Herold, Cetra, Vox, Musicraft, Alco, International, etc.

Order your new classical releases and your rare collectors' items from a reliable store and mail order house.

The RECORD HUNTER
1194 Lexington Avenue,
near 81st Street,
New York 28, N. Y. tfo

Records and Record Catalogs For Sale
I have a number of classical vocal records, mostly accoustics, to dispose of, but no time to list. Please send me your want lists. Collectors living in the New York City area may telephone (Riverside 9-1574) between 10 A. M. and 10 P. M. to arrange appointment for inspection of records and catalogs.
ALSO FOR SALE
THE OSCAR SAENGER COURSE IN VOCAL TRAINING
—For Mezzo-Soprano and for Tenor—
10 double-faced records in ea. set. Excellent cond. Send your offers. Special consideration given Collectors.
The new catalog of Historical Records.
by Robert Bauer.

Contains 494 pages listing vocal recordings issued in the United States and Europe from 1898 to 1908/09. Remit $9.75 to me by check or money order and your copy will be mailed to you direct from England. Note: Have a few copies of the original 1938 edition for sale at $3.50 each, postpaid.

STEPHEN FASSETT
318 W. 102nd St., New York 25, N. Y. tfo

LLOYD G. KELLEY
Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.
● Extra tune sheets and fine assortment of boxes for sale playing 8", 11", 12 1/4", 15 1/2", 20 1/4" and 27" diameter discs.
● We also offer for sale many fine Swiss music boxes in varied styles and sizes. Complete repairs to all type boxes. tfo
Send card to be placed on our mailing list.
P. O. Box 342
Hanover, Massachusetts

terian Church, 57th Street, New York City. Mr. Grinstead was one of the first singers for the Edison catalog, to which he contributed freely from his abundant repertoire. In the April list are two numbers in which he sang — one of them the occasion of his last appearance in our Recording Laboratory. One of the most popular of the Edison artists, the many records of his magnificent voice in solo, duet and quartet will be treasured in thousands of homes throughout the world for many years to come." (This prediction has assuredly been fulfilled!)

The "last appearance" record to which the Phonogram referred was No. 643, "Somewhere," a Charles K. Harris composition sung by Irving Gillette (Henry Burr), with the Peerless Quartet, consisting of Stanley, Burr, Albert Campbell and Arthur Collins, joining in the refrain. The supplement annotation remarked that "A pathetic feature of the record is the fact that in it the late Frank C. Stanley sang the bass part, this being the last work he did at our recording laboratory."

Before the Edison supplement appeared, Stanley Grinstead had been the subject of a remarkable tribute paid by his fellow recording artists, when virtually every famous "name" of the time joined in presenting an all-star concert, honoring his memory. The concert will be described in detail near the end of the series. Meanwhile, I think it is time to start at the beginning of his life story and, with Mrs. Grinstead's help, to trace the stages of his progress until he died after having crowded more into 41 years than most men do in twice that time. After considering the remarkable extent and variety of his professional achievements, it appears amazing that he could ever have found time for eating and sleeping, much less for serving as an alderman and public school commissioner of Orange, New Jersey. He was one of

CONTINUED ON PAGE 34

REPAIRS

NOW AVAILABLE: Regina Music Box Repair Manual, 12 pages of instruction. Fully illustrated, $1 postpaid. —James N. Hirsch, Box 178 Glenville, Conn. my4825

MELODEONS FOR SALE. Both octagon leg and folding melodeons, all in good playing condition. Descriptions and prices sent on request. —Joseph Leighton, 2626 Westfield St., West Springfield, Mass. ap3844

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

RECORDS

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. my64201

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items. —Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f126942

REDUCED PRICE SALE— Recordings 89c.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City, N. Y. je12487

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices. —D. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. s120821

PHONOGRAPH Records bought. —E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. s12407

UNUSED EDISON disc records. 50 different $7.50, random selection. —A. E. Larsen, 1213 W. 63rd St., Chicago, Ill. ap6675

ELEVEN THOUSAND different vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists. —E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. n126351

OPERATIC RARETIES. 10,000 European G&T, Fonotipia, and HMV records of Escalada, Cortis, Zenatello, Scaramberg, etc. Free monthly lists. —Topalian, 348 - 40th St., Brooklyn, N. Y. ap3483

WANTED: 12 1/4" Regina Music Box records. State title and price. —Richard Lisle, 2616 Williamson Rd., Roanoke 12, Virginia. je6806

COLLECTION of 10,000 European operatic records for sale. Every imaginable artist from 1900 to present day. G&T including Bellincioni, Caruso, Deluca, Litvinne, etc. Electrics, including Cortis, Lauri-volpi, Leider, Zanelli, Zenatello, etc. Lists issued monthly until collection sold. Prices reasonable. —Topalian, 348 40th St., Brooklyn, N. Y. my3252

MUSIC BOX DISCS for sale or trade. Send me lists of your duplicates; with numbers, please. Wanted: Mira, 18 1/2" and Regina, 20 1/2" discs; also literature on disc type music boxes. —Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. my3806

OPERATIC RECORDS: Rare. Send for free catalogue listing thousands by Caruso, Battistini, Boninsegna, Hempel, Tetrassini, Etc. —Memory Shop, 37-62 83 St., Jackson Heights, N. Y. my3483

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged. —Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. au6407

SALE of Classical records. 75c each. Write for free bargain catalog. —Wakefield Studio, Earlysville, Va. ap1021

REGINA RECORDS: 100 15", ea. $1, 16 27", ea. $2.25, 9 32", ea. $2.75. Edison cylinder records, 250 blue amberol, ea. 30c. —Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. ap1402

MISCELLANEOUS

HAVE YOUR OLD violin appraised for insurance or closing an estate. You may own a masterpiece. Fee $5. —Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 58 S. W. 27th St., Coral Gables, Florida. jly120041

MELODEONS—Reed Organs. Bought, sold, repaired. —C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond Ave., Grand Rapids 6, Mich. je12219

NOW AVAILABLE. Regina Music Box Repair Manuals, 12 pages of instruction. Fully illustrated, $2 postpaid. —James N. Hirsch, Box 178 Glenville, Conn. ap4825

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs —Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6084

FOR SALE: Edison Concert Cylinder Phonograph with large 5" dia. cylinders. —Walter Fink, 1840 - 14th Ave., Moline, Ill. my3652

Wanted: Coin-operated, automatic musical instruments and music rolls for Seeburg Pianos, Mills Violin Virtuosos, etc. —Wm. S. Allen, 616 First National Bank Bldg., Santa Ana, California. ap60621

HOUGHTON MUSIC CO., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne 2 England. Antique instruments of Music, old violins, etc., books on the violin, invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship, music for violin, viola, cello; chamber music for strings. Prints and portraits of musicians. Min. scores. Catalog free. s128632

SWISS MUSICAL UNITS $3. —Music Boxes, 131 West 42nd, New York City 18, N. Y. my3061

WANTED. Music boxes, singing birds, and other musical mechanical items for my collection. Also interested in rare or historical phonograph records. Describe completely and state price. —Urban Thielmann, 3001 Queensbury Drive, Los Angeles 34, California. my3065

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. —Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124261

WANTED: Player piano rolls, standard 88-note, classical; and Deagan catalogs, 1905-1920 showing big Marimbass with U-shaped tubes; other pictures of same. Who has such a Marimba? Write —F. K. MacCallum, 1815 E. Rio Grande, El Paso, Texas. ap3065

OPERATIC VOCAL cut-outs for sale reasonably. Send for free list. —H. L. Laughlin, Westmoreland, N. H. my3372

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade. —Dean Snyder 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. jly6445

FOR SALE: Regina, disc type, music box and extra records. Cabinet and machine in perfect condition. —Tom Perrin, Augusta Herald, Augusta, Ga. ap3253

SOUND SYSTEM; 2 horns, amplifier, mike, automatic record player; cost $375. —D. Mele, Foxon Road, East Haven, Conn. my3003

WANTED: Victor or Edison catalogs and supplements, 1912 or earlier. —L. E. Mack, 1157 Penniman, Plymouth, Mich. mh05

WANTED: Music Box Discs: Mira, 15 1/2" and 18 1/2", New Century, 15 1/2" and Euphonia, 14". Must be in good condition for private collection. Submit lists and prices to —J. A. Reitzel, 140 W. Ontario St., Chicago 10, Ill. ap1692

WANTED: Welte-Mignon and DeLuxe Reproducing piano rolls. Also want regular 88 note rolls. Classical and popular. —Peter Grattelo, 1523 W. Stover St., Freeport, Ill. ap1002

50 VOLS. Harvard Classics, perfect condition $37.50. 8 vols. The World's Greatest Music, 5 instrumental, 3 vocal, 1904, fine condition $20. —I. M. Christian, 22 Pearl St., Brandon, Vermont. ap1422

WANTED: Coin operated music machines, of all types, also music rolls for Link Piano; Mills violin virtuoso; Nilson Wiggins and Clark pianos—Harry Ludwig, 1515 S. E. 35th Ave., Portland 15, Oregon. s6215

BACK SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Bal-lads, ragtime, cakewalks, minstrel, everything. List 10c. —Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my12219

FOR SALE: A beautifully colored in-laid music box "Nicole". Plays 4 long operatic airs; double springbarrel; plays nearly one hour on one winding. A fine collectors piece. —J. Poelman, 78 West 103rd St., New York. ap1042

Swiss music movements, assorted tunes $2.30. Direct from manufacturer agent. —Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, N. Y. je3084

While They Last!

Old 5 Gallon
Aquamarine, Blown Glass
Demi-Johns

Purchased 79 years ago by Dr. Welch, founder of Welch's Grape Juice Company, from Whitewall Tatum Company, Millville, New Jersey.

★ ★

SPECIAL: $4.50 each in cartons for shipping. $3.50 each in lots of 5 or more.

★ ★

Beautiful for Terrace or Garden.
Also Suitable for Lamp Bases.

CARDELL'S ANTIQUE SHOP — Westfield, N. Y.

CHICAGO ANTIQUES EXPOSITION

Stevens Hotel

April 27 to May 2, inclusive

BRING OUT THE LASTING ARTISTRY OF OLD OIL LAMPS

Electrify inexpensively—in a few seconds with

NALCO SOLID BRASS ADAPTERS

No drilling is needed — uses the original burner to convert the oil lamps to electric lamps.

The charm and graceful appeal of the oil lamps which illuminated early American homes can now be utilized by using Nalco Adapters.

The effect of a burning lamp is faithfully maintained. Where exact simulation is desired use the Electric Wick, and the patented Wick-O-Lite Clear Lamp. Other Lamp Styles illustrated are the Candle Flame and the Candelbume. There is no fitting problem — and Nalco provides several standard sizes of Adapters for quick adjustment into varied openings.
Write for illustrated literature and price List.

NORTH AMERICAN
Electric Lamp Co.

1075 Tyler Street,

St. Louis 6, Mo.

PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 30)

a group of pioneer recording artists, including Len Spencer, Russell Hunting and Henry Burr, who had a seemingly unlimited capacity for hard work and a gift for being active in many widely differing fields of activity.

The following information is taken from a letter written to me by Mrs. Grinstead:

William Stanley Grinstead was born in Orange on December 29, 1868. He was graduated from Orange High School in 1886, by which time he had already won considerable local popularity as a banjo player. Young Grinstead in those days would carry his banjo to school in a paper bag. At recess the boys would cluster around and watch him play, and sometimes all would sing. When he was 19 he entered a banjo contest in Newark and won the amateur championship of New Jersey, and a $75 banjo given as first prize.

When the Grinstead family had company he was always asked to play. On occasion, a guest would ask him to sing as well as play but his father, with a strange lack of appreciation of one of the finest voices destined to be immortalized by phonograph records, usually would say, "He can't sing!" — a pronouncement that later was over-ruled by the verdict of millions of buyers of discs and cylinders.

While he was still a youth, a man who was a skilled organist met him in a trolley car, and said, "Grinstead, why don't you have your voice trained?" He answered, "Why, I haven't a good voice." The man replied, "I think you have," and suggested that Stanley go to a couple of teachers whom he named and ask them what they thought. He did. Both advised him to take vocal lessons.

The young man also went to the music teacher of the Orange public schools, and the teacher said: "Stanley, many a time I have wished I could train your voice, but your father was the president of the board of education, and I was afraid he as well as other people would say I was trying to get on the right side of the old man, because I was hired by the board." However, Grinstead later received singing lessons from Frederick G. Handel, his only vocal teacher.

When the Second National Bank of Orange opened, Mr. Grinstead went to work for it. That was in 1890 or 1891. In 1894 he married. Between then and 1901 he made some records in his spare time for the Edison company. Some of these were vocal solos. But in the beginning he made — and this will be a complete surprise to most of his present-day admirers — only banjo records. And he made them under the name of — George S. Williams! Yes, the mysterious Mr. Williams, who played accompaniments for Arthur Collins and other singers, but whose identity no one had ever been able to ferret, was none other than the later-world-famous basso, Frank C. Stanley!

(To be continued.)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

FRANK C. STANLEY III.

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Stanley Grinsted, working out of banking hours, made Edison banjo records—as "George S. Williams"—for several years, but after he began to record vocal solos (mostly hymns and military numbers, in the beginning) he gave up the banjo. In 1901, after his records had already become well known, he left the bank to devote his whole time to music. He was soloist in several Brooklyn and New York churches, among them Holy Trinity in Brooklyn, which was the second largest Episcopal church in Greater New York. He also sang in Madison Avenue Baptist and Central Presbyterian churches in New York City, besides doing considerable work in recital.

Mrs. Grinsted recalls an amusing anecdote of that period. She writes: "One day a well known East Orange business man called Mr. Grinsted up and said, 'My wife is giving an afternoon tea and wants to know what you would charge to sing two solos.' He answered, 'Twenty-five dollars for me and five dollars for my accompanist.' The man said, 'Why, my wife didn't count on paying over $5! Why, she could get a singer from New York for that!' Mr. Grinsted said: 'If I sang at a tea in New York I would get $50.'"

Here is Mrs. Grinsted's explanation of how William Stanley Grinsted came to call himself Frank C. Stanley when singing for phonographs:

"Some phonograph singers then were as bad as some radio singers today, and the churches did not like having it known that their highly paid soloists were singing for phonographs.

"So, most of the trained singers took other names. Mr. Grinsted's church suggested that he do so. Frank Banta was a piano accompanist at Edison's. Mr. Grinsted and he were talking about it, and Frank said: 'Combine our two names—Frank Stanley' and someone else said, 'Put C. in for a middle name.' So it was decided. Frank Banta has been dead many years (he died in 1904), but his son is the Frank Banta who plays on the radio." While Frank Banta is being mentioned, I shall "meander" long enough to report that old-timers like Bill Hayes at the Edison laboratory still get a laugh out of the fact that when Edison engaged an accompanist, it inversely happened that his last name almost automatically began with a B. Included were Banta; Albert Benzler; Fred Bachman; C. H. H. Booth and John F. Burckhardt!

At any rate, that's how the name of Frank C. Stanley was originated. And by 1899 it was well known. The Edison record list for November 20th of that year included cylinder No. 7322, "If You Love As I Love," and No. 7284, "That Lovely Land," both sung by "F. C. Stanley." The complete Edison cylinder record catalog of that year also shows that Stanley had been given a numerical series of his own. Records with numbers from 5000 to 5199 had been made, or were to be made, by him. For the first two or three years, the Edison company didn't number its records in consecutive order, but listed them in categories, as follows:

No. 1 to 500, bands; 501 to 1000, orchestras; 1001 to 1500, comedians, such as Edward M. Favor and S. H. Dudley; 1501 to 2000, tenors (Harry Macdonough, Jere Mahoney, Albert Campbell, etc.); 2001, Edison Male Quartet; 2401, cornet solos by A. L. Sweet; 2601, banjo records by Vess L. Ossman and Ruby Brooks; 2701, banjo duets by Farmer and Curry; 2801, piccolo solos by Frank S. Mazziotto; 3001, xylophone solos; 3201, church chimes; 3401, brass quartets; 3601, clarinet solos, by William Tuson; 3801, comic talking specialties—"Casey," "Schultz" and "Uncle Josh"; 3901, children's records and recitations; 4001, "coon" sketches by Billy Golden, Arthur Collins and George W. Johnson and yodeling by George P. Watson; 4201, songs in foreign languages; 4601, soprano solos by Marguerite Newton; 4701, minstrels by Arthur Collins, S. H. Dudley and the Ancient City Four; 4801, the Lyric Trio (Estella Mann, John Havens and William F. Hooley); 4901, miscellaneous bass solos; 5001, Frank C. Stanley; 5201, Collins; 5301, drum and fife; 5401, Collins again; 5501, Irish songs by Edward Clarence, whoever he may have been!; 5601, trombone solos by Nick Scholl; 5701, Albert Campbell; 5801, Jere Mahoney; 6101, comic songs by E. M. Favor; 6301, solos in Russian; 6401, contralto solos by Anna Barthold; 6501, tenor solos by Harry Macdonough; 6701, violin solos by Fred Hager; 6901, comic songs by Dan W. Quinn; 7001, baritone solos by J. J. Fisher; and 7101, comic songs by Will F. Denny.

By the time the November 20th list came out, this complex system of numbering was dropped and records were being listed in consecutive order, beginning with 7113. About half the original numbers were never used. The consecutive numbering system continued until the 10,000 series had been reached before manufacture of two-minute wax cylinders was discontinued by the Edison company in 1912.

And now, suppose we jump forward a few years to 1907, when Frank C. Stanley was established at the height of his popularity and quote a biographical sketch published in the Talking Machine News, of London. Several errors contained in the article will be pointed out at the end of the quotation:

"FRANK C. STANLEY, AMERICAN BARITONE . . . Christmas, 1868, at Orange, New Jersey, marked most auspiciously the birth of a gifted baritone singer now widely known to fame as Frank C. Stanley, whose home for ten years was located in the Orange depot of the Lackawanna Railroad, of which his father was a prominent official. Here the lad was brought into daily inter-

RECORDS

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Send us your want list. Hard-to-get desirable items individually offered at set prices. Write Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. my64201

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f126942

REDUCED PRICE SALE—Recordings 89c.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City, N. Y. je12487

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. s120821

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. s12407

LARGE COLLECTION: Pioneer Recording Artists' Records for sale. Average price 25c ea. Free list.—Hogan, 201 Studio Bldg., Kansas City, Mo. my1861

ELEVEN THOUSAND different vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. n126351

OPERATIC RARITIES. 10,000 European G&T, Fonotopia, and HMV records of Escalais, Cortis, Zenatello, Scaramberg, etc. Free monthly lists.—Topalian, 348 - 40th St., Brooklyn, N. Y. je3483

WANTED: 12 1/4" Regina Music Box records. State title and price.—Richard Lisle, 2616 Williamson Rd., Roanoke 12, Virginia. je6806

COLLECTION of 10,000 European operatic records for sale. Every imaginable artist from 1900 to present day. G&T including Bellinconi, Caruso, DeLuca, Litvinne, etc. Electrics, including Cortis, Lauri-volpi, Leider, Zanelli, Zenatello, etc. Lists issued monthly until collection sold. Prices reasonable.—Topalian, 348 40th St., Brooklyn, N. Y. my3252

MUSIC BOX DISCS for sale or trade. Send me lists of your duplicates; with numbers, please. Wanted: Mira, 18 1/2" and Regina, 20 1/4" discs; also literature on disc type music boxes.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. my3306

OPERATIC RECORDS: Rare. Send for free catalogue listing thousands by Caruso, Battistini, Boninsegna, Hemple, Tetravzzini, Etc.—Memory Shop, 37-62 83 St., Jackson Heights, N. Y. my3483

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. au6407

REPAIRS

NOW AVAILABLE: Regina Music Box Repair Manual, 12 pages of instruction. Fully illustrated, $1 postpaid.—James N. Hirsch, Box 178 Glenville, Conn. my4825

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosorjak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

142 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

course with the quaint original village characters, many of whom are amusingly featured in his clever series of thirteen "rube" dialogues and duets, which he successfully recorded with the well-known tenor, Byron G. Harlan. It is interesting to know that these characters and names actually existed in Morris county, New Jersey, and the record series just mentioned therefore embodies true-to-life reflections of human nature exactly as found in the rural neighborhoods where the scenes are laid. Frank's youthful accomplishments were unmistakably displayed in the Orange high school, from which he graduated with high honors, his valedictory essay dwelling upon "The Power of Music."

"He first found employment in the Orange post office, then in a coal and lumber yard, subsequently becoming teller of the Orange bank, where he frequently handled vouchers representing the large amounts earned by talent engaged in the art of record making. Not long after, in '98, Frank Stanley's baritone was perhaps the most highly prized of all artists then engaged in the ranks of those singing to the talking machine. Through this means Mr. Stanley's work speedily became world famous, especially by his ringing versions of the favorite national airs of England and America, in which he particularly excels, giving these grand songs a natural patriotic interpretation that is rarely equaled, as may also be said of his splendid sacred numbers, fervid in their intensity as they are eloquent in their appeal to true religious sentiment. It is a noteworthy coincidence that Frank C. Stanley is a recognized pseudonym for the leading sacred soloist in one of New York's foremost Fifth Avenue churches.

"Frank C" Stanley is famous throughout the north and Middle West of America by reason of his frequent successful tours in those vicinities, equally as much for his gramophone records which, considered from every standpoint—tone, volume, execution and delivery—are well-nigh perfect. Mr. Stanley's solos are rich, ringing and resonant. His vocal duets with Miss Corinne Morgan, as with Miss Alice Stevenson (both contraltos) are always clear, distinct and irresistible. Their success is largely due to Mr. Stanley's own arrangement of them specially for the talking machine, bringing into relief the contrast between the contralto and the baritone in a manner which is unrivalled. The same charm pervades his magnificent duets with Mr. Henry Burr, the well-known tenor. Mr. Stanley organized and still conducts the Invincible Male Vocal Quartet, the Lotus Glee Club, the Mendelssohn Mixed Quartet (which is Mr. Stanley's own organization) and the Metropolitan Trio, the personnel of which are directly under his own supervision."

Concerning this article, Mrs. Grinsted says: "The story that Mr. Grinsted got his jokes, etc., from hanging around the Orange railroad station is not true. We always went on a farm in the summer. He picked up some there and in his travels, and Byron Harlan told of some from out West, where he came from." She also says: "He did not organize the Lotus Glee Club. They were not a phonograph organization. Frank A. Smith was manager, and Minnie Marshall Smith, reader. They traveled all over the country." Miss Stevenson's first name was Elise (pronounced A-lease), not Alice, and she was a soprano instead of a contralto. She still lives in East Orange.

Mrs. Grinsted also points out that the basso was born on December 29th, not Christmas Day. She says he was not the valedictorian of his class, and that he never lived in the Orange railroad station after she first knew him, when he was sixteen. However, she adds, he lived there as a small boy. It was the East Orange—not Orange—post office in which he worked for a time.

(To be continued)

DEATHS OF RECORDING ARTISTS

Deaths of several recording artists, or persons otherwise intimately associated with the early days of the phonograph industry, have occurred in recent weeks.

Michele Rinaldi, former cornet soloist for Victor, died January 29 in the Atlantic City (N. J.) Hospital. Rinaldi came to this country in 1908 from Italy and became first trumpet in the Victor orchestra. He also toured the country with Ellery's and Vessella's Concert Bands and some of his records were made with accompaniments by the Vessella group. During recent years he was a member of the Ocean City (N. J.) Orchestra. Rinaldi was buried in Atlantic City on February 1. Probably his most popular Victor records were Brahms' "Cradle Song" and Nevin's "The Rosary."

Fred Brown, 55, who was a member of the famous Brown Brothers Saxophone Sextet of a generation ago, died February 9 in Chicago. His brother, Williams, died about three years ago. Three of the Brown Brothers—Tom, Alex and Vern—are still living. The sextet's name was misleading, since its members actually were the five Brown Brothers and a sixth player Harry Finkelstein.

Joseph Cawthorn, 81, veteran stage and screen comedian, died January 21 at his home in Beverly Hills, California. Despite his considerable fame, Cawthorn made only a few records—

"You Can't Play Every Instrument in the Band," for Victor in 1913, and a double-faced Victor, "It's a Small World" and "I Can Dance With Everybody But My Wife" in 1916. He also took part in a special Actors' Equity record issued by Vocalion in 1922.

John C. ("Happy Jack") Turner, 50, well-known as a singer of hill-billy records, died in Denver on January 19. He was a member of the entertainment staff of radio station KOA.

George C. Botsford, 74, noted popular song writer, died in New York on February 1. Among his best known compositions were "The Grizzly Bear," for which Irving Berlin wrote the words; "Sailing Down the Chesapeake Bay"; "Black and White Rag"; "Pride of the Prairie"; "Honeymoon Bells," and "Back to Dixie Land." Botsford is of particular interest to record collectors because of the fact that he made most of the arrangements used by male quartets of the early days. He recently recalled in a magazine article that he did arrangements for the American, Peerless and Shannon Quartets, as well as for the Heidelberg Quintet.

F. Wallis Armstrong, 78, died Feb. 19, 1949.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 33)

MISCELLANEOUS

HAVE YOUR OLD violin appraised for insurance or closing an estate. You may own a masterpiece. Fee $5.—Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 58 S. W. 27th St., Coral Gables, Florida. jly120041

MELODEONS—Reed Organs. Bought, sold, repaired.—C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 115 S. Diamond Ave., Grand Rapids 6, Mich. je12219

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6084

FOR SALE: Edison Concert Cylinder Phonograph with large 5" dia. cylinders.—Walter Fink, 1840 - 14th Ave., Moline, Ill. my3652

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. d80441

HOUGHTON MUSIC CO., 42 New Bridge St., Newcastle-on-Tyne 2 England. Antique instruments of Music, old violins, etc., books on the violin, invaluable for technique, general fiddle knowledge and connoisseurship, music for violin, viola, cello; chamber music for strings. Prints and portraits of musicians. Min. scores. Catalog free. s128632

SWISS MUSICAL UNITS $3.—Music Boxes, 131 West 42nd, New York City 18, N. Y. my3061

WANTED: Music boxes, singing birds, and other musical mechanical items for my collection. Also interested in rare or historical phonograph records. Describe completely and state price.—Urban Thielmann, 3001 Queensbury Drive, Los Angeles 34, California. my3066

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95, Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

STODART, WILLIAM: information, about this music publisher and piano maker in Richmond, Virginia about 1818 or later, wanted. Interested in purchasing any booklet, catalog, or broadside connected with this concern. —Stodart Pianos, 914 Ninth Avenue, New York City. my1403

OPERATIC VOCAL cut-outs for sale reasonably. Send for free list.—H. L. Laughlin, Westmoreland, N. H. my3372

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. jly6446

SOUND SYSTEM; 2 horns, amplifier, mike, automatic record player; cost $375.—D. Mele, Foxon Road, East Haven, Conn. my3003

WANTED: Victor or Edison catalogs and supplements, 1912 or earlier.—L. E. Mack, 1157 Penniman, Plymouth, Mich. mh05

VIOLA—Antonius Stradivarius, Cremona Faciebat Anno, 1727. Violin, Jacobus Steiner, AO 1676, Both analyzed.—Harriet Frazier, 1526 R. Street, Northwest, Washington, D. C. my1481

FOR SALE: Records, Grand Opera, Golden Age Ballads and Jazz, 1900-1945. Mail your wants. —Cath. V. O'Brien, First Ave., Newtown Sq., Pa. o6006

FOR SALE: Music Boxes, Symphonium 15" discs, $60, Regina penny slot type, 15½" discs, $60, Regina 8" discs, $30. Oak cases, all in excellent condition.—Joseph Docakal, Jr., 1734 Post Road, Hills Grove, R. I. my1272

WANTED: Coin operated music machines, of all types, also music rolls for Link Piano; Mills violin virtuoso; Nilson Wiggins and Clark pianos.—Harry Ludwig, 1515 S. E. 35th Ave., Portland 15, Oregon. s6216

BACK SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, ragtime, cakewalks, minstrel, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my12219

Swiss music movements, assorted tunes $1.90. Direct from manufacturers agent. — Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, N. Y. je3084

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

- Extra tune sheets and fine assortment of boxes for sale playing 8", 11", 12 1/4", 15 1/4", 20 1/4" and 27" diameter discs.

- We also offer for sale many fine Swiss music boxes in varied styles and sizes. Complete repairs to all type boxes.

Send card to be placed on our mailing list.

P. O. Box 342*Hanover, Massachusetts*RECORD LIBRARY

NEW AND OLD RECORDINGS

Send for Free Catalogue

RUSSELL L. POLEY d94c

1124 S. University Blvd., Denver 10, Colo.

MUSIC BOXES

BOUGHT, SOLD, EXPERTLY REPAIRED

Estimates and Appraisals Cheerfully Given

A. V. BORNAND

333 5th Avenue, Pelham 65, New York

(Third generation in the music box business) UFOPlease mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisementsRecords and Record Catalogs For Sale

I have a number of classical vocal records, mostly acoustics, to dispose of, but no time to list. Please send me your want lists. Collectors living in the New York City area may telephone (Riverside 9-1574) between 10 A. M. and 10 P. M. to arrange appointment for inspection of records and catalogs.

ALSO FOR SALE THE OSCAR SAENGER COURSE IN VOCAL TRAINING

—For Mezzo-Soprano and for Tenor—10 double-faced records in ea. set. Excellent cond. Send your offers. Special consideration given Collectors.

The new catalog of Historical Records.

by Robert Bauer.

Contains 494 pages listing vocal recordings issued in the United States and Europe from 1898 to 1908/09. Remit $9.75 to me by check or money order and your copy will be mailed to you direct from England. Note: Have a few copies of the original 1938 edition for sale, at $3.50 each, postpaid.

STEPHEN FASSETT318 W. 102nd St., New York 25, N. Y. UFXFavorite Pioneer Recording Artists*FRANK C. STANLEY. IV.By JIM WALSH

The variety and extent of Frank Stanley's achievements as a recording artist from the time he gave up his job in an Orange, N. J., bank in 1901, until his death less than ten years later, appear almost incredible. In checking back through old phonograph record catalogs and trade publications, I have found myself constantly wondering, as I remarked in an earlier article of this series, how he could possibly have found time to sing regularly in church and concert, take part in thousands of records and still be one of the important public officials of his home town. Remember, he was never an exclusive recording artist, unless he worked only for Edison in his beginning days. He sang for all the companies that wanted his services — and they all did. The late Campbell told me that, after the Peerless Quartet was organized, its efforts were so much in demand that the group frequently had to "work three shifts a day" to get in all its recording "dates." It was strenuous work, but as the twinkly-eyed Al whimsically remarked, "We just couldn't turn down all that money."

By 1902, Stanley had struck up his duet partnership with Byron Harlan, the tenor, who also lived in Orange. In their earlier association they specialized in singing ballads, but they occasionally essayed a hymn, of which their Columbia record of "The Palms" is a good example, although their names don't appear on the label. Later, they were particularly successful in "rube" sketches and duet versions of old patriotic numbers, such as "Dixie" and "The Battle Cry of Freedom." But, after a few years, Harlan and Stanley sang together only infrequently. Instead, the basso usually worked with Henry Burr when he was singing for Columbia and with Harry Macdonough for Victor. However, in the last year or so of his life he and Harlan again made a good many duets — mostly for Edison. Mrs. Grinstead says that the type of song largely determined which tenor sang with her husband. By 1902, Stanley also had acquired his famous feminine duet partner, Corinne Morgan, the contralto, of whom more will be said later. It was probably in the same year that he sang the bass part of the Edison cylinder of the Floradora Sextet and, as Joe Belmont recalls, joined Belmont and Harlan in making a Columbia record of the same famous sextet, with the assistance of the three original Floradora girls. According to the December, 1904, issue of The Columbia Record, the demand for this Sextet offering was so great, at one time, that it was seriously suggested that work on everything else should be suspended and the full record making plant of the factory concentrated . . . until the accumulation of orders for it could be filled. After a most remarkable run this record is still in great demand — disc No. 647, cylinder No. 31604."

But here is a particularly amusing tribute to the popularity that Frank Stanley had won in the earlier part of his career. The basso's voice, so strong, resonant and musical, was perfectly adapted for singing into a recording horn, but although he did all sorts of phonograph work in his time, I imagine he was either taken aback or laughed heartily if he read

A. V. BORNAND*MUSIC BOX SPECIALIST

Will be Available By Appointment at WESTPORT, CONN.

During June, July &amp; August

No. 7 Hillspoint Road.

Phone: Westport 2-6626

Main office and show room at 333 Fifth Avenue, Pelham, New York, open as usual. aucCollectors' and Music Lovers'*PARADISE

- Five decades of classical vocals and instrumentals. Specializing in G&T, Zonophone, Fonotipia, Favorite, etc. . . . also inexpensive reissues and rerecordings.
- Fine line of out-of-print singles and albums and pre-war pressings at premium prices.
- Full line of current classical records and albums at regular list prices, including many hard-to-find records.
- Authorized dealers RCA-Victor, Columbia, Decca, English Decca, Parlophone, London Records, CRS, Herold, Cetra, Vox, Musicraft, Alco, International, etc.

Order your new classical releases and your rare collectors' items from a reliable store and mail order house.

The RECORD HUNTER

1194 Lexington Avenue,
near 81st Street,
New York 28, N. Y. UFO

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosoriak &amp; Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

342 PAGES — 188 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

an article by W. J. Killea in the Edison company's Phonogram for May, 1902. The earnest author discussed the possibility of using "The Phonograph for Calling Out Railroad Stations" and listed Stanley as a singer whose voice would be admirably adapted for train calling. The temptation to quote part of the article is irresistible:

"The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company have been experimenting with the phonograph, with the view to the establishment of an innovation which will undoubtedly prove of inestimable value to the traveling public. . . . On December 9 a monster phonograph was placed in position in the main waiting room (at Albany), and for three hours announced the departure of trains. . . . The machine fulfilled all requirements. One fact was especially demonstrated: While the door-tender's articulation, with constant repetition of a set of words, tends to grow into a confused and careless jargon, the phonograph was always the same; each repetition was the same; and the voice was that of a well trained elocutionist — a pleasure to listen to. It seems wonderful that no one has thought of this use for the phonograph before now. Just think of the voices of some fine elocutionists, as Frank Stanley and William F. Hooley, being employed as a medium for the announcement of train departures. Strong and resonant, far above the voice of the average railroad door-tender, the difference is apparent at once. Of course," Mr. Killea hastily added, "it is not always possible for a railroad company to get men with such voices and training; men with such gifts do not descend to such menial positions. But with the aid of the phonograph the railroads are enabled to employ a well-trained elocutionist and at a cost which, when the talent is considered, is insignificant."

Although Frank Stanley was born into a "railroad family," there is no reason to believe he ever would have consented to becoming a train caller by proxy or otherwise. (However, it's interesting to recall that Len Spencer's brother, Harry, who made a few elocution records, when last heard from was a train caller at Lancaster, Pennsylvania.) Nevertheless, two odd assignments which Stanley undertook during his recording career may as well be mentioned now. In November, 1906, Sir Thomas Lipton, the English tea magnate, whose racing ships were forever losing matches with American vessels, paid a visit to the Columbia factory at Bridgeport. For Sir Thomas' special benefit, Stanley (with some sort of assistance by George Schweinfest, the piccolo virtuoso, who could also play the piano) recorded a parody on Kipling's "Tommy Atkins" poem. It was called "Tommy, Tommy Lipton."

Shortly after Columbia began to specialize in double-faced records in 1908 (it had previously listed a few in 1904), the company issued a "sample" disc, selling for 25 cents and especially designed to acquaint the public with the beauties of Columbia recording. One side contained "Kentucky Babe," sung by the Columbia (Peerless) Quartet. On the reverse face was a racy sales talk by Stanley, in which he read a statement saying that Columbia records were "double-faced, double-value, double-quality" and, although costing only 65 cents, would "unfailingly outwear any other record on the market."

He admonished his hearers: "Don't spend your record money for any other!" In spite of this, his widow says she believes that Victor was his favorite company of the scores for which he sang.

Getting back to consideration of the basso's early recording work, the duets in which he took part were remarkable for the fact that he almost always sang the lead. With practically all other duet teams, the rule was that the tenor voice took the solo lines and that it was supported by the baritone or bass. But that was not the case with Frank Stanley's duets. No matter what partner he had, he sang the lead and the partner harmonized. After the Peerless Quartet was organized, with the brilliant young star, Henry Burr, for its second tenor, Stanley not only managed the quartet, which he had founded, but was the soloist in nine-tenths of its records. When the Peerless made a long series of minstrel specialties, his deep tones served admirably for those of the interlocutor. Anyone listening carefully to Stanley's recorded work is bound to believe that his was a masterful, as well as magnetic, character. As the late Frank Dorian, for so many years a Columbia official, phrased it to me: "You are quite right in surmising that Frank Stanley was a brilliant man of striking personality. He was highly esteemed by all who knew him."

But just what did Frank Stanley look like in the heyday of his career? And what of the surviving members of his family? Those, no doubt, are questions which many readers find themselves asking. And they are fair queries. So, before I trace the details of his later recording carefully, I shall answer them in the next installment.

(To be continued)

The Television of Yesteryear

When television was first introduced some said that the sets were too expensive to ever make them popular. But all of that has been refuted, and we see installations, in both low and high prices. So it was with the fine, old music boxes of yesteryear. Some of the famous Mermod boxes are said to have cost in the thousands, and strangely enough they remind us of the modern television set.

One of the foremost collectors of old music boxes is Armand Duval of Switzerland and America whose collection was recently placed on display in the Museum of Science, New York City.

This collection, which traces the history of the Swiss Music Box, the first automatic musical instrument of wide use, include outstanding specimens of the 1870-1899 period, during which the Swiss Music Box attained its peak of perfection. These music boxes are really fascinating.

One, "My Darling Merry-Go-Round," is a brilliantly lighted Carousel going round and round with its colorful horses, etc., while a Monkey cranks the Hurdy-Gurdy, and two lovely Swiss girls actually dance.

Another, "My Swiss Chalet," in which four Chinese Gong Men play bells, drums and castanets, while four colorful dancing girls actually perform their dances.

Still another, "Figaro's Ballet," represents an old barber shop where Figaro's favorite customer lapses off into a snooze and sees in his dream the six lovely ballet girls actually dancing.

Many others of equal interest are included in this fabulous collection, among which are: "Les Belles de Montreux," "Fiesta in St. Moritz," "Clo-Clo and his Sisters," as well as the Praxinoscope, probably one of the rarest in Armand Duval's collection, which was exhibited and won the Silver Medal, at the Paris Exposition of 1879, and is one of the first devices invented to reproduce animated cartoons.

The A. V. Bornands, Pelham, New York, friends of Mr. Duval asked about the origin of the collection and were rewarded by the following, which we are privileged to quote:

"You have asked me about my collection and its origin. Although it is difficult for a collector to tell very much about his own discoveries, his own researches and his own successes, not to mention his own failures, here is the best I can do.

"My 'hobby' started when I was still a little boy. One day my mother gave me a rather small music box with two dancing dolls. I had been very sick and was recuperating in a little village in the mountains of Switzerland. I was confined to my bed and each day I would listen to the exquisite music box melodies and watch the graceful dancing of the dolls and admire their lovely costumes.

"The tinkling of the beautiful music kept lingering in my ears, so that in later years I found myself looking for the same things that so intrigued me in my youth, and that is how I started my collection.

"Travelling back and forth in Europe, I made many purchases, and by the process of elimination and exchanges I finally succeeded after many years in getting together seventeen beautiful specimens of dancing dolls each one more enchanting and more intriguing than the other.

"In your own beautiful collection, Mrs. Bornand, you have several that have very interesting stories behind them—one, I understand, was owned by the Czar of Russia. The Russian Royal Family and entourage appreciated music boxes and they had acquired a number of them at the end of the eighteenth century.

"I, myself, have one which they previously owned. It is an extremely beautiful Empire cabinet with moving

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

FRANK C. STANLEY V.

By JIM WALSH

Not only was Frank Stanley a man of magnetic personality, he must also have been one of handsome appearance. His widow says that he had brown hair and hazel eyes (but she adds, "I used to tell him they were green, in fun"), and that he was six feet and one inch tall and weighed about 185 pounds in his later years — an appropriately athletic build for a singer who worked so hard and intensively.

Mr. and Mrs. William Stanley Grinsted were married, as you already know, in 1894, to be exact, on June 11, in the First Presbyterian church of Orange. Mrs. Grinsted was Miss Elizabeth A. Griffing. She was born in Newark, but moved to Orange when she was nine years of age. At the time of her marriage she was a school teacher. After her husband's unexpected and lamentable death she returned to teaching and continued to be a member of the Orange public school system until she reached the retirement age of 70 in 1941. Elizabeth Griffing married a remarkable man, but I hope she will forgive me for saying that I believe "Frank Stanley" also chose for his wife a woman of fine mind and outstanding qualities of moral and physical stamina. She has written not a word in self-praise, but from her children's comments it's easy to appreciate that hers has been a life of courageous service, of which it would be hard to speak in too high terms. Today, in her late seventies, she is still the same firm and self-reliant mistress of herself that she has been all her life.

The basso and his wife had four children. Three are still alive. The oldest, William Stanley Grinsted, Jr., died in 1938. Next is Mrs. Elizabeth Griffing Repelow (Mrs. B. A. Repelow), of West Orange. Then come Dr. Alan Douglas Grinsted, now professor of psychology in North Carolina State College, and Mrs. Elaine Marguerite (H. F.) Powell, of West Orange. Their only grandson is named Frank Stanley, from his grandfather's "phonograph name" and is the child of the dead son. Mrs. Repelow has one daughter, Anita Elizabeth, and Dr. Grinsted recently adopted a three-year old boy. He also has an adopted daughter now seven years of age. Mrs. Powell has no children. Mr. Grinsted's one brother died a few years ago.

Readers who are familiar with old phonograph catalogs will recall that the one photo of Frank Stanley which was used over and over showed him wearing a mustache. In all the early Peerless Quartet pictures, for instance, this likeness is used. But Mrs. Grinsted says he was smooth shaven in his later years and that she imagines he discarded the mustache around 1900. "I know," she comments, "it was before he left the bank in 1901."

In connection with the singer's membership in Corinthian Lodge No. 57, F. & A. M., at Orange, it is interesting to know that his father and grandfather had also belonged to the same lodge.

Stanley Grinsted, Jr., began his business career in the Farmers' Loan bank in New York City. Later, he went to the New York Federal Reserve bank and was there for 21 years. When he died on July 20, 1938, he was head of the government bond division.

Before going to North Carolina State college, Dr. Alan D. Grinsted was professor of psychology at Rhode Island State College. He served for five years during the war in the U. S. Naval Reserve, and was commander at Quonset Point, Rhode Island, when he was discharged. As long as he was in Rhode Island, his mother lived with him, but since he has moved to North Carolina, she has preferred to stay on in Wickford, although she admits the children worry about the distance — some 200 miles — separating her from her daughters.

Concerning the surviving children, Mrs. Repelow says: "My sister was only three when Father died and has no recollections of life with him, but I was older and have happy memories of a wonderful man."

Now, let's go back to the early 1900's and resume our survey of Stanley Grinsted's recording career under the name of Frank C. Stanley. I have already mentioned his partnership with Byron G. Harlan in the recording of "rube" numbers, such as "Waiting for the Dinner Horn to Blow" (one of the funniest talking records I have ever heard), "Closing Time in a Country Grocery," "Two Rubes in an Eating House," "The Rube and the Country Doctor" and "Scene in a Country Blacksmith Shop." In a few of their 1904 Edison wax cylinders they had the assistance of a "soubrette," one Miss Daisy Boulais, of whom Mrs. Grinsted says she can't remember having ever heard. But in 1904 the soubrette and comedians joined their talents in what the New Phonogram for July, 1904, described as "one of the most ambitious records ever made." It was No. 8736, "Two Rubes at the Vaudeville," and the Edison publication gave this impressive annotation:

"A descriptive selection introducing a scene at a vaudeville theater. In making it Messrs. Harlan and Stanley had the assistance of Daisy Boulais, a serio-comic artiste, and the orchestra. This is

Records and Record Catalogs For Sale

I have a number of classical vocal records, mostly accoustics, to dispose of, but no time to list. Please send me your want lists. Collectors living in the New York City area may telephone (Riverside 9-1574) between 10 A. M. and 10 P. M. to arrange appointment for inspection of records and catalogs.

ALSO FOR SALE THE OSCAR SAENGER COURSE IN VOCAL TRAINING

—For Mezzo-Soprano and for Tenor—10 double-faced records in ea. set. Excellent cond. Send your offers. Special consideration given Collectors.

The new catalog of Historical Records.

by Robert Bauer.

Contains 494 pages listing vocal recordings issued in the United States and Europe from 1898 to 1908/09. Remit $9.75 to me by check or money order and your copy will be mailed to you direct from England. Note: Have a few copies of the original 1938 edition for sale at $3.50 each, postpaid.

STEPHEN FASSETT
West Falmouth, Mass.

Collectors' and Music Lovers'

PARADISE

- Five decades of classical vocals and instrumentals. Specializing in G&T, Zonophone, Fonotopia, Favorite, etc. . . . also inexpensive reissues and rerecordings.
- Fine line of out-of-print singles and albums and pre-war pressings at premium prices.
- Full line of current classical records and albums at regular list prices, including many hard-to-find records.
- Authorized dealers RCA-Victor, Columbia, Decca, English Decca, Parlophone, London Records, CRS, Herrold, Cetra, Vox, Musicraft, Alco, International, etc.

Order your new classical releases and your rare collectors' items from a reliable store and mail order house.

The RECORD HUNTER

1194 Lexington Avenue,
near 81st Street,
New York 28, N. Y.

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosorjak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

one of the most ambitious records ever made, although it may not appear so to the ordinary listener. The scene opens with the Rubes at the ticket office asking for seats. They are told that there is standing room only. A ticket speculator induces them to buy two seats 'way up front' and they enter the theatre. While they are buying their tickets the orchestra is heard playing on the inside. As the door opens to admit them, the full volume of the orchestra is heard. The seats 'way up front' prove to be in the last row. The soubrette on the stage begins to sing the popular song, 'Blue Bell.' The loud talking of the two Rubes interrupts her until finally she refuses to sing until the noise is stopped. The crowd remonstrates and the Rubes are suppressed for the moment, only to again begin talking when the soubrette continues her song. She then gives it up in disgust, saying that if they are so smart they can sing it themselves. They then take the stage, get the orchestra to play, and sing 'Don't Get Weary.'"

I had coveted that cylinder ever since I read the description so it was a happy day for me when I obtained an excellent copy from Russell Poley, of Denver. I now keep it on a penny-in-the-slot "juke box" made back in the 90's, to entertain friends who always want to insert the two long tubes into their ears and hear a performance by the old-time machine.

Although Harlan collaborated in recording these comic sketches, they were all written by Stanley, and displayed the same sort of keen sense of humor and quick eye for the foibles of human behavior that characterized Len Spencer's more varied dialect work. It is really astonishing to find a trained concert singer with a voice of operatic caliber being able to do such a good job of sizing up and impersonating the typical rustic characters of from 40 to 50 years ago. But versatility was one of Stanley's most pronounced traits—as was the remarkable range of his voice. He could sing anything from "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," requiring a real basso profundo, to numbers with a tenor range. Occasionally, in his recitals, he would astonish his audiences by singing extremely bass notes, then giving a tenor solo for an encore. Which reminds me that Lou Stevens, of Hollywood, who says, "I have yet to hear a voice to equal Frank Stanley's," has just called my attention to the fact that, in the Victor record of "Guide Me, O Thou Great Jehovah," by Stanley and Macdonough, the basso's voice soars to a tenor level.

Early in his career, before he organized the Peerless Quartet, which became the most popular group ever to make records, Frank Stanley sang baritone in the Columbia Male Quartet, with "Big Tom" Daniels as bass. I believe Albert Campbell was first tenor, but am not sure who was second. Mrs. Grinstead thinks the second tenor was Henry Burr.

And by 1904 Stanley was the leader of several other organizations. One was the Invincible Quartet, forerunner of the Peerless, which was composed, on Edison records, of Harlan, first tenor; George Seymour Lenox, second tenor; Collins, baritone, and Stanley, bass. When the Invincible sang for other companies, Campbell—if I can trust my ears—took Len-ox's place. After Stanley's death, when the Peerless Quartet had John H. Meyers as its bass, it sometimes called itself the Invincible Four.

The Columbia list for January, 1904, contained a record of "Praise Ye" from Verde's "Attila," by the Metropolitan Mixed Trio. Shortly afterward, the same group was singing for Edison. On Edison cylinders, the members were Corrinne Morgan, contralto; Lenox, tenor, and Stanley, bass. On Columbia, Henry Burr probably sang instead of Lenox. Still later, the trio also made Victor records, and Miss Morgan was dropped, with the singers being Stanley, Burr, and Elise Stevenson, the soprano. Sometimes Edison called this latter group the Edison trio and they also made a few four-minute Edison cylinders under the name of the Manhattan Trio. A somewhat similar ensemble—the Schubert Trio—made one Victor single-faced record, "Praise Ye." Stanley and Harry Macdonough are two of the members, but I'm not sure of the soprano. She was probably either Miss Stevenson or Elizabeth Wheeler.

Then, in 1904, on Edison records there was the Mendelssohn Mixed Quartet, whose members were "Miss Chappel" (really Edith Chapman, a well known church soprano, who later made records under her own name); Miss Morgan contralto, George Morgan Stricklett, tenor, and Stanley, bass. The Edison Mixed Quartet was the same, except that Lenox was the tenor. Edison also made records by the Lotus Quartet—Lenox and Stricklett, tenors! Charles Lewis, baritone, and Stanley. This quartet was an offshoot of the Lotus Glee Club, which consisted of the singers just mentioned; Frank Smith, pianist and manager, and his wife, Minnie Marshall Smith, reader. The glee club traveled as far west as South Dakota, giving concerts.

(To be continued.)

DEATHS OF THREE RECORDING ARTISTS

By JIM WALSH

The deaths of three well known recording artists have been reported within recent weeks.

John H. Meyers, 71, noted for many years as the basso of the world-famous Peerless Quartet, which made more records than any other male voice ensemble, died on Tuesday, May 3, at his home, 160-03 Sanford Avenue, Flushing, Long Island, New York.

Mr. Meyers was born in New York and lived in the vicinity of the city nearly all his life. He left home when he was 16 to become pianist and arranger of a 72-man band that toured the country. Later, he inherited a floral business from his uncle, John Wilbur, and on a few Victor duet and minstrel records he called himself John Wilbur as a tribute to his uncle.

For 15 years Mr. Meyers was bass soloist for the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Incarnation, 209 Madison Avenue, New York. After the death of Frank C. Stanley in December, 1910, Henry Burr became manager of the Peerless Quartet and asked Mr. Meyers to take Stanley's place. This he did, serving in that capacity until 1917, when Frank Croxton became the quartet bass and Meyers changed to singing baritone. In 1916 the Sterling Trio was organized. It consisted of Albert Campbell, first tenor; Burr, second tenor, and Meyers, bass. All are now dead.

From 1915 to 1925 Mr. Meyers toured the country with the concert group first known as the Record Makers and later as the Eight Famous Victor Artists. Originally it consisted, besides Campbell, Burr and Meyers, of Billy Murray, Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, comedians; Vess L. Ossman, banjoist, and Theodore Morse, song writer and pianist. Only Billy Murray now survives of the original Eight. Mr. Meyers was a skilled pianist and served as the musical arranger for the troupe. He likewise made most of the arrangements for the Peerless Quartet and Sterling Trio records.

John Meyers did little solo work as a recording artist, but a few records by him appeared in the Columbia catalog around 1911 and 1912. He also made a number of solos for the Par-o-ket hill-and-dale records issued by a company headed by Henry Burr from 1915 to 1918. Occasionally he sang the lead in the Peerless Quartet, and he made hundreds of duets with Burr for Aeolian-Vocalion, Emerson, Pathé and some of the other minor record companies of thirty years and more ago. Oddly enough, Meyers and Burr never sang as a duet team for Victor and Columbia. In all, he took part in thousands of records. After he left the Peerless in 1925 he did a bit more recording as the bass of a duet team. The tenor was Henry Moeller, who sang with Meyers under the name of Henry Fairbank. Mr. Meyers later returned to the floral business and remained in it until his death. He was considered one of the most expert floral designers in New York.

The bass singer was tall and slender and became bald in early life. When I met him in 1940 he looked no older than he did in the photos of himself published 35 years ago. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Minnie Meyers; a daughter, Mrs. Adelaide Steinkamp; a granddaughter and a great-grandson.

oOo

A distinguished violinist—Armand Vecsey, 70—died at his home in New York on March 31. Vecsey, also well known as a composer, was leader of the orchestra at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York, from 1910 to 1944. Prior to that, he had conducted the orchestra at the Savoy Hotel, London. Mr. Vecsey, who wrote a book, "The Fiddler at the Ritz," about his musical experiences, was noted for his arrangements of large symphonic works for small orchestras. He composed several operettas, including "The Nightingale," with libretto and lyrics by P. G. Wodehouse and Guy Bolton, "Rose of China" and "Hotel Mouse." His recording activity appears to have been confined to making Edison Diamond Discs and Blue Amberol cylinders. Mr. Vecsey is survived by his wife, two sons, a daughter, two brothers and a sister.

oOo

Richard R. Czerwony, 62, head of the violin and orchestral department of the De Paul University School of Music and like Vecsey, noted as a violinist, died April 16 at his home in Chicago. Mr. Czerwony was born in Germany and came to the United States in 1907 to be assistant concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. From 1909 until 1918 he was concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony. During this period he made a few Edison records and also played for a few of the minor recording companies, such as Paramount and Puritan. In 1918 he moved to Chicago to head the violin department of the Bush Conservatory of Music and went to De Paul 17 years later. For twenty years he was conductor of the Chicago Philharmonic Orchestra. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Hildgard Czerwony, a daughter and two sons.

A Memorial Tribute to John L. Norton, Sr.

By JIM WALSH

Like hundreds of other friends throughout the English-speaking countries, I am mourning the death of one of the best known and most popular of American record collectors, John Leo Norton, Sr., 63, founder of the famous Woodymay Record Company in Boston, who died at 10:45 A. M., Sunday, April 17, in the Boston General Hospital after an illness of four days. Physicians said that Mr. Norton had been suffering for three years, from an internal injury that caused his death.

John Norton had been fascinated by phonographs and records since he was a small boy and probably had been a record collector longer than anyone else now alive. He was born, October 26, 1885, on Shirley street in the Roxbury section of Boston, where his record store was situated many years afterward, at 73 Roxbury street. When he was twelve, his parents bought a Columbia cylinder phonograph, which played the brown wax records then in vogue. In 1898 they acquired a battery-operated Edison North American instrument, and from then until his death more than fifty years later John Norton's love for phonographs and records never flagged.

In 1912 Mr. Norton became the sole clock mechanic for all the public schools of Boston. Despite the strain that this occupation must have been to his eyes, he was never obliged to wear glasses for reading or working. Later, he was employed by the Conduit Electrical Manufacturing Company (now the Allis Chalmers Company) at South Boston, where he invented the N. switch for generators. Having acquired a large stock of Edison cylinders and Diamond Discs, he began business in 1938 with his son,

J. L. Norton, Jr. (affectionately known as "Jack"). They called themselves the Woodymay Record Company. At first Woodymay advertised principally in farm papers, selling cylinder records to residents of rural sections who still had old-style Edison phonographs. Mr. Norton invented the Woodymay pick-up, for playing Edison records electrically, in 1939. Woodymay's first HOBBIES advertising appeared in December, 1940, and the company has consistently advertised in this magazine ever since.

John Norton liked most types of music—opera, symphony, jazz and the popular tunes of the "Gay Nineties," but disliked hill-billy and Hawaiian performances. His favorites among the pioneer recording artists were mostly those whom he had admired as a boy. He once listed them as Arthur Collins, Will F. Denny, Edward M. FAVOR, Dan W. Quinn, J. Aldrich Libbey, Billy Murray, A. D. Madeira, Joe Natus, Frank C. Stanley, Billy Golden, S. H. Dudley, William F. Hooley, Helen Trix, Bob Roberts and Manuel Romain.

Surviving Mr. Norton are two sisters, Miss Helen Norton and Mrs. Caroline Logan; a brother, Robert Norton; and his son, who has had a lifelong devotion to records of the type his father loved. However, the father and son didn't see eye to eye in their preferences, and each had his separate record collection. Another survivor who undoubtedly will miss him sorely is "Ginger," the beautiful big brown cat who was a friend of all callers at the Woodymay store. Mr. Norton's wife died when Jack was a small boy, and the devotion between father and son became one of the closest and most beautiful I have ever known. They were inseparable companions and "pals" in the finest sense of the term. Jack intends to give up the Woodymay store, but will continue to make dubbings of disc and cylinder records at his home.

John Norton was of medium height and stocky build. He had twinkling brown eyes and an impish sense of humor. Had the circumstances of his life been different, he might have become a great humorist, for some of his letters are among the funniest things I have ever read. He was also an inveterate prankster and played dozens of harmless practical jokes upon his friends—especially me. But he never intentionally did anything to hurt anyone. He was sometimes called "Old Man Woodymay," although he by no means gave the impression of being old. Several years ago he and Jack copyrighted the slogan, "Knights of the Turn Table," to describe their business, but in more recent days they took delight in using the term I had bestowed upon them—"The Wharf Rats of Woodymay." I had planned to visit them this September, and it is a sad reflection indeed that I shall never again see the cordial, great-hearted veteran record collector whom I shall always regard as one of the dearest friends I have ever known.

RECORDS

RARE OLD RECORDS for sale: Vocal operatic, popular, collectors items, reasonably priced. Ask for lists.—Delano, 349 Lindenwolde, Ambler, Pa. mh120821

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f126942

HIGH SCHOOL teacher sells duplicates of rare collection. Special low prices.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. s120821

PHONOGRAPH Records bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan, Jersey City 6, New Jersey. s12407

ELEVEN THOUSAND different vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. n126351

FINE CLASSICAL RECORDS: Auction: Imported instrumentals, largely cutouts. Unusual collectors opportunity. Write: Delano, 349 Lindenwolde, Ambler, Penna. s3272

RECORD CATALOGUE: Evaluate your old records, over 1500 titles priced recently at auctions, $4.50—Arts-Conn., Box 2121, Hartford 1, Conn. s3082

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. au6407

CLASSIFIED AD RATES
8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

MUSIC BOX SPECIALS

1. Regina, mahogany, folding top opens out to play 20 1/4" discs. With 12, 20 1/4" discs—$140.00
2. Olympia disc box, oak with 18, 15 1/2" discs 70.00
3. 12 Tune Swiss music box, new-like mechanical condition, 26" maple case—100.00
4. 10 Tune Swiss box, plain dark case, 16" long 50.00

A. BORNAND

333 5th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y. jlyo

Collectors of Californiana

Facsimiles of three California Gold Rush Songs

Two published in London, one in New York, 1849. Enclosed in illustrated yellow folder. Only 500 sets printed at the Grabhorn Press, San Francisco, Calif. May be ordered from your bookseller at $5.00 set or from publisher. Each marked "1849, printed by Grabhorn Press."

CLARA E. HOWARD

1275 San Mateo Drive,

Menlo Park, California

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

FRANK C. STANLEY. VI.

By JIM WALSH

In 1893, before he became noted as "Frank C. Stanley," the phonograph artist, Stanley Grinsted had begun his career as a church and concert singer. During the years while he was still working in the Orange bank, he had made records for all the pioneer companies, including Edison (then known as the National Phonograph Company), Columbia, Victor, Universal (which made Zonophone records before Victor took over the Zonophone line in 1903), and others. Mrs. Grinsted writes that he also "sang for Norcross (an experimenter, I think), some company in Brooklyn, someone in Washington, and another in Chicago. Somewhere along the line was someone named Palmer. I think his records were pink celluloid. When he died he was singing for nine different companies. One was in Boston."

The Norcross referred to by Mrs. Grinsted was "Ike" Norcross, who made cylinders for a short time in the '90's. The Brooklyn firm may have been Burke and Rous. The Washington concern probably was the Berliner Gramophone company, and the Chicago company, most likely was Lambert, which in the early 1900's made an indestructible pink, or red, cylinder. I would guess that the Boston concern for which Mr. Grinsted sang in later years was the Phono-Cut Record Company, which issued a hill-and-dale, sapphire-played disc, on the order of the Pathé. Other companies for which he recorded included Leeds, Talkophone, Indestructible (of Auburn, New York) and American. They were put out of business in 1907, when they were found guilty of infringing Victor patents.

By 1904, Frank C. Stanley was at the peak of his powers. In September he sang for the manager of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, and the manager wrote the following letter on September 15th to George F. Daniels, of Boston, who was considering engaging the basso for concert work:

"My dear Mr. Daniels: On Tuesday afternoon I heard Mr. W. Stanley Grinsted, basso, sing, and I was very much interested in his work. I think it will be well worth your while to hear him sing while you are here in New York the last week in September, and if you have the time I shall be glad to arrange with Mr. Grinsted to be heard by you either in New York or Brooklyn. Or possibly you would prefer to communicate with him direct and arrange for a rehearsal in New York with other artists whom you are to hear. His address is 199 High Street, Orange, N. J.

"Mr. Grinsted has a true basso voice; has a large range; remarkably fine quality, and is very artistic in his rendering. After hearing him sing for more than half an hour, I am compelled to say that I could find no fault of any kind with his singing, and that is saying a good deal. His positive qualities are a natural voice; thorough training; excellent artistic ability, and a good stage presence.

The room in which I heard him sing was not a very large one, but I have no reason to think that he would not sing to advantage in a very large hall. He sang 'It Is Enough' from 'Elijah' as an example of his oratorio work, with a great deal of force and feeling."

Unfortunately, the carbon copy which Mrs. Grinsted has preserved of this letter is unsigned and she doesn't recall the name of the writer.

In October, 1904, Edison printed some statistics concerning its new record catalog, which listed the "huge" number of 1,150 cylinders. A breakdown by artists showed that Frank C. Stanley was one of the company's most prolific and popular vocalists, with 22 solos to his credit. The only singers ahead of him were Harry Macdonough, with 55; Arthur Collins, 53; Byron G. Harlan, 47; the Edison Male Quartet, 44, and William H. Thompson, 30. Besides the solos, there were 30 duets by Harlan and Stanley; 11 by Miss Morgan and Mr. Stanley, and the indicated numbers by these organizations in which Stanley sang: Metropolitan Mixed Trio, one; Invincible Quartet, eight; Lotus Quartet, two; Mendelssohn Mixed Quartet, seven; and Edison Sextet, one.

In June, 1905, Columbia issued a record of Charles Dennee's lullaby, "Sleep, Little Baby of Mine," sung by William Fredericks, an unidentified baritone who was probably Frank Stanley. I haven't heard the record for many years, but I recall "Frederick's" voice quality as being identical with that of the better known singer. Quentin Riggs, of Oklahoma City, has also found a couple of Clico records by the mysterious Mr. Fredericks.

A reader of the New Phonogram asked in February, 1906, who the members of the Edison Sextet, singers of the Floradora Sextet, were. He was told the ensemble consisted of Corinne Morgan, Ada Jones, Grace Nelson, George Seymour Lenox, Bob Roberts and Frank C. Stanley. The record had obviously been remade since first being issued in 1902 or earlier, for several of these singers would not have been available for the first version, in which Stanley no doubt took part. Incidentally, it has just occurred to me that it's odd he does not appear in the group photo of 42 Edison artists taken in 1900. But that was while he was still working in the bank, and it may not have been convenient for him to get away.

It was in 1906, as best as I can deduce, that the partnership between Stanley and the talented, but temperamental, Corinne Morgan came to an end, after several years during which they had made many fine duets. Some of the most popular were "Deed I Do," a comic Negro dialect number rather unlike their usual type of work; "Listen to the Mocking Bird," "The Moon Has His Eyes On

You," "Just My Style" and "The Tale of a Stroll." Their parting resulted from a recording engagement they were doing in New York. Walter Miller, manager of Edison's recording department, got Stanley to one side and said: "Tell Corinne she's 'flattering.'"

Mrs. Grinsted says that her husband did as he was asked, remarking, "Corinne, Walter says you're flattering," and Miss Morgan stormed into Miller's office, demanding to know if he had made that assertion. Miller answered "No," and she returned in a towering rage and accused Grinsted of being a liar. That ended their association, in which he had also acted as her business manager. According to Mrs. Grinsted, the basso asked Miller why he had denied making the remark that caused all the trouble, and he said: "Well, I didn't want her raising a racket in here."

Later, it appears, Miss Morgan—who, judging by her early photos, was an attractive, vivacious brunette—regretted the "split" and wrote to Grinsted, saying she would like to resume her work with him, but he had by that time engaged other women singers in her place.

Miss Morgan died a few years ago. Another example of her ability to become thoroughly angry is recalled by Mrs. Grinsted. One night, the contralto and a Russian-born singer took part in a concert. The lady received more applause than the Russian, and he became furious. As she left the stage after an encore, he stood just outside and hissed: "You were rotten—rotten!" And then Miss Morgan swung around and gave him a resounding slap across the face. The other artists who witnessed the encounter, or heard of it, said they were glad she did.

Mrs. Grinsted believes that Miss Morgan, whose real name was Corinne Welsh and who later became Mrs. C. W. Dumont; John Young ("Harry Anthony"); Frederick Wheeler ("James F. Harrison") and Cecilia Niles (later Mrs. Henry Burr), all sang at the same time in the choir of the Marble Collegiate church in New York.

For a short time after "Morgan and Stanley" dissolved partnership, Grinsted continued to make contralto-baritone duets with the assistance of Grace Nelson. Miss Nelson was really Grace Hornby, a well known Brooklyn singer, who was contralto soloist in Flatbush Memorial church when Mr. Grinsted also sang there. They began working together in 1906 and the association lasted until 1908. In the January, 1908, supplement of the Indestructible Record Company, of Albany, New York, a firm that preceded Edison by several years in making unbreakable cylinders, appeared two Stanley-Nelson (his name is given first) duets: "Sambo and Dinah" and the favorite "'Deed I Do," which Stanley had recorded as long ago as 1902 for other companies, with Miss Morgan as his partner. The following comment was made: "Mr. Stanley and Miss Nelson have made phonograph records before, but never have their voices been recorded with such faithful accuracy and clearness."

The first part statement was probably the year's greatest understatement, as far as it applied to Frank C. Stanley. He had made records before—lots of them!

(To be continued)

—o—

Death of Mrs. Arthur Collins

Mrs. Anna L. Collins, 81, widow of the famous recording artist, Arthur Collins, died May 14 at her home on Prospect Avenue, Fort Myers, Fla. The funeral was held May 20 in the Leo W. Engelhardt funeral home. Burial was in the Fort Myers cemetery. Survivors include a son, Arthur Perry Collins, of New York City, and a brother, Dr. Richard N. Connolly, of Newark, N. J.

Mrs. Collins was a singer as a young woman, but retired after her marriage in 1895. She was born May 18, 1867, in Ireland. Although she was never engaged as a professional recording artist, she and Mr. Collins made a few test duets for Edison in the wax cylinder days. One of these, a version of "Swanee River," was found by Otis B. Zirkle, of Brownston, W. Va., about a year ago. Her husband, who died in 1933, for many years was one of the most popular recording artists, and it is probable that more copies were sold of the records of "The Preacher and the Bear," which he made for all the pioneer companies than of any other recording of the acoustic era. Mrs. Collins had planned to attend the John Bieling Day party held last September 10 at Garden City, N. Y., but gave up the trip on the advice of her physician, because of the distance between New York and Fort Myers, where she had lived for 23 years. Before Arthur Collins retired, they made their home at Hempstead, L. I., a few blocks from John Bieling's residence.

—o—

Death of Noted Male Quartet Basso

Recently I wrote of the death of basso of the world-famous Peerless Quartet. Now I must record the passing of Harry J. Donaghy, bass of the Harmonizers Quartet, which made records during the late acoustic and early electric eras.

The Harmonizers began recording in 1920. Besides Donaghy, the outfit consisted of Charles Hart, first tenor; the late Billy Jones, second tenor; and the late Steve Porter, baritone. For several years they sang, on a free lance basis, for most of the record companies. Sometimes the Harmonizers were called the Premier Quartet on Edison records (this was after the original Premier organization headed by Billy Murray had ceased to record for Edison), and still later they made Edison discs and cylinders under the name of the National Male Quartet. On at least one of Pathé's Actuelle records ("Casey Jones") they were the County Harmonizers. I met Mr. Donaghy in New York in 1940 and was told that the Edison record of "Oh By Jingy" was the Harmonizers' first. It was one of the Premier Quartet series.

The basso died June 1, aged 56. He was director of public relations for H. C. Bohack Co., Inc. In 1923, as a member of the Chiclet Quartet, he was with the first group that obtained a commercial radio contract. This was with WEAF in New York. In 1927 he appeared in Ziegfeld's "Rosalie" and, during the World's Fair of 1939-40, he sang the leading bass role in the first full-length opera broadcasts on television. These included "The Pirates of Penzance" and "H. M. S. Pinafore." As a radio artist for 25 years, Donaghy sang with the National Light Opera and Grand Opera Companies and appeared on such famous programs as the Cliquot Club Eskimos, the Dutch Masters Minstrels, and the General Electric and Cities Service hours.

—o—

No John Bieling Day Party This September

The sponsors of the annual John Bieling Day party for pioneer recording artists and their collector admirers have reluctantly decided not to hold a get-together in the Garden City Hotel on September 10, as had been planned. Last year's party was a great success, and the sponsors have every hope of reviving the affair in 1950. The decision to call it off this year has been occasioned by the death of a collector who was to provide part of the financial backing; the poor health at present of Jim Walsh, another of the sponsors; and several other temporary handicaps.

Records and Record Catalogs For Sale

I have a number of classical vocal records, mostly acoustics, to dispose of, but no time to list. Please send me your want lists. Collectors living in the New York City area may telephone (Riverside 9-1574) between 10 A. M. and 10 P. M. to arrange appointment for inspection of records and catalogs.

ALSO FOR SALE THE OSCAR SAENGER COURSE IN VOCAL TRAINING

—For Mezzo-Soprano and for Tenor—
10 double-faced records in ea. set.
Excellent cond. Send your offers.
Special consideration given Collectors.

The new catalog of Historical Records.

by Robert Bauer.

Contains 494 pages listing vocal recordings issued in the United States and Europe from 1898 to 1908/09. Remit $9.75 to me by check or money order and your copy will be mailed to you direct from England. Note: Have a few copies of the original 1938 edition for sale at $3.50 each, postpaid.

STEPHEN FASSETT
West Falmouth, Mass.

THE MARIMBA

By FRANK K. MAC CALLUM

The marimba is a musical instrument of unusual interest. How many people know that it was developed in the New World? Imported from Africa, it remained in primitive form until about 1895. At that time Sebastian Hurtado of Guatemala adapted it for European music enlarging its compass from about 20 hardwood bars to 67, and using for resonators angular wooden boxes with pointed ends instead of the hollow gourds formerly used. The bars are sounded by mallets held in the musicians' hands.

The new instrument's popularity spread quickly over Central America, no doubt due to the love Latin Americans have for music. Hurtado's sons formed the celebrated "Hurtado Brothers' Royal Marimba Band of Guatemala" and won world-wide fame.

The Central American marimba has the compass and versatility of the piano. This is due to the special bulb-shaped resonators. Each one has a hole near the lower pointed end covered with cured pigs gut. This membrane vibrates when the bars are struck, giving a loud humming sound which is the characteristic stringlike tone of the marimba. This feature, and the short length afforded by the resonator's shape, makes possible six or seven octave marimbas. Though they may be eight feet long, the marimbas are light and portable. The framework of the marimba is an example of artistic wood carving; and the whole instrument is a triumph of native handicraft and patience.

Many records have been made of the Hurtado Brothers' playing and of other marimba bands. Unlike most musical instruments, the marimba recorded very faithfully (especially in the bass), and its possibilities are shown in the Hurtados' Victor records "Selections from Aida" and "Cavalleria Rusticana"—among others. Such records should not be neglected by collectors since their equal is not to be found in contemporary catalogs.

The marimba is undoubtedly the most singular contribution of the New World to music. It has increased in popularity and now attracts the interest of many modern composers.

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosorjak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

142 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to

Lightner Publishing Corp.

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

2810 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

FRANK C. STANLEY VII.

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Frank Stanley's recording association with Elise Stevenson, the soprano who was his principal feminine co-worker during the last years of his career, appears to have begun late in 1906. Miss Stevenson (Mrs. Rusling Wood) was the soprano soloist in the Madison Avenue Baptist church, of New York, when Grinsted was its basso. He then sang in the Central Presbyterian church on Fifty-seventh street, where Edith Chapman (who made records as "Miss Chappel") was the soprano.

Victor and Columbia issued "Stevenson-Stanley" records in 1907, but their first duet for Edison didn't come out until February, 1909—presumably because they had begun singing together during the period when the basso's disagreement with the Edison company was still in effect. The record was four-minute wax Amberol No. 79, "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and it was an elaborate undertaking for those days. Here is the New Phonogram's description:

'A remarkably fine presentation of Julia Ward Howe's stirring national anthem. Mr. Stanley, baritone, sings the first verse; Miss Stevenson, soprano, the second verse; Mr. Stanley and Mr. Anthony, the third verse, and Miss Stevenson and Mr. Anthony, the fourth verse. The choruses between the verses are sung by the Mixed Quartet. The singers are accompanied by the New York Military Band. It will be strange indeed if this does not prove one of the largest selling records ever made for the Edison Phonograph.'

Mrs. Grinsted says Miss Stevenson was largely responsible for ending Stanley's disagreement with the Edison company. She recalls that Edison "wanted Miss Stevenson to sing for them, and she told them Mr. Grinsted was her manager and they would have to deal with him. The outcome was they had Mr. Grinsted sing for them again at twice the amount they had argued about. It was a great feather in Miss Stevenson's cap." She adds: "Mr. Grinsted sang in several Victor combinations. I know he sang in the Victor Light Opera Company some times." He was also a member of the original Lyric Quartet, consisting of himself, Miss Morgan, Miss Stevenson and Harry Macdonough which sang only for Victor. Later, the Lyric members were Olive Kline, Elsie Baker, Macdonough and W. F. Hooley.

While we're mentioning these former associates of Stanley, I may record that Byron Harlan told Mrs. Grinsted he had learned that George Seymour Lenox, the tenor, died after moving to California. Mrs. Grinsted's daughter, Mrs. Repelow, says: "Mr. Lenox, the tenor, died after moving to California. Mrs. Grinsted's daughter, Mrs. Repelow, says: "Mr. Lenox wanted us (the Grinsted children) to call him 'Uncle Seymour.' I remember him distinctly, a nice looking, jolly gentleman who was in our home more than any other of the singers—probably the only one to stay overnight." When I called on her, Mrs. Repelow gave me some sheet music that had once belonged to Corinne Morgan and to Mr. Lenox. It goes without saying that I prize it.

George M. Stricklett made Edison records for several years, but moved to Florida after marrying a wealthy woman from Orange.

Truly, the years from 1906 until his death in 1910 were crowded ones for Stanley Grinsted. He seems to have done a little of almost everything in the phonograph way, but probably "L. O. K.," of Marion, Illinois, who asked in the December, 1907 issue of the New Phonogram, "Do Harlan and Stanley play in the Edison Military Band?" was disappointed when he was told they didn't.

Mrs. Grinsted recalls that during this period she and her husband made a practice of going to first nights of comic operas and musical comedies to select new songs for recordings. When the "Merry Widow" was first produced in New York, the basso bought the entire score and trained his singers in the music. Then he went to the phonograph companies and offered to put the whole score on records, with himself and Miss Stevenson in the featured roles. Some companies accepted. Victor was one. And Indestructible issued a special supplement in February, 1908, containing eight "Merry Widow" records. Three of these were band arrangements of the principal airs, but the others were sung as solos or duets by Miss Stevenson and Mr. Stanley, except that the famous "Women!" number was done by the Peerless Quartet, which he had just organized. "Women!" incidentally was the Peerless' first Victor record. It was issued, with four other "Merry Widow" selections, in April, 1908. The same procedure was followed with Oscar Strauss' "Waltz Dream."

The Peerless Quartet didn't appear on Edison records until 1909. It was not called the Peerless on Columbia records until after Stanley's death, but carried on the long-established name of the Columbia Quartet. Indestructible called it simply "The Quartet." But, oddly enough, Indestructible was also cataloging records by the Peerless Trio, which seems to have been the group known on Victor records as the Victor Vaudeville Company—Billy Murray, Steve Porter and Harlan. I have never seen the Peerless Trio listed as such anywhere else.

All these varied activities shows that Frank Stanley was not only a fine artist, but had an excellent business head. Mrs. Grinsted relates that after her husband's passing, Victor Emerson, the recording manager for the Columbia company, told her that most phonograph singers were poor business men, but that Mr. Grinsted was the exact opposite. "In fact," Emerson said, "he seemed to know instinctively what the public likes and wants, and I relied on his judgment a great deal."

But that is anticipating. The three years after he organized the Peerless Quartet until he died probably were the most action-filled of Frank Stanley's too brief life. The quartet was soon working for all the phonograph companies. It not only sang the latest popular songs, but also recorded old standard songs and hymns as well as comic specialties and descriptive sketches. Some of these were written by Stanley; a few, such as "A Call to Arms" and "A Rescue By the Lifeboat Crew" were by the first tenor, Albert Campbell—while at least two of the sketches, "A Possum Supper at Darktown Church" and "A Meeting of the Hen Roost Club," were written by Cal Stewart, the famous impersonator of "Uncle Josh." "Sweetheart Town," the first Harlan-Stanley duet in several years, was issued by Edison in February, 1909, and the pair continued to sing together until Stanley's death less than two years later. However, he was also making duets for Victor with Harry Macdonough and for all the companies with Henry Burr, who called himself Irving Gillette on Edison. And, of course, he was also singing with the Metropolitan Trio, the Lyric Quartet and with the Victor Light Opera Company. The more his career is examined, the more amazing it appears that the singer could ever have spared time to serve his home town of Orange as an alderman.

Frank Stanley's popularity during the last year of his life was at its height. In March, 1910, Edison issued a four-minute version by Harlan and Stanley of one of the "rube" sketches, "The Rube and the Country Doctor," in which they had specialized half a dozen years before. Several years after Stanley's death, this was re-listed as No. 1875 in the Blue Amberol series. Even earlier, in time for the 1909 Independence Day business, they had made "Fourth of July in Jayville" for Victor.

Two months later, Edison issued a four-minute Peerless Quartet record, "Characteristic Negro Medley" (later renumbered 1863 as a Blue Amberol), which is remarkable for the fact that it is probably the only Peerless record ever made in which Henry Burr didn't sing second tenor. For the occasion, he gave way to Billy Murray, whose style was more suited to Negro dialect work. In July was listed the quartet record of a favorite old hymn, "Beyond the Smiling and the Weeping," a song of resignation to death. That seems almost prophetic, in view of the fact that the leader of the Peerless—little as he suspected it then—had only a few months left to live.

(To be continued)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

FRANK C. STANLEY VIII

Frank Stanley's last Edison solo record was an Ernest R. Ball composition, "Boy O'Mine," which was put on the market in October, 1910. It was the first solo he had sung for Edison since his two-minute cylinder of "Sister," made in 1906. "Boy O'Mine," a four-minute record, appears to have been his last solo for any company, but in the same month Victor issued a Stanley-Burr duet, "My Prairie Song Bird," followed in November by two Peerless Quartet recordings, "The Railroad Section Gang" and the vastly popular Indian song, "Silver Bell." In November, Edison announced two records in which the basso took part, "O Morning Land," a duet with "Irving Gillette," and Al Campbell's sketch, "Shipwreck and Rescue," described as "reproducing with startling realism the terrors of a storm at sea and the thrill of a subsequent rescue by the life-saving crew."

Then came December, the month of Frank Stanley's death from pneumonia. Victor issued no records that month in which he took part, but Edison had a two-minute cylinder of "Sweetness" by the Peerless — the same number which Victor was to catalog in February, 1911, accompanied by the announcement of Stanley's passing. News that the popular basso was gone came as an almost unbelievable shock to his friends, aside from the few who knew he was desperately ill. John Bieling recalled that he talked with Stanley for a few moments on the very night that he was stricken with pneumonia, had no idea he was unwell and "just couldn't believe it at first" when he heard a week later that his old friend was dead.

No record in which the dead singer took part was listed by Edison in the month after his death, but Victor had one Peerless Quartet offering, "Without You," and Minstrels No. 17, by the Victor Minstrel Company — which was what the quartet called itself in making minstrel records. In February, Victor announced his death, and Edison issued a Stanley-Gillette duet of "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes." A month later, Victor cataloged its last record in which Stanley sang No. 16712, the duet of "Norine Maureen," which he had sung with Burr.

It was in this month that the leading recording artists of the time united in what was called "the Frank C. Stanley Testimonial Concert," presented as a tribute in memory of the man who had been recognized for so many years as one of the most accomplished leaders of his profession. Mr. Grinstead's daughters have generously given me a copy of the program. The concert took place on the night of March 8, 1911, but I find no information within the program as to where it was presented, although I know it was somewhere in New York.

All the phonograph companies took advertising space in the program, and the National Phonograph Company also published a tribute to the man whose work had done so much to make Edison cylinders popular. It is worth quoting, after first pointing out that the W. in the singer's name should be placed before "Stanley" rather than after it:

"This seems a fitting opportunity to say a few words in appreciation of the services rendered the Edison Phonograph by Stanley W. Grinstead (Frank C. Stanley), during his long connection with this Company. At the time of his death he was one of a few artists who had made Edison Records continuously for nearly fifteen years.

"His connection began before the organization of the National Phonograph Co., for when the present Edison Phonograph was still in the experimental stage he made records for it, working in the Edison Laboratory under the direction of Mr. Edison and his assistants. Besides having a splendid baritone voice, Mr. Grinstead was in those days a banjo player of the first rank—a fact that most of his friends either do not know or have forgotten, so well known in recent years has he become known as a singer. In the Laboratory days, he made both vocal and banjo records, more because of the novelty and pleasure than for gain.

"After the organization of the National Phonograph Co. in 1896, he took up record making in a serious manner, and continued in the work until his death in December. The last Edison record which he sang was Amberol No. 643, 'Somewhere.' In this he sang bass in the chorus. This record will appear on March 25th. His latest duet record was Amberol No. 615, 'Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes,' in which he sang with Irving Gillette. His last solo record was 'Boy O' Mine', No. 521.

"When Mr. Grinstead began his career as a professional record maker, he was engaged in concert work and was active as a singer in church choirs. In those days it detracted from a singer's standing to be known as a singer for Phonograph records, and Mr. Grinstead was compelled to assume the nom de plume of Frank C. Stanley. It was by this name that his reputation became world wide. After the prejudice against the Phonograph had changed, he would have been glad to have continued in his own name but his nom de plume had become so well known that a change was deemed inadvisable.

"Mr. Grinstead was not the only Edison artist of long standing or who has made many Edison records, but probably no other singer has made more records than he. His name does not appear so often in the catalogues as some others but he took part in the making of hundreds of duets, trios, quartettes, choruses, rube sketches, vaudeville sketches, etc. Several of the clever rube sketches made by him and Mr. Harlan were written by Mr. Grinstead.

"Mr. Grinstead took more than an ordinary interest in record making. He was always conscientious and painstaking in it. He was as anxious to get the best results as were those whom he sought to please. He was also interested in the success of Edison products. In the earlier days he rendered valuable assistance in securing new singers and instrumentalists. He was active in forming and training quartettes. He was the guiding hand when others sang with him in duets or trios.

"No man now occupies a place that cannot be filled by another, but Mr. Grinstead will be keenly missed by his associates and others with whom he came in contact. His superb voice, however, will be with us for years to come, probably as long as any present type of Phonograph and talking machine remains in existence. When he has been forgotten by all but a few his records will continue to entertain and amuse. Thousands, aye millions, will

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 31)

MISCELLANEOUS

HAVE YOUR OLD violin appraised for insurance or closing an estate. You may own a masterpiece. Fee $5.—Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 444 Surf St., Chicago, Ill. je120041

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. d80441

Swiss Music Movements, assorted tunes, $1.90. Direct from manufacturers agent.—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, New York. n3084

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124301

SWISS MUSICAL UNITS $2.75.—Music Boxes, 131 West 42nd, New York 18, N. Y. n3061

WANTED: Victor or Edison catalogs and supplements, 1912 or earlier.—L. E. Mack, 1157 Penniman, Plymouth, Mich. mh05

YOUR REED organ and melodeon problems analyzed. State make, describe symptoms thoroughly. If I help, send two dollars. Bellows cloth, other parts for sale.—Wylie York, The Organ Shop, 3134 Harlandale, Dallas, Texas. f64201

FOR SALE: Records, Grand Opera, Golden Age Ballads and Jazz, 1900-1945. Mail your wants. — Cath. V. O'Brien, First Ave., Newtown Sq., Pa. o6006

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1860 for sale. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. mx122511

Wanted: Coin-operated, automatic musical instruments and music rolls for Seeburg Pianos, Mills Violin Virtuosos, etc.—Wm. S. Allen, 616 First National Bank Bldg. Santa Ana, Calif. mh60621

TWO BLUE AMBEROL Model 30 Editions; never used; in original crates, ea. $24.75. 250 Cylinder records, 20 for $3.75. Fine Regina music box. Write for picture.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. olx
(See page 101 for other Music ads)

RECORDS

FINE CLASSICAL RECORDS: Auction: Imported instrumentals, largely cutouts. Unusual collectors opportunity. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. mh6445

PATHE records for sale. Operatic selections, songs and instrumental pieces. Send for list.—Mrs. May B. Oxx, 147 N. Fulton Ave., Mount Vernon, N. Y. o1002

100,000 OPERATIC RECORDS, for sale. G&T, HMV, Fonotipias, Victor, Columbia, etc. Send want list to—John Scigiano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. mh6007

(See page 101 for other Records ads)

MELODEON

Beautiful rosewood melodeon. Octagon legs. Completely restored. $160.00 crated.

Expert repairing service.

C-sharp HOBBY SHOP

415 S. Diamond Ave., Grand Rapids 6, Mich.

Many fine old records, including Lauder, Caruso, McCormack.

Write me of your interests.

MARGARET WILCOX - ALMA, NEB.

whalers loaded with stones to be sunk in the harbors of Charleston and Savannah to prevent blockade-running during the Civil War. W. H. Rease of Philadelphia contributed "Whaling, The Conflict", and there is also a good chrome, "Whales Caught in the Ice" published by William Bradford of Boston without date. Even the views of New Bedford include whalers. An engraved one by J. W. Hill has one in the foreground with a boat out, and Lane & Scott's "View of New Bedford", shows the "Tarterne" and the "Drazimbo".

PRINTS FOR SALE

CURTIS FLOWER prints, original hand coloring, each bearing date of over 120 years ago, size 5½x9", $5 dozen, postpaid. Framed in gold leaf frame with French lined mats, $7.50 a pair, express collect. For dealers: An assortment of 25 dated flower, costume and other prints for $12.50. Express collect.—Old Prints, 526 E. Argonne Dr., Kirkwood 22, Mo. n122173

I HAVE SOME good Currier & Ives prints to sell at attractive prices.—Earl Romey, 209 Jersey, Bluffton, Ind. o126121

WHY GUESS at the value of your Currier & Ives prints? Book listing 1202 prints and their present day values, only $1.—Earl Romey, 209 Jersey, Bluffton, Indiana. o122971

FOR YOUR Family History. Costume prints; Baronial Manors; Scottish Highlands. All with coats-of-Arms. Early American portraits and places. Maps.—Mabel Louise Keech—"At the Sign of the Crest", North Shore Hotel, Evanston, Illinois. tfr

ORIGINAL Antique Colored Godey, fashion prints (1858-72) fine condition, $1.25 each. Antique English and French colored fashion prints (1810-1876), 50c ea.—Blackford, 2002 North 4th St., Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. n5069

PRINTS, ENGRAVINGS Cleaned: Age, water stains removed. Work guaranteed. Lithographs bought, sold, exchanged.—Stuart Gast, 3421 Center Street, Washington 10, D. C. j6120821

CURRIER & IVES Prints, send stamp for list, large and small folios.—Frank W. Mathews, Scottsville, N. Y. j6128001

CURRIER & IVES, Godeys, Petersons, Sarony, etc. Write your wants or will send list for 10 cents.—Fairfax Lentz, 166 Fir Hill, Akron Ohio. d6867

SELLING OUT: Beautiful collection colored prints, 120 assorted; miniature to 14x18, $10. Regimental Highlanders, 9x12; 12 subjects $2.50. Grevedon's Miniatures, hand colored; 6 subjects $1. Send cash. We pay postage. No C.O.D.—Zima, 1477 W. Adams Blvd., Los Angeles 7, Calif. d68041

OLD VIEWS OF CITIES. Early prints, hand-colored, of your native town are interesting Americana. These are neatly mounted and protected by cellophane. Prices from $3 to $10. Hand-painted Coats of Arms authentically prepared to order; family name only requirement. Framed in gold, 12½x11". English, with solid color mat, $20; Scottish, with hand-painted Tartan mat, $25.—Old Prints, 526 E. Argonne Dr., Kirkwood, St. Louis 22, Mo. aul20844

AUTHENTICATED Old Prints: Original American and English prints. No restrikes. Delightful and decorative selection. Send for price list, 9c in stamps which will be deducted from cost of first print purchased. Prices to fit your pocketbook, 15c to $50. We have flower prints, bird prints, American scenes and many others. Collectors, Dealers and Decorators will surely find interest here.—Parnassos Antiquariat, Post Office Box 286, Bronxville, N. Y. n38801

COLLECTION: C. & I. prints, rurals, horses, ships, miscellaneous subjects. Reasonable. Send stamp for list.—E. F. Thayer, Lynnfield Center, Mass. mh6276

AUCTION, unique Audubon proof prints! See advertisement, Antiques Dept., page 51. o 127

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 28)

continue to derive the pleasure from his voice that always comes with the hearing of a good song well sung, and as many more will forget their cares while listening to the rendition of his humorous selections."

That testimonial concert must have been a memorial event, both to the audience fortunate enough to hear it and to the celebrities taking part. It was arranged in minstrel show form, with Steve Porter as the interlocutor. The musical directors were Charles A. Prince, leader of the Columbia bands and orchestras; Ernest R. Ball, writer of many famous song hits; Walter B. Rogers, Victor band and orchestra leader, and Albert Benzler and Eugene Jaudas, of the U. S. Everlasting and Edison organizations. The program follows:

Overture (selected), Orchestra; Opening Chorus, Entree Company; "Dreams, Just Dreams," Harvey Hindermeyer; "Stuttering Dick," Edward Meeker; "All Aboard for Blanket Bay," Walter Van Brunt; "A Little Talk," Monroe Silver; "Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold," William H. Thompson; Soprano solo, Elizabeth Spencer; "Below the Mason-Dixon Line," Jim Sweeney; "I Love the Name of Mary," Albert Campbell; "Excelsior," Anthony and Harrison; Banjo Solo, Vess L. Ossman; "Winter," That Girl Quartette; "Good-bye, My Love, Good-bye," Frank Coombs; "His Day's Work Was Done," Jim Devins; "Any Old Port in a Storm," Wm. F. Hooley; "Mother, Boy and Home," Manuel Romahn; "Down Among the Sugar Cane," Johnny Forsman; "I'm the Only Star That Twinkles on Broadway," Ada Jones; "A Bit of Nonsense," Murry K. Hill; "In the Garden of My Heart," Henry Burr; "Down Where the Big Bananas Grow," Collins and Harlan; "Silver Threads Among the Gold," Will Oakland; "On San Francisco Bay," Billy Murray; "Sextet From Lucia," Victor Light Opera Co. (Lucy Marsh, Marguerite Dunlap, Harry Macdonough, Wm. Wheeler, Reinald Werrenrath and Wm. F. Hooley) and Closing Chorus, the Company. John Bieling recalled that, somewhere during the program, the American Quartet, not listed here, sang "Play That Barber Shop Chord."

Arrangements for the concert were in charge of the Stanley Memorial Committee, of which John Kaiser, who made "Casey" records for Edison after Russell Hunting went to England and also did announcing on Zonophone records, was treasurer. At the time of the concert he was an official of the United States company. Walter Miller, of Edison, was committee chairman. Other members were: Calvin G. Child, of Victor; Victor H. Emerson, Columbia; E. Lyman Bill, publisher of the Talking Machine World; Ernst R. Ball, representing the music publishers, and R. B. Caldwell, for the talking machine jobbers. Ushers were: George J. Werner, Frank Evans, Fred C. Burt, Andrew Weber, Harvey Emmons, Harry Getcliffe, George B. Ward, E. J. Lee, W. A. Knoop, H. L. Marker, C. D. Emerson, G. A. Forbush, Clifford J. Werner, John A. Loesch, James Henderson, Louis Reinhardt, Geo. Denkinger and Louis Silverman. The booklet contained a special notice: "Owing to the length of the programme, the audience is earnestly requested not to insist upon more than one encore." Two of the artists taking part—Jim Sweeney and Johnny Forsman—are completely unknown to me. They probably were "song pluggers" for some of the music publishers.

As the Edison contribution to the program had said, the Irving Gillette record of "Somewhere," with Stanley singing bass in the chorus, was issued in April. It was transferred a couple of years later to the Blue Amberol series. And in May, Victor marketed its first record by the reorganized Peerless Quartet, with John H. Meyer singing bass in Stanley's place. Meyer had been singing in the same church choir with Henry Burr, who had become manager of the Peerless. Under Burr's direction, it was to remain the most popular recording quartet for almost another 20 years, but with occasional changes of personnel.

In December, 1911, the Peerless record of a ballad, "In the Golden Afterwhile," which Stanley Grinstead had written a short time before his death, was issued by Victor. During the basso's later years he had somehow found time to write a good many songs, the original music of some of which is still in his daughters' possession. One of the songs, whose exact title I have forgotten, contains the given name of his youngest daughter, Elaine. I believe that "In the Golden Afterwhile" was the only one of Stanley's original compositions which has been published. Edison also issued it, and the companies paid the royalties directly to Mrs. Grinstead during the several years the records remained in their catalogs.

Here is a final interesting reminiscence from Mrs. Grinstead: "One might not long after Mr. Grinstead's death a lady telephoned and said she was a great admirer of his singing, and asked if she might call. She was a short, dark woman, very business like, and I thought she was a reporter. She was a Christian Science practitioner in Cleveland, Ohio. She said that when she went to a new city or town, she always went around, trying to find Stanley records. She would buy five or six of her favorites, so when one got broken she would have some left. She ended, 'I must have around 500 of his records.' After that she always came to see me when she came to New York. She usually sent me a Christmas present, and when my daughters married, she sent them each a half dozen sterling silver teaspoons. She died about three or four years ago, and I received word she had left me all her Stanley records. I received 79. Twenty-nine were solos. The rest were duets, trios, quartets, etc., in which he sang. I was very glad to get them, even though it was not 500."

The year, 1910, in which Frank Stanley died now seems a remote era to us. That was four years before the first World war began—before any city had been bombed from the air or the atomic bomb was more than dreamed of. Frank Stanley never heard of electric recording or even saw an Edison Diamond Disc phonograph. The "talkies," aside from the primitive type with which Edison experimented, were unknown to him. If he could return to earth today, he would be amazed at first by radio and television and would find the world he knew changed almost beyond recognition—in many ways, for the worse. Yet that Christian Science practitioner who so zealously collected his records has her counterpart today in hundreds—probably thousands—of lovers of the old-time records, who believe that the subject of these sketches was one of the finest artists who ever sang into a horn and treasure his discs and cylinders accordingly. Thanks to these collectors, he is not likely ever to be entirely forgotten. And, as a lifetime admirer, it has been both a pleasure and a privilege for me to pay this extended tribute to the memory of William Stanley Grinstead. (THE END)

- Peer Gynt—Solveig's Song
733 Cavalleria—Voi lo sapete
Ave Maria (Bach-Gounod), with violin, piano and saxophone accompaniment
NOTE—Numbers 731 & 733 are 11-inch records

- BURRIAN, Carl (Tenor)
2686 Walkure—Siegmunds Liebeslied
Freischütz—Durch die Walder
2687 Bajazzo—Lache Bajazzo
Werther—Was bin ich aufgewacht
BURZIO, Eugenia (Soprano)
2598 Aida—O Patria mia
Trovatore—D'Amor sul ali rosee
2607 Peer Gynt—Chanson de Solveig
Madrigale (Simonetta)
2608 Visione (Tosti)
Torna (Tosti)
2761 Favorita—rietosa al par d'un Nume
Masked Ball—Morro ma prima in grazia
2762 Norma—Deh! non voleri vittime
Norma—Casta Diva

- CARELLI, Emma (Soprano)
2609 Cavalleria—Voi lo sapete
Zaza—Dir che ci sono al mondo
CARUSO, Enrico (Tenor)
2610 Tu non mi vuoi piu bene (Pini-Corsi)
Tosca—E lucevan le stelle
2611 Tu non mi vuoi piu bene (Pini-Corsi)
Ugonotti—Qui sotto il ciel
2061* Lohengrin's Bridal Song
Lohengrin's Farewell
2019 'Tis the Day (Leoncavallo)
Gondoliers—Take a pair of Sparkling Eyes
2039 I Love Thee, (Grieg)
For a Dream's Sake (Cowan)
2041 Creation—In Native Worth
Judas Maccabaeus—Sound an Alarm
2046** Come into the Garden, Maud (Balfé)
At the Mid Hour of Night (Cowan)
2056 Take, oh take those lips away (Parry)
Blow thou winter wind (Quilter)
* Same titles also available on 11-inch disc No. 271
** Same titles also available on 11-inch disc No. 0271

- CONSTANTINO, Florencio (Tenor)
2613 Cavalleria—Siciliana
Barber—Ecco ridente
2614 Favorita—Una vergine
Iris—April la tua finestra
2615 Manon Lescaut—Donna nonvidi ma
Pearl Fishers—Mi par d'udire ancora
COSTA, Alfredo (Baritone)
2616 Pagliacci—Prologue
Zaza—Zaza, piccola zingara
2617 Tosca—Se la giurata fede
Barber—Cavatina
2618 Rigoletto—Cortiglano
Otello—Credo
2619 Faust—Dio Possente
Andrea Chenier—Un di m'era gioia
CROSSLEY, Ada (Contralto)
11-inch discs
254 St. Paul—But the Lord Is Mindful of His Own
Out on the Rocks (Dolby)
255 The Lost Chord (Sullivan)
Nearer, My God, to Thee (Carey)
(TO BE Continued)

MUSIC BOXES

FOR CHRISTMAS

Send for our new list of rare old music boxes
All Restored to Perfect Mechanical Condition.
Some With Christmas Music

A. BORNAND

MUSIC BOX SPECIALIST

333 Fifth Avenue, Pelham 65, N. Y.

MUSIC BOXES

Bought, Sold, Expertly Repaired
Estimates and Appraisals
Cheerfully Given
A. V. BORNAND

333 Fifth Avenue, Pelham 65, N. Y.
Third generation in the music box business

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists WILL OAKLAND

By JIM WALSH

Within the past two or three years I have probably had more requests for a biographical sketch of Will Oakland than for one about any other still living pioneer recording artist. I consider Will, who has probably been the most popular countertenor singer of all time, one of my best friends, so I am especially glad to relate here some details of his long and colorful career.

I'm happy, too, that Will is still husky and hearty. His blue eyes are bright; his ample dark brown hair is only sparsely touched with gray, and he looks twenty years younger than his age. As I write, he is engaged in a tour of twenty-eight thousand miles, entertaining disabled service men at Veterans camp shows throughout the United States. I had the pleasure of hearing him when he was at the Roanoke V-A Hospital on July 25 and 26, and can testify that his voice is as sweet and powerful as in the days when he was one of the ranking phonograph singers.

But let's start at the beginning of the singer's career—with his birth. Probably not many of Will Oakland's admirers suspect that he uses a stage name, but the truth is that when he was christened shortly after being born in Jersey City, New Jersey, on January 15, 1880, he was given the name of Herman Hinrichs (pronounced Hine-riks). His father, Bernhardt Hinrichs, a wholesale poultry dealer, was born in Hamburg, Germany. His mother, who had been Miss Louise Seilaff before her marriage, also was German and was a native of Hanover. Mr. and Mrs. Hinrichs did not meet until they came to the United States.

Herman—or Will, as we may now begin to call him—was the youngest child of the family of five boys and one girl. As a boy, his home life was unhappy. He describes his father as the arrogant, high-tempered, domineering type of German—one who kept his wife and family in complete subjection. About the only lighter side to the elder Hinrich's character was a love for the stage. It was his practice, as soon as his sons grew old enough to "talk back" and resent his harshness, to show them to the door and thrust them into the world to make their own living. This was something that they all did with marked success.

After Will grew into his teens, his mother separated from her husband and returned for a time to Germany. Will, too, left the Hinrichs home on Whiten street in the Lafayette section of Jersey City. He got himself a job as a Western Union messenger, carrying telegrams to men returning from the Spanish-American war. Then he likewise went into military service and was assigned to Troop D of the 44th U. S. Cavalry at Fort Riley, Kansas.

Eventually, Will had enough of military life and obtained his discharge. On his way back East he visited the World's Fair in St. Louis and heard John McCormack, then virtually unknown in this country, sing in "The Irish Village." "That," Will told me, "was my inspiration. I decided that if I could come even fairly close to McCormack, singing was the career for me." Actually, Will had already been a featured singer with army bands while he was still in uniform. He was blessed with that rarest of male voices—the countertenor (or contra-tenor, as he prefers to call it), which produces the highest tones possible to a masculine singer and is the equivalent of the feminine contralto. Will says that really his voice never changed from the boy quality.

The young fellow with the phenomenally high voice came on to New York, and his professional career got under way when he was engaged to sing at the Kenmore Hotel in Albany. Before long, the famous minstrel impresario, George Primrose, heard him and hired him to take the place of "Blackface" Eddie Leonard, who had just quit the Primrose show. It was Primrose who gave the singer his stage name of Will Oakland—a happy choice because it is musical, rhythmic and somehow suggests the flavor of the sentimental ballads in which Will excelled—songs such as "When the Robins Nest Again" and "When the Autumn Moon is Creeping Thro' the Woodlands." "Oakland" came from Fred Oakland, a once famous singer who died before Will Oakland's day on the stage.

As a member of the Dockstader troupe, Will had a variety of experiences. He likes to tell about the time he heard a young fellow singing in a theater in Little Rock, Arkansas. Will quickly decided that the young man would be a valuable member of the company and got the boss to give him a job. The promising youngster didn't stay in minstrelsy long, but went on to the heights of show business. And thus did Will Oakland discover Al Jolson.

Will was the second countertenor to win fame as a phonograph singer. Richard José, who had begun making Victor records in 1903, was the first. Oakland became a recording artist because Thomas A. Edison heard him one night and personally engaged him to sing for cylinders. Will had been under the impression for many years that his first Edison recording was "Silver Threads Among the Gold" and he was surprised when I told him that his initial offering was a song I have already mentioned—Alfred Solman and Monroe H. Rosenfeld's ballad, "When the Autumn

MISCELLANEOUS

HAVE YOUR OLD violin appraised for insurance or closing an estate. You may own a masterpiece. Fee $5.—Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 444 Surf St., Chicago, Ill. jcl20041

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. d80441

Swiss Music Movements, assorted tunes, $1.90. Direct from manufacturers agent.—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, New York. n3084

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. jcl24201

SWISS MUSICAL UNITS $2.75.—Music Boxes, 131 West 42nd, New York 18, N. Y. n3061

WANTED: Victor or Edison catalogs and supplements, 1912 or earlier.—L. B. Mack, 1157 Penniman, Plymouth, Mich. mh06

YOUR REED organ and melodeon problems analyzed. State make, describe symptoms thoroughly. If I help, send two dollars. Bellows cloth, other parts for sale.—Wyle York, The Organ Shop, 3134 Harlandale, Dallas, Texas. f64201

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850 for sale. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my122511

Wanted: Coin-operated, automatic musical instruments and music rolls for Seeburg Pianos, Mills Violin Virtuosos, etc.—Wm. S. Allen, 616 First National Bank Bldg. Santa Ana, Calif. mh60621

FINE ROSEWOOD MELODEON, perfect, and perfect playing condition. Top 38x50", height 32", about 78 keys, 150 years, write.—Edith Blair, 1500 Langdon, Alton, Ill. np1802

FOR SALE, rare antique Clementi grand piano.—Anna M. McKechnie, Canandaigua, N. Y. d3761

OLD POPULAR MUSIC, I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. d3272

MELODEON PEDALS made to order, $12.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. d3042

"SMALL GRAND DULCIMER, refined, 4 octaves, key board like a piano, 32" wide, 33" long, 33" high, $150. Gem roller organ, walnut case, all in good condition, 10 rolls, $25. Lovely Swiss music box, inlaid rosewood case, 14" cylinder, comb perfect, 7 bells with bee strikers, also a drum, plays 8 tunes, write for photo and price.—Ray Albertson, Atlantic, Iowa. n1884

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

Moon is Creeping Thro' the Woodlands." The cylinder was issued in August, 1908, with the following comment: "This record introduces a new Edison artist, Will Oakland. He has a countertenor voice of bell-like sweetness, which is heard to excellent advantage in this pretty, romantic ballad. Many of our Edison friends have expressed a desire to hear a good countertenor or falsetto singer, and Mr. Oakland can rest assured of a flattering reception."

Three months later, Oakland's record of "When You and I Were Young, Maggie," a song with which he has always been intimately associated, was issued. It's possible that "Maggie" was recorded before the other, but was held for a later release date, because it was a "standard," which would always be in demand, instead of a transiently popular song.

With his first cylinders, Will Oakland stepped into the front rank of Edison artists. His phenomenally high voice was a sensation. This was true throughout the English-speaking world, for Edison records were sold everywhere.

The grown-up boy soprano's following soon became even greater, for his first Victor record, "Silver Threads Among the Gold," appeared in April, 1909, and many others followed. These also were listed abroad in the catalogs of Victor's foreign affiliates, and I'm intrigued by the fact that some of the Oakland records continued to be sold by the Zonophone company in Australia and New Zealand years after they had been cut out by the American maker. Will's Columbia records began to appear in 1910, and they also had a strong sale in Great Britain and the British dominions. Columbia and Regal catalogs in those countries used the descriptive term, "sweet-voiced Will Oakland," and some of his acoustic discs were sold overseas for several years after the era of electric recording began.

Although Will sang many of the popular ballads of the day, his specialty was the sentimental songs of the Eighties and Nineties, such as "Only a Pansy Blossom" and "White Wings"; "tear-jerkers" of an even earlier period, of which "Stick to Your Mother, Tom" is a good example; and Civil War ballads, of which "Just Before the Battle, Mother" (recorded by Edison with elaborate sound effects) and "Who Will Care for Mother Now?" were typical. Songs about Mother always had a prominent part in the Oakland repertoire, and one of his biggest hits was "As I Sat Upon My Dear Old Mother's Knee." In 1915 he made an unusual Victor record in which he sang the refrains of five old-time ballads. The record was called "Old-Time Song Medley" and introduced "When the Robins Nest Again," "My Mother's Old Red Shawl," "White Wings," "Stick to Your Mother, Tom" and "Wait Till the Clouds Roll By." Such numbers are the kind that win the hearts of the plain people, and

MUSIC BOX DISCS

BOUGHT — SOLD — TRADED
SEND FOR MY WANT LIST
OFFERING ABOVE AVERAGE PRICES.

INSLEY C. LOOKER

So. Maple Avenue, Basking Ridge, N. J.

np

RECORDS

FINE CLASSICAL RECORDS: Auction: Imported instrumentals, largely cutouts. Unusual collectors opportunity. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. mh6445

100,000 OPERATIC RECORDS, for sale. G&T, HMV, Fonotipias, Victor, Columbia, etc. Send want list to—John Scigiano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. mh6007

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

REGINA 27" including Silent Night. Capital cuff cylinder type records Symphonian Music Box, 7 feet tall, plays 3 records at one time, including 100 records.—Dr. G. F. Schait, 3 Springfield Ave., Cranford, N. J. d3445

WILL BUY used records, or collections. — Jacob S. Schneider, 128 West 66th St., New York City 23, N. Y. d3882

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. d3084

TEL-ELECTRIC music rolls; 7" copier.—Vilas, 544 N. W., 23 court, Miami, Florida. nx021

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Hard-to-get records, individually offered. Lists issued according to singers. Please state "wants". Write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. ja6829

RARE OLD RECORDS for sale: Vocal operatic, popular, collectors items, reasonably priced. Ask for lists.—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Pa. mh120821

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f126912

ELEVEN THOUSAND different vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. n126551

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. n3253

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6084

WANTED: Regina 27" discs; state price and condition in first letter. Want disc "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now".—R. C. Shattuck, Eldred, Pa. n3004

MUSIC WANTED

WANT TO BUY: 1. Woodymay pickup, 2 min. type C. 1. Woodymay pickup, 4 min. type H. 1 5" diam. Mandrel to fit over a 2" diam. Mandrel for Col. comb. 1 horn, 9" for Ed. Gem. 1 horn hex. or oct., 14" or less for Gem. 1 or more reproducers for 1898 Berliner, 1900 Johnson or 1901 Vict. No Exhibition or late Berliners wanted. 1 horn arm for 1898 Berliner. 1 Comb. recorder and reproducer, 1 1/2" diam. for Col. Com. Elect., about 1898.—Theo. Kintner, 1309 W. L. St., Wilmington, California. n1217

Will Oakland at the Veterans Administration Hospital, Roanoke, Va. With him is Eula Christian, well-known Tennessee, writer, who came to Roanoke to meet her favorite singer, and hear him render the song she likes best, "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen."

there is no question that Will Oakland won them completely.

During his first years as a record maker, Oakland did little duet work, although he teamed up with a baritone, William H. Thompson, in several Edison and United States Everlasting cylinders. Meanwhile, he had left Primrose and, for the season of 1909-10, was with the Cohan and Harris Minstrel Troupe. In May, 1911, Edison issued a two-minute cylinder of

"On Mobile Bay," by the Oakland Quartet, which today is a mystery to Will. He says he simply can't recall having any quartet named for himself and doesn't remember who the other singers were. The Edison supplement said all the quartet members were well-known recording artists, and my guess is that the other three were John Bieling, Steve Porter and William F. Hooley.

Later that year, Will became the star of another ensemble that was destined to become famous. It was the Heidelberg Quintet—in effect, the American Quartet (Billy Murray, Bieling, Porter and Hooley), with Oakland added to give harmonizing top tenor effects. The quintet's arrangements were mostly written by the late George Botsford and were especially designed to make the counter-tenor tones stand out against the well-balanced work of the other singers. Virtually all the Victor records by the quintet emphasized the fact that Oakland was starred by saying: "Heidelberg Quintet (with Will Oakland)."

Probably most collectors of old records have wondered how the Heidelberg Quintet got its name. Will says that the group began its recorded work with a 12-inch faced Victor called "A Night at the Club." Both sides were devoted to carrying on a sort of running story set to music. The second ended with an announcement that "The Heidelberg Stein Song" will now be sung by our Heidelberg Quintet." The boys thought the record would be a sensation, but—sad to say!—Victor's board of review decided it would have only a limited sale and wouldn't permit its release. However, the name of the Heidelberg Quintet stuck and was used afterwards for all the Victor and Edison records by the five. The quintet's biggest seller most likely was Victor 17141, "Waiting for the Robert E. Lee."

The quintet made records for about three years. Will doesn't remember just why it ceased to function as a unit. One reason may have been John Bieling's retirement. Another perhaps was the fact that Oakland had quit minstrel work and begun to make

WANTED

COLUMBIA
GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.
EDISON GRAND OPERA
CYLINDERS:

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.

International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophone by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.

Lys Gauty singing Le quatorze Juillet
ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

Box 285

West Falmouth, Massachusetts

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply. ttf

For Christmas
"OLD MUSIC BOX MELODIES"
ON MODERN PHONOGRAPH RECORDS

Album RB 1 "First Edition": Silent Night;
O-Sanctissima; Ave Maria; Adesle Fideles;
3 Old Waltz Melodies; 3 Operatic Airs.
Album RB 3 "Old Favorites": Home Sweet
Home; On a Sunday Afternoon; Mocking Bird; Love's Old Sweet Song; Silver Threads Among the Gold; In the Gloomings.
3 Standard plastic records (6 sides) each album,
$4.25 postpaid.
Also SINGLE RECORD: Braham's Cradle Song and Rockaby-Baby, from exquisite old music
box. 10" plastic. $1.15 postpaid.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX RECORD CO.
333 5th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y. dc

LLOYD G. KELLEY
Successor to

REGINA
MUSIC BOX CO.

Christmas tunes for the 15 1/2" Regina, special, $2.50 each. No. 3028 White Christmas; 3029 Jingle Bells; 3030 The First Noel; 3031 Hark the Herald Angels Sing; 3032 Santa Claus is Coming to Town; 3026 Come Hither Ye Children; 1028 Still Night, Holy Night; 1029 O Sanctissima; 1423 O Christmas Tree.

Complete line of reconditioned antique music boxes for sale ttf

P. O. Box 342
Hanover, Massachusetts

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

tfo

coast-to-coast tours in vaudeville. Meanwhile, in 1914 Will also sang with an ensemble known as the Lyric Trio. This consisted of himself as countertenor; Albert Campbell, first tenor, and Henry Burr, second tenor. In its way this was the most remarkable vocal organization I know of—the only trio or quartet ever to come to my attention in which there was neither a baritone nor a bass. All the voices were high. Burr, however, stuck to his lower range in singing the lead. The trio worked together only a short time, but made some beautiful Victor and Columbia discs.

Oakland and Billy Murray also struck up a duet partnership in 1914, and turned out some splendid Victors. (Murray, of course, was the duet partner of practically every popular singer at one time or other). Particularly outstanding, I think, is their version of "Just for Tonight," a 1914 composition that has had a revised vogue within the past year. With Billy singing the melody and Will producing high-toned harmony, it is one of the loveliest "popular" records that I have heard.

For several years, Will Oakland sang as a headliner attraction in Keith theaters throughout the country. Then in the early 1920's along came radio, and the erstwhile minstrel man became as popular on the air waves as he had been on the stage and records. In 1926 the New York Evening World sponsored a contest to determine the most popular radio singer. Will received a half million votes, taking first prize and being awarded a Packard automobile. However the advent of radio meant his recording career had virtually ended, for he says the leading phonograph companies were extremely hostile in those days to the new-fangled wireless entertainment, and told him that if he sang into a radio "mike" he couldn't go on singing into a recording horn. Will smiled as he told me: "I decided that if they felt that way about it, I had made enough records, anyway, so I just said, 'O. K., it'll be radio from now on.'" He made only one or two electric records, among them a Harmony of his latter-day theme song, "Let's Grow Old Together, Honey," which he composed himself.

As evidence of the genial Will's radio popularity, the New York Herald Tribune published the following, somewhere around 1926 or 1927:

"Oakland claims record for remote broadcasts. Veteran Broadway entertainer on three stations. Will Oakland, widely known radio entertainer, claims to hold the record for regular broadcasting from a remote point over a single station. The veteran minstrel and musical comedy entertainer has been featured on WHN for six full years, his programs being picked up from various Broadway locations. In addition to still being featured on that transmitter, Oakland is also heard over WMCA and WOR each week. Oakland reached the stage by early performances with . . . minstrel shows. His prominence dates back to the days when he toured the country with Lew Dockstader. His last musical comedy appearance was in a Shubert show at the Winter Garden, called 'The Spice of 1922.'"

In 1927, the versatile Mr. Oakland went to Europe on a pleasure trip. He visited the British Broadcasting Company headquarters in London, and was asked to appear on the opening program of the new B. B. C. station, 2-LO, which he did. Then he was booked for a week at the Palladium variety house and made a big success.

Meanwhile, Oakland had become one of Broadway's leading night club operators. In 1922 he opened Will Oakland's Chateau. Radio was just getting under way, so Will installed "remote" facilities for broadcasting from the club through WHN. He did his own announcing. Five years later, after his return from Europe, he opened Will Oakland's Terrace at 51st street and Broadway, and stayed in business there until 1933. In 1928, he opened a summer place in Westchester, Hunter's Island, and continued to operate it for the next two or three years. Unlike most other night clubs, Will Oakland's establishments didn't violate the prohibition laws by selling liquor, and he won an appreciated compliment in Walter Winchell's column. Winchell said that Oakland operated the cleanest place on Broadway, and added: "That's one reason you seldom see me there. Not enough dirt."

The last few years before the depression of 1929 were the height of Will Oakland's prosperity. His radio popularity brought him vaudeville engagements at $2,500 a week, and his night club holdings and other interests made him more than a millionaire. He had a show place home at Great Neck, owned a 49-foot cabin cruiser, and was planning to expand his night club activities. Then came October, 1929, the country barged into one of its most disastrous panics, and the depression hit Will an almost mortal blow.

Even so, he managed to remain a leading Broadway figure, noted for his charity and liberality (he always fed five hundred hungry persons on Thanksgiving Day) as well as for his irreproachably clean life. But then came March 4, 1933, and the nation's banks were closed in a dramatic gesture by incoming President Roosevelt. That happened to be the date that Will had selected for opening a new night club, the Chateau International, at 12 East 53rd street. What happened after the banks' closing is thus tersely summarized by Will: "Nobody had cash. Everybody was scared stiff. I kept going for three months—then the smash. I lost two hundred thousand dollars, when three banks with my money in them folded." In the crack-up he lost his clubs, his home and most of his other possessions.

But Will Oakland still had, as he yet has, his wonderful voice, and instead of continuing as a night club operator, he became a night club singer—the profession he has followed most of the time in the years since 1933. Then, early this year, he was offered the opportunity of becoming master of ceremonies for a so-called "Gay Nineties unit" entertaining the men in Veterans Hospitals. He accepted and has been having a wonderful time—if on occasion, a depressing one—by bringing a bit of music and comedy into the lives of thousands of unfortunates whose minds and bodies have been impaired by war. Besides himself, the troupe consists of "Grandma" Darling, a spry 68-year-old dancer; Della Ray, a little red-headed lady who produces music by ringing cow bells; Lillian Ashton, a veteran English comedienne; Edna White, noted trumpet player who made Edison and Columbia records; Willie Solar, a comedian with much motion picture experience; and a pianist, string bass player and guitarist.

I have purposely confined this account of Will Oakland's career to one installment, rather than have it extend over several issues, as in the case of a number of other artists. The reason is that while he was in Roanoke, he and I spent as much time together as possible, while I took notes of many phases of his life story not mentioned here. We believe that some of the larger magazines would be interested in publishing an Oakland series, and some of the movie companies have also hinted that they'd like to produce a film based on his exploits. That's a possibility which Will plans to investigate thoroughly when he goes to Hollywood on his tour. He and I hope to get together later for more work on his biography, supplementing the notes I made during the parts of two days we were together. The result, we hope, will be a magazine series that can be expanded into a book, which in turn will form the basis of the movie.

However those plans may work out, you may take my word for it that Will Oakland is not only a fine artist but a lovable fellow. But that's something which anyone who knows him doesn't need to be told!

NEW ADDRESS FOR

Hobbies Magazine

Lightner Foundation

Lightner Publishing Corp.

World's Antique Mart

Send all communications to

1006 So. Michigan Ave.
Chicago 5, Ill.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Notes From Early Victor Catalogues I

By JIM WALSH

In September, 1948, I visited the offices of the R. C. A. - Victor Company in Camden, New Jersey, and through the kind permission of the record sales manager, Mr. E. C. Forman, was privileged to spend several happy hours making notes from Victor record catalogs and supplements ranging from 1902 through 1909. On re-reading these notes, they have struck me as so interesting that I feel they should be shared with other collectors, even though they refer in passing to many pioneer recording artists instead of providing the nucleus of a single biographical sketch.

Beginning with the complete catalogue of Victor (7-inch) and Monarch (10-inch) single-faced records, dated February, 1902, it's startling to observe the amount of recording that the fledgling company had accomplished since it began making 10-inch records in 1901. The recording studios must have worked day and night. Sousa's Band, for instance, had more than 100 records to its credit, and many were listed in both sizes. Incidentally, John Philip Sousa, who had a vast contempt for recorded tunes and is sometimes said to have originated the contemptuous term, "canned music," didn't conduct his band when it was playing for Victor. Here is an interesting quotation from the 1902 catalog: "All our Sousa Band Records are made under the personal direction of Arthur Pryor, assistant conductor of Sousa's Band, by special permission from John Philip Sousa. Sousa's Marches are played in every part of the civilized world, and are reproduced on every known mechanical device, but genuine records played by Sousa's Own Band are made only in our laboratory.

"At enormous expense, our entire list of 'Victor' Records, with very few exceptions, has been remade. No greater proof of the advance we are making in recording sound could be given than the marked improvements in our new records of the old 7-inch 'Victor' lists of Sousa's Band and D'Almaine and Siegel's Violin and Mandolin Solos."

The 1902 catalog contained 11 piccolo and 10 flute solos by George Schweinfest, who was later to be associated almost entirely with the Columbia Company. Mr. Schweinfest died in June this year at his home in Newark, aged 87. He was probably the oldest of all the surviving pioneer recording artists.

Also in the 1902 catalogue is a

MUSIC BOXES

FOR CHRISTMAS

Send for our new list of rare old music boxes
All Restored to Perfect Mechanical Condition.
Some With Christmas Music

A. BORNAND

MUSIC BOX SPECIALIST

333 Fifth Avenue, Pelham 65, N. Y.

brief mention of the death of the monologist, Roger Harding, who was one of the first men to sing as a member of a recording male quartet: "Note—Mr. Harding died very suddenly and we will only be able to furnish a limited quantity of his records." This statement is rather puzzling, since Victor had permanent masters and should have been able to make as many matrices and "mothers" as it wished from the Harding originals. I can't see what his death had to do with furnishing supplies of his records.

Moving up to the December, 1902, supplement, there is a mention of the American Band of Providence: "This celebrated military band is now in its 65th year, having been organized in 1837, a history without a parallel in this country. For more than 30 years, with the late D. W. REEVES as conductor, it has held a prominent place among the military bands of America, and is now, under the able leadership of Herbert L. Clarke, in the height of its success."

Also issued in December, 1902, were two trombone solos by one Mr. Claude Spary, whose fame is totally unknown to the present generation of record collectors. They were: 1762, "Bill Bailey, Won't You Please Come Home?" (Hughey Cannon) and 1756, "At the Bottom of the Deep Blue Sea." (H. W. Petrie.) I wonder if even one copy of either of these "trombone smears" exists today. How I'd like to find Mr. Spary's version of "Bill Bailey"!

Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan were just beginning their phenomenally successful comedy partnership in 1902. The December list contained no less than seven of their offerings, beginning with No. 1719, "I Never Trouble Trouble Until Trouble Troubles Me."

One of the now almost forgotten early recording artists—Silas Leachman—was mentioned: "Mr. Leachman is a native of Kentucky, and his imitation of the 'darkies' style of singing is perfect in every detail. His 'coon songs' are the most distinct and pleasing dialect records we have ever made." (Perhaps some Chicago reader of HOBBIES can tell us whether Mr. Leachman is still alive and living in the Windy City? He was, some 15 years ago.)

In February, 1903 were issued what must have been among the first records ever made by a quartet of women. Who today has a disc by the Paloma Quartet, or has even heard of that ensemble? Here is the catalogue editor's proud comment: "Although the record of a quartet of women's voices has long been regarded as an impossibility, we have succeeded in producing some pleasing records—not loud but very good quality." They were, 1887, "La Paloma"; 1889, "Medley of Popular Songs"; and 1890, German Song, "The Waterfall."

Here's another mention of Silas Leachman: "New selections and old ones made better by 'Little Silas,' the favorite singer of coon songs. When it comes to a coon song no one can equal Silas. His jolly laugh and side speeches are in the true Negro vein and the enunciation is perfect."

In March, 1903, Victor Herbert's Orchestra played a 12-inch version (No. 31121) of "The Rosary", and Hobart Smock, baritone, had three of the big discs: 31064, "An Old Sacred Lullaby" (Corner); 31065, "Lend Me Your Aid" (Gounod); and 31125, Recessional (De Koven). As far as I could ascertain, these were Mr. Smock's only contributions.

In June, 1903, seven 7-inch and 10-inch "Casey" records by Russell Hunting were listed with this comment: "Real Casey records at last! Imitations have occasionally been put on sale in America, but no genuine Casey records have been made here since Mr. Hunting's departure for Europe in 1898. These records were made in London by Gramophone and Typewriter, Ltd, specially for us and are certainly the most mirth provoking series we have catalogued. Mr. Hunting's inimitable character of Casey is unapproachable and never fails to provoke shouts of laughter."

Jean de Reszke, the legendary operatic tenor, gave a testimonial to Victor tone qualities in July, 1903: "I consider the Victor Talking Machine a really marvelous instrument, reproducing the human voice to perfection." There were similar testimonials from Yvette Guilbert and Coquelin.

Most collectors, who associate baritone George Alexander exclusively with early Columbia records, will be surprised to find him having two numbers in Victor's September, 1903, list. "Mr. Alexander," we are told, "is a well known concert singer and robust baritone who sings with intelligence and taste." The records were 2414, "Thy Beaming Eyes" (MacDowell) and 2415, "Under the Rose" (Hawley). Alexander's real name was Clifford Wiley. He was a native of Baltimore, who died a few years after his recording career began, but some of his versions of hymns and patriotic songs remained in the Columbia catalogue for many years after his death.

Collectors who attended the September, 1948, John Bieling Day party at the Garden City Hotel will remember the charming soprano, Edith Helena, who won the hearts of everyone because of her friendliness and charming personality. Miss Helena is thus mentioned in the September, 1903, Victor list: "Soprano solos by Edith Helena. Miss Helena's voice is a clear soprano with an extremely wide range, and she sings F in alt with ease, a difficult feat which few of the great prima donne have ever been able to accomplish." The records: 2389, "Last Rose of Summer"; 2396, "Ah! non giunge—Somnambula" (Bellini); and 2388, "Melba Waltz (Se Seran Rose)" (Arditi).

In November, 1903, occurred an event which, in the world of popular recorded music, was roughly comparable to Columbus' discovery of America — for Billy Murray was introduced to Victor audiences! But observe the modesty of the comment which the premier all-time recording comedian was accorded: "A new singer of coon songs whose records are unusually clear, every word can be distinctly heard." Here are the first historic Murray records, with Catalog Editor Sam Rous' incidental comments: 2452, "I Never Could Love Like That" (it was too expensive); 2454, "My Little 'Rang Outang" (a very funny burlesque on the prevailing "jungle song"); 2455, "Under a Panama" (the lady didn't want any cocoanut tree); 2453, "Up in a Cocoanut Tree" (tale of a spoony babboon). (The "babboon" spelling is copied from the original).

The January, 1904, supplement announced the death of the great cornet virtuoso, Jules Levy. In February, 1904, the "Banjo King," Vess L. Ossman, came through with a 12-inch solo, "Mississippi Bubble."

Several records by the late W. H. Thompson, a baritone later unknown to Victor lists, were issued in 1903 and 1904. Thompson, who sang for a time in concert with Schumann-Heink, was for several years a popular Edison cylinder singer.

The pioneer violinist, Charles D'Almaine, appeared in June, 1904, with what was termed a viol-horn solo, No. 2770, "Donkey and Driver";

"An entirely new instrument, the first one of which has just been brought to this country by us. The tone of the viol-horn is very like that which would be produced by a blend of violin and oboe." This "viol-horn" probably was the Stroh violin invented by an Englishman, Charles Stroh, and fitted with a small metal amplified to throw the sound into the recording horn. In later lists the "viol-horn" designation was dropped, and D'Almaine's records were simply described as violin solos. Perhaps they were remade. Ed Forman told me that D'Almaine's son came to the Victor offices a couple of years ago and inquired if any of the masters of his father's records had been preserved. He was informed that all had been destroyed.

James McCool, a fairly popular recording tenor of the early days, had a solo (M2732, "The Face in the Firelight") in the June, 1904, supplement. "Sung by Mr. McCool with great success in DuMont's Minstrels."

The late Emilio de Gogorza, then a Black Label artist, was represented in August by a two-record version of the Pagliacci Prologue. They were M2822 and M2823.

A set of records very much out of the ordinary and which I should dearly love to find also came out that month. They were Iroquois Indian Songs by Ho-nu-ses ("Long House"), a native Iroquoise. These records of Iroquois songs have aroused much interest among scientific men who are interested in anthropology. Professor Frederick Starr, of the University of Chicago, who has made a special study of the Iroquois tribes, has secured a set of the records for the Department of Anthropology, where they will, during future centuries, be of inestimable value to students of Indian languages. These songs are sung for the most part at dances of a religious character. They are accompanied by a small drum or by some kind of a rattle. Quite often the words have no meaning; in some cases the words are true words but are archaic and the meaning now forgotten. In others, the words convey some real idea. There were more than a dozen of the Iroquois records, all 7-inch.

Harry Tally, who was to become a Victor favorite, appears for the first time in the September, 1904, list: "It is with pleasure that we introduce a new tenor to our great Victor family. Mr. Tally's records will speak for themselves." They were, 2955, "All Aboard for Dreamland" and 2956, "I've Got a Feeling for You."

Elvira Frencelli appeared in the October, 1904, supplement, with a soprano rendition of The Arditi Waltz (2985). There was also another mention of Billy Murray: "Mr. Murray's popularity continues to increase, and with good reason, as his clear-cut pronunciation brings out every syllable. And whether it is a

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 29)

RECORDS

FINE CLASSICAL RECORDS: Auction. Imported instrumentals, largely cutouts. Unusual collectors opportunity. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwold, Ambler, Penna. mh6446

100,000 OPERATIC RECORDS, for sale. G&T, HMV, Fonotipias, Victor, Columbia, etc. Send want list to—John Sicignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. mh6007

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

REGINA 27" including Silent Night. Capital cuff cylinder type records Symphonian Music Box, 7 feet tall, plays 3 records at one time, including 100 records.—Dr. G. F. Schait, 3 Springfield Ave., Cranford, N. J. d3446

WILL BUY used records, or collections. — Jacob S. Schneider, 128 West 66th St., New York City 23, N. Y. d3882

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. d3084

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Hard-to-get records, individually offered. Lists issued according to singers. Please state "wants". Write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. ja6829

RARE OLD RECORDS for sale: Vocal operatic, popular, collectors' items, reasonably priced. Ask for lists.—Delano, 349 Lindenwold, Ambler, Pa. mh120821

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f126942

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. 13253

MY COLLECTION 6,000 RARE EUROPEAN RECORDS. Sobinoff, Spani, Leider, Schlusnus, Cortis, Smirnoff, Caruso. Reasonable prices.—Topalian, 348 - 40th St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f3483

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6084

MISCELLANEOUS

HAVE YOUR OLD violin appraised for insurance or closing an estate. You may own a masterpiece. Fee $5.—Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 444 Surf St., Chicago, Ill. je120041

MUSIC BOXES; Specializing in the repair of musical boxes of all types including the repair of singing bird pieces, etc. Choice music boxes for sale.—George A. Bidden, Barrington, R. I. d80441

MELODEONS for sale. Both octagon leg and lyre end type, all in good playing condition. Descriptions and prices sent on request.—Joseph Leighton, 2626 Westfield St., West Springfield, Mass. f3464

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

SWISS MUSICAL UNITS $2.75.—Music Boxes, 131 West 42nd, New York City 18, N. Y. f3061

WANTED: Victor or Edison catalogs and supplements, 1912 or earlier.—L. E. Mack, 1157 Penniman, Plymouth, Mich. mh05

YOUR REED organ and melodeon problems analyzed. State make, describe symptoms thoroughly. If I help, send two dollars. Bellows cloth, other parts for sale.—Wylie York, The Organ Shop, 3134 Harlandale, Dallas, Texas. f64201

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850 for sale. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my122511

Wanted: Coin-operated, automatic musical instruments and music rolls for Seeburg Pianos, Mills Violin Virtuosos, etc.—Wm. S. Allen, 616 First National Bank Bldg. Santa Ana, Calif. mh60621

FOR SALE, rare antique Clementi grand piano.—Anna M. McKechnie, Canandaigua, N. Y. d3761

OLD POPULAR MUSIC, I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. d3272

MELODEON PEDALS made to order, $12. — C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. d3042

PAILLARD antique musicbox, 3 cylinders, 24 selections. Brilliant tone, beautifully inlaid case. Also Paillard musicbox with 6 cylinders, 48 selections, drum bells, castagnette, 24 note organ. Both with matching tables.—J. Poelman, 78 West 103rd St., New York. d1882

MERMOD MUSIC BOX with 3 cylinders, 14 1/2" long, 6 airs each, exceptional fine tone. Also a "Heller" Voix-Celestes musicbox, with organ, plays 10 airs. 2 singing birds, in gilded cage. Whistling figure, plays "Pony Boy". Musicbox discs for regina Criterion Symphonian in various sizes.—J. Poelman, 78 W. 103 St., New York. dx descriptive ballad, a comic or coon song, the selection is always sung in an accomplished manner." That same month, a Miss Quinn and Mr. Thompson of the Whitney Opera company gave a scene from the musical play, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home." It was called "Swanee River" and depicted a "proud Southern beauty" singing the old Foster song in her room while a lover serenaded her with another blending melody. This may have been the first recorded scene from a musical production.

MUSIC

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25)

In November, 1904, Frank Kernell (S. H. Dudley) sang what certainly was one of the earliest motoring songs—"My Gasoline Automobile" (from "The Maid and the Mummy").

A rather surprising offer was made in December, 1904, when record No. M4093, "Amateur Night on the Bowery," was listed by the Spencer Trio: "Note:—The Spencer Trio has just made for us new versions of the (1947) 'Alpine Specialty'; M1948, Old Cabin Door; and 1946, 'Mocking Bird Medley,' which are very fine records. Those who possess old records of these new selections can exchange them for the new records under the exchange plan now in effect." (Wonder what that exchange plan was?)

Also in 1904 were listed some "rube" specialties by Byron G. Harlan and Frank C. Stanley: "Quaint and amusing scenes of rural life with descriptive effects. They are so natural that you seem to be on the spot listening to the Squire, the Deacon and the Country Blacksmith. These sketches are written by Mr. Stanley and the characters are drawn from life. Harlan's portrayal of the squeaky voiced little deacon is very comical and contrasts effectively with Stanley's deep drawl."

Two of the all-time greats—Len Spencer and Billy Murray—were introduced as a duet team in January, 1905. The record was a "coon song," "Shame On You." Said the supplement: "A new combination which has commenced with some very original and amusing records. A tale of a colored preacher (Mr. Spencer) who was seen in possession of a fat pullet at 2 a. m. and was denounced in meeting by the deacon (Mr. Murray). Very funny."

Important history also was made in March, 1905, when Henry Burr's first Victor records were announced. Probably Victor didn't suspect that the youngster in his early twenties was to become the company's most popular ballad singer, for the announcement was conservative: "Mr. Burr is a singer new to our lists, and we think his records will meet with favor." The first two were M4239, "Daddy," and M4240, "Loch Lomond."

What a month March, 1905, was! It also brought Ada Jones into the Victor fold for the first time, with M4231, "Mandy, Will You Be My Lady Love" (Perrin): "Miss Jones' clear and pleasant voice is shown here to advantage. Every word of this quaint darky song is distinctly spoken."

Also listed in March, 1906 were several records by the Old Homestead Double Quartet, with the explanation that "this is the first time Mr. Denman Thompson has permitted the ensemble to sing for talking machines."

And Edith Helena was again mentioned: "Immediately upon Miss Helena's return from Europe, where she has been delighting French, German, Spanish and English audiences, we hastened to secure her exclusive services for her brief stay in America."

Finally, there was the following intriguing note: "Every Victor Record a Good Record. Every buyer of records has been fully aware that the above statement has been true for some time . . . every record in our monthly lists being of the highest possible quality. It is now possible to make this announcement apply to every catalogue issued by the Victor company. To enable us to do this we began more than a year ago to remake or withdraw every record in our catalogue which failed to come up to the new standard. This work, which has cost us more than $100,000, is now completed and record buyers can today order any selection from a Victor catalogue and be sure that it is the best record of that selection which can be made."

The announcement went on to say that Victor was constantly becoming more prosperous, but it hinted that other talking machine and record manufacturers were growing increasingly hard up.

(To be continued)

—O—

PRINTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27)

of taste, so elegant in the drawing, so graceful in every attitude, and at the same time marked with such manly expression, that if I were obliged to fix upon any print as an example of all the beauties, of which single figures are capable of receiving, I should be tempted to give the preference to this; tho' at the same time it must be owned, that some of them give you too much the idea of marble.

The most striking instances of fine drawing are seen in the principal figure; in the legs of the figure that supports him; and in those of the figure dancing with the pipes; in the man and woman behind the centaur; in the figure in the clouds, with his right hand over his knee; in the Apollo; and particularly in that bold, foreshortened figure of the sign Capricorn.

Instances of expression we have in the unyieldiness of SILENUS. He appears so dead a weight, so totally unelastic, that every part of him, which is not supported, sinks with its own gravity. The sensibility too with which his bloated body, like a quagmire, feels every touch, is strongly expressed in his countenance. The figure, which supports him, expresses in every muscle the labour of the action. The dancing figures, if we except that with the thyrsus, are all strongly characterized. The pushing figures in the sky are marked with great expression; and above all the threatening Capricorn, who is represented in the act of drawing a bow.

With regard to grace, every figure, at least every capital one, is agreeable; if we except only that figure, which lies kicking its legs upon the ground. But we have the strongest instances of grace in the figure dancing with the pipes, in the man and woman behind the centaur, (which, it is not improbable, might be designed for BACCHUS and ARIADNE) and in the boy lying on the ground.

With regard to execution, we rarely see an instance of it in greater perfection. Every head, every muscle, and every extremity is touched with infinite spirit. The very appendages are fine; and the stone-pines, which adorn the back-ground, are marked with such taste and precision, as if landscape had been this artist's only study.

oOo

SMITH'S PORTRAIT OF THE DUKE OF SHOMBERG, FROM KNELLER

KNELLER, even when he laid himself out to excel, was often but a tawdry painter. His equestrian portrait of king WILLIAM, at Hampton-court, is a very unmasterly performance: the composition is bad; the colouring gaudy; the whole is void of effect, and there is scarce a good figure in it.—The composition before us is more pleasing, tho' the effect is little better. An equestrian figure, at best, is an awkward subject. The legs of a horse are great imbrances in grouping. VANDYKE indeed has managed king CHARLES the First on horse-back with great judgment; and RUBENS too, at Hampton-court, has made a noble picture of the duke of ALVA, tho' his horse is very ill-drawn.—In the print before us the figure sits with grace and dignity; but the horse is no Bucephalus: its character is only that of a managed-pad. The bush, growing by the duke's truncheon, is a trifling circumstance; and helps to break into more parts, a composition already too much broken.—The execution is throughout excellent; and tho' the parts are rather too small for met-zotinto, yet SMITH has given them all their force.

Group of "WASHINGTON" Steel Engravings

All framed in walnut box frames with gold leaf liners.

The Courtship of Washington, 18x24"; Frame 20¼x26¼". Washington and His Mother, 18x24"; Frame 21¼x27". Martha Washington, 21½x29½"; Frame 26x34. Gen. Washington (on Battle Field at Trenton), 20x28¼"; Frame 24½x32¾". The Home of Washington, 22x32¾"; Frame 25½x35". Washington and His Family, 21x27"; Frame 25x30¾". All engravings have a very few brown age or water spots.

Complete Group $60 Plus Transportation — Not Sold Singly.

SCHOENFELD'S ANTIQUE SHOP

248 Main Street,

Saugerties, New York

dp

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

NOTES FROM EARLY VICTOR CATALOGUES. II.

By JIM WALSH

The return of the popular minstrel tenor, JOE NATUS, as a Victor artist was announced in the July, 1905, supplement. The following note appeared with the listing of Record M4361, "By-Gone Days in Dixie": "Admirers of Mr. Natus will be glad to see that he is once more with us after many months of serious illness. It will be noticed that his voice did not suffer by the confinement, and in this ballad of Dixie Land his clear tenor and crisp enunciation are the same as of old." But Natus' comeback was short, and he soon dropped entirely out of the recording picture.

A photograph of BYRON G. HARLAN also appeared in the July supplement. Apparently it was the first published by Victor of any "popular" artist. The cut-lines read: "Mr. Harlan, whose pleasant countenance is shown here to gratify the curiosity of many admirers of his voice, is a most versatile gentleman, as his sweetly sung ballads, his characteristic imitations of the squeaky voiced deacon in the 'rube' records and his funny comedy work in the Collins and Harlan duets will show." The August record list continued the portrait series, with pictures of ARTHUR COLLINS and BOB ROBERTS.

Three memorable records, with consecutive numbers, were listed in September. The first was 4430, "My Carolina Lady," by ADA JONES. Then came two by Collins—4431, "The Preacher and the Bear," probably the most famous of all acoustically recorded popular songs, and perhaps an even more clever "coon song"—4432, "What You Gonna Do When the Rent Comes 'Round?" The latter is better known as "Rufus Rastus Johnson Brown."

FRANK C. STANLEY's photo, accompanied by the following comment, appeared in September: "Mr. Stanley is one of our most valued singers, his fine voice being admirably adapted to the work of record making. A glance at our catalogue will show that he is represented there in widely different ways—in standard and sacred songs, basso profundo solos, popular songs and Yankee comedy. All of his work is extremely well done and we are sure that his numerous admirers will be pleased to see his frank and genial countenance exhibited here." There was a picture, too, of JAMES MCCOOL's "pleasant face."

In October, one of the most famous automobile songs, "In My Merry Oldsmobile," was listed by BILLY MURRAY. Two months later, in December, the supplement contained the likeness of the German tenor, EMIL MUENCH, whose career as a recording artist began in very early days and continued into the electric era. And there was likewise a photo of GEORGE W. JOHNSON: "If anyone who has ever enjoyed Mr. Johnson's inimitable laugh and whistling songs doubts that they are made by a real 'black man,' this picture of the familiar 'Whistling Coon' will remove those doubts. George is just as jolly as this photograph indicates and so thoroughly enjoys making these records that his laughs are real ones and not forced." (A few years later Johnson was hanged for murdering his wife.)

Record buyers were given good news in the January, 1906, supplement. The price of seven-inch records was dropped from 50 cents to 35, and that of ten-inch ones from $1 to 60 cents. The reduction of course was attributed to constantly increasing demand and larger output.

Under the heading of "THE VICTOR ORCHESTRA—WALTER B. ROGERS, CONDUCTOR," an unusually interesting note appeared in February:

"The Victor Company, in 1903, began to make its vocal and instrumental solos and duets with orchestra accompaniment. It soon became dissatisfied, however, with the plan usually followed by record making laboratories of engaging musicians as individuals whenever they were needed. Even though the best available players were used, it was found that really artistic work could not be done in this way. In 1904, therefore, the Company conceived the idea of establishing a permanent orchestra which should give its exclusive time to the making of Victor records. From a

RECORDS

FINE CLASSICAL RECORDS: Auction: Imported instrumentals, largely cutouts. Unusual collectors opportunity. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwold, Ambler, Penna. mh6446

100,000 OPERATIC RECORDS, for sale. G&T, HMV, Fonotipia, Victor, Columbia, etc. Send want list to—John Slegnano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. mh6007

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. —E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o 126121

EIGHT THOUSAND different selections; vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. d126351

WILL BUY used records, or collections. —Jacob S. Schneider, 128 West 66th St., New York City 23, N. Y. mh3882

FINE OLD RECORDS for sale: Classical, vocal, operatic, violin, piano, vaudeville, jazz, popular, Lauder, McCormack, reasonably priced. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. mh3084

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Hard-to-get records, individually offered. Lists issued according to singers. Please state "wants". Write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. ja6829

RARE OLD RECORDS for sale: Vocal operatic, popular, collectors items, reasonably priced. Ask for lists.—Delano, 349 Lindenwold, Ambler, Pa. mh120821

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f126942

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. 13253

100 EDISON cylinder records $10: Edison Diamond Disc machines, with 50 records.—John J. Loeper, 935 Center St., Ashland, Pennsylvania. ja1061

MY COLLECTION 6,000 RARE EUROPEAN RECORDS. Sobinoff, Spani, Leider, Schlusnus, Cortis, Smirnoff, Caruso. Reasonable prices.—Topalian, 348 - 40th St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f3483

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6084

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp, please. —"Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. mh3c

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR SALE: Beautiful old fashioned organ in solid walnut, high top, bevel plate mirror, "Estey" make; perfect condition. Make an offer. Also some some low type organs in good condition and other articles too numerous to mention. Two antique pipes with china bowls.—Mrs. H. E. Carlson, Franklin, Nebraska. ja1843

HAVE YOUR OLD violin appraised for insurance or closing an estate. You may own a masterpiece. Fee $5.—Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 444 Surf St., Chicago, Ill. ja120041

WANTED: Hurdy-Gurdy organ. State size, price, condition.—G. Robinson, 2073 Holmes Dr., Mobile, Ala. ja1021

MELODEONS for sale. Both octagon leg and lyre end type, all in good playing condition. Descriptions and prices sent on request.—Joseph Leighton, 2626 Westfield St., West Springfield, Mass. f3464

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95, Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. —Wagner, 1433 York Ave. N. Y. C. ja124201

SWISS MUSICAL UNITS $2.75.—Music Boxes, 131 West 42nd, New York City 18, N. Y. f3061

WANTED: Victor or Edison catalogues and supplements, 1912 or earlier.—L. E. Mack, 1157 Penniman, Plymouth, Mich. mh05

YOUR REED organ and melodeon problems analyzed. State make, describe symptoms thoroughly. If I help, send two dollars. Bellows cloth, other parts for sale.—Wylie York, The Organ Shop, 3134 Harlandale, Dallas, Texas. f64201

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1950 for sale. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my122511

Wanted: Coin-operated, automatic musical instruments and music rolls for Seeburg Pianos, Mills Violin Virtuosos, etc.—Wm. S. Allen, 616 First National Bank Bldg. Santa Ana, Calif. mh60621

MILLS VIOLINO — Virtuoso, coin operated piano. —Harry Ludwig, 1515 Southeast 35th, Portland 15, Ore. f3691

RARE SWISS MUSIC BOX "Forte-Piano", plays 8 airs with 9 bells. Beautifully inlaid case. Other music boxes, large and small. Also singing bird in tortoise shell box. Excellent condition. —J. Poelman, 78 West 103 St., New York. ja1272 list of the very best instrumentalists of America were chosen the players composing the Victor orchestras and it is an indisputable fact that this is one of the most remarkable bodies of musicians in the world. Although the cost of this exclusive Victor feature has been very great, the expenditure has been fully justified, as Victor records soon became famous for their artistic accompaniments and are now in a class by themselves, no other records even approaching them in general excellence."

In March, 1906, it was announced that RICHARD JOSE's record of "Silver Threads Among the Gold," issued in 1903, was the biggest seller up to that time. Three months later, to anticipate a little, this honor was taken over by Billy Murray's version of "You're a Grand Old Rag"—or "Flag"! The March supplement also said that Victor was the first to issue duets by two tenors—HARRY MAC DONOUGH and JOHN BIELING. That month the duo sang No. 4606, "Pal o' Mine"—(Nathan) and 4610, "Saved by Grace" (Stebbins). In April there was "a new portrait of genial Billy Murray, one of the Victor's most popular singers."

Eight-inch records were introduced about this time, to take the place of the seven-inch variety, and the May supplement remarked that the eight-inchers were much superior to the smaller ones, "owing to the larger circle of sound waves. Our seven-inch list will now be gradually withdrawn or made over in the eight-inch size." In August, it was revealed that the best selling HAYDN QUARTET record was No. 109, "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

A famous theatrical personality, DE WOLF HOPPER, made his Victor debut in September, 1906, with his ever-green recitation of "Casey at the Bat." And listen to this: "Mr. Hooper is so much pleased with this record that he has willingly agreed never at any time to make this selection for any other company than the Victor!"

In October, CORINNE MORGAN, the contralto, was represented with a record, No. 4835, of "Flee As a Bird." "Miss Morgan, who has been in Europe during the summer, has returned in fine voice and has given us a splendid record of Dana's well known sacred number."

Moving up to February, 1907, the "Uncle Josh" man, CAL STEWART, returned as a Victor artist, and the annotator wrote: "Everyone will be glad to know that genial Cal Stewart has returned after extensive travels which took him over a great part of the world." Oddly enough, almost these words were used in the September, 1915, supplement to greet Stewart's return after an absence of several years from Victor lists.

As far as I can learn, the only duet ever made by CORINNE MORGAN and ELSIE STEVENSON appeared in May, 1907. It is No. 31628, an exceedingly scarce twelve-inch record—"Holy Mother, Guide His Footsteps," from Wallace's "Maritana."

In October, 1907, the first Victor record was listed by one of the finest, but one of the most neglected, of early phonograph comedians—EDDIE MORTON. I quote: "Eddie Morton is one of the best coon song singers in America, and during the past summer was a feature of the Madison Square Roof production, 'Maid and the Millionaire,' where he was obliged to respond to numerous encores. The Victor has secured the exclusive services of this popular singer and now offers two of his greatest successes." The records were 5220, "Mariutch (Do the Hootch-a-ma-Cootch)," on the label of which the comedian's name appeared as EDWARD MORTON, and 31661, "That's Gratitude."

The December, 1907, issue presents a real puzzle. It lists a record of the then reigning ballad, "Love Me and the World is Mine." The record was sung by WILLIAM T. EVANS, and it has long been understood by collectors that William T. Evans and HENRY EVANS were both nom de disques of the famous Red Seal tenor, EVAN WILLIAMS. Yet a photo of WILLIAM T. EVANS is reproduced, showing him as a hatchet-faced man with a black mustache. A few issues later, the chubby-faced, smooth-shaven picture of Evan Williams, which used to be a feature of Victor record catalogues, was shown. There is certainly no resemblance between the features of William T. Evans and Evan Williams, although the voices seem to be identical. Perhaps the "photo of W. T. was a 'phony' deliberately inserted to throw curiosity seekers off the track.

The back page of the May, 1908, supplement contained another out-of-the-ordinary item. It was a photo of GERALDINE FARRAR, listening to a Victor record. And the record was CLARICE VANCE's rendition of "I'm Afraid to Come Home in the Dark."

In February, 1909, the given names of the members of the famous WHITNEY BROTHERS QUARTET were published. There were Alvin M., William F., Edwin M. and Yale B. Incidentally, EDWIN M. WHITNEY was the first recording artist I ever met.

The first supplement containing double-faced records was the issue of March, 1909. The listings began with No. 16113. In May, a separate supplement was issued, listing all double-faced records up to that time. There must also have been an earlier one containing the list from 16000 through 16112.

An important announcement was made in the April, 1909, issue. BILLY MURRAY had signed up exclusively with Victor for disc record work, although he continued to make Edison cylinders. As a matter of fact, he also continued to make Zon-o-phone discs, which were rather surreptitiously issued by Victor at 65 cents, to compete with the Columbia price range. Victor double-faced records, at 75 cents, were ten cents higher than Columbia.

The May, 1909, supplement contained three outstanding announcements. One was that the AMERICAN QUARTET, which had just been organized, would sing exclusively for Victor. (It was the PREMIER QUARTET on Edison cylinders). Then there was WILL OAKLAND's first Victor record, "Silver Threads Among the Gold." The supplement remarked that "this singer takes high F with ease."

And also in May appeared the first Victor record by the soprano, LUCY ISABELLE MARSH, who had previously made a few discs for Columbia. Miss Marsh, who later appeared on Purple and Blue Label lists before graduating to Red Seals, began as a Black Label artist. Her first record was 35075, "Angels Ever Bright and Fair." She was described as a member of the choir of the Madison Avenue Reformed Church in New York.

In August, 1909, there was a photo of the mandolin player, EUGENE W. PAGE, who made duets with a guitarist by the name of Ramseyer. (I have never known Mr. Ramseyer's given name, but for some reason have long imagined it to be Hugo.) And that same month, DE WOLF HOPPER came through with a new version of "Casey at the Bat," described as "very much better and clearer than the old one." In December, ARTHUR CLOUGH appeared as a Victor artist,

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 25)

LLOYD G. KELLEY
Successor to

REGINA
MUSIC BOX CO.

Christmas tunes for the 15 1/4" Regina, special, $2.50 each. No. 3028 White Christmas; 3029 Jingle Bells, 3030 The First Noel; 3031 Hark the Herald Angels Sing; 3032 Santa Claus is Coming to Town; 3036 Come Hither Ye Children; 1028 Still Night, Holy Night; 1029 O Sanctissima; 1423 O, Christmas Tree.

Complete line of reconditioned antique music boxes for sale. tf

P. O. Box 342
Hanover, Massachusetts

SAPPHIRE NEEDLES

Pathé Type — $5.00 each
Edison Type — $5.00 each

These special sapphire needles are made for playing Pathé and Edison type disc records on modern electric phonographs. Simply insert in place of your regular needle.

Woodymay Pickups Available
JAMISON R. HARRISON
Bedford, Mass.

jax

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21)

singing, with the assistance of the HAYDN QUARTET, "The Red, Red Rose."

This is as far as I carried my researches into old Victor record supplements and catalogues during my stay in Camden. I hope these random notes will be of some interest and value to other collectors. But I can't say farewell to the Victor offices without recalling something. Sales Manager Ed Forman showed me—a photostatic copy of a letter which Thomas A. Edison had written to "Frank Foell, Esq., 510 Second St., Philadelphia, Pa.," on December 29, 1877—the year that the phonograph was invented. Mr. Foell apparently had suggested some improvement, for this is what Mr. Edison wrote to him from Menlo Park:

"Dear Sir: Your letter and sketch received. Am much obliged for the suggestion and it would be valuable, but owing to the inconvenience of placing the paper on the cylinder I had to adopt a revolving plate with a volute spiral and have one now working satisfactorily. The reproduction of the voices is now absolutely perfect. Yours, Thomas A. Edison."

The copy of this letter which I saw was presented to Mr. Forman by a son of Mr. Foell. It's interesting, and amusing, to observe that the claim of "perfect reproduction" was being made by Mr. Edison in 1877, a few months after he produced his first crude phonograph, just as it always has been, and is still being made, by succeeding generations of manufacturers.

Do You Remember?

By E. E. MEREDITH

When a haircut cost 15 cents?
When our daddies cut our hair?
When cemeteries were known as "graveyards"?
When a doctor's sign was called a "shingle"?
When girls played "Chop Sticks" on the piano?
When men wore long linen dusters when traveling?
When men wore paper collars when they were "dressed up"?
When women wore broom-like skirts which swept the streets?
When hymn books had advertisements both in the front and back?
When waste baskets were decorated with silk ribbons and a big bow?
When goose quill pens were used to write with ink made from maple bark?
When snuff came to the store in large jars which were afterward used for churns?
When gold caps on the front teeth, which flashed when the owner smiled, were fashioned?
When a big fat "doctor book" was found in nearly every home and was frequently consulted?

Among the spinets, lutes and other outmoded instruments in the music gallery at the Metropolitan Museum of Art one comes upon evidence that to indefatigable Ben Franklin another and comparatively unknown accomplishment must be credited. In this instance his talents were engaged not with diplomacy or philosophy, printing or wise saws, love-making or electricity, but with the designing of a musical instrument whose tones he found "incomparably sweet, beyond those of any other."

Franklin could play the harp, guitar and violin sufficiently well to give pleasure not only to himself but also to his friends.

During a protracted stay in London he chanced, about the year 1760, to hear an instrument new to him called a "glasharmonica." The inventor was an Irishman named Puckeridge. When the rims were rubbed by a moist finger they emitted the notes of the scale. Franklin was enchanted by the mellifluous quality of the tone. But no sooner had he heard and been charmed than he began to see ways and means of improving the arrangement of the glasses, of increasing the number of the notes and making the whole instrument more compact.

The amiable doctor described his improvement and dwelt with enthusiasm upon their success in a letter dated London, July 13, 1762, and addressed to his friend the Rev. John-Baptist Beccaria, then living in Turin, Italy. The largest glass had a diameter of nine inches, the smallest three inches. The intermediate sizes varied a quarter of an inch in diameter one from the other. On the glasses were indicated the notes they represented. They were tuned by grinding down the thickness of any that gave out too sharp a note in the scale. As Franklin observed, this instrument, once tuned, "never again wants tuning." "In honor of your musical language," he wrote his clerical friend, "I have borrowed from it the name of this instrument, calling it the armonica."

As soon as his new toy was delivered to him he began practicing tunes upon it, and before long was giving recitals for his friends at Number 7 Craven Street, near the Strand, where he was comfortably quartered in the house of Mrs. Stevenson and her sprightly daughter Polly.

To anyone that showed interest in his well-loved armonica, which he kept always with him wherever he went from that time on, he would readily impart the finer points of its manipulation. He cautioned the use of rain water for moistening the rims of the revolving glasses ("spring water is generally too hard, and produces a harsh tone"). We have his word for it that, "all directions observed, the tone comes forth finely with the slightest pressure of the fingers imaginable, and you swell it at pleasure by adding a little more pressure, no instrument affording more shades, if one may so speak, of the forte piano."

Franklin's favorite French song was "Les Petits Oiseaux," a naive air that he was wont to play for his friend Madame Brillion, whom he often visited while living at Passy, near Paris, when he was representing the United States in France. One of the scores of notes and letters she sent him refers to a promised visit: "Father Pagin," she wrote, "will play 'God of Love' on his violin, I the march on the piano, and you 'Little Birds' on the armonica."—M.G.L.

THE MENTOR, June 1928

REFERENCE DIRECTORY

$10 a year for three lines

ADVERTISING CARDS

Mary Moore, 32 Gothic St., Northampton, Mass. Buys Advertising Cards of the 80's. Sells Lists to Collectors. 25c each. ja06

APPRAISERS

Send to Clark L. Bennett & Associates, Citizens Bldg., Lima, O., for value, age and potter of your antique porcelain. $1.50 per item. (Also quantity rates.) au05

BOTTLES

Gardner, Chas. B., Box 27, New London, Conn. Buy flasks, documents, advertisements and pictures from Early American Glass Works. au05

DOLLS

Shreveport Doll Hospital, 2456 Hill St., Alexandria, La. 1923-1949. Home of the Suebelle dolls, made in china and comp. Order early, by doz. or pairs. my05

HOOKED RUG PATTERNS

Mrs. Royal F. Manson, Hudson, Mass. Hooked Rug patterns, hooks, frames, wool swatches & cutting machine. Write for price list. e 05

INDIAN ITEMS

Indian and Eskimo moccasins, dolls, baskets, etc. Northwest Indian Novelty, 18910 S. E. Stark, Portland 16 Ore. o 05

NUMISMATICS

Max B. Mehl, 421 Mehl Bldg., Fort Worth, Tex. Largest coin firm in U. S. Est. 49 yrs. Everything in coins, etc. Send for free 60 pp. Ill. Coin Cat. You'll like it. ja05

RAILROADS

C. Atherton, Brentwood Rd., Exeter, N. H., buys tickets, passes, photos, reports of railroads in New England, prior 1900. ja05

O. Davies, 1214 LaSalle St., Chicago 10, 14, buys R. R. time tables, histories, pamphlets, locomotive catalogs, etc n05 more to say in a moment. Goritz was a famous "character" baritone at the Metropolitan for many years. Papageno in Die Zauberflöte was one of his most famous roles. In this drinking song from The Merry Wives of Windsor, an extraordinary convincing atmosphere of unrestrained Teutonic bibulousness is conveyed. Urlus, of course, was one of the finest lyric-dramatic tenors of his day and well deserves honoring in this way. Marie Rappold was a warmly admired soprano in her time and is represented on very few standard-cut recordings.

oOo

IRCC Activities

Meanwhile, The International Record Collector's Club, 318 Reservoir Avenue, Bridgeport 6, Connecticut, continues merrily on its way, issuing re-recordings four at a time, once every other month. Among the artists represented on recent IRCC discs are the following: Lucrezia Bori, Gertrude Kappel, Frieda Hempel, Felicie Kaschowska, Frederick Jagel, Antonio Scotti, Giuseppe Campanari, Emma Carelli, Lilli Lehmann, Alessandro Bonci and, in a performance of the Bohème quartet, Adeline Stehle, Maria Camporelli, Edoardo Garbin and Mario Sammarco. Mr. W. H. Seltman, secretary of IRCC, will be glad to furnish numbers, titles and prices upon request.

oOo

Claudia Muzio on LP

Esoteric Records, a new name in the repressing field, has brought out a Long Playing "Microgroove" disc containing eight arias sung by the late Claudia Muzio. These have been dubbed from Edison Diamond Discs with considerable skill. The voice quality is bright and forward, if perhaps not quite as pure and round as on some of the best 78-RPM re-recordings of these records. Accompaniments sound vague and shadowy, of course, but that's something collectors of old recordings are accustomed to. Mme. Muzio's exquisite soprano, with its warm, velvety tones, is heard in the following arias: I Lomardi-Se vano, se vano e il pregare; Loreley-dove son?; Herodiade-Egli e bel come il Ciel; I Vespri Siciliani-Merce, dillette amici; Rinaldo-Lascia ch'io pianga; Eugene Onegin-Sei forse l'angelo fedele; L'Africana-Figlio del sol; and Carmen-Micaela's Air. If your local dealer doesn't have it, you may order direct from Greenwich Music Shop, 75 Greenwich Avenue, New York 14, N. Y. Price, $5.95, including packing and mailing charges.

MUSIC — REPAIR

MELODEONS restored like new. We buy, sell, repair.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids 6, Mich. je6215

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

BILLY WHITLOCK

By JIM WALSH

This is the first sketch I have written about an English recording artist. Up to now I have dealt exclusively with performers whose discs and cylinders were chiefly, if not altogether, made in the United States—for the reason that such men and women are better known to American collectors than their contemporaries in other countries. But Billy Whitlock is an exception to the rule, and when such a tempting subject comes along there is nothing the biographer can do but yield to temptation and urge the editor to insert his article in the earliest possible issue.

Unless you are a veteran collector of ancient recordings, the name of Billy Whitlock may mean nothing to you. However, collectors who know something about the pioneer English artists, as well as the American, will recognize the genial Billy as one of the earliest recorders of laughing songs, who probably also ranks among the world's finest players of the xylophone and orchestra bells. And millions of persons who have been patting their feet during recent months to the lilting rhythm of a catchy tune variously known as "Hot Scotch" or "Hop Scotch Polka" should be interested to know that it was composed by Billy Whitlock and was first recorded by him as a bells solo some 45 years ago. Not only that, but it has brought its composer, who was born in Cheltenham, England, in July, 1874, out of the obscurity of a night watchman's job back into the limelight where he belongs. Thinking it over, I feel that Prof. Walter B. Pitkin, author of "Life Begins At Forty," should be writing this article, perhaps under the title of "Life Begins All Over At 75!" However that may be, I am proud of the fact that I have had something to do, as I shall explain later, with publicizing Billy Whitlock's comeback, and that he and I have struck up a warm friendship by correspondence. We are planning to get together in England in 1952 when, I hope, I shall attend the fiftieth annual meeting of the Dickens Fellowship — but Billy intends to come to the United States before long for a vaudeville tour. If he does, we may be able to meet long before 1952.

I can write the life story of Billy Whitlock largely by quoting from interviews with him which appeared almost 45 years apart; giving excerpts from letters written to me by

WANTED

COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

EDISON GRAND OPERA
CYLINDERS:

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonofone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophone by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

318 West 102nd Street
New York 25, New York

Persons offering material not specified above,
or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply. tlc

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX CO.

Christmas tunes for the 15½" Regina, special, $2.50 each. No. 3028 White Christmas; 3029 Jingle Bells, 3030 The First Noel; 3031 Hark the Herald Angels Sing; 3032 Santa Claus is Coming to Town; 3026 Come Hither Ye Children; 1028 Still Night, Holy Night; 1029 O Sanctissima; 1428 O Christmas Tree.

Complete line of reconditioned antique music boxes for sale. tlc

P. O. Box 342

Hanover, Massachusetts

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosorik & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

Billy Whitlock and Charles Penrose as "The Two Old Sports."

Mr. Whitlock and his son-in-law (who is also his business manager), Percy Harris, and mentioning briefly some articles I have contributed to the "the Bible of show business," Variety.

In my invaluable file of bound volumes of the Talking Machine News, formerly published in London, I find the following in the issue for May, 1905, under the heading of "THE REAL ADVENTURES OF BILLY WHITLOCK" (By Our Own Interviewer)—spelling and punctuation as in the original:

These are the Real Adventures of Billy Whitlock, as distinguished from those imaginary ones of which he has made so many successful records. I remember not long since assisting at a children's party, and the hit of the evening was unquestionably the record of Billy Whitlock at the Zoo. It convulsed the juvenile audience and, indeed, many of the oldsters besides—that is those who had not outlived the ability to indulge in a good hearty laugh. I had not yet seen the man who made the record, but a few months afterwards I chanced to drop into the Brighton Aquarium and saw him in the flesh. I do not think I exaggerate here again when I say that from out of the exceedingly capable troupe of minstrels, of which he was one of the leading performers, he again came out as the popular favorite. His unctuous humor was delightful. The spirit of humor was in him; there was no forcing the note of fun; it was free, natural and spontaneous. By-the-way, I ought perhaps to mention here that this was by no means his first introduction to "burnt cork"; he was, in fact, some time with the Moore and Burgess Minstrels.

Some months later I happened to be in the recording room of the then Electric Phonograph Co., Ltd., now the British Phonograph Industries, Ltd., in Bowling Green Walk. A stout gentleman was laughing "fit to bust himself," as Mr. Weller put it, into the mouth of the recording horn. "Billy Whitlock making a laughing song," remarked someone. And so, when he had finished, and taken a slight rest after his exertions—for making a laughing record is no joke, I can assure you, however much it may seem so at the first blush—I was introduced in due form; and that is how this account of the real adventures of Billy Whitlock comes to be written.

"Let me see," said he, "I began life as an apprentice on board ship. I got as far as Calcutta, and there I ran away—I had more than enough of that way of going to sea. At Calcutta I joined the Stanley Operatic Company. I was with the Company four years and then I got tired of that. So I 'verted to a Skating Rink as instructor, though at the time I did I did not know how to skate myself. However, I happened later on to win the Long Distance Skating Championship.

"My engagement with the Rink terminated—the Rink closed, and I was out of employment. The Stanley Opera Company was in Bombay, and I was in Calcutta without a penny to bless myself with by this time. I thought I had better rejoin my old friends, but how was I to get there? I loitered around the station for a while, and there I struck up a friendship with an engine driver. Good man! He not only took me 200 miles on my way for nothing—where his route ended—but he passed me on to a pal of his, who passed me on to another pal, and so on, until I got to my destination. Alas, when I got to Bombay, I found the Company was by that time performing at Allahabad. I thought that, failing any better way, I could not do better than travel as I had done before. So I sought out the man who had so kindly dumped me down in Bombay, and I was once more passed along to Allahabad. Not quite so good as a 'Director's pass' perhaps, but quite as effective in covering the required distance.

"I had another good time with the Stanley Company, and then I received advices from England that I had come into some money. I asked the lawyers for fifty pounds on account to take me home. They sent it, but I am sorry to say I did not succeed in getting home with it. It would not go far enough—so I sent for another fifty. They sent that also, and they sent a third also, but with a polite intimation that they would send no more. So I got 'aboard the 'lugger' at last.

"When I got home I went into partnership in a minstrel show, but the profits somehow failed to materialize. Then I deserted the profession for a while and went into commerce and lost a thousand pounds in less than no time. My next experience was with the cinematograph and here I first grew to have a practical acquaintance with the phonograph, and the animated picture firm with which I was associated were among those houses who hired out talkers to exhibitors. They did not sell them. As you know, the policy formerly—a short-sighted policy, too—was to hire, not to sell. Then, I got a guinea for making a record, and that led to other guineas and other records. There followed a contract for a year. The rest you know, and everyone who is in the business knows. Yes!! my selections on the lists are all of them composed 'out of my own head.' I never, by-the-way, had a lesson in orchestration in my life."

"You come of a musical stock?" I surmised.

"Yes, maybe that has something to do with it. My father was a musical director in the States in the 'fifties,' and my aunt a vocalist in grand opera."

"Do you play?"

"Yes, I can manage to coax a tune out of almost any instrument that is set before me."

As a composer, it remains to be said that Mr. Whitlock is responsible for the well-known Electric March which he wrote specially for the British Phonograph Industries, Ltd.

Billy Whitlock's special forte is laughing songs. His favorite motto is, laugh and grow fat. There seems some truth in it, for, as he tells me, he is growing fatter every day. . .

That interview, remember, appeared almost 45 years ago. During the years that followed, Billy Whitlock became as noted for his bells and xylophone recordings as for his laughing songs. He made discs and cylinders for most of the English phonograph organizations, and some of them were reissued in the United States by companies, such as Columbia and Vocalion, which had British affiliations. However, his association was especially close with the pioneer Edison Bell company, the first English firm to make records, and he played regularly as a member of the E-B orchestra. And Billy not only made records and appeared with minstrel troupes, he also formed a music hall partnership with another famous singer of laughing songs, Charles Penrose. In the February, 1923, issue of the Talking Machine News appeared a review of a Pathé record on which Whitlock played two of his own compositions, "Lonesome Frolics" and "Grasshopper Barn Dance." Said the reviewer:

"Dear old Billy Whitlock seems to be coming to the front again with his bells and xylophone. Of course, everybody knows that he and Charlie Penrose have been doing a music hall sketch for some time, entitled 'two Old Sports,' and that, naturally, has kept Billy to a certain extent out of the record world; however, when he has the opportunity he is back again at the old game and is just as good as ever."

But, as the years rolled on, the "talkies" virtually killed the Whitlock and Penrose act, and things went from bad to worse for the formerly carefree Billy. Then came his 1949 Decca record of "Scotch Hot" (issued in this country under the London label), and 75-year-old Mr. Whitlock suddenly found himself famous and in the money again. The story of his sudden change of fortune is well told in an interview with him, written by J. Stubbs Walker, which appeared on the front page of the London Daily Mail for Saturday, October 15, 1949. It had the headings, "They Put His 1904 Song On For Fun" and "WATCHMAN OF 75 BACK WITH SMASH HIT":

"Old Bill," 75-year-old Brixton night watchman with the well-kept hands and the cultured voice, has written New York's latest song hit.

Bald, well-built and cheerful, Billy Whitlock, once a 100-pound a week music-hall star, sat in his bed-sitting-room at a Brixton boarding house yesterday and chuckled his way through contracts that show him as a potential earner of thousands of dollars. All because a very old gramophone record which he made in 1904 was played as a joke on an ultra-modern radiogram at a New York cocktail party.

Billy has been plodding along on his old-age pension and odd night-watchman jobs in South London for years.

In a few months the sprightly old man who used to make recordings for the original Edison Bell company will be back in the money. The record they played at the New York cocktail party was heard by dance-band maestro Guy Lombardo. It was recorded again, and sold fast. The Decca company cabled London to see whether the original Billy Whitlock were still alive — and swept him down to the studios to make another record of the song hit.

"It's like a dream," Old Billy said last night. "There I was, just pottering along, getting by as well as I could on any job that offered, and here I am with pockets stuffed with contracts." The records of his song, a rollicking, old-fashioned polka called "Scotch Hot" — now renamed "Hop Scotch Polka" — are selling at the rate of 15,000 a week in America. The song has already been broadcast in England and the records are just coming on to the market. . . . "Looking on the dreary side," one of Old Billy's new musical agents said last night, "he'll be worth three thousand pounds in the next few months. He just can't help it. The number is just a natural hit."

Billy told me: "It's wonderful to feel that I'm back in the swing of things — seeing publishers, making records, talking 'shop' and meeting people again. Four more songs of mine, some marches I've written — good old Sousa stuff — and several oddments are being published in America."

His life story is complicated. Son of a musician, he has been sailor, skating rink instructor, gramophone-recording mechanic, cinema operator, grocer and tobacconist, orchestrator and arranger, truck driver and night watchman. But most of his life he has been "in the money" on the stage, part of a double comedy act that used to earn him eighty pounds a week, plus another twenty pounds for gramophone recording fees. The cinema killed his act. . . .

"I never saved money when I was earning it," he said. "I lived. Hotels, cars—I've owned 13 in my time—parties, expensive friends and good clothes; the money went as fast as I earned it."

Two things he is most famous for; he was the first man who started making the "Laughing" records—the kind of things you have to chuckle at whether you are a Chinese coolie or a Welsh clergyman—and his bells. Bill's bells were heard in about a couple hundred different old-style gramophone records. Now he has bought a second-hand set of bells.

"I'm going to get myself a piano, too," he told me, "and work like I used to." And he is moving from his small room into two bigger rooms in the same house.

This is how my hands-across-the-sea friendship with Billy Whitlock began: As soon as his London record of "Scotch Hot" was issued the Billboard and Variety gave it warm praise. Then both printed accounts of a new firm, Cromwell Music, being set up to publish the number-in-sheet music form. Delighted at seeing a great old-timer making such a fine come-back, I wrote an article for Variety in which I said that Whitlock and Peter Dawson probably had been making records longer than any other artists now before the public and speculated as to how old the veteran bells player might be. I estimated that he might be anywhere up to 100, mentioning the Talking Machine News interview in which he said that his father was musical director in this country in the "Fifties." I argued that if his father were 35 in 1855, that would mean he was born in 1820 and would be 129 if he were still alive. Assuming that he was 30 at the birth of his son, that would make our friend Billy 99. However, I also said that the picture which accompanied the T. M. N. article appeared to be that of a man about 35.

As soon as my whimsical article appeared, Gene Rayburn, a disc jockey at WNEW, New York, wrote to me to say that he and his partner, Dee Finch, were responsible for the "Scotch Hot" record (the other side is "Two of Irish") being issued. I quote from his letter:

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 31)

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR SALE: Beautiful old fashioned organ in solid walnut, high top, bevel plate mirror, "Estey" make; perfect condition. Make an offer. Also some some low type organs in good condition and other articles too numerous to mention. Two antique pipes with china bowls.—Mrs. H. E. Carlson, Franklin, Nebraska. ja1843

HAVE YOUR OLD violin appraised for insurance or closing an estate. You may own a masterpiece. Fee $5.—Berger, Violin Connoisseur, 444 Surf St., Chicago, Ill. je120041

WANTED: Hurdy-Gurdy organ. State size, price, condition.—G. Robinson, 2073 Holmes Dr., Mobile, Ala. ja1021

MELODEONS for sale. Both octagon leg and lyre end type, all in good playing condition. Descriptions and prices sent on request.—Joseph Leighton, 2626 Westfield St., West Springfield, Mass. f3464

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

SWISS MUSICAL UNITS $2.75.—Music Boxes, 131 West 42nd, New York City 18, N. Y. f3061

WANTED: Victor or Edison catalogs and supplements, 1912 or earlier.—L. E. Mack, 1157 Penniman, Plymouth, Mich. mh06

YOUR REED organ and melodeon problems analyzed. State make, describe symptoms thoroughly. If I help, send two dollars. Bellows cloth, other parts for sale.—Wylie York, The Organ Shop, 3134 Harlandale, Dallas, Texas. f64201

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850 for sale. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my122511

Wanted: Coin-operated, automatic musical instruments and music rolls for Seeburg Pianos, Mills Violin Virtuosos, etc.—Wm. S. Allen, 616 First National Bank Bldg. Santa Ana, Calif. mh60621

MILLS VIOLINO — Virtuoso, coin operated piano. — Harry Ludwig, 1515 Southeast 35th, Portland 15, Ore. f3691

FLUTE, Baxter, beautiful condition, all silver, $35. Also a five pedal harp.—C. E. H. Whitlock, 15 Broadway, New Haven, Conn. mh3882

FOR SALE: Piano, upright, ebony, Chickering, solid brass Candelabra at sides. Designed copper plate above pedals. Custom built, 1860.—Esther Sippler, Darby, Pa. ap3633

CAN SUPPLY PARTS for disc and cylinder phonographs? — Leroy Hughes, Osborn, Kans. ap3633

WANT TO BUY Steinway or Mason and Hamlin pianos in any condition; state price.—Braun's Piano House, 2380 N. W. 7th Street, Miami 35, Fla. ap4006

MELODEON, rosewood case, 19x38x7", scrolled legs, 38 keys, ivory, perfect; circa 1865; plays beautifully. Write Box 503, New London, Mo. f1671

RECORDS

FINE CLASSICAL RECORDS: Auction: Imported instrumentals, largely cutouts. Unusual collectors opportunity. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. mh6446

100,000 OPERATIC RECORDS, for sale. G&T, HMV, Fonotiplas, Victor, Columbia, etc. Send want list to—John Sicignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. mh6007

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. — W. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

EIGHT THOUSAND different selections; vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. d126351

WILL BUY used records, or collections. — Jacob S. Schneider, 128 West 66th St., New York City 23, N. Y. mh3882

FINE OLD RECORDS for sale: Classical, vocal, operatic, violin, piano, vaudeville, jazz, popular, Lauder, McCormack, reasonably priced. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. mh3084

VOCAL COLLECTORS! Hard-to-get records, individually offered. Lists issued according to singers. Please state "wants". Write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. ja6829

RARE OLD RECORDS for sale: Vocal operatic, popular, collectors items, reasonably priced. Ask for lists.—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Pa. mh120821

FOR SALE: Swiss music boxes, Regina disc type music boxes and extra records for all sizes of Regina music boxes and many other old mechanical items.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Rt. 3, Hanover, Mass. P. O. Box 342. f126942

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. f3253

100 EDISON cylinder records $10; Edison Diamond Disc machines, with 50 records.—John J. Loeper, 936 Center St., Ashland, Pennsylvania. ja1061

MY COLLECTION 6,000 RARE EUROPEAN RECORDS. Sobinoff, Spani, Leider, Schlusnus, Cortis, Smirnoff, Caruso. Reasonable prices.—Topalian, 348 - 40th St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f3483

FOR SALE: Regina, Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6084

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp, please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. mh3c

MONTHLY AUCTION thousands classical vocal records. Free list. — S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colorado. je6446

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. ap3084

VOCAL COLLECTIONS: Hard-to-get records, individually offered. Lists issued according to singers. Please state "wants". Write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. ap3464

WANTED: Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo records. — Gerhardt, 4318 Ridgeview, Cincinnati 5, Ohio. jly 6483

from China. It is of highly polished brass and is about two and one-half inches at the base. The handle, which is about six inches high, has the three "no evil" monkeys on the end.

Another Chinese bell in beautifully finished brass stands about six inches high and is three inches across the bottom. The handle is knurled and ends in four widespread, upturned sharp claws.

The expression "crystal clear" comes to life when one rings another bell. Made of clear crystal glass, it is about six inches high and four inches across the bowl. It was made for Miss Price, and around the bottom is a handcut leaf design and on the side the letters M. B. P., also are etched.

From far away Java comes a big handmade brass animal bell that looks like an inverted dugout canoe.

A unique door bell is Japanese. Suspended from the end of a long piece of spring steel is a little brass bell. The spring is so sensitive that the least movement of the door causes the bell to ring.

Still another Chinese bell is made of a rectangular brass hood with a hollow brass tube suspended from each corner. The knocker is hung from the center of the hood.

Fashioned in pewter, the Price family's old dinner bell is also a prize. The bell is very plain. It is round and shallow, mounted on a wooden stand. Projecting from the sides are two arms on which to rest the knocker.

The most colorful set of bells are Russian saddle bells. One can imagine a dashing Cossack galloping across the scene, giving forth a merry jingle with every movement of his horse. There are four bells to the set, three on top and one below. Those on top have six clappers to each bell, all mounted on the outside. The bell below has three clappers which strike from the inside.

A clay figurine presented to Miss Price by a former student, was made by a little Mexican girl. It has a surprisingly sweet tone for such a bell.

BELLS WANTED

WANTED: Bells.—Mrs. Tilden Patton, Lexington, Ill. d12844

Bells Wanted: Old, odd, interesting. — C. F. Ziegler, 48 Woodland Lane, Arcadia, Calif. d3403

FOR SALE

FARM BELLS, complete, each $10. Dealers discounts. — Patricks, Marion, Ohio. ap12046

OLD BELLS LIST FREE.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. d12216

TRAVEL SEARCH FOR BELLS

By A. C. Meyer — $2.50 postpaid

In the last 10 years, semi-retired, Mr. Meyer and his wife, also a bell enthusiast, indulged their hobby of bell collecting, which has taken them to many parts of the world. In every city and virtually every crossroads, they added interesting specimens to their collection. Mr. Meyer has summarized it all in a down-to-earth story.

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING CORPORATION
1006 S. Michigan Blvd., Chicago 5, Ill.
Make checks payable to Lightner Publishing Corp.

Miss Price finds collecting bells not only interesting and satisfying but also closely related to her teaching field.

How many hobbyists collect bells? Miss Price says, about 300. They are known as the American Bell Association and they will hold their next annual convention at New York in June.

If you are looking for a hobby, here is one that rings the bell!

—O—

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21)

"WNEW was throwing out a stack of old records, among them the Edison Bell recording of 'Scotch Hot,' with Whitlock at the bells. We played the record three or four times during the course of one week and began to get response on it from our listeners. . . . We put the record aside temporarily and began an investigation through London Records to find out who owned the master. Tutti Camarata of London Records informed us that the firm did not own the master. . . . but Whitlock was still around and willing to re-record it. We sent them an acetate dubbing from the original Edison Bell and suggested that they do it with the same instrumentation and arrangement. . . . An American publication had been arranged for the tune, so we wrote to the publisher suggesting a lyric based on the familiar children's game which is universally known as Hop Scotch. . . . The publisher turned the whole thing over to Carl Sigman, who liked the idea, and in two days came up with an engaging, refreshing lyric. . . . Guy Lombardo heard it, liked it, recorded it, used it on his network remotes. The Three Suns recorded it. Art Mooney recorded it, and Martin Block picked Mooney's version as the record of the week for the first week in August. Bill Gale has waxed it for the Columbia label. . . . My sidekick, Dee Finch, and I would be pleased to learn what the listener reaction is around Roanoke with 'Scotch Hot' when given the Walsh's Wax Works treatment."

Mr Rayburn told me he believed Billy Whitlock was 80. Then Billy himself happened to see the first Variety article I wrote about him, and at once sent me a letter of thanks in which he said: "To settle the age question, I was 75 last month (July), but I have always kept up my practice on bells and xylophone, so when the Decca company found me a month or so ago, I rattled off four solos and have another session shortly in view. Should you care to have my life story I should be pleased to forward it on. It might raise a small laugh. I think you are correct in saying that Peter Dawson and myself must be two of the oldest gramophone artists, and this bit of luck in the U. S. A. has come as a very pleasant surprise to me, especially since in these last years, things have not been quite so bright."

I was ill with a severe virus ailment when Mr. Whitlock's letter arrived, but I sent him an air mail postal saying I would write at more length as soon as I was able. Judge of my amazement and delight, when less than a week later, I received a cablegram from Billy, saying he hoped I would soon be well. That was the first time my health had been a matter of international concern!!!

A couple of weeks later I received another letter from the veteran musician-comedian, in which he humorously remarked:

"I'm having a — of a time here over the song — interviews, letters, phone messages, etc. Last Saturday it was on television. I didn't see it myself, but was told it was O. K. They made it into a sort of a sketch — girls in kilts doing it and so on, about a ten-minute show. Various bands and singers are doing it now, and it will be in all the pantomimes this year. Tomorrow a copy is being sent to the Queen for approval. I shall probably get about ten years for that, but so long as I have a piano in the cell I shall be O. K. I think my son-in-law and manager is writing you with further particulars, so I'll dry up. We must meet in 1952, if not before, all being well. Yours, till I play a harp instead of bells, Billy."

Then, in two or three days more, came a most interesting letter from Mr. Whitlock's son-in-law, Percy Harris. Here are some quotations:

"Billy Whitlock has asked me to let you know a few odds and ends about his past life. I am doing the business side of this last 'upheaval' of his. Believe me, I have never struck anything like it. Reporters by the dozen, photographers, scroungers (we Americans would call them 'panhandlers')—J. W., members of Parliament, old friends and now autographs; it's sending me crazy. But it is an experience that I would not have missed for anything."

"As you know by now, Billy is 75, but I would add, a very young 75, and he is game for anything. . . . I am trying to give you a picture of him not as an old man of a hundred or so, as your press suggested, but rather as a good old comedian. He has been working the halls and clubs with his bells and he has two acts, one as a fiery old colonel and another as a tramp, both of which are very popular."

"His past history is a little varied. . . . he started off when he was young by joining the Salvation Army because he wanted to play the drums and soon got tied up with it and went to sea. He got as far as Bombay, went ashore and went for a long walk up country. Whether he had learnt to play the drums or not I don't know, but he certainly did not like the sea. He joined an Opera Company in India and toured the country for about five years and then came home to join a troupe of Pierrots. He was by that time a good all-around musician and began writing his own music. That was in the year 1903 and in the following year he joined the Moore and Burgess Mohawk Minstrels as a 'corner man.' His numbers were successful and he started recording for Edison Bell. He did so many that he had to use other names, and I can remember my own father arguing with my uncle upon the merits of Madame Paule, Dudley Roy and Billy Whitlock as bell soloists. It was only last week that I found out that Billy did all of them. He also recorded for Beka and Clarion. About this time he teamed up with Charles Penrose and they toured the halls as a top line act as 'The Two Old Sports.' When the talkies came they separated and Billy continued as a single act. Things got worse and worse and he started to drive a truck for a friend, but that was not a success and I gave him a job in my warehouse as a night watchman, as I wanted him to start writing music again. He always wrote his music at night, and then a few weeks ago you played his old record, 'Scotch Hot,' which started Billy on the road to fame once again. (Actually, of course, it was Gene Rayburn who first played the record.—J. W.).

"Last night we sorted out some old photographs and amongst them was one which I think will interest you. It is a photo of the orchestra that played the old Edison Bell records. Billy is with them."

I am having copies made and will send you one as I am sure you will enjoy it, if only for the old-fashioned instruments that they are holding. . . . You may wonder how I know so much about Billy. I married his daughter. So that is my alibi."

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 35)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 31)

I am eagerly looking forward to receiving the photo of the Edison Bell Orchestra and hope that we can reproduce it later in HOBBIES.

It occurs to me that I can end this article appropriately by quoting from a letter written by Billy Whitlock to the editor of Variety. Abel Green (sometimes referred to as "The Uncrowned King of Broadway" because of the influence exercised by Variety in the theatrical world), and from Mr. Green's gracefully humorous reply. Said Billy:

"I would be more than obliged if you could possibly send me a copy of your August 10th article, which I believe started 'Disker Billy Whitlock' and any other article you may have published, as I find it impossible to obtain any back numbers in this country. . . I plead guilty to being 75, and on my 110th birthday you shall have the finest candle off the cake."

To which Abel Green replied:

"Am enclosing a tear sheet of the August 10th story, as per your request. It would appear that you're a 'Boy Scout' of 75, instead of a middle-aged man of 110, as might have been suspected."

That seems to sum Billy Whitlock up. He may be 75, but in spirit and enthusiasm he's a Boy Scout. If he lives to be 110, I'm sure he'll feel no more than middle-aged. I'm confident, too, that all the readers of HOBBIES will join me in hoping that he will live to be 110 and then some; that "Scotch Hot" will be followed by many more big hits from his pen or on his xylophone and bells; and that he'll fulfill his long-standing ambition to visit the United States, which so far he has never seen.

Come to see us, Billy! We Yanks love you!! It would be fine if you could attend the 1950 "John Bieling Day" party next September.

—o—

Death of Alice Lloyd

Pioneer Recording Comedienne

Alice Lloyd, one of the most popular of the older generation of English music hall stars and variety artists, died November 17 in Banstead, England, aged 76. Miss Lloyd was the sister of the even more famous Marie Lloyd and was known in her American vaudeville performances as "The Bonnie Belle of Scotland." She and her sister Grace also appeared as "The Sisters Lloyd." At one time she won a newspaper contest as the most popular English artist on the American stage.

The comedienne made at least four Victor records when she appeared in this country in 1907-08. The most popular was "You Splash Me and I'll Splash You," originally listed as a single-faced disc, No. 5225, and later coupled with "Don't Argify," by May Irwin, as double-faced No. 16058.

Three other single-faced records were 31646, "Never Introduce Your Bloke to Your Lady Friend"; 5158, "May, May, May," and 5159, "Young Men Lodgers." The 1909 Victor catalog said: "This charming English comedienne has made a very great success in America. Her attractive personality, bright and humorous style, and her amusing songs, which are absolutely free from anything objectionable, have captured her audiences everywhere."

Alice Lloyd's clean and innocent songs were in contrast to the frequently vulgar and suggestive ones of her sister Marie. Incidentally, her husband, Tom McNaughton, made the monolog of "The Three Trees (There! There! There!)" which, coupled with Nat Wills' "No News, or What Killed the Dog," was for many years one of the most popular records in the Victor catalog. When electric recording came in, it was remade by Frank Crumit.

—o—

Death of Joe Belmont

Joe Belmont, one of the most popular of pioneer recording artists, died August 28th, aged 73. Mr. Belmont was noted throughout the world as a whistler. In recent years he and his son, Walter, have operated the Belmont Bird Store in Radio City.

A biographical sketch of Mr. Belmont appeared in the March, 1948, issue of HOBBIES. He is the second artist who attended the September, 1948, "John Bieling Day" party to have died. Al Bernard was the first. Mr. Belmont is survived by his son and a daughter.

I have also heard that Frank Croxton, noted concert singer and bass of the Peerless Quartet from 1917 through 1925, died recently, but have not obtained any details.—J. W.

—o—

LINCOLNIANA IN 1949

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25)

article is written in journalistic style without any pretense to having been developed out of painstaking research. The only evaluation given it, then, is that the lay reader can understand and enjoy the story. One cannot escape being influenced to admire Carl Sandburg and accept him as the fine American that he is.

Other good magazine articles are Lincoln's Cabinet by Helen Nicolay, Jefferson and Lincoln by Dumas Malone, and Lincoln's Great Declaration Of Faith by J. C. Randall.

The Magazine Article of 1949

Lincoln students frequently concur in their choice of the best Lincoln book of the year, but hardly ever agree on the magazine article. Because of the wide variety of interests of readers and a lack of objective standards by which to judge magazine articles, we have many different opinions as to what constitutes the one article that is superior to all others. Moreover, the reviewer usually has not seen some of the contributions.

In the opinion of the writer, Lincoln's Cabinet by Helen Nicolay and Mary Lincoln: Judgment Appealed by Ruth Painter Randall stand well at the top of the list. These two ladies have taken over in 1949 and have asked the men to stand aside for a time. Personally, I like McCorison's The Great Lincoln Collections And What Became Of Them, but Mrs. Randall and Miss Nicolay deal more directly with the Lincoln family and, therefore, should be entitled to careful consideration from that standpoint alone.

With the Lincoln Lore sheet No. 1067 before them, the advisory group of The Lincoln Foundation will practically be compelled to name, Mary Lincoln: Judgment Appealed, as the magazine article of the year. It probably is the best in many respects, consequently the writer names Mary Lincoln as the best Lincoln article of the year. Other articles, while possessing many good features, do not quite have the appeal in them that is to be found in Ruth Painter Randall's writing.

Other Lincoln Events of 1949

Herbert Wells Fay, former custodian of Lincoln's Tomb, died October 25 at the Lincoln Lodge near the tomb. This fine gentleman, Lincoln scholar, and collector will be greatly missed by his friends and those who make frequent visits to the tomb. His son, Earl Fay, is now acting custodian.

The most important Lincoln ceremony of the year was the unveiling of a large Lincoln Statue on the campus of Lincoln Memorial University. This fine piece of art came from the hands of C. S. Paolo and depicts Lincoln as a lawyer. The event took place on February 12. Many visitors from various parts of the country came to the University and took part in the colorful dedication of the prized addition to the university's Lincoln collection. This is the first Lincoln statue to be unveiled in a confederate state and does to some extent exemplify the increasing appreciation for Lincoln in the South. Miss Margaret Johnson Patterson of Greenville, Tennessee, great granddaughter of Andrew Johnson, unveiled the statue.

The Golden Anniversary of the Illinois State Historical Society was held in Springfield, Illinois, October 7-8. Included in this colorful program and meeting was a trip to New Salem in chartered buses. The New Salem visit gave an opportunity for all to inspect the reconstructed village and finally to assemble in front of the museum to hear Fern Nance Pond tell of New Salem and then hear Carl Sandburg speak and sing with his own guitar as the accompanying musical instrument.

The annual pilgrimage to Lincoln's Tomb by the American Legion was conducted again in 1949. Sangamon Post No. 32 of Springfield, Illinois was the local sponsor for this important event. As is customary, all of the important officers of the Legion, State and National, were in attend-

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

RICHARD J. JOSÉ I

By JIM WALSH

(NOTE. — In preparing this biographical sketch of Richard José (pronounced Hoh-ZAY), I have had the help of several officials of the State of California, by which Mr. José was employed for many years before his death. I should like to thank the following for their courteous assistance: Governor Earl Warren; John J. Fisher, the executive officer of the State personnel board; D. D. Watson, commissioner of the State Division of Real Estate; R. S. Davis, assistant commissioner at the Sacramento office; and Gaylord K. Nye, supervising deputy at San Francisco. Especially warm thanks go to Mr. José's widow, who has remarried and is now Mrs. Therese José Hamlin, for her valuable assistance in piecing together many of the details of her late husband's career.)

The Final Curtain Department of the November 1, 1941, issue of the theatrical magazine, The Billboard, contained the following brief death notice: "Richard S. José, 71, ballad singer who helped popularize 'Silver Threads Among the Gold,' (died) at his home in San Francisco October 20. Born in England, he came to this country as a boy soprano at the age of eight. He later appeared with the San Francisco and Lew Dockstader minstrels and also appeared for many years in 'Old Homestead' and at the Old Academy of Music, San Francisco. Survived by his widow, Therese."

That item contains at least two errors. Mr. José's middle initial was not S., but J., and his wife's name is Therese. Too, there seems to be considerable doubt as to the age at which the singer left England for the United States, although he certainly was only a small boy when he arrived in our Far West. But if The Billboard's curt obituary had been filled with the details which I shall give, its readers would have learned that Richard José had one of the most colorfully romantic careers of any theatrical notable of his generation.

Since record collectors are particularly interested in the singing done by Mr. José before the old-time horn, let's go back 38 years from that 1941 death notice—all the way back to 1903. In that year the fledgling

Victor Talking Machine Company felt proud because it had just signed the most popular minstrel and vaudeville singer of the day for a series of records. These appear not to have been the first records Dick José had made. The late Frank Dorian, who was associated with the Columbia company for the greater part of his more than 40 years as a business executive, told me that José "made a couple of Columbia cylinders many years ago." They probably were issued in the 1890's, but I don't know what they were and have never seen them listed. It's fairly probable, too, that the young singer also did some recording for other cylinder companies that have long been out of existence, but I can't say definitely that he did.

To signalize José's signing an exclusive contract, Victor issued a small, four-page folder, on which the company's address is given as "Philadelphia, Pa., U. S. A.," instead of Camden. That is puzzling, but I assume that Victor had business offices in Philadelphia for a short time, while its factories were at Camden, across the Delaware river. The folder contains a front page picture of Mr. José, and is entitled, "Special List of Monarch and De Luxe Records by Richard José, the Famous Contra-Tenor." The front page also reveals that 10-inch, single-faced black label Victor records (then known as Monarchs) sold for $1 each, and the 12-inch De Luxe size at $1.50. The back page shows a Victor talking machine with a large metal horn and a cabinet adorned with too much gingerbread carving and the company gets in a plug for its new Red Seal records, saying: "Red Seal Records are heard to the best advantage when played on the NEW TAPERING ARM MACHINE—the height of mechanical perfection."

Turning to page two, we find the following interesting biographical sketch:

"A big-framed, big hearted, blue-eyed boy with the voice of an angel; he will never be anything else to his friends and they are glad of it — such is Richard José, the most successful ballad singer in the world. Besides his superb voice and the personal qualities which have made him so popular, Mr. José has a history which is interesting and romantic.

"Twenty-nine years ago in Cornwall, England, young José's voice was first heard. Even in his infancy he was set down as one who, in the figurative language of the peasants, was 'born with a bird in his throat.' At the age of six, Richard was the wonder of the village in which he lived because of his beautiful voice. When young José was twelve years old, his father died and the boy was sent to his uncle in Nevada. After a frightful voyage, ending in the wreck of the vessel in which he had taken passage, he arrived at his uncle's home only to find him gone, no one knew where.

"Young Richard, with his plucky spirit, determined to make his own way and became an apprentice to a blacksmith at Reno, where he remained several years, building up the strong frame and deep chest which were to help make him famous. But his wonderful voice was soon discovered and he became a member of Reed's Minstrels in San Francisco, at twelve dollars a week. So great was the sensation he created that in less than five months he was sent for by Dockstader and given a salary of seventy-five dollars. The rest is familiar history; suffice to say that he now draws the largest salary paid to any ballad singer in the world. Our patrons will doubtless appreciate the opportunity offered them of obtaining these splendid records at the regular prices for ten and twelve-inch, and we anticipate an enormous sale for them."

Victor's anticipations were realized. The José records had "an enormous sale," by the standards of that day. One of those listed in the folder was No. 2556, "Silver Threads Among the Gold," the ballad with which the counter-tenor (a word I like better than "contra-tenor") was most prominently identified. The March, 1906, Victor record supplement said that "Silver Threads" was the biggest seller the company had issued up to then—although by June the honor had passed to Billy Murray's version of the great George M. Cohan hit, "You're a Grand Old Rag."

This first 1903 list contains two ten-inch records by José and one twelve-inch disc. The ten-inch were 2554, "Belle Brandon," concisely described as "an old favorite"; and the already mentioned "Silver Threads Among the Gold," of which the annotator said: "One of José's greatest successes and sung by him for many years, it still is demanded by his audiences and moves them to tears just as it did in the old days." The twelve-inch disc was "When I'm Away from You"—"a charming ballad just added by Mr. José to his repertoire."

There are a few discrepancies, of the type that seem inevitable when gathering information about pioneer recording artists, in The Billboard death notice and the Victor biographical sketch which had been published more than a generation before. The Billboard gave José's age as 71 at his death. Victor said the singer was 29 in 1903, which would have made him 67 when he died 38 years later. Edward LeRoy Rice, in his book, "Monarchs of Minstrelsy," gives the birth date as June 5, 1869. But the records of the State of California Division of Real Estate list it as June 5, 1872, and the singer's widow says this is correct—which means that when José died he was a few months past 69. The Billboard also said he came to

~~~~~ Have 200 Pathe records at $1 ea.

Name your choice or will sell all as lot for $150.000

No lists for single order, but will send list of records to those desiring to purchase the lot.

P. F. LUPO

1314 N. Wells St., Chicago 10, Ill.

mhc

this country at the age of eight; Victor said his ocean voyage was made when he was twelve, and another source yet to be quoted puts the young traveler's age at ten.

It seems surprising that anyone with a Spanish name such as José should have been born in England, but the counter-tenor's birthplace was Lanner, a village near the town of Red Ruth in Cornwall. José's father was of Spanish descent, and his grandfather was a full-blooded Spaniard. His mother (whose maiden name was Elizabeth Francis) was English. The singer's baptismal name was Ricardo Juan José, but after he came to America he modified it to Richard J. José. It would be interesting to know how the Spanish José family happened to settle in Cornwall, the locale of Gilbert and Sullivan's immortal opera, "Pirates of Penzance."

Richard José married Miss Therese Shrieve, of Carson City, Nevada, on July 20, 1898. He was at the peak of his career when he made his first Victor records some five years later. I think this would be a good place to quote from a letter written to me years ago by another vaudeville favorite and pioneer recording artist who knew José well and loved him—the late Dan W. Quinn. To an extent, the lives of the two singers parallel, since José crossed the Atlantic as a boy, hoping to live with an uncle in the Far West, and Quinn, at an even earlier age, came from San Francisco to make his home with his grandmother in New York. Here is what Dan Quinn wrote:

"Dick José... was a counter-tenor and, in my estimation, the finest ballad singer this country ever had. He came into great prominence singing 'With All Her Faults I Love Her Still.' I never did hear anyone (else) even try to sing it, and you may rest assured no one ever could. This song he owned 'body and soul.' This is not taking one iota from his ability in rendering other songs. He had an appealing voice, so full of love and heartbreak, and would bring the tears to anyone's eyes who had a soul within him.

"I can see him now in my mind's eye—Dick José singing 'My Gal Sal', and seated at the piano no less a personage than the author, Paul Dresser, one of nature's noblemen. Paul would accompany him on the piano, and how Dick would render this beautiful ballad, and Paul sitting there, crying like a child, the tears rolling down his cheeks at the beautiful rendition. This is the gospel truth. He, Paul Dresser, was a great big good-hearted fellow who loved everybody and who was in return beloved by all who knew him, and when he wrote a song he put more human interest in it than any man alive. To hear Dick sing 'Where Is My Wandering Boy?' was a rare treat indeed. He sang for a long while in 'The Old Homestead' at the old Star Theater, corner of Broadway and Thirteenth street, New York City, and one of the songs he sang was 'Day after Day,' which was worth going miles to hear. I used to meet him at the Victor laboratory in Camden. Either I'd follow him or he would follow me with our list of songs, also around at the different publishing houses."

Doesn't that quotation bring the theatrical days of more than a generation ago vividly to life? The
(CONTINUED ON PAGE 33)

RECORDS

FINE CLASSICAL RECORDS: Auction: Imported instrumentals, largely cutouts. Unusual collectors opportunity. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwold, Ambler, Penna. mh8446

100,000 OPERATIC RECORDS, for sale. G&T, HMV, Fonotipias, Victor, Columbia, etc. Send want list to—John Sligiano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N. J. mh6007

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. —E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o 126121

EIGHT THOUSAND different selections; vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. d126361

WILL BUY used records, or collections. —Jacob S. Schneider, 128 West 66th St., New York City 23, N. Y. mh3882

FINE OLD RECORDS for sale: Classical, vocal, operatic, violin, piano, vaudeville, jazz, popular, Lauder, McCormack, reasonably priced. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. mh3084

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. au6407

RARE OLD RECORDS for sale: Vocal operatic, popular, collectors items, reasonably priced. Ask for lists.—Delano, 349 Lindenwold, Ambler, Pa. mh120821

RARE RECORDS: Private Collection for sale. Three hundred Caruso, McCormack, Sousa, etc. For information write—Forest Draper, Pittsfield, New Hampshire. mh1161

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (Moses). Price $3.75. American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, New York. f124201

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6084

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp, please. —"Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. mh3c

MONTHLY AUCTION thousands classical vocal records. Free list. —S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colorado. je6446

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. ap3084

VOCAL COLLECTIONS: Hard-to-get records, individually offered. Lists issued according to singers. Please state "wants". Write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. ap3464

WANTED: Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo records. —Gerhardt, 4316 Ridgeview, Cincinnati 5, Ohio. jly 6483

MUSIC — REPAIR

MELODEONS restored like new. We buy, sell, repair.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids 6, Mich. je6215

MISCELLANEOUS

Wanted to Buy: Old player piano rolls, classical and popular, all makes. Please list title, artist, make, and catalog number. Also want old player piano roll catalogs.—Don Athearn, 2116 Keith Bldg., Cleveland 15, Ohio. mh1024

THREE EDISON cylinder phonographs, two-minute type, morning glory horn, 25 records with each, $15.50, or $45 for all. One disc Edison about 40" high, 50 records, $20. Two Edison cylinder 4-min. types, 25 records, built in horn, $10.50 ea. Table model Victrola on matching record stand, 50 records, $25. Express collect. —Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. mh1564

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.35. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. —Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

SWISS MUSICAL UNITS $2.75.—Music Boxes, 131 West 42nd, New York City 18, N. Y. my3061

WANTED: Victor or Edison catalogs and supplements, 1912 or earlier.—L. E. Mack, 1157 Penniman, Plymouth, Mich. mh08

WANTED. Governor Assembly for Euphonia Music Box. Best offer takes 1914, 1921, 1925 Victor record catalogs. —A. Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. mh1481

"THE LAST of the Cremonas", booklet listing 30 other luthiers will be sent post paid for $1.—Berger, 5800 S. W. 27th St., Coral Gables, Fla. je120041

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850 for sale. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 6, Colo. my122611

Wanted: Coin-operated, automatic musical instruments and music rolls for Seeburg Pianos, Mills Violin Virtuosos, etc.—Wm. S. Allen, 616 First National Bank Bldg. Santa Ana, Calif. mh60621

FLUTE, Baxter, beautiful condition, all silver, $35. Also a five pedal harp.—C. E. H. Whitlock, 15 Broadway, New Haven, Conn. mh3882

FOR SALE: Piano, upright, ebony, Chickering, solid brass Candelabra at sides. Designed copper plate above pedals. Custom built, 1860.—Esther Slipper, Darby, Pa. ap3638

CAN SUPPLY PARTS for disc and cylinder phonographs? —Leroy Hughbanks, Osborne, Kans. ap3638

WANT TO BUY Steinway or Mason and Hamlin pianos in any condition; state price.—Braun's Piano House, 2380 N. W. 7th Street, Miami 35, Fla. ap4006

OLD POPULAR sheet music. 6 for $1.00.—P. C. Hillebrant, 147 Bartlett St., Rochester, N. Y. mh1021

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21)

days when those big men, Richard José and Paul Dresser, were at the top of their respective fields—Dresser as the reigning dean of the popular song writing world and José as one of its best loved singers. However, the period of "My Gal Sal" was a time of sorrow for both. Through a series of misfortunes, Dresser had lost all his money when he wrote "My Gal Sal" in 1905, and lacked funds with which to promote the number which, after his death, was to become one of his greatest hits. He died, broken-hearted, about a year later without knowing that "Sal" was to rank with "On the Banks of the Wabash" as one of his most enduring songs—a true classic.

And the former Mrs. José says that the singer also was a victim of bad luck in 1905. He was appearing at one of the Percy Williams vaudeville houses in Brooklyn, when a heavy iron-bound "drop" fell from the flies and struck him on the head. The accident didn't cause him to lose his voice permanently, but Mrs. Hamlin says that many stitches were taken in his head, which was bandaged for many weeks. His hair had been jet-black, but when the bandages were removed it was snow white. Next month I shall reproduce a photograph of the singer sent to me by Mrs. Hamlin. It was taken after the tenor had recovered and shows him with a mass of white hair. It is precisely like the picture reproduced by Victor in the 1903 folder except that his hair is black in the latter and that he is wearing a different necktie and collar. But, aside from the change in hair color, the singer's features look precisely the same in both pictures, taken many years apart.

I have a vivid recollection of reading a newspaper item about José's misfortune long after it occurred. It formerly was the custom of many Negro families in the South to cover the walls of their homes with old newspapers instead of plaster or wall paper. On one occasion, as a small boy, I went into a vacant house formerly occupied by a Negro family and saw on the wall a piece of paper with the name of Richard José prominently displayed. Being even then very much concerned with anything about an artist who was well known for his records, I read the story. It told of José's suing the management of the theatre in which his accident occurred, and said that when he had finished telling of how for a time he was unable to speak above a whisper and his hair turned white, just about everybody in the courtroom, the judge included, was in tears. I have always remembered the date of that old newspaper as 1917, but if that is right, the damage suit either had been long postponed or had dragged through a protracted period.

Apparently, Victor had recorded a considerable number of José songs before his accident occurred, for they continued to be issued regularly. In 1904 the first of his several records of sacred music was announced. The April supplement said: "Those who have never heard Mr. José sing anything but the popular ballads of the day will no doubt be surprised at his beautiful rendering of sacred songs and hymns. Organ accompaniment is used for all Mr. José's sacred selections." The number issued that month was M2669, "Sun of My Soul." In June, 1906, one of the tenor's lesser-known numbers, a 12-inch version of "The Blind Boy," was issued. It is hard to find, but I have been lucky enough to get a copy. The supplement said: "A famous dramatic song with which Mr. José made a great success some years ago. He has sung it for the Victor in response to many requests from those who heard it at the time when it formed part of Mr. José's repertoire." "The Blind Boy" owed its popularity to its introduction in England by the late G. H. Chirgwin, a music hall performer who wore a white patch over one eye and was known as "The White-Eyed Kaffir." He accompanied himself on the violin, and an even more famous number of his was "My Fiddle is My Sweetheart."

I doubt that Mr. José did any recording after his accident. His last Victor record was issued in 1907, although two of his most popular selections, "Abide With Me" and "Belle Brandon," were taken over into the double-faced list, which began in 1909. Several of the single-faced numbers also remained in the catalog for many years. Meanwhile, he had sung all the favorite numbers in his repertoire. These included, besides those already mentioned, "Dear Old Girl," "With All Her Faults," "Killarney," "When You and I Were Young," "Ben Bolt," "Home, Sweet Home" and "We've Been Chums for Fifty Years." What I hope is a complete list of the José records will be given at the end of this series.

(To be continued)

MECHANICAL ANTIQUES

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 31)

able static electric machine, an electric spark, and several models of houses to demonstrate the effectiveness of lighting rods. One, called a "thunder house," contained a small charge of gun-powder to illustrate what would happen when a house was not properly protected with rods.

Euriometers, devices for showing the effect of combining gases, appear in the chemistry part of the exhibit. One such instrument, used by the third Hollis professor in the early 19th century, is believed to be the oldest surviving piece of chemical apparatus at Harvard. Other exhibits in this field are a chemical slide rule, and instruments for investigating steam and gases.

Specimens from Professor Peck's collection of dried fishes, the oldest surviving biological exhibits in the University, highlight the displays in the biological field. One of three fish on view is labelled "common sucker from the Charles River, 1790."

The oldest geological or mineralogical specimens in Harvard University appear in the section of the exhibition devoted to these fields. They consist of a specimen of barite from Saxony, part of a gift from the Committee of Safety of the French Republic to Harvard in 1795, and the Bowdoin Marbles, a panel of 44 examples of polished European marble. The marbles are a portion of a gift from James Bowdoin to Harvard College in 1796.

—O—

CIRCUSIANA

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27)

everything from candy floss to chameleons for the circus spectators, operating a diner and two stands on the midway, a back yard lunch stand, and several stands in the menagerie tents, as well as working in the seats. Seven others sell souvenir programs.

To look after the business of the show, with offices in compartments of the ticket wagons, in addition to the executives, are the legal adjuster and two assistants, who handle complaints, three timekeepers and the secretaries to executives.

In the backyard, occupying tent or office wagons, are such important individuals as the circus physician and his assistant, a mail agent, a purchasing agent, forage agent, two commissary men, and three operators of personnel buses. There are five chauffeurs, a laundry and dry cleaning department with six employees, a sanitation crew of four, an iceman, and a police chief, with two midway watchmen and eight in the backyard. A mechanical department numbers eight persons.

To look after the comfort of executives and performers on the sleeping cars are 36 porters and maids.

Thus we have, generally speaking, the personnel of the "biggest show on earth." There are a few additional utility men on the staff as a rule and forces in various departments are supplemented with recruited town labor to meet various emergencies and to maintain train schedules when long runs are required.

The circus is a city within itself and this is exemplified by the Ringling circus. Many of the performers or attaches double in other capacities to furnish services to their fellow employees, such as barber and beauty shop work, chiropractic treatments, sale of theatrical magazines and there are loan agents among the thrifty.

One of the biggest jobs is that of the interpreters, who are required to keep a family happy that speaks from 18 to 24 languages.

Start HOME BUSINESS

Making Statuettes

You can easily start a home business of your own making statuettes, plaques, artificial marble flooring, liquid marble, flexible rubber molds, metalizing baby shoes. Amazing profits.

Valuable folder FREE. life

CREATIVE PUBLISHERS

Winnetka 15, Illinois

the autumn of 1921-22 she was a guest star at the Berlin State Opera and achieved splendid notices. "A wonderful voice of rare beauty in tone and color." (Nov., 1921) "Her Countess in Figaro is a well-considered, distinguished creation." (Nov. 1921) "We have never yet heard so sweet and beautiful a Euridice." (Jan. 1922) "Her Pamina was outstanding. Not since the heyday of Claire Dux have we heard such glorious Mozart singing in Berlin." (Jan. 1922).

Many details of Rethberg's early career are contained in the book Elisabeth Rethberg's Ihr Leben und Kunstlerium published in 1928 at Schwarzenberg, from which I have drawn freely for this article. It is available at the New York Public Library. The authors, Horst Henschel and Friedrich, assert that Rethberg sang 106 parts at Dresden but do not list them. They do, however, give the following list of her characterizations at Dresden in 1921: Agathe, Aida, Anna (Hans Heiling), Butterfly, Elisabeth, Elsa, Euryanthe, Evchen, Countess, Ilia (Idomeneus), Inez, Kaiserin, Konstanze, Leonora (Il Trovatore), Marie (Bartered Bride), Mimi, Micaela, Nedda, Octavian, Pamina, Saffi, Sophie and Tosca. A most imposing array and a great tribute to her versatility! During Rethberg's seven years' stay at Dresden Richard Tauber was her colleague and must have partnered her quite often, but apart from their collaboration in Zigeunerbaron, no details are given either in the Rethberg biography mentioned above or in the recent excellent book written about Tauber by his wife.

In 1922 Rethberg sailed for the U. S. A. which she henceforth made her permanent home. She did return to Dresden from time to time, however, for a series of Lieder recitals and operatic performances in 1925 and 1927, to create the title role of Richard Strauss' Aegyptian Helen at the world premiere in 1928, and for a special "Rethberg Week" at the Dresden Opera in 1930 when honorary membership of all the state theatres in Saxony was conferred on her.

(TO BE CONCLUDED)

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

RICHARD J. JOSÉ II

By JIM WALSH

When next we hear of Richard José, it is 1915. The man with the marvelous counter-tenor voice, the highest kind a male singer can have, is now 42, prematurely white haired because of the accident in the Brooklyn theater, but once more in good health. He has also starred in a motion picture—a silent one, of course—for the K. and R. Film Company, of 126-132 West 46th Street, New York. The picture is named for the song, "Silver Threads Among the Gold," with which the singer is inseparably identified, and when it is shown in the larger cinema houses, José goes along and sings several numbers, including, of course, "Silver Threads."

I have a copy of The Kanr Journal, a publication issued in July, 1915, by the makers of the film, which was written and produced by Pierce Kingsley. It is devoted almost entirely to blurbs for the picture and to much information, written in a richly sentimental vein, about Richard José's career. There is a picture of the Madison Square Garden of that day, which had been transformed from a sports arena into a film house and was described as "the largest motion picture playhouse in the world, seating 12,000 people." We are further told that the screen, or "sheet," was 26 by 34 feet (also the largest in the world), and that the "throw" from the projection booth to screen was 315 feet. "Silver Threads Among the Gold" was the first film to be shown at the Garden. It appears to have been a rustic drama, mingling humor and pathos, of "The Old Homestead" type, as witness this comment from the Moving Picture World: "This is something more than a picture. It is the simple old rural romance told again freshly and truly. The story runs along smoothly and convincingly." And the New York Dramatic Mirror remarked: "The Picture has a really stirring hold upon the tender feelings of its audiences. It harks back to the elemental surprisingly well. It is astounding how much the picture does get under the skin. They register a big heart punch." A hand bill which advertised the picture said that "America's Sweetest Contra-Tenor will positively appear in person and sing at each performance. His wonderful golden voice has thrilled the hearts of millions of song-loving people. He made immortal 'Silver Threads Among the Gold,' 'When You and I Were Young, Maggie,' 'Belle Brandon' and scores of other undying gems. Mr. José will sing a selected program in conjunction with the beautiful, thrilling, laughing, heart throbbing photo drama in which he also appears—'Silver Threads Among the Gold,' the 'Way Down East' of the screen. In six parts, with 250 people and 210 scenes of wondrous beauty and surpassing realism never before seen in filmdom."

The most interesting thing about the Kanr Journal is "The Life Story of Richard J. José," sub-titled "The Sweet Singer Who Made 'Silver Threads Among the Gold' famous." I shall now quote from the article:

Richard J. José was born in Cornwall, England. . . . When Dick José was hardly able to toddle, his father would sit at the organ with the baby Dick on his knee, and play and sing, so that almost the first words lisped by little Dick were the words of a church hymn. Before he was three years of age he could sing 'Will You Meet Me at the Fountain?' At the age of eight, he was known as the phenomenal boy soprano. His fame spread all over the country and he was taken to London, where he sang before the crowned heads, after which the boy was heard all through the provinces.

Owing to a sudden attack of illness of his father's, from which he never recovered, the boy's tour ceased. The mother, who was an invalid, was left along with little Dick, two other sons and two daughters of tender years. The father had a brother . . . in a mining camp at Virginia City, Nevada, who

LLOYD G. KELLEY
Successor to

REGINA

MUSIC BOX CO.

Christmas tunes for the 15 1/2" Regina, special, $2.50 each. No. 3028 White Christmas; 3029 Jingle Bells, 3030 The First Noel; 3031 Hark the Herald Angels Sing; 3032 Santa Claus

Ye Children; 1028 Still Night, Holy Sanctissima; 1423 O Christmas Tree.

Complete of reconditioned antique music boxes for sale

P. O. Box 342
Hanover, Massachusetts

after hearing from his sister-in-law, sent her money and persuaded her to allow little Dick to visit him, as he was the oldest of the children. So at the age of ten, the little lad left Cornwall with a tag sewed to the lapel of his coat, bearing the address of his uncle. . . He made the entire trip alone. When the boy reached his long journey's end he found that his uncle had died while the lad was on the ocean, so at that tender age when a child needs the guidance of a parent most, little Dick found himself homeless and alone in a strange land and in one of the wildest mining camps of America at that time, and often he was forced to sleep with but the sky for a blanket.

One night, hungry and weary, he found himself peering through the window of a concert hall and gambling house, where the roughest element of the mining camp gathered nightly. The boy was cold, his sockless feet were lacerated from his well-worn and broken shoes. As he listened to the ribald song accompanied by a piano, he was clutched from behind by powerful hands, which shook him until his teeth chattered and a harsh voice rang in his ears, demanding to know what he was doing there. Little Dick, not knowing what to say to the man, muttered "I can sing, mister." The man laughed and took Dick by the hand and led him into the gambling house and calling the proprietor said, "Hey, Doc, here's a kid that sez he kin sing," and with that he pushed the boy toward the owner of the place. The latter ordered little Dick to get out and pointed to the door. Dick, in a trembling voice, while big tears began to flow, told the proprietor that he could sing. Several of the players were then attracted to the scene by this time, and as the boss grabbed the boy to throw him out they intercepted and put the lad up on the little stage and told him to sing. While hunger pains gnawed at his little body he sang in a sweet plaintive tone "Silver Threads Among the Gold." The place was soon hushed in silence, the roulette wheel stopped, the clinking of the chips and coins were silent and from that gathering of fearless gamblers not a sound came, while most of them were actually crying. When the song was finished and the tension was at the breaking point, someone said, "Do you know any more songs, Bub?" Dick nodded and started to sing the hymn he loved the best, "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Men who had not seen the inside of a church for years removed their hats and fell to their knees on the floor. The boy was forced to sing this hymn three times. All gambling was suspended for the night, and the boy's presence threatened to put the place out of business. They gave him food and offered him drink. The latter the boy refused, and up to the present day, with "Silver Threads" above his own brow, Richard José has never known the taste of liquor in any form.

After the episode in the gambling house, the news spread about the camp how the boy's singing stopped the game. It was heralded to the ears of a kindly minister, who was the parson of a little church. . . He took Dick to his home and cared for him. The following Sunday he took him to church and during the singing of a hymn that little Dick had learned in far away England, he joined in and sang with all his heart in the melody. Before it was half over the boy realized that he was the only one in the whole congregation that was singing. Tears dimmed the eyes of all. In a few words the minister told his congregation Dick's sad story. After the services almost everyone in the congregation wanted to adopt the boy. The choice went to a kindly blacksmith's wife. Soon Dick started bravely to learn the blacksmith business under W. J. Luke and his good wife, who were all that fond parents could be to little Dick. . . The minister was at the head of a select school for girls that held three classes each day, including a night class. To this latter class Dick was admitted as the only boy in the entire school. After his day's work in the blacksmith shop, he attended school from 7 p. m. to 9 p. m., and to this kindly minister Mr. José owes his education, which has been a thorough one in every respect, and if ever a man followed the Golden Rule that man is Richard José.

I pause here long enough to note another discrepancy. What, I wonder, is the truth about young José's uncle? Had he gone away, "no one knew where," as the Victor folder said, or had he died, as related in the Kanr Journal? And no doubt you have noticed that the latter says the boy left England at the age of ten, whereas The Billboard fixed his age at eight and the Victor circular at twelve. Now, back to the Journal, which continued, under the head of "Mr. José's Theatrical Career":

Mr. José's fame as a sweet singer spread from Virginia City throughout the country and he was known everywhere as the "Singing Blacksmith." He was induced to join the San Francisco minstrels . . . where he made a sensation which was soon heralded to New York. At that time Lew Dockstader was forming his minstrel company to open on Broadway near 29 Street, which was afterwards known as the Princess Theater. Mr. José was engaged as the premier ballad singer for this company. While singing there, the late and dearly beloved Denman Thompson heard him sing. He was so impressed with José's sweet voice that he started negotiations to secure his services for "The Old Homestead," and Mr. José opened in this time-honored play at the Academy of Music in New York, where it ran a straight year and came back time after time. A strong affiliation sprang up between Mr. Thompson and Mr. José, which continued up to Mr. Thompson's demise.

Mr. José toured for eight years with "The Old Homestead" and became known and revered by theater-goers the land over. During his engagement with "The Old Homestead" there was one song that Mr.

MUSIC BOXES

Bought - Sold - Expertly Repaired
SEND FOR OUR LIST.

A. V. BORNAND CO.

333 5th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y.
(Originally established in Switzerland 1825)

MUSIC BOX DISCS

BOUGHT - SOLD - TRADED
SEND FOR MY WANT LIST.
OFFERING ABOVE AVERAGE PRICES.
INSLEY C. LOOKER

So. Maple Avenue, Basking Ridge, N. J.

WANTED

COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- * MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- * EDOUARD de RESZKE
- * SCHUMANN-HEINK
- * CAMPANARI
- * SUZANNE ADAMS
- * ANTONIO SCOTTI
- * CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INOCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.
EDISON GRAND OPERA
CYLINDERS:

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.

International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophone by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

318 West 102nd Street
New York 25, New York

Persons offering material not specified above,
or seeking information, are requested to enclose
a stamped envelope for reply.

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Masoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

José sang alone and which Mr. Thompson listened to at every performance. It was called "Day After Day." A stage hand with the company would place a chair in the entrance near to José's position on the stage, and Denman Thompson would sit there and listen to the singer render this pathetic ballad to the dear old lady character in the play. Many and many a time has dear old "Uncle Josh's" handkerchief wiped away a tear. When the song was ended Mr. Thompson would rise from his chair and go to his dressing room apparently in deep thought. . .

As Mr. José's fame spread he had many offers to star in his own company, so during the last season with the "Old Homestead," Mr. Kith of the famous vaudeville circuit induced Mr. José to sign a contract. When Mr. José informed Mr. Thompson, the latter said, "You won't leave me until the end of the season, will you, Dick?" and Mr. José said, "No, indeed, Governor, I'll be with you until your season ends." The following year Mr. José and Mr. Thompson met and both were on their way to play in Pittsburgh. During the conversation Mr. Thompson said, "Well, Dick, I ain't heard the old song, 'Day After Day,' since you left us, and some evening during the week I want you to sing it for me."

"Why, Governor," Dick replied, "you have a fine quartet and fine singers. Why don't you let one of them sing it? You know that you are welcome to use my song."

Denman Thompson shook his head and said, "No, Dick, I don't want to hear anyone but you sing that song, and when you left my company the song went with you."

It will be remembered that Dan Quinn, in the letter quoted in the first installment of this series, mentioned José's singing of the song, "Day After Day," as being worth going miles to hear. He and Denman Thompson, the "Uncle Josh Whitcomb" from whom Cal Stewart got his idea of "Uncle Josh Weathersby," certainly appear to have been in agreement on that point.

Getting back to the Kanr Journal, we find a touching account of "Mr. José's Return to His Native Village":

Twelve years after his arrival in America he sailed for Cornwall, England, to pay a visit to his mother, brothers and sisters. News of his coming was heralded about among the miners and villagers who had known him as a child. During his long absence Dick never forgot the dear old invalid mother and his brothers and sisters, and a good portion of his earnings always found its way to the dear ones at home. His mother's joy knew no bounds when the good news reached her that Dick was coming home and she was under the impression that Dick was coming home for good, and the other children did not spoil the illusion, but they knew that their brother's home was in America with his wife and his other interests. Mr. José arrived at the Cornwall station, which was about two and one-half miles from the old home. He was met by his brother. It was a beautiful moonlight night and Dick wanted a good talk with his brother before entering the home, so prevailed on him to walk the distance, which they did.

As they passed along the way, Mr. José noticed in the window of every house tallow candles had been placed. At first he did not give it serious attention, but as the lighted candles appeared more numerous

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 33)

MISCELLANEOUS

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95 Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

"THE LAST of the Cremonas", booklet listing 30 other luthiers will be sent post paid for $1.—Berger, 5800 S. W. 27th St., Coral Gables, Fla. je120041

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850 for sale. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my122511

FLUTE, Baxter, beautiful condition, all silver, $35. Also a five pedal harp.—C. E. H. Whitlock, 15 Broadway, New Haven, Conn. je3882

FOR SALE: Piano, upright, ebony, Chickering, solid brass Candelabra at sides. Designed copper plate above pedals. Custom built, 1860.—Esther Slipper, Darby, Pa. ap3633

CAN SUPPLY PARTS for disc and cylinder phonographs? — Leroy Hughes, Osborn, Kans. ap3633

WANT TO BUY Steinway or Mason and Hamlin pianos in any condition; state price.—Braun's Piano House, 2380 N. W. 7th Street, Miami 35, Fla. ap4006

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp, please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. je8614

FOR SALE: Collectors Prize: Tangley Calliope with blower, refinished, completely restored, $750. Coin operated player piano as is, $175. Deagan Triple Octave Chimes restored, $350. 65 note piano rolls. Expert repair service on above.—Lee, 934 N. Lancaster, Dallas, Texas. my3426

A GENUINE David Hopp violin: perfect condition, excellent tone, $300.00.—Little Eva's Antique Shop, 3032 Delesea Drive, Glassboro, N. J. my3003

VIOLIN: Perfect condition, excellent tone: full size. Maker, Michael Ignatius Stadmann, Wien (Vienna) 1786. Offer, please.—Turtle House Antiques, Egbert Hill, Morristown, N. J. ap1291

MUSIC — REPAIR

MELODEONS restored like new. We buy, sell, repair. C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids 6, Mich. je6215

RECORDS

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

EIGHT THOUSAND different selections; vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. d126351

FINE OLD RECORDS for sale: Classical, vocal, operatic, violin, piano, vaudeville, jazz, popular, Lauder, McCormack, reasonably priced. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. ap3084

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. au6407

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (Moses). Price $3.75. American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, New York. f124201

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6084

MONTHLY AUCTION thousands classical vocal records. Free list. — S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colorado. je6445

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. ap3084

VOCAL COLLECTIONS: Hard-to-get records, individually offered. Lists issued according to singers. Please state "wants". Write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. ap3164

WANTED: Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo records. — Gerhardt, 4318 Ridgeway, Cincinnati 5, Ohio. jly1423

FOR SALE: 3 small Seeburg pianos, 6 Mills Violin boxes, 2 Orchestra pianos, 1 Tangley Calliope; all coin-operated, in good mechanical condition. Contact — O. L. Cooper, 3605 Gundry Ave., Long Beach, California. je3825

MUSIC BOXES for sale: (1) Stella 17" discs, 18 discs. Case mahogany stained. Modern case, not original. Excellent tone and condition, $75. (2) Swiss; fine walnut case, 33x14x12"; cylinders, 16" long; 6 cylinders, 48 tunes, 8 bells; running; excellent condition, $150. Firm prices.—R. C. Collins, 129 Melrose Pl., Ridgewood, New Jersey. ap1044

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

REGINA PIANO for sale: 9 ft. high, 12 3/4" diam. discs, bells, drums, cymbals. Coin operated. $325.—Borland Co., 333 5th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y. ap1802

STUPENDOUS Record Auction. 25,000 rarest recordings. Everything you want: Old-time vocals, instrumentals, seldom recorded songs, instruments. Sweet, hot, Salon groups, organ, piano, soloists, famed personalities, foreign, domestic, every type music, artists. Several monthly listings beg. Feb. "Record Changer" Mag. (McAndrew) or 25c for list.—Box JMA, c/o HOBBIES. ap1673

Ponselle, "Vestale"; De Luca, "Benvenuto"; Kurz, "Nordstern", $3.85 each. Also, Battistini, "Don Giovanni" (Warsaw 1903); Boninsegna, "Lescaut" (Milan 1904); Plancon, "Serenade Mefistofele" (London 1902), $2.85 each. All brand new original matrix pressings. Others. For list, write: — Addison Foster, 1226 Montgomery Ave., Narberth, Penna. ap1405

225 FINE OLD RECORDS

from music store, never been sold: Caruso, McCormick, Gluck, Ada and other fine artists. Old Victor phonograph with horn and many records. MAKE AN OFFER.

MRS. C. P. BROERMAN

1018 Bellemeade Ave., Evansville, Ind.

app

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21)

Dick stopped and looked from house to house. . . "Brother," said Dick, "what's going on here? Why so many candles burning in windows?" The brother shook his head and intimated that he did not know, leaving Dick perplexed. As they reached an old stone arch which was the gateway to the village proper, Dick was amazed to see the top of the arch literally covered with burning tallow dips and not a soul about. Dick said, "What is this for?" pointing at the lights, and looked searchingly at his brother. The latter looked up with a smile on his face and a tear in his eye and said, "I guess it's for you, Dick. The folks want to show you how welcome you are at home." This simple honest tribute to the wanderer's return unnerved him completely and he sobbed in his brother's arms in gratitude to the kind hearts and appreciation of their sincere welcome. As they passed through the arch, on each side of the street every window held flaming candles. Soon the brothers reached the gate of the old home. Not a light of any description was seen about the house. Dick's heart almost stopped beating. He grasped his brother's arm with but one thought, "Mother, is she—" The brother assured him that mother was all right. "But why is there no light about the house?" The brother took Dick's arm and entered the gate. Instead of entering the front door, he walked Dick around to the garden at the back of the house. The brother spoke quite loud, "Welcome home, Dick," and, as if by magic, lights sprang up from candles, lanterns and rushes, and over a hundred voices started to sing, "We Shall Meet at the Fountain," the hymn made famous in Cornwall by little baby Dick José. . .

During the two summer months that Dick remained in Cornwall he was lionized by all. Night after night meetings were arranged, and Dick was forced to do more singing in his two months visit than he ever had to do in two years in America, and today it is one of the most pleasant memories of his old home. As the time drew near for Mr. José to leave for America to fulfill his theatrical engagements, he did not know how to break the news to his mother, and Dick's brother pleaded for him to say nothing. The last night, ere his departure for America, he and his mother sat side by side at the fireplace, with no light but the glow from the fire upon their faces, while Dick's sister sat on the floor at one side and the brother on the other, and Dick sang "Silver Threads Among the Gold" and other songs to them. In reality Dick was saying a last good-bye to the dear soul. After he had kissed her good night and she had retired to sleep, the brothers sat in almost silence until two in the morning, when Dick tip-toed to his mother's bedroom door for a look at the dear one, and then silently stole from the house.

A strange coincidence regarding the above episode in producing the photoplay, "Silver Threads Among the Gold," was that the author knew nothing of the parting scene described here, and in fact did not even have in his manuscript the last scene of "Silver Threads" as it now stands. It came as an inspiration. Mr. José did not mention a word in regard to the scene, but after the photoplay was finished and projected on the screen at a private showing, when the last scene came on, in which he sings to his wife in the play and the boy and girl, Mr. José's head dropped forward and he saw no more of the picture that day. The lights went up and the spectators were congratulating the producers. Someone walked over to Mr. José, who still sat with lowered head, and said, "Well, Dick, it's a fine picture." Mr. José did not answer. He was in tears. The following day he said to the author and producer of the story, "Some power was hovering over you when you put that scene in the play." That is how the writer learned of Mr. José's last good-bye to his mother.

The biographical information concerning Mr. José in the Karr Journal ends with the following statement:

Every line written here regarding Mr. José's life is absolutely honest and sincere facts, and came direct from the lips of this truly great artist. . . Mr. José is still a young man, scarcely 43 years old. Two years ago his silvery hair was as black as a raven's wing. He was playing an engagement in a New York theater when a heavy iron-bound drop fell from the "flies" of the theater, hitting him on the head and laying it open from the brow to the back. After it was sewed up by the doctor and the bandages placed on it, he was taken to a hospital, where he lay between life and death for many weeks. When the bandages were taken off Mr. José's hair was silver white.

Since the publication from which the foregoing was quoted was issued in 1915, it would appear that the accident from which the great counter-tenor suffered so much occurred in 1913, "two years ago." However, Mr. José's widow says he was injured in 1905, and she certainly ought to know. She also says that all his brothers and sisters are dead.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

THE SEVEN SEAS

121 Main St., Westport, Conn.

Oriental and other foreign items from a traveler's collection. Send 3-cent stamp for each of following lists, and inquire for wanted, but unlisted articles: Ivories, jades, snuff bottles, Cloisonne, Satsuma, Pill, and miscellaneous boxes, cameos, garnets, Oriental jewelry, embroideries, elephants, carvings. Prices from $2 to $200.

Detroit Record Club Forming

All collectors who are interested in the vocal artists of the past, preferably operatic, who live in the Detroit, Flint, Lansing and Ann Arbor area are cordially invited to get in touch with Wilfred Thompson, 18517 Saint Louis, Detroit 34, Michigan. Mr. Thompson may be reached by phone before 11:30 A. M. calling Tw. 1-7351. It is proposed that the club shall meet once a month to discuss the singers whose records will be played.— S. F.

ANTIQUES WANTED

Fine Victorian rose carved sofas, chairs and marble top tables. Also, oval shadow boxes in perfect condition. We buy from photographs only.

J. HARVEY SULLIVAN
U. S. 60, 62, and 68
at Ohio St., Paducah, Ky.

OLD DECALS

An unusual purchase of old time decals that were made in England, 1905 to 1915. They can be applied on china, wood, metal, etc.

Instructions included with each purchase. They are in pastel colors and make beautiful decorating on many home articles. Designs include — flowers, butterflies, birds, Chinese scenes, Dutch boy and girl, ladies in many poses, Hindu men, cupids, etc.

Our assortment of 10 decals, $1.25.
Our assortment of 20 decals, $2.00.

Mail check or money order to:

P. F. LUPO

1314 N. Wells St., Chicago 10, Ill.

EARLY AMERICAN FURNITURE

to the Wholesale Trade

For our current list write

W. J. FRENCH

High Street, Camden, Maine

Start HOME BUSINESS

Making Statuettes

You can easily start a home business of your own making statuettes, plaques, artificial marble flooring, liquid marble, flexible rubber molds, metallizing baby shoes. Amazing profits.

Valuable folder FREE

CREATIVE PUBLISHERS

Winnetka 15, Illinois

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

RICHARD J. JOSÉ III

By JIM WALSH

By 1920, Richard José's theatrical career had ended. Records of the California State government show that on February 1 that year he became a field deputy in the Division of Real Estate. He was promoted to senior investigator on May 13, 1936, and held that position until his death on October 20, 1941.

Although many years had passed since he sang for Victor, several of the counter-tenor's records remained in the catalog and were good sellers through 1919. These included the double-faced listing of "Abide With Me" and the twelve-inch, single-faced "Home, Sweet Home," "I Cannot Sing the Old Songs," "Silver Threads Among the Gold," "We've Been Chums for Fifty Years" and "When You and I Were Young, Maggie." But, beginning with the 1920 catalog, Victor discontinued all single-faced Black Label records, which left "Abide With Me" as José's only listing. And it was discontinued in 1923.

Nearly all acoustically recorded discs were stricken from the catalog after electrical methods were introduced in 1925. But there was a persistent demand for many fine old-style records. This led Victor to issue in 1927 a Special Catalog of Victor Records of Historical and Personal Interest. A foreword explained: "This catalog extends the music-lover's range of choice in selecting Victor records by relisting a number of records removed from time to time from the Victor Company's general catalogs, but now restored to the public by the public's own demand. . . Their musical, historic or personal interest has proven so great that buyers, lovers and students will not permit us to discontinue them. . . As with old books, their interest will not diminish but grow with time."

Several José records were included in this historical catalog. Rather surprisingly, the double-faced version of "Belle Brandon," which had been discontinued in 1913 was again made available, but "Abide With Me," which had been kept on the list nearly ten years longer, was not revived. Others which received a new lease of life were the twelve-inch "Silver Threads," "When You and I Were Young," "I Cannot Sing the Old Songs," "Ben Bolt" and "We've Been Chums."

And now we come to another phase of Richard José's life story—his success as a radio singer. While the popular countertenor was living in San Francisco and working for the State Division of Real Estate, radio became the most popular medium of home entertainment. For several years José's voice was not heard by means of the air. Then what happened may best be related by quoting parts of an article, "Back to the Days of Yesteryears," by Walter W. Cribbins, which appeared in a 1931 issue of Advertising Age:

About a month ago Hugh Barrett Dobbs, better known as "Dobbsie, Captain of the Shell Oil Company's Shell Ship of Joy," was broadcasting his regular morning Happy Time program over a Pacific Coast network of radio stations. Dobbsie was going through his routine program with no idea of who might be "listening in."

Richard José (pronounced Dick Ho-say) walked into the studio. A jazz orchestra was playing one of the modern "Hot Mamma" numbers. It was supposed to be music, but that may be questioned.

Dobbsie said: "Gee! I'm glad to see you, Dick. You're looking fine. Honestly, Dick, you don't look a day older than you did forty years ago when I paid my dime for a seat in nigger heaven where I listened to you sing. Those were wonderful old days, weren't they, Dick?" . . .

"Gosh, Dick, old fellow, I'd give my right arm if you'd sing for the folks that are listening in. Dick, a lot of the folks that are listening to that violin solo I've just played are sick in hospitals. Men and women in all walks of life are listening, and I know you can make this Shell Happy Time one of the happiest I have ever provided for 'shut-ins.' Dick, be a good scout—Will Hancock will play for you—sing 'When You and I Were Young, Maggie'—will you? Whaddaya say?"

"All right." Dick waved his hands. "I just dropped in to look on, but if you want me to sing to the 'shut-ins' I'll do it."

When Dobbsie went back to the microphone and announced that he was making an unexpected change in the program, his voice was quivering. The "listeners-in" must have sensed it and wondered what had happened. Then Dobbsie told the story of the man who had just dropped into the studio to look on.

"Richard José," he said, "has been singing from behind the footlights for more than half a century. The years have been piling up on him, and although it has been a long time since he sang in public, he is going to sing for you this morning. It is a happy privilege to introduce Dick José. He is going to sing 'When You and I Were Young, Maggie,' one of his oldest songs."

Richard José stood before the microphone. He closed his eyes. . . He seemed to be picturing in his memory some great audience. He seemed to be living over again one of his immense concerts of long years ago. . . . At the right instant, like an old fire horse that had responded to thousands of fires, Dick José opened his mouth and the song rolled out into the unknown. When he had finished Dobbsie pleaded with him to sing again.

"Dick, an elderly man has telephoned in requesting you to sing 'Silver Threads Among the Gold.' He said that he and little Mother were celebrating their golden wedding anniversary today."

"Glad to do it," Dick said, and nodded to Will Hancock to start playing. He sang a third song and when he had finished he said, "Now I'm going to listen to you fellows."

During the next twenty-four hours, hundreds of telegrams were received at the radio stations that had been connected up with KPO, expressing the most kindly thoughts and words of encouragement to Dick José. And the Shell Oil Company received thousands of letters, every one of which conveyed the thought, "Thank you—and won't you please have Mr. José sing again?"

Fire Departments and Police Departments sent letters and telegrams. Men and women were inspired to write poetry such as the following:

Back to the days of yesteryears
We go with you, my friend.
Our golden-voiced tenor,
Who to our day-dreams lend
Your music and your happiness
To give hearts that are sad
Sweet moments of forgetfulness
And to make them once more glad.
And so I send my greetings here—
God keep your heart still young
And bring you once again to us
With songs you oft have sung.

An attorney added this postscript to his letter: "I just finished the above letter when Dick started 'Silver Threads.' My wife is weeping silently out of pure happiness. Funny how women will cry when they ought to do the reverse. Don't give it away, but I feel a little moist myself."

A Seattle realtor wrote: "My wife and I listened to you sing this beautiful spring morning, and we thank you from the bottom of our hearts. Those songs carried us back and made it possible for us to live again the days of forty years ago when my wife and I started down the trail together. Your songs brought tears to our eyes, but a greater joy to our hearts."

An old trooper living at Stockton wrote: "If you don't sing the old songs that my mother used to sing to me at least once more, I'm going to be the most disappointed man on earth, and if you do—I'm due for a big bawl. Anyway, Dick, give an old trooper both barrels."

Never in all of his experience has this writer seen such letters and so many of them. Judging from the tremendous quantity of mail and telegrams, there must have been an audience of several hundred thousand people listening to Dick José on the never-to-be-forgotten morning. . . .

Dick José has proven that precious and priceless hours can be brought back. And he has demonstrated that a surprisingly large number of people will respond to an emotional appeal when they will not respond to any other kind. The sentimental appeal as a general rule, no doubt, is dangerous, because men don't know where to begin and when to stop. They "slop over" with insincerity. But when one can discover a Dick José and allow him to be himself, it is a simple matter to create the impression that he is typical of the organization he represents.

After that extremely successful initial broadcast, the almost legendary counter-tenor did much other radio singing that made him a prime favorite on the Pacific Coast and many other sections of the West. He was still in good voice at the time of his death, which occurred about 18 months after he underwent a prostate gland operation. The singer is buried in Mt. Olivet Memorial Park, San Francisco.

Several readers of Hobbies have asked me to write this series of articles about Mr. José. One of them is Osborne H. Parker, of San Francisco, who knew the singer and who has given me this vivid account of a meeting with José in his late years:

"I met Richard J. José when he was an old man and only a short time before his death in 1941. . . I am sorry you were not writing this series then, for I am sure the old man would have been overjoyed to give you a full history of his life and career. When I met him in 1939 he was quite heavy—a tall man to begin with and he was quite stout and must have weighed 250 pounds or more. When he got up from his massive arm chair he had to propel himself with his arms and I am sure he was top-heavy on his feet. Somewhere I have a list . . . where I typed, as I recall, 29 of his records with numbers that I could identify and he made notations of his favorites. He told me that it was either 'When You and I Were Young, Maggie' or 'Silver Threads Among the Gold' that he had introduced to American audiences and which he had to sing as an encore at every recital. (NOTE—This, of course, was 'Silver Threads Among the Gold,' which Mr. José, more than any other singer, made into a sentimental classic, but since it was published in 1873, when he was only one year old, he can hardly be said to have introduced it.—J. W.) When I asked José about copies of his records, he said he had not played one of them in years and that he had a complete set of them wrapped and packed away somewhere. He remarked that he had a brother living in England . . . who had never heard any of his records, so I gave him about a dozen duplicates I owned and he seemed very grateful and said he would send them off at once. About that time the war started (September, 1939), and I never saw the old man after that visit, so I doubt if the records ever reached England. . . Do you have his 12-inch 'Home, Sweet Home'? I have always liked that record, as he sings it with feeling and clear diction and then, too, it is unusual to find such a selection sung by a man."

In concluding this series, it seems fitting to give some biographical information about the former Miss

Therese Shreve, whom Mr. José married in 1898. Miss Shreve's father died when she was a baby, and her mother married Oliver Roberts. In her early womanhood she was a noted equestrienne, called "the last of the fast-riding side-saddlers." The former belle of St. Helena, California, was well known for her rides all over Napa county in the days when she first knew Richard José. She had three saddle horses, Nellie, Walker and Model. The latter was her favorite and she started riding him when he was a two-year-old colt. She says that her best record was five miles in 20 minutes, from the Schram ranch to the Villa Parrott. She was due home to dinner at 5 p. m., when she noticed the time was already 4:40. Says the former Mrs. José: "No other horse I ever rode could have made it. When I arrived home, which was the direction Model always liked to go, he was literally covered with froth. Joseph, the stable man, who thought I'd been chased by bandits, put a blanket on him so he wouldn't catch cold, but I never did it again." In those days Miss Shreve also had 32 dogs, all styles and breeds, which would follow her and Model across the fields and down the country roads. And Model was so intelligent that if she dropped her crop, he would pick it up with his teeth and proudly turn his head to give it to her.

After Mr. José's death, his wife married Herbert S. Hamlin, the editor and publisher of the Pony Express Magazine, of which she is associate editor. Mr. Hamlin for many years was historian of the State of Nevada and has himself written a biography of José, which will later appear in the Pony Express. The magazine contains a great deal of historical material dealing with the old pony express days and a general history of the early West in all its ramifications.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 32)

RECORDS

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o 126121

EIGHT THOUSAND different selections; vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—El. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. d126351

FINE OLD RECORDS for sale: Classical, vocal, operatic, violin, piano, vaudeville, jazz, popular, Lauder, McCormack, reasonably priced. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. je3084

AUCTION SALE: Unusual vocal Pathe, G&T, Odeon, Victor, Columbia records; Albers, Albani, Caruso, Delmas, Dornay, Morisson, Galvany, Rousseliere, etc.—Collectors' Haven, 907 N. Y. Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. BU 4-5470. jly3004

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. au6407

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (Moses). Price $3.75. American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, New York. f124201

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6084

MONTHLY AUCTION thousands classical vocal records. Free list. S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colorado. je6446

WANTED: U. S. and Everlasting 4-minute cylinder records. All answered. — N. Dullum, Colfax, N. D. my1821

WANTED: Phonograph records of cornet solos.—Steve Gilman, 66 Sims, Newport, R. I. my1001

WANTED: Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo records. — Gerhardt, 4316 Ridgeview, Cincinnati 5, Ohio. jly 6483

FOR SALE: 3 small Seeburg pianos, 6 Mills Violin boxes, 2 Orchestra pianos, 1 Tangley Calliope; all coin-operated, in good mechanical condition. Contact — O. L. Cooper, 3605 Gundry Ave., Long Beach, California. je3825

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. jly3084

"OLD MUSIC BOX MELODIES" recorded from rare old music boxes on standard 10" plastic records: No. 301, Home Sweet Home — On a Sunday Afternoon. No. 302, Mocking Bird — Love's Old Sweet Song. No. 303, Silver Threads Among the Gold — In the Gloaming. No. 2, Brahms's Cradle Song — Rockabye Baby. No. 3, Sweet and Low — Gounod's Sing, Smile, Slumber, $1.15 each postpaid. — Bornand Music Box Record Co., 333 Fifth Ave., Pelham 66, N. Y. au32701

FOR SALE: My record collection. Operatic, Caruso, Plancon, Era. List available. Will accept bids on individual records.—Mrs. Bradford Crocker, Palm Court, Bradenton, Fla. my1x

MISCELLANEOUS

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

"THE LAST of the Cremonas", booklet listing 30 other luthiers will be sent post paid for $1.—Berger, 5800 S. W. 27th St., Coral Gables, Fla. je120041

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850 for sale. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. List 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. my122511

FLUTE, Baxter, beautiful condition, all silver, $35. Also a five pedal harp.—C. E. H. Whitlock, 15 Broadway, New Haven, Conn. je3882

MODERN MUSICAL BOXES (Swiss chalets, trays, powder and cigarette boxes). Musical Banjos. Many tunes available. Information free.—Shonback, P. O. Box: 989, San Francisco 1, Calif. jly3633

FOR SALE: Regina Music Box, oak, double comb, 20 discs, 15 1/2"; good condition. $80.—Onan Short, Luray, Va. my1821

VIOLINS, HANDMADE, master toned, inquire. Violin wood on approval. Scrolls, chin rests.—O. Nedvidek, 8635 S. E. 30th St., Portland 2, Ore. my1253

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp, please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. je3614

FOR SALE: Collectors Prize: Tangley Calliope with blower, refinished, completely restored, $750. Coin operated player piano as is, $175. Deagan Triple Octave Chimes restored, $350. 65 note piano rolls. Expert repair service on above.—Lee, 934 N. Lancaster, Dallas, Texas. my3426

A GENUINE David Hopf violin; perfect condition, excellent tone. $800.00.—Little Eva's Antique Shop, 3032 Delesea Drive, Glassboro, N. J. jly3003

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. jly3272

MUSIC — REPAIR

MELODEONS restored like new. We buy, sell, repair.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids 6, Mich. je6215

BELLS

Bell Collectors Meeting in New York City

The American Bell Association will hold its annual convention at the Hotel Statler, New York, N. Y., June 29 and 30.

The program is announced as follows:

PROGRAM:

Thursday, June 29, 1950

Registration ($5.00) and meeting fellow members 10-12 noon in The Keystone Room of the Statler.

2-4:30 P. M. Business Meeting in The Keystone Room.

6:30-9 P. M. Japanese meal in Japanese restaurant.

Friday, June 30, 1950

9-12 noon Open House at Mr. S. S. Sarna's Shop, Room 629, 225 Fifth Avenue.

2-4 P. M. Visit the Carillon of Riverside Church.

6:30 P. M. - 10 P. M. Indian Meal at Indian restaurant. Mr. Sarna will be in costume to talk about bells. There will be Indian Music. Mr. Sarna will present special souvenir bells of the convention.

Officers of the club for this year are: President: Paul Mellinger, Los Angeles, Calif.; Vice-President: Gladys L. Gage, Hartford, Conn.; Secretary: Edna M. Bailey, Cleveland Heights, Ohio; Treasurer: L. W. Sorowfree, Davenport, Iowa; Editor of the Bell Tower: Mrs. Alter Collins, Tarentum, Pennsylvania.

BELLS WANTED

WANTED: Bells.—Mrs. Tilden Patton, Lexington, Ill. d12844

WANTED: Old and unusual glass and metal bells.—Mrs. E. N. Hamlin, 4937 Park Ave., Minneapolis, Minn. au6446

Bells Wanted: Old, odd, interesting.—C. F. Ziegler, 48 Woodland Lane, Arcadia, Calif. au4218

FOR SALE

FARM BELLS, complete, each $10. Dealers discounts. — Patricia, Marion, Ohio. ap12046

OLD BELLS LIST FREE.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. d12216

BELLS: Ceramic, dainty floral designs, "Mother" under glaze; suitable Mother Day gift, $1 each, postpaid.—Irene Irvine, 6339 Hillen Drive, Oakland 19, California. my1081

TRAVEL SEARCH FOR BELLS

By A. C. Meyer — $2.50 postpaid

In the last 10 years, semi-retired, Mr. Meyer and his wife, also a bell enthusiast, indulged their hobby of bell collecting, which has taken them to many parts of the world. In every city and virtually every crossroads, they added interesting specimens to their collection. Mr. Meyer has summarized it all in a down-to-earth story.

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING CORPORATION
1006 S. Michigan Blvd., Chicago 5, Ill.

A Church Bell

Of interest to bell collectors and readers of this page, we think the following notes on the history of a church and its original steeple bell will add enjoyment to those old and new in the field.

"The Quincy Point Congregational Church Bell was cast in the year 1845. The bell carried the inscription: 'Cast by George H. Holbrook, East Medway, Mass., 1845.' The bell measured 34 inches at its opening diameter and weighed 1,024 pounds. The bell's tongue or clapper was made of hand wrought iron.

"The Quincy Point Church was dedicated on July 19, 1838, in Quincy Point, as a Methodist-Episcopal Church. Although a tower was built at that time, the bell was not purchased until seven years later in 1845.

"The original church was of one story. In 1884, when it was felt that more room was needed for Church activities, the building was raised approximately 10 feet and a vestry, kitchen, parlor, office, etc. constructed underneath. At the same time the Church dropped its affiliation with the Methodist Church and joined the local Congregational Association. When the building was raised 10 feet the bell was heard at a much greater distance, since its tones were able to clear nearby residences.

"The Church stood on the corner of South and Washington streets for 111 years. On May 2, 1949, construction started on a new building at the corner of Abbey Road and Washington street, one-half mile nearer the center of the City from the old site.

"On June 27, 1949, the old Church Sanctuary was moved up Washington street to the new site, where it was incorporated as part of the new Church building. The old Sanctuary was lowered to its original foundation; the vestry beneath, that had been erected in 1884, being eliminated, the bell was removed with a crane as the tower had to be removed in order to allow the building to clear the high tension wires on this main thoroughfare. The moving process of this building, 67 feet long, 42 feet wide, and 35 feet high, took 20 hours for the half-mile route, although the lowering of the building and then raising it on to its new foundation made the entire moving an eight week process.

"The original bell was sent to Bevin Brothers Bell Company in East Hampton, Connecticut, where it was melted down into small Tea Bells to be used as Souvenirs of the Quincy Point Congregational Church, Quincy, Mass."

MUSIC

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21)

The publishers maintain in connection with it a Pony Express Museum. Mr. and Mrs. Hamlin live at 500 Virginia Avenue, San Mateo, California. They come through on occasion with editorials vigorously attacking what they consider to be the iniquities of the Roosevelt New Deal and the Truman administration. It is obvious that both are absorbed in the historically valuable work that they are doing. And I sincerely hope that they will like this biographical sketch of Richard José, who was a truly fine artist, occupying an important niche in the history of the American theater and recorded music.

—O—

Deaths of Franklin Baur and E. Robert Schmitz

Franklin Baur, one of the popular recording tenors of the 1920's, died February 24, at his home in his birthplace, Brooklyn, New York. He was 46.

Mr. Baur was only 20 when his first Victor record was issued in March, 1924, but he was already well known as a church and concert singer. For a few years Baur did extensive free-lance recording, but after a time restricted his work to Victor, Columbia and Brunswick and finally became an exclusive Victor artist for solo work. In 1924, when Charles Hart retired from the Shanon Four to go to Germany and study for opera, Baur took his place, and remained with the organization when its name was changed to The Revelers. He was with the ensemble when it toured Europe in 1927. A year or so later, Baur was succeeded by James Walton. Baur also sang in the Ziegfield Follies of 1927 and 1928 and was the original "Voice of Firestone" on a network radio program from 1929 to 1931. He retired in the mid-1930's. The tenor was unmarried and made his home with his sister, Mrs. Marie Kuhlman.

E. Robert Schmitz, a famous French-born pianist, who made a number of Edison records and afterwards recorded for Victor, died last September 5 in a San Francisco hospital after being taken ill at his home. He was 60. Mr. Schmitz, who first gained fame in 1910 when he won first prize in piano at the Paris International Conservatory, is survived by his wife, Mrs. Germaine Schmitz; a daughter, Mrs. Jean Leduc, and a granddaughter.

J. W.

BELLS, U. S. and FOREIGN

Bells for Patios
Gardens and Summer Homes

Write for prices, etc. myp

THE NORTHWOODS WORKSHOP
Minocqua, Wisconsin

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

FRED DUPREZ I

By JIM WALSH

During the nearly ten years in which have been writing for HOBBIES, I have gathered information about the pioneer recording artists in many different ways. But now, as I set about narrating the life story of that brilliant comedian, Fred Duprez (pronounced Du-Pree), it occurs to me that this is the first time I have had the privilege of reading an artist's own press books and copying from them to suit my purpose.

I am able to do this because of the kindness of the comedian's brother, Charles Duprez, a noted photographer of Bellerose, New York, who has sent me two scrapbooks which Fred kept when he was appearing with stock companies and in vaudeville from January, 1905, to October, 1911. In these inexpensive volumes the comedian pasted every reference to himself that appeared in newspapers and theatrical magazines. Oddly enough, although Duprez began to make records within a few years after the start of his vaudeville career, I haven't been able to find any mention in the press books of his recording activities. Nevertheless, they are fascinating reading because of the information they contain about the man who won a world-wide reputation as a monologist and singer of comic songs before his untimely death in 1938 at the age of 54.

Perhaps the best article in Fred Duprez's scrapbook has the title, "Fred Duprez a Winner Last Week at the Alhambra." It appeared in the New York Morning Telegraph for Sunday, February 11, 1911, and was written by Carolyn Lowrey. Since it gives a good condensed account of the comedian's career up to that time, I shall quote:

"... Fred Duprez was born in Detroit. His father was Paul Duprez, one of the most noted German character actors of his day. He also had his own German company. Fred Duprez also had a noted mother. She was Martha Wedemeyer, who was one of the most prominent of German stock women of her time. ... Fred Duprez is possessed of that inexplicable, indefinable quality which, for want of a better name, is known as magnetism. He has the sort of magnetism which gets over the footlights. It's infectious or contagious, whichever you want to call it. I observed the audience. Fred Duprez held it in his hand. His clever monolog was punctuated by the bursts of applause from the audience. There was no straining of voice. There was no horseplay. In fact, his methods are marked by perfect ease of manner, delightful poise and material that is good. I knew forth-while why Fred Duprez is a favorite. ...

"I found during the interview that one of Mr. Duprez's chief charms was an absolute frankness that one seldom expects and more seldom receives outside of childhood. Mr. Duprez said that he went on the stage as a little boy, playing boy parts, such as the son in 'William Tell,' but his father wanted him to go in for a business career. He at that time, he told me, wanted to go to sea.

"Such high-class literature as 'Diamond Dick' was at that time my delight, and so at the age of fifteen I worked my way in the clean capacity of coal pusher on a steamer to Europe. I did after that really serve one year as a sailor. Rolling up his sleeve, he showed me the emblems of anchor, star, butterfly and an almost dagger.

"He said when he left home for this trip he had exactly ten cents, ... and a second-hand valise. He spent five cents to get to New York from Brooklyn, three cents for the ferry to Hoboken and two cents for tobacco. When he arrived in Germany they paid him four dollars for his services and that he took to get him to Berlin.

"Then his uncle received him and put him in a business college. When his college career was finished he returned home and entered a business office, but stayed only three weeks. An advertisement in the paper for a supernumerary in a show was too much for him and started the old longing to which through birth he had a perfect right.

"I took the super position at ten per week with Kyrle Bellew in 'The Gentleman of France,' he said. After a season with Mr. Bellew in the same capacity, I joined a stock company in Brooklyn, from which I was fired in two weeks. I thought then that it was because the stage manager was jealous of my ability. I then put in two seasons with a one-night stand company with a play written by the Biddle Brothers.

"I then joined repertoire companies and came home that season about six times on the tail of a freight car. At each break I would get another job at an advanced salary and would then get my trunk from the last town with that money. ... After this I became a member of better repertoires and stock companies and used to play comedy roles, as well as other roles, giving a specialty between the acts. It was during this time that the hypnotist, Prescelle, who had his show there, offered me the big sum of five dollars more a week to go with him and do a specialty between acts. I accepted, and learned through this engagement that I was able to hold my audience alone, and so determined at least to try. By accident I caught a Sunday night about four years ago. I am grateful to be able to say that I was fortunate enough to make a hit, and the answer is that I have been working in the same way ever since."

"I halted Mr. Duprez long enough to learn that it was while playing the spy in 'The Spy to the Czar' that his fine work and excellent make-up attracted general attention. His work in changing from comedy roles to the serious part of the spy and doing it so splendidly is a great tribute to his remarkable versatility.

"Continuing, he said: 'I have been going to Europe every summer for a rest, but I am glad to say that this year I am going over to work. Open Tivoli, London, July 3.' ... One of these days some wise manager will strave in and discover that Fred Duprez is just the man for a musical comedy production. When that time comes, as it surely will, the manager will be open to congratulations, as Mr. Duprez is sure to make a hit."

As will be seen later, the Telegraph's Miss Lowry had the gift of prophecy.

The foregoing article puts us ahead of the beginning of Fred Duprez's vaudeville and recording career. Still another clipping explains that his parents, not wanting him to go on the stage, sent him to live with his grandparents in Brooklyn. As has already been shown, the result of the youngster's being shipped to Brooklyn was his starting out, possessed of one thin dime, to see the world.

This appears to be a good place at which to use some of his brother Charlie's reminiscences about Fred. Charles tells me that the Comedian's full name was Frederick August Duprez and that he was born on September 6, 1884. My photographer friend writes:

"Mother and Father were always on the German stage, and at home we always spoke German. At five years of age I couldn't speak anything else. Father was born in France, but his parents on one side were more German than French. He did speak French — that I know.

"Fred's eyes," Charles Duprez continues, "were brown. He had black hair, which in later years was quite scarce. As a boy of eleven he shipped on a Pan American steamer, the Advantage, going to Colon, South America, as a cabin boy. All his early adventures were through his being an addict of reading lurid dime novels, which he passed on to me, and while I did not follow in his footsteps I gave these books the credit for the many travels and adventures I had throughout the West.

"The first trip Fred took at 14 (he always looked older than he was), the boat was the Barbarossa, a North German Lloyd liner. He worked as a coal passer, and arrived in Germany looking like a first class bum. When he presented himself before my relatives over there, who were very wealthy people, they quickly rushed him off to a bath and to the tailor's for a complete transformation before presenting him to the rest of his relatives.

"The name of the stock company he first tried for and was engaged with was the Elite, at the Gotham in Brooklyn. He was sore because at the opening of the season he was omitted from the opening play, a melodrama called 'The Octoroon.' He was used then as a soldier in 'Under Two Flags,' where all he had to do was dash in and yell something about the enemy's closing in. The following week he was fired. Then he tried to do a single blackface in a small community at the seaside place called Canarsie. He went on and the manager said he was lousy, gave him a quarter and told him to get out—which didn't discourage him a bit, as was shown in the years that followed. One of the companies he joined in Massachusetts was called 'The Village Grocer.' This didn't last the week, so he came back on a freight car. Another time he was stranded with a show out West somewhere and to get enough money to return home, he organized a vaudeville show from the remaining cast and they made enough to eat and land back in New York. He worked as a drug clerk in his uncle's store and broke so many bottles his uncle had to fire him, too.

"His first successful vaudeville performance was at the New Brighton Theatre, where he had the opportunity of filling in for an act that had to be cancelled on a Sunday night. ... I can still remember when he came into our bedroom (we always slept together) and he lit the light and was dancing around, and said: 'Kid, I sure went over big! Did twenty minutes and they hollered for more!' From there he really went places."

I'll use more of Charles Duprez's reminiscences later. But now I turn to Fred's first press book and find that that the initial clipping is of a program which a stock company was giving at the Howard Theatre in Chicago during the week of January 22, 1905. The play was "Me and Mother," by Joseph Clifton, and Fred had the part of Harry Hammond, described as "an ex-telegraph operator." A few weeks later the company produced an adaptation of Dickens' "Oliver Twist," with Fred as The Artful Dodger — a role in which he should have been admirable. Later, he was with the Fenburg and Maude Hillman stock companies, and still later, as the Telegraph interview recounted, with Prescelle, the Magician. Here is an excerpt from a newspaper review of the latter period: "The specialties last evening again met with approval, especially Fred Duprez, who with the local touch to his jokes and originality, has caught Newport by storm."

By December 10, 1906, Duprez, after several vaudeville appearances, was at the Passaic Theatre, where he was described as a "parodist-comedian" and called "The Phunny Phellow." From this time on he was almost unvaryingly successful. In March, 1907, he was at Young's Pier Theatre, Atlantic City. Here is a newspaper review of his act:

"Fred Duprez, the clever monolog artist and singer of parodies. . . is one of the most prolific song writers in the country. He never uses anything in the nature of a parody that has been written by others, for the reason that he can do a great deal better work for himself, and in addition he saves that outlay of money. He never fails to get a few points from somebody on going into a new place, and he immediately sits down and writes a verse or two with the local flavor in it and has it ready to sing at the first performance he gives. The parodies which he is singing this week are among the best that have ever been sung at the shore, and he is making a hit with every one."

By the time he appeared at the Unique Theatre in Minneapolis the week of July 22, 1907, Fred had quit calling himself "The Phunny Phellow" and had become known as "The Ezra Kendall of Varieties." Ezra Kendall was a then famous comedian, now almost forgotten, whose dry humor was considered a model for monologists. The Evansville, Indiana, Courier commented: "What Ezra Kendall is to the winter theatre, Fred Duprez, parodist of Kendall, is to the vaudeville stage. . . His jokes are not a re-hash of Kendall's. Duprez has his own original quips and philosophy and makes them worth hearing by adopting the manner that Kendall would take were he on the vaudeville stage."

The Telegraph interview rather gave the impression that Duprez had never, during his visits to Europe, appeared on the stage in England, but that is not true. One of the programs in his first press book shows him to have performed at the Bedford Palace of Varieties in London during the week of August 3, 1908.

Turning now to the green-covered book, which begins with the program at the Colosseum Theatre in Newark on Sunday, October 4, 1908, I am impressed by the almost uniformly favorable comment on Duprez's series of vaudeville acts. The nearest thing to a bad notice I have found was written by a newspaper critic who saw the comedian's performance at Poli's Theatre in Hartford, Conn., during the week of January 10, 1910:

"Fred Duprez in the short time that he appears on the stage pushes out a lot of nonsense and some of it decidedly spicily and which might well be omitted.

Some of the jokes are fair, others were in evidence when father was a boy and should have been laid away to rest as having outlived their usefulness. But as Marshall Wilder once said, when at Poli's, 'It all depends on how the jokes are told.' Duprez gets away with it and the house laughs."

Much more typical were the remarks of a writer who saw Duprez at Poli's Theatre in Springfield, Mass., the following week:

"Fred Duprez (is) a really excellent monologist. His parodies are funny without being vulgar, and his stories—most of them, at least—have a modern flavor. His manner, however, is his chief claim to commendation, as he has a quiet, droll, dry voice that strikes center every time. The best thing is the parody of 'You're as Welcome as the Flowers in May,' sung to the accompaniment of burlesque burglar music. It is decidedly funny."

After Duprez began his vaudeville career he used a lighted cigar as part of his act. It was something of a trademark and he was known as "The Man With the Cigar." This accessory didn't meet with the approval of a Milwaukee critic, who wrote, when Fred was appearing there at the Majestic Theatre in January, 1911:

"Fred Duprez, monologist, in his attempt at originality of methods, . . . offends against good taste by smoking a cigar throughout the act. A straight monolog is too directly addressed to the audience to make such a breach excusable, especially when the monologist takes occasion to say, 'I'm talking to you, girls.'"

The Telegraph article mentioned Duprez's adept use of make-up in "The Spy and the Czar," but grease paint was one thing that the comedian prided himself on not needing in vaudeville. Witness this clipping from the Johnstown, Pa., Democrat, for October 20, 1909:

"Of peculiar interest in connection with Fred Duprez, parodist comedian at the Majestic this week, is the fact that he is 'the man without make-up,' self."

MISCELLANEOUS

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. jyl24261

"THE LAST of the Cremonas", booklet listing 30 other luthiers will be sent post paid for $1.—Berger, 5800 S. W. 27th St., Coral Gables, Fla. jyl20041

FLUTE, Baxter, beautiful condition, all silver, $35. Also a five pedal harp. — C. E. H. Whitlock, 15 Broadway, New Haven, Conn. jyl3882

MODERN MUSICAL BOXES (Swiss chalets, trays, powder and cigarette boxes). Musical Banjos. Many tunes available. Information free.—Shonback, P. O. Box: 989, San Francisco 1, Calif. jly3633

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants, No lists. Stamp, please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. jyl3614

A GENUINE David Hopf violin; perfect condition, excellent tone. $300.00.—Little Eva's Antique Shop, 3032 Delesea Drive, Glassboro, N. J. jly3003

OLD POPULAR MUSIC, I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. jly3272

SWISS MUSIC Movements, assorted tunes, $1.80. Direct from Importer. Stamped with year of manufacture, "1950".—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, N. Y. s4652

MUSIC — REPAIR

MELODEONS restored like new. We buy, sell, repair.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids 6, Mich. jyl215 dom if ever using grease paints. He can justly claim that he has the least preparation of anyone on the variety stage.

"What is the need of make-up in my kind of an act? Paints may be (CONTINUED ON PAGE 33)

RECORDS

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

EIGHT THOUSAND different selections; vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. d126351

FINE OLD RECORDS for sale: Classical, vocal, operatic, violin, piano, vaudeville, jazz, popular, Lauder, McCormack, reasonably priced. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. jyl3084

AUCTION SALE: Unusual vocal Pathe, G&T, Odeon, Victor, Columbia records; Albers, Albani, Caruso, Delmas, Dornay, Morisson, Galvany, Rousseliere, etc.—Collectors' Haven, 907 N. Y. Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. BU 4-5470. jly3004

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. au6407

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (Moses). Price $3.75. American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, New York. f124201

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6084

MONTHLY AUCTION thousands classical vocal records. Free list. — S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colorado. jyl6446

WANTED: Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo records. — Gerhard, 4316 Ridgeview, Cincinnati 5, Ohio. jly 6483

FOR SALE: 3 small Seeburg pianos, 6 Mills Violin boxes, 2 Orchestra pianos, 1 Tangle Calliope; all coin-operated, in good mechanical condition. Contact — O. L. Cooper, 3605 Gundry Ave., Long Beach, California. jyl3825

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. jyl24201

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. jly3084

"OLD MUSIC BOX MELODIES" recorded from rare old music boxes on standard 10" plastic records: No. 301, Home Sweet Home - On a Sunday Afternoon. No. 302, Mocking Bird - Love's Old Sweet Song. No. 303, Silver Threads Among the Gold - In the Gloaming. No. 2, Brahms' Cradle Song - Rockabye Baby. No. 3, Sweet and Low - Gounod's Sing, Smile, Slumber. $1.15 each postpaid. — Bornand Music Box Record Co., 333 Fifth Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y. au32701

RARE OLD RECORDS: Monthly sales list. Classical, vocal, popular, collector's items. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. s6445

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. jyl291

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening"; large, varied stock. Please state "wants", write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. n6329

FOREIGN phonograph records wanted! I want to buy Foreign phonograph records. Polkas, waltzes and folk dances. —Arthur Tate, Star Route, Hillsboro, Missouri. jyl481

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21)

necessary in portraying some characters, but I am only an entertainer. It's my work, not my make-up, that draws my envelope each week," he says. Hardly five minutes are necessary for Mr. Duprez to get ready for his act. His sack coat is changed for a long one and a "stove pipe" replaces a derby. Then, with a lighted cigar, he is ready to take his turn at entertaining. "How do the people know that the trousers I wear during my act are part of the suit I wear on the street? They give little attention to such incidentals. There would be no difference if I took the time to make a complete change. My success is due not to dress or to make-up, but to the parodies and jokes I offer."

Unlike many vaudevillians, who used the same act without change for years, Duprez prided on making frequent revisions of his material and interpolating references to current events. In fact, he changed his act every sixty days (oftener, he sometimes remarked, than some men changed their socks!)—and he had not one monolog but several, as is shown by the following, from the Baltimore Star for Thursday, May 27, 1909:

"... I have seven monologs that I use, for I try to have one to suit my audience. When I first go out on the stage I study the audience to see just what they want, and then I use the monolog that I think will suit them best. An actor must study the audience to see what will please them if he wishes his act to be a success; it is surprising that a line of work that will please in Washington will not take in Baltimore and so it is up to the actor to study his audience and try to please them."

Duprez wrote much of his material himself. But he also bought the "budgets" of James Madison, a well-known comedy writer, and one of the clippings tells of his paying his fellow vaudevillian, J. C. Nugent, a thousand dollars to write a new 15-minute monolog. This occurred when they were playing at the Temple in Detroit in 1911. Nugent wrote the act in little more than 24 hours and immediately received Duprez's check. It's interesting, too, to find that the comedian worked in front of a back drop purporting to be a "song factory," in which his many parodies supposedly were turned out by machinery.

Duprez was almost unique among monologists in one respect. He was an accomplished linguist — a gift that may be attributed partly to his habit of spending every summer abroad, sometimes for relaxation and at other times combining work with pleasure. And, of course, he had learned German from his parents. Here's a clipping which appeared in an Omaha paper while Fred was appearing at the Orpheum Theatre in November, 1910:

"Fred Duprez, monologist, read the election returns in the Orpheum Tuesday evening and created a stir when he announced that China had gone Democratic. Fred says there is humor even in a pickle. He gives his act in German when in Germany and in French when in France. He now threatens to invade China, for he spends much of his time studying the Chinese language."

Another critic remarked that Duprez used exceptionally good English. So he did—in spite of a peculiar fondness for accenting many words strongly on the first syllable, when most speakers would place the emphasis somewhere else. I base this comment on careful listening to his records. And now it's time to lay down the press books and pay attention to Fred Duprez's career as a recording artist.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

CIRCUSIANA

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25)

more prosaic types of wearing apparel would be disposed of.

And yet, most of this wardrobe is stored in trunks in attics because there has been no demand for it from the circusiana collectors' ranks.

We have reason to believe that should a project be started to preserve wardrobe that would show the trend in circus costuming as well as maintain the costumes worn by the great and near-great of circusdom, that such a collection could be gotten together with the cooperation of a great number of people over the country who have these items.

Many, undoubtedly, would be donated to the cause, while others might be held for varying prices by their possessors. But whether the budget for such a collection be large or small, a fairly representative number of pieces of wearing apparel could be assembled and would be the beginning of what might eventually be one of the most interesting of all circusiana collections in this country.

A CIRCUS PAYROLL of 1866

RECEIVED, New York, May 3rd, 1866, from John A. Duff, Esq., by hands of J. Kenna, the amount set opposite our names below for services rendered N. Y. Circus and in full of all demands to April 30th, 1866.

(Actual pen signatures)

Joe Pentland	$ 50.00
J. O. Wicklin	10.00
W. Duenwin ?	40.00
James Madigan	40.00
Charles Madigan	30.00

W. A. Donawan	30.00
Edwin Croneste	75.00
F. Siegrist	75.00
Frank Lee	25.00
J. Metrenges ?	15.00
Henry Codena	40.00
Geo. W. Hood	10.00
Joseph Paymore ?	10.00
Patrick Foy	5.00
C. C. Moore	25.00
W. McHugh ?	4.00
Chas. Bonato & Band ?	183.00
McManus	10.00
James G. Cooke	175.00
John Stoddart	10.00
Jno. Kenna	15.00
S. P. Stickney	30.00
Emma Stickney	6.00
James A. Cooke	85.00
C. E. Madigan	30.00
O. E. Howe	15.00
Sweepers	8.00
Nat. Austin	75.00
Mrs. Durelle	8.00
Lizzie Walsh	8.00
Mrs. V. E. Cooke	125.00
C. W. Fuller	38.45
William Wallace	20.00
Josephine Sawyer	10.00
W. S. Salams ?	40.00
Daniel P. Thatcher	12.00
Jno. Kenna	15.00
Geo. W. P. Avery	8.00
G. Howard	8.00
H. Forest	20.00
J. H. Madigan, by S.	50.00
G. B. Sent ?	75.00
Ashton and Wife	24.00
Total	$1365.45

Contributed by A. B. CALDWELL

Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements

JOIN THE CRAFTS COLONY

Located on the most beautiful stretch of southern California's coast, on Highway 101 (the Pacific Coast Highway) in a new community with unparalleled outlet opportunity to tourists. One each of every art, and craft desired. You own your business. All utilities in and paid for. Buildings to order, or build your own. Enjoy living in a climatic Shangri-la.

Information by request t/r

Box 100, Shell Beach, Calif.

HILLCREST SHOP

9616 Brecksville Rd., Brecksville, Ohio

Collection of 500 lighting devices.
Collection of Flasks and bitters bottles.
About 30 pieces of clear Rose-in-Snow.

Write your wants. Stamp, please.

jep

If You're Moving

Don't forget to send a post card to HOBBIES' Subscription Dept., 1006 S. Michigan, Chicago 5, Ill. Mail your card at least two weeks before the date of issue.

Your Local Museum and Library are worthy of your whole-hearted support and encouragement

Check and double check and if they have not yet subscribed to HOBBIES, a gift subscription would make an ideal remembrance of the season.

Keep in mind that HOBBIES already has a large circulation among this group, so please check first.

HOBBIES
1006 S. Michigan, Chicago

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists FRED DUPREZ II

By JIM WALSH

Fred Duprez's first disc record, made for Columbia in 1909, was A633, "A Vaudeville Rehearsal" (coupled with "The Sweetest Gal in Town," by Collins and Harlan), and in it he sang the "burglar parody" which several newspaper writers had considered funny. This "Vaudeville Rehearsal" was one of Fred's favorite stunts, which he frequently revised. He would pretend that he was running through the music for a "new drama," but would have all sorts of trouble with the orchestra, which would either play the wrong tune or sound off in a ludicrously inappropriate way. In an improved form, "A Vaudeville Rehearsal" became one of his best specialties, "Desperate Desmond" (the title was taken from a comic strip by Harry Hershfield), which he did for both Columbia and Edison. The Edison record, because of its greater length and superior recording, is much the better.

The parody on "You're As Welcome as the Flowers in May" used the old theme of the maiden ladies who suspected there was a burglar in the room, but were charmed rather than frightened by the prospect. The chorus quotes one spinster as saying to the other:

"He's as welcome as the flowers in May!
Lock the door so he can't get away!
We've been waiting for him day by day —
He's as welcome as the flowers in May!"

Duprez's next Columbia, No. A643, "Make a Noise Like a Hoop and Roll Away," was doubled with Billy Murray's "Yankiana Rag," and has been one of my favorite records since my earliest recollection. The music of the Murray side was written by an American entertainer, the late Melville C. Gideon, who, like Duprez himself, later went to England to live and became a theatrical favorite in his adopted country. "Make a Noise" gave the comedian his first real introduction to Columbia audiences as a singer with a pleasant baritone voice. He does no talking in this record, but the song, by J. Fred Helf, is almost a glossary of the American slang of the early 1900's.

The next three Columbia solo records by Duprez also were singing numbers. They were A726, "How Did the Bird Know That?" (coupled with "I'll Be There With Bells On," by Ada Jones); A844, "When You Marry a Girl for Looks" (with "The Grizzly Bear," by Arthur Collins); and A824, "I'm On My Way to Reno" (with "Oh, You Blondy," by Ada Jones).

Meanwhile, Duprez had teamed up with "Ragtime Bob" Roberts to make A758, "Blitz and Blatz in an Aeroplane," which had "Then We'll All Go Home," by one of the most talented but generally overlooked phonograph comedians, Eddie Morton, on the other side. The "Blitz and Blatz" record was a comedy number in German dialect, somewhat on the order of Weber and Fields' once highly popular sketches. Several months later the comedian did another monolog on Columbia record No. A1085, "The 11:69 Express"—doubled with "Darktown Poets," by Golden and Hughes. "The 11:69 Express" is a rather far-fetched recitation about a train wreck, done in farcical style with burlesque sound effects by the orchestra. To me it isn't so amusing as most other Duprez records. The name of the author is given as William S. Robinson.

Somewhere about this time Duprez began making records for the Indestructible Company, whose unbreakable cylinders were brought out five years before Edison introduced his Blue Amberols. The Indestructible firm, which later changed its name to Federal, had an agreement, after Columbia stopped making wax cylinders in October, 1909, by which Indestructibles were sold for a couple of years under the Columbia name. Charlie Duprez says that the Indestructible company at that time was in business on Livingston street in Brooklyn. Later its headquarters was in Albany. He also says that Fred's greatest pal was the concern's recording manager, Con Schoenefeld, who is still living, but has been a cripple, unable to walk, for more than a decade.

I don't have an Indestructible catalog for the period during which Duprez was making cylinders, but he appears to have turned out many more records for that company than he did for Columbia. There were several of the "Blitz and Blatz" series, of which I have two—1160, "Blitz and Blatz at the Seashore" and 1183, "Blitz and Blatz's Discussion." In both, Fred is assisted by Bob Roberts. There were others in which Steve Porter was Blatz. Byron G. Harlan helped him in "The Actor and the Rube." Duprez's solos for Indestructible, or Federal, included "What's the Matter With Father?" "A Little Bit Is a Whole Lot Better Than Nothing at All," "Keep Your Foot on the Soft Pedal" (this appears to have been his theme song in vaudeville at one time), "My Girl," and "Father Is a Judge." He also made a few U. S. Everlasting cylinders, including "You'll Do the Same Thing Over Again."

One of Duprez's most amusing records was the Indestructible of a composition with the unpromising title of "Thomaschefskey." It set forth the joy of a Yiddish gentleman whose sister had done something even more breathtaking than if she had married Caruso. She had become the wife of Thomaschefskey! A year or so ago I learned from an article by George Jessel in Variety that Mr. Thomaschefskey was noted a generation since as the owner of a famous theater of New York's East side. Up to then I hadn't understood that the song was written about a living personage.

Charlie Duprez also recalls that his brother, Fred, made a German record

WANTED COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.
EDISON GRAND OPERA
CYLINDERS:

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophone by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT
West Falmouth,
Mass.

Persons offering material not specified above,
or seeking information, are requested to enclose
a stamped envelope for reply.

MUSIC BOXES

Visit the famous

A. V. BORNAND

collection in our NEW ENLARGED showrooms at 139 Fourth Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y.

Send for list of choice items for sale.

We do complete restoring of all types of music boxes, entirely re-pin the cylinders, replace broken teeth and points, re-tune the combs, etc. All work guaranteed. Estimates and appraisals cheerfully given.

A. V. BORNAND CO. — 139 4th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y.

(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

SC

for Indestructible. It was called "Immer an der Wand Entlang," meaning "Always Along the Wall."

Now we'll go back to Duprez's green press book and examine two or three items bearing on the trip that he made to Europe in 1911. Under the heading of "Vaudeville Notes," Ben Barnett wrote, in an unidentified publication: "There is one vaudeville artist who is going to Europe this season simply for the pleasure of the trip. He is Fred Duprez, the monologist, and he sails on May 28. Duprez is an example of the thrifty and enterprising artist. He has been working steadily since last summer and has saved enough money to pay his way abroad and enjoy all the comforts of a millionaire's traveling for his health. 'I do this every year,' Duprez told me the other day. 'You see I need a rest after a hard and strenuous season, and I might as well blow in my money in this manner as to put it over the bar, making a reputation as a good fellow.'"

Another news item said: "Fred Duprez, who is up at the Bronx Theatre this week, has designs on Europe. He will sail for foreign lands on the Campania May 17, and will go to London for two days. He will then go direct to Berlin, spending the balance of May and June in that city. He opens July 3 at the Tivoli, Strand, London. Mr. Duprez is no stranger to London. He appeared there a couple of years ago, and London liked him so well that his present bookings at the Tivoli are the result."

Fred did go abroad and appear at the Tivoli for the week beginning July 3. He returned to New York on July 18, aboard the Kronprinzessin Cecilie. One of his clippings said that he would begin a 36 weeks vaudeville tour, "on United time," on August 21, and would then go to Australia. It added: "The Australian engagement followed Mr. Duprez's showing in London a few weeks ago, where he scored an unmistakable hit."

And here's an intriguing paragraph, which should have been quoted a bit earlier: "VAUDEVILLE NOTES. When Fred Duprez sailed for Europe last week he was almost the last one aboard, he was so busy talking to friends; then, just as he was about to board the steamer, a young lady rushed frantically up the pier and kissed Fred on the gangplank." This note doesn't clear just what part of a comedian's person a gangplank may be—but I can't keep from wondering who the young lady was!

Unfortunately, I haven't seen any of Duprez's press books, covering his travels in Australia and other remote lands. However, in reply to one of my questions, Charlie Duprez wrote: "Yes, Fred went to Australia, and spent about six months playing many houses in South Africa. There he was a big favorite. In fact, in one house he remained on the stage all alone for a full hour. He told me he gave them about every gag he could ever remember."

The comedian also visited these countries in later years. His brother has sent me a letter which Fred wrote to him from Benoni, South Africa, on November 2, 1927. He described Benoni as being "something like an old-time Western mining town—one main street and, standing on any corner of aforesaid main street, you can look on to green fields on either side. The richest gold mines in the world, however, are here. Hence the town."

The letter continues: "The theater here is a pip; reminds me of some of the old-time nickelodeons. But they pay fancy prices to come in and, with me here, the prices have gone up 50 per cent. A couple of reels, one feature film, vintage 1923, myself and one other act. SOME show. I have to do about forty minutes. Boy, I relate everything I ever heard. All the white people from the reef come in and for miles around. As they change the picture three times a week, I also change my stuff as many times as the same gang comes in. Cleaned up here but can't send you a notice as this burg doesn't boast a paper. They get all the news from the Johannesburg paper. Well, I got an offer to go to Australia from here for ten weeks. Am now fighting about the money. It takes four weeks to get from here to Melbourne, my opening point, and then six weeks to get back to England unless I come back by way of the Pacific to Frisco. This would mean a trip clean around the world. . . I am not crazy to go as I wanna go home but if I do go, I sail Dec. 17 from Cape Town on the 'Runic.'"

Going back now to Duprez's earlier career, his travels seem to have kept him from making many records for American companies from 1911 to 1914. But in June of the latter year,

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 23)

MISCELLANEOUS

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. jyl24201

FOR SALE: Edison record player and large number of records. All like new. Write.—Herbert L. Cover, 922 Grove Ave., Fredericksburg, Va. jly1061

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Catalog 10c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. jcl2407

MODERN MUSICAL BOXES (Swiss chalets, trays, powder and cigarette boxes). Musical Banjos. Many tunes available. Information free.—Shonback, P. O. Box: 989, San Francisco 1, Calif. jly3633

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp, please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d6238

A GENUINE David Hopf violin; perfect condition, excellent tone. $800.00.—Little Eva's Antique Shop, 3032 Delesea Drive, Glassboro, N. J. jly3003

OLD POPULAR MUSIC, I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. jly3272

SWISS MUSIC Movements, assorted tunes, $1.80. Direct from Importer. Stamped with year of manufacture, "1950".—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, N. Y. s4652

FOR SALE: Collectors Prizes. Electric bar room type player pianos, with roll music. Circus air calliopes, with electric blowers, handplayed or automatic (roll music). These instruments restored, returned to like new condition.—Lee Company, 934 N. Lancaster, Dallas, Texas. s3426

RECORDS

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rareties. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o 126121

EIGHT THOUSAND different selections; vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 16, Calif. d126351

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. s3483

AUCTION SALE: Unusual vocal Pathé, G&T, Odeon, Victor, Columbia records; Albers, Albani, Caruso, Delmas, Dornay, Morisson, Galvany, Rousseliere, etc. —Collectors' Haven, 907 N. Y. Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. BU 4-5470. jly3004

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. au6407

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895, 1925 (Moses). Price $3.75. American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. C. f124201

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6084

MONTHLY AUCTION thousands classical vocal records. Free list. — S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colorado. s3272

WANTED: Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo records. — Gerhardt, 4316 Ridgeview, Cincinnati 5, Ohio. jly 6483

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. jcl24201

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. jly3084

"OLD MUSIC BOX MELODIES" recorded from rare old music boxes on standard 10" plastic records: No. 301, Home Sweet Home — On a Sunday Afternoon. No. 302, Mocking Bird — Love's Old Sweet Song. No. 303, Silver Threads Among the Gold — In the Gloaming. No. 2, Brahms' Cradle Song — Rockabye Baby. No. 3, Sweet and Low — Gounod's Sing, Smile, Slumber. $1.15 each postpaid. — Bornand Music Box Record Co., 333 Fifth Ave., Pelham 66, N. Y. au32701

RARE OLD RECORDS: Monthly sales list. Classical, vocal, popular, collector's items. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwald, Ambler, Penna. s6446

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening"; large, varied stock. Please state "wants", write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. n6329

OLD MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

Buy, sell, trade old string, musical band and orch. instruments. (No pianos, music boxes, organs.)

Send pictures, history details. Appraisals on violins $5.00

Especially interested in old violin bows, with names; in any condition. Top references in the Music Industry.

FREDERICK W. MILLER
(Wholesale to Dealer Trade only)

601 Deming Place,
Chicago 14, Ill.

100

PRINTS WANTED

CURRIER & IVES and other American prints wanted; also early Michigan prints. Give details and price.—House of Antiques, 28 Chandler, Detroit 2, Mich. au6867

CURRIER PRINTS, banks, trains, toys and occupational shaving mugs.—Walter J. Henry, Adamsburg, Pa. f12698

CURRIER & IVES; old books with color prints and engravings; oval and walnut frames in good condition. State price.—James J. Todd, 164 East 35th Street, New York 16, N. Y. jly6122741

CURRIER & IVES, "Burning of the Steamship Narragansett;" "Burning of the Palace Steamer Robert E. Lee."—Carroll Harrington, 200 Grotto Ave., Providence, R. I. s3483

JAPANESE PRINTS; colored; black and white; books with colored prints. Wanted. Correspondence invited.—E. Denman, 8 West Erie St., Chicago, Ill. au6276

GOOD PRICES PAID for Currier and Ives prints.—Earl Romey, Bluffton, Ind. jcl2867

WANTED: Currier & Ives winter scenes, fruit and flower prints and sporting subjects.—T. M. Reece, Boonville, N. C. ap126121

WANTED: Colored Currier and Ives lithographs. For one dollar we will send you a list of 1800 Currier and Ives prints with the Prices We Pay. This catalog is an essential for any one that attends sales or who is unfamiliar with the actual values of Currier and Ives prints.—A. R. Davison, East Aurora, New York. o 64281

PRINTS FOR SALE

COLLECTOR'S PHOTOGRAPHS: (8x10"). Suitable for framing or addition to your collection. Historical sites such as Washington Irving's Sunnyside, Philip's Castle Restoration, Thomas Paine Monument and many others. Send for list. Price $1.50 each postpaid U. S. Send money order or check.—A. J. Marino, 25 Fulton St., Weehawken, New Jersey. jly2004

FOR YOUR Family History. Costume prints; Baronial Manors; Scottish Highlands. All with coats-of-Arms. Early American portraits and places. Maps.—Mabel Louise Keech—"At the Sign of the Crest": 2522 Thayer St., Evanston, Illinois. Phone: University 4-5789. tfx

CURTIS FLOWER prints, original hand coloring, each bearing date of over 120 years ago, size 5½x9", $5 dozen, postpaid. Framed in gold leaf frame with French lined mats, $7.50 a pair, express collect. For dealers: An assortment of 25 dated flower, costume and other prints for $12.50. Express collect.—Old Prints, 525 E. Argonne Dr., Kirkwood 22, Mo. n126773

OLD VIEWS OF CITIES. Early prints, hand-colored, of your native town are interesting Americana. These are neatly mounted and protected by cellophane. Prices from $3 to $10. Hand-painted Coats of Arms authentically prepared to order; family name only requirement. Framed in gold, 12½x11". English with solid color mat, $20; Scottish, with hand-painted Tartan mat, $25.—Old Prints, 525 E. Argonne Dr., Kirkwood, St. Louis 22, Mo. au120844

PRINTS FOR SALE: 200 Lithographs and engravings. Civil War, A. Lincoln, G. Washington, B. Franklin, and prints of historical interest.—C. K. Johnson, Hurley, N. Y. s3514

WALNUT FRAMES; 11st free. — Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. d12215

COLOR. PRINTS. Flowers, fruits, birds, views, costumes. Fine old lace paper Valentines. Wholesale and retail.—K. Gregory, 222 East 71st St., New York 21, N. Y. f126351

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21)

shortly before the beginning of the First World War, he was back in this country and appeared for the first time in several years in a Columbia monthly supplement. His record was A1516, "Happy Tho' Married," coupled with Joe Hayman's historic version of "Cohen on the Telephone"—apparently the first of the "Cohen" records to be issued in this country. Hayman was an America, but his record was made in London. The supplement said:

"AN AMUSING PAIR OF MONOLOGS. Undoubtedly two of the funniest recordings ever issued—a laugh every moment. The first presents the troubles of a Mr. Cohen when, in using the telephone for the first time, he tries to inform his landlord of certain damage done to his property by a storm. His efforts to make himself intelligible result in a record that is irresistibly droll. Mr. Duprez on the other side of the disc gives us another of his famous dissertations upon the felicities of married life, the good natured pessimism of which is not likely on the whole to have any markedly deleterious effect upon marriage statistics."

George Clarence Jell has told me that this record, which sold more than two million copies, was issued almost by accident. Mr. Jell, who was manager of the Columbia artist and repertoire department for many years, recalled that he thought he had completed his list of records to be issued in June, 1914, when he discovered that he was still one short. Almost in desperation, he decided to take a chance on the Cohen skit, the matricies of which had been imported from England, and to combine it with Duprez's monolog. To his surprise, it became one of the biggest sellers Columbia ever had and resulted in a long series of Cohen monologs by Hayman and other comedians.

Two months later, in August, the Edison company listed its first Blue Amberol cylinder by Duprez. It was No. 2373—and again it was "Happy Tho' Married." The Edison Phonograph Monthly remarked:

"Mr. Duprez started in the theatrical world when only five years of age. Since then he has had a varied experience in Stock Companies, musical comedies and as a headliner in vaudeville. His specialty is monologs of course. The one he gives on this record is original with him—an old theme, but sufficiently new to be amusing by the twist he gives it. This same monolog has been given by him in theaters all over the world, and has been heard and laughed at by millions. One of the

CURRIER & IVES lithographs, Gould birds, fruits, flowers, fashions, etc. All original.—Ruth Farra Manting, 809 Broadway, Santa Monica, Calif. n6046

CURRIER & IVES Prints, Send stamp for list, large and small folios.—Frank W. Mathews, Scottsville, N. Y. ja128801

ANOTHER LIST of C. & I. prints is ready. Horses, ships, rurals, misc., reasonable. Send stamp for list.—E. F. Thayer, Lynnfield Center, Mass. jly3863

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change in address, no twelve months rate.)

reasons for Mr. Duprez's success is his perfectly serious manner of speaking; even while he is saying the most ridiculous things, by his intonation you would think it the wisdom of Solomon."

Nearly a year passed before Edison issued a second Blue Amberol by Duprez—No. 2636, "Desperate Desmond," in July, 1915. About the same time Diamond Disc No. 50254 was marketed, combining these two monologs. It at once became widely popular and was listed in a 1925 booklet, "Edison Records of Music That Lives," as one of the three hundred most popular Edison discs. The write-up of the record contained this biographical information:

"Fred Duprez was born in Detroit, Mich. . . At the age of fifteen he went on the stage as a 'supe' with Kyrle Bellew, in 'A Gentleman of France.' Then he secured an understudy part to George Morton, eventually taking the latter's place. After over five years of dramatic work he entered vaudeville, and toured nearly every English speaking country in the world, including America, England, Ireland, Scotland, South Africa and Australia. Duprez is well-known on the vaudeville stage of the United States, and his droll monologs have really 'caught on.' These monologs he originates himself; in addition he has written several successful vaudeville sketches."

From this point my information concerning Fred Duprez's career is less detailed. I don't know just when he decided to settle in England, but his brother says:

"Pierce and Roslyn, or some other well known vaudeville team, induced him to try England. He went over and was an instant hit. He liked it over there so well and was such a favorite he became known as 'Mr. Manhattan.' Incidentally, he toured many seasons in a musical comedy called 'Manhattan Follies,' in which he was the star. In England, the jumps around the provinces are so situated that Fred could always be at home on Sunday—not as in the States, where his jumps sometimes were a thousand miles apart. When he left New York he wouldn't get home until the end of the season. Tacking onto that, he made bigger money over there—so there you are. But Fred always kept his American citizenship. "He married an Australian actress named Florence Mathews, and she played with him in the various musical comedies he was in. 'Love and Oh Baby' was another he toured in. Florence was Fred's second wife. He first married Graze Hazard, a top-liner in vaudeville, known as 'Five Feet of Comic Opera.'" (The second Mrs. Duprez returned to Australia after her husband's death and fell dead from a heart attack while walking down a street).

Mr. and Mrs. Duprez had two children—a son, Charles Manhattan Duprez, and a daughter, June. The son's first name was in honor of Fred's brother, Charlie, who has given me so much help with this series, and his middle name came from the part of "Mr. Manhattan," which his father played in "The Manhattan Follies." He also is an actor, living in England and occupying a home which his father bought years ago. The daughter, June, now in this country, became an actress over her parents' opposition (just as Fred had gone on the stage against the wishes of his father and mother) and has had considerable success in films and legitimate drama. She was a star in British pictures before coming to this country in 1940. And that reminds me that her father ish Priests ordered it silenced forever.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 35)

Chamber's Journal of 11-29-1884, tells of an exhibition on Oct. 2, 1884, of bell-ringing at the village of Drayton near Abingdon, Berkshire, England of a peal of 8 church bells. The clerical ringers were all members of the Ancient Society of College Youth of London and the Oxford University Society of change-ringers, both societies being well known for their skill in the art. The peal was of 5,050 Stedman Triples true and complete, and the exhibition which took 3 hours to complete, was conducted by the Rev. F. E. Robinson, ringing bell No. 7.

A writer in Gentlemen's Magazine in 1875 says, "A bell was the common prize, a little golden bell was the reward of victory in 1607 at the races near York, whence came the proverb, 'To Bear the Bell.'"

On shipboard the bell marks time. The 12 hours on a day is divided into 3 watches. Each 30 minutes is marked by a stroke of a bell. Thus, beginning at midnight, one bell is 12:30 and 8 bells, 4 o'clock, then 1 bell, 4:30 and 8 bells, 8 o'clock.

The Liberty Bell which first rang out celebrating the signing of the Declaration of Independence by the Continental Congress, July 4, 1776, was brought from England in 1752. It was tolled annually on July 4th, until it cracked July 8, 1835 while being tolled in memory of Chief Justice Marshall.

It is said that when the Rev. W. D. Hutton, retired engineer of the Southern Ry., dedicated the New Valley Grove Baptist Church at Maynardville, Tenn., he discovered the bell to be from his old railway locomotive, No. 448.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23)

also appeared in films. I recall seeing him more than ten years ago in a production starring Jessie Matthews, but can't recall the title. I also remember getting the impression that he was extremely stout, but his brother says he never weighed more than 190. June Duprez was formerly married to a London physician, but is now the wife of a New York socialite, George Moffett, Jr.

During his years abroad Fred did considerable recording for English Columbia. And here is an interesting item from the Talking Machine News of London, for April, 1923. It concerns a program given by the City of Leeds Gramophone and Phonograph Society: "Twenty-four items in all were given. Perhaps not least... was our genial secretary's contribution in the shape of a 16-minute World Record by Fred Duprez, which created a constant stream of merriment and is wonderfully well recorded." World records played at a slow speed and, although not commercially successful, were the forerunners of the present-day long playing discs.

Fred Duprez's death was tragically sudden. The New York Times for October 29, 1938, carried the following account of his passing:

"LONDON — Fred Duprez, American comedian, died aboard the liner President Harding. It was reported today from the liner, which is at sea and which is due at Southampton next Thursday. He was hurrying to London to see the first rush sequence on Alexander Korda's film, 'Four Feathers,' in which his daughter, June, is making her film debut. His age was 54. For 30 years the comedian, with a cigar as his only prop, had been a headliner in British vaudeville and one of the earliest broadcasters. He had a card index of 10,000 jokes, enabling him to raise a laugh in any type of audience. His daughter is the wife of Dr. Guy Beauchamp, London specialist.

"Mr. Duprez, born in Detroit in 1884, left medical school to go on the stage. His first appearance was in 1899. In 1902 he made his New York debut at Wallack's Theater as a page in 'A Gentleman of France.' After five years in stock and repertory he turned to vaudeville and traveled widely in this country and Europe. In 1915 Mr. Duprez left vaudeville and joined the touring company of 'The Passing Show.' In 1914 he toured as 'Mr. Manhattan' in the play of that name with the Grossmith and Laurillard company. Other plays in which he appeared were 'Smile,' 'My Soldier Boy,' 'The Music Box Revue,' 'The Lollies Bergere,' 'The Cocoanuts,' 'Lucky Boy,' of which he was co-author, and 'Lend Me Your Wife.' His wife, the former Florence Mathews, is aboard the liner Bremen bound for Europe. It is due one day later than the President Harding."

And here is a final reminiscence from Charlie Duprez, whom I thank most heartily for his interest and help in this series:

"The last time I saw Fred was about six days before he died. He was over here and was at a house party of some of our friends and he seemed tired out. Little did I know it was to be the final farewell. He was to stay here with us for a week, but a wireless from London made it imperative to return on the first boat to open on the radio for the Kraft Cheese program. I wasn't even able to see him off, which I regret to this day. Then a few days after the boat left I got the wireless from the ship's captain that he had been found dead in his stateroom... When the news of Fred's death reached England all radios were shut down for 60 seconds in his honor, so he must have been quite a favorite over there."

I have no doubt that Fred Duprez was a great favorite in England, just as he had been for years among American lovers of vaudeville and phonograph records. If there are any collectors of old discs and cylinders who don't know Duprez's recorded art, I would urge them not to miss an opportunity of acquiring any of his productions. The man with the stovepipe hat and the big cigar, who owed his start in the world to the "edifying" qualities of dime novels, was a really accomplished comedian, and all his records are well worth having. Certainly, as long as there are thousands of collectors with his records in their possession, Frederick August Duprez will not be forgotten.

A Collector's Show Piece

In over fifty years of avid collecting, the owner of this lovely old music box has never found even a near duplicate. Fashioned as a combination table and music box, the piece bears no name or date but is believed to be of Swiss origin, probably a hundred years or more in age.

The nine music rolls are a "find" in themselves, each having five pieces of music to play, making a total of forty-five selections for the delight of music lovers.

It would interest the collector, Mr. George Eyster, if any of HOBBIES' readers have ever spied another music box of this rare and beautiful design during their antiquer's wanderings. The dimensions given are: table, 30" high, 48" across, 28" deep; music box, 10" high, 38" across, 14" deep, gold finished handles.

UNUSUAL SYMPHONIC UPRIGHT GRAND in playing condition.
Date of manufacture unknown.
Make offer. JSP
BRAUN'S PIANO HOUSE
2380 N.W. 5th St. Miami, Fla.

ZONTA CLUB
ANTIQUES SHOW
November 6, 7, 8, 9, 1950
Municipal Auditorium
SHREVEPORT, LA.

Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements

RECORDS

(Continued from Page 19)

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs. — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6084

MONTHLY AUCTION thousands classical vocal records. Prec list. — S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colorado. s3272

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

"OLD MUSIC BOX MELODIES" recorded from rare old music boxes on standard 10" plastic records: No. 301, Home Sweet Home - On a Sunday Afternoon. No. 302, Mocking Bird - Love's Old Sweet Song. No. 303, Silver Threads Among the Gold - In the Gloaming. No. 2, Brahms's Cradle Song - Rockabye Baby. No. 3, Sweet and Low - Gounod's Sing, Smile, Slumber. $1.15 each postpaid. — Bornand Music Box Record Co., 333 Fifth Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y. au32701

RARE OLD RECORDS: Monthly sales list. Classical, vocal, popular, collector's items. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. s6446

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening"; large, varied stock. Please state "wants", write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. n6829

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. o3084

RARE RECORDS! Unplayed mint electrical imports and cut-outs. Polydors, Telefunken, Swiss and Italian records. Little known discs by Erb, Supervia, Elizabeth Schumann, Husch, Schlusmus, Lehmann, Gerhardt, Schiatz, Bjorling, Kraus, Joyce, Capsir, Pagliugni, Perille, Favero, Cigna, Merli, Tauber, etc. 2327 Arthurs St., Los Angeles 65, Calif. o 30801

REGINA 1½" discs, $2 each, 1 free with purchase of 10.—Music Exchange, Sears Court, New Bedford, Mass. o 3832

A REGINA MUSIC BOX in excellent condition, with 108 records. Cabinet is mahogany, 5½ feet high and 27" wide. Door is of colored leaded glass. 12 records are played at one time, automatically. Price $300 plus packing and shipping costs.—Mrs. Carl J. Zaiser, 1871 North 63th St., Wauwatosa 13, Wis. au1004

MISCELLANEOUS

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Catalog 10c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. je12407

PHONOGRAPHS: Edison upright disc mahogany case; extra good; 25 records; cost new, $225; $25. Upright cylinder, oak case, refinished, 25 records, 4 min. machine, $25. Other Edisons when in stock. Write your wants. Exp. Collect. —Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. au1213

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp, please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d6238

SWISS MUSIC Movements, assorted tunes, $1.80. Direct from Importer. Stamped with year of manufacture, "1950".—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, N. Y. s4652

FOR SALE: Collectors Prizes. Electric bar room type player pianos, with roll music. Circus air calliopes, with electric blowers, handplayed or automatic (roll music). These instruments restored, retuned to like new condition.—Lee Company, 934 N. Lancaster, Dallas, Texas. s3426

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

SIR HARRY LAUDER

By JIM WALSH

One of the greatest theatrical careers of the last half century came to its inevitable end when Sir Harry Lauder died on Sunday, February 26, at his home in Strathaven, Scotland. Only rarely does any artist have so long a career as that of Harry Lauder, who would have been 80 if he had lived to next August 4, and seldom does any performer enjoy such phenomenal success as the sturdy, bald little Scot who, in the days before radio, was probably the most famous comedian in the world.

Of few singers can it be truly said that their fame is world-wide, but Lauder was one of the few. He appeared before thousands of large audiences in every English-speaking country, and his recorded voice was known wherever the phonograph went. I have seen photographs of naked natives in the heart of Africa laughing fit to kill at one of Lauder's recorded specialties, such as "Stop Your Tickling, Jock," in which laughter by the singer also plays a leading part. The laughing song is the one type of vocal music that can be enjoyed by listeners anywhere without regard to language, and Lauder's humor consequently was enjoyed by both civilized men and savages.

Harry Lauder's life was darkened by tragedy as well as made brilliant by shining success, but he was an outstanding example of the poor boy who wins recognition in the face of obstacles. The diminutive genius who has ranked for nearly fifty years as Scotland's favorite son was born in 1870 in Portobello, a dingy suburb of Edinburgh, which he "immortalized" in one of his songs, "The Portobello Lass." He was christened Harry MacLennan Lauder. His father, a trainer of athletes, married a girl from the so-called Black Isle, Ross-shire. Harry, eldest of a family of seven children, was only eleven when his father died, and had to get a job in a flax-mill at Arbroath, Pofarshire, where he was paid two shillings a week for working half-time. What education he received was provided by a schoolmaster whom he always afterwards referred to as "Stumpy Bill."

Later, the over-worked, under-fed youth, who can have had no precocious idea that King George V would one day confer knighthood upon him, worked in a coal mine at Hamilton, where he had charge of the pathetic blind pit-ponies used in mine operations. As a miner he sometimes stood up to his hips in water, swinging a pick at the coal above his head. He liked to sing, and the other miners talked so much about his powers as an entertainer that he was offered five shillings a performance to take part in local concerts. After a time, he joined a concert party at Lanark, and had his first engagement as a "single turn" at Belfast, where he sang, not one of the Scotch songs that he later made famous, but an Irish comic number, "Calligan, Call Again."

Meanwhile, in 1890 he had married Annie Vallance, and the marriage proved ideal. Lauder considered it the turning point of his life. His wife was the inspiration of many of his most popular songs, including "Nannie, I Never Loved Another Lass but You," "I Love a Lassie," "She Is Ma Daisy," and the most popular of all, "Roamin' in the Gloamin'." Mrs. Lauder played the piano, and accompanied her husband in his first recitals.

Thirty-year-old Harry Lauder placed his feet squarely on the path to better things when he went to London and made his first metropolitan appearance at Gatti's Theatre of Varieties on Westminster Bridge Road. Soon afterwards he was heard at the old Tivoli Music Hall, and Bransby Williams, the veteran impersonator of Dickens characters, who was on the same bill, recalls that "the audience positively went frantic about him."

There was now no stopping Harry Lauder. He soon became not only the most popular comedian in Great Britain, but the most imitated. A host of other Scotchmen, or men who represented themselves as Scotch, trudged in the reflected glory of the busy little man who appeared on the stage, wearing the kilt and twirling a knobby stick almost as large as himself. Judging by their records, some of the imitators were as good, or better, singers than Lauder, but lacked a certain spark that made audiences wild about the great original, who was also one of the greatest masters of pantomime, and who, for publicity reasons, shrewdly traded on the age-old reputation of the Scotch for practicing extreme thrift.

Obviously, the idol of the music halls couldn't long escape making records. Since there was good money in singing for phonographs, Harry wouldn't have wanted to escape, anyway. But his mellow baritone was ideal for recording and his records were fast sellers from the beginning. This, I suspect, was because of the invariably simple, catchy melodies to which his "character songs" were set rather than his patter. I imagine Lauder was much funnier on the stage, where his subtle mannerisms and tricks of character delineation could be observed, than he strikes me as being on records. While I like his singing, his spoken comedy has always seemed tiresome to me. For this reason, I prefer his 10-inch records to his 12-inch—just because there is less talking and chuckling. On records, all the characters he impersonates seem to be cut from one pattern—the half-witted. This purely personal impression may be caused by my lack of familiarity with Scottish peculiarities and brogue, as well as from my being of a different generation than Lauder's. Styles in comedy change more rapidly and completely than in any other form of art. The next generation may not even find the works of P. G. Wodehouse funny.

This picture of Sir Harry Lauder in his last years is copied from a photo sent by the comedian to Quentin Riggs, well-known record collector of Oklahoma City.

The first Harry Lauder records that I have been able to trace were issued by the Gramophone Company of England in January, 1905, but there is reason to think that he had previously recorded. These "His Master's Voice" discs were seven-inch, single-faced versions of "A Trip to Inverary," and, rather surprisingly, "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," Lauder's singing of which appears to have been very popular. In February there were 10-inch discs of "The Wedding of Lauchie McGraw," "Inverary," "Rising Early in the Morning," and "Stop Your Tickling, Jock." The latter was with "full military band accompaniment." "Stop Your Tickling" hardly seems a woman's type of song, but a year or so later, Helen Trix, the charming comedienne who is still living in New York, made a Zonophone record of "Jock," which I find more attractive than Lauder's. And, while nobody would be likely to think of Billy Murray as a singer of Lauder songs, Billy also helped to meet the demand for Harry's numbers in this country by singing "Sound Advice" for Zonophone. During most of Lauder's career, his records were issued in England by both the Gramophone and Zonophone companies. Renditions considered best were reserved for "H. M. V." use, while Zonophone pressings were made from second masters.

In March, 1905, Pathe advertised Lauder records. The heading was "Back to the Fold," which seems to indicate that he had sung for Pathe before. Included were "Inverary," "Stop Your Tickling, Jock"; "Waddin' o' Lauchie McGraw"; "Harry Lauder in a Snatch From His Famous 'Tobermory,' Introducing 'Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep,'" (what a title!) and one that I have never seen mentioned anywhere else, "Tattie Soup." In May came "She's Ma Daisy" and "Fu' the Noo," also known as "I've Something in the Bottle for the Morning." After the Pathe people went into the disc business in 1906, they also issued flat records by Lauder. Since all Pathe masters were made on large cylinders it was easy to dub discs from the original cylinder recordings.

The first Zonophone record I have been able to find by Lauder came out in October, 1905, a seven-inch of "Stop Your Tickling." In August, Zonophone had begun distributing a five-inch record, playing a minute and a half and selling for ninepence, but I have been unable to find that any of Lauder's numbers were recorded on these midgets. In October, too, H. M. V. issued one of the comedian's lesser known records, "Tickling Geordie," with this description: "An original laughing song. To hear Mr. Harry Lauder in a new song does not fall to our lot every day. 'Tickling Geordie' is Mr. Harry Lauder's own name for a song which between us we made up in our laboratory, taking the tune from an old American plantation song. This is the first time Mr. Harry Lauder has been heard in a laughing song"—an obvious misstatement since the same company, as well as Zonophone and Pathe, had already issued "Jock."

Here it may be well to mention that throughout his long career, during which many millions of his records were sold, Lauder was almost entirely a "lone wolf." I can think of only two records in which he performed with other artists. One is "Sandy Macpherson's Cauld," marketed by the British Zonophone Company in February, 1906, in which Lauder and Russell Hunting, famed for his "Michael Casey" monologues, went partners. Some years later, there was also a record called "Harry Lauder Visits Will Evans," another popular H. M. V. comedian. Throughout his recording days, too, Lauder stuck almost entirely to Scotch character songs, although he occasionally sang a "straight" interpretation of a sentimental ballad, of which an example is "Mary of Argyll." And, in 1911, he shattered precedent by doing a number called "Bertie, the Clerk," in Cockney dialect. It didn't meet with a favorable reception, and the experiment wasn't repeated. Many of the Lauder records which were sold in England were never issued in the United States.

In 1907, the first year he sang in this country, Lauder gave an interviewer an entertaining account of some of his early theatrical and recording experiences. He said that when he first began singing in music halls he had a hard time. In his own words: "It was a heartbreaking business, for I was either first or last on all the programs, and many a night when occupying the latter position I came out and sang my three songs to an audience consisting of the orchestra—minus the conductor—the checkers and the backs of people hurrying out as fast as they could from the building."

But such things seemed funny a few years later when Lauder's fame was unbounded. The singer recalled the time that a crowd had formed in Parliament street and was being held back by police. A big Scotchman passing by asked, "What's wrong wi' the crowd here?" and was told, "The Prince of Wales is coming." The Scot turned away, disappointedly muttering: "Prince o' Wales! I thought it must be Harry Lauder!"

Lauder said that the first time he tried to make a record he was "placed in front of an enormous receiver. . . I managed the first verse all right and then sprang my first 'gag,' but I forgot where I was and waited for the applause. Deep silence still reigned supreme! I couldn't help it—I burst out laughing and fell off the stool on which I had been placed to bring my mouth to the receiver. The operator rushed out from his box and the musicians screamed with merriment—and the record was spoiled.

"This is the daftest thing I ever did," I remarked, on scrambling to my feet. "Fancy singin' a song into a big tin tube! Look here," I said to the manager, who was holding his sides, "how much am I to get for this?—for there's nae use o' bein' daft if ye are no to be well paid for 't!" There was more laughter all around, and then I was told that my fee would be—well, the figure was all right, mind I'm tellin' ye! "Ca' away," I said, "I'm yer man!"

Cynics may perhaps say that the only thing that doesn't ring true about that anecdote is the idea of Lauder's beginning to make a record before he knew precisely what he would be paid!

By the time the interview appeared, Harry's records were already being extensively imitated. One of the cleverest copycats was "Hector Grant," who recorded Lauder's entire repertoire for some of the smaller English companies with such remarkable fidelity to Lauder's style that even Harry could hardly tell the imitator's records from his own. The doughty Scot became furious and swore he would do all sorts of unpleasant things to Hector Grant if he ever caught him. But when he finally met "Grant" he merely growled: "So ye're the feller that's been singin' my songs? Weel, you ha' a dom'd fine voice!" "Grant" was really the Australian bass-baritone, Peter Dawson, then in his early twenties. Dawson, who began making records in 1904 and is still at it, undoubtedly holds the world's championship for consistent recording over a period of many years. Another exceptionally good imitator was Sandy Shaw, who sang for Columbia. Outstanding, too, beginning around 1915, was Glen Ellison, a baritone who sang Lauder songs for Edison, but didn't try too hard to give a close imitation of Harry's patter. Both he and Dawson had better voices and were more finished singers than the genius they imitated. Then there

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 23)

Here is Herman Joseph in the rustic comedy role he created after people of Jewish faith had expressed their resentment of the caricaturing of the race in the circus arena. Joseph's Jewish comedy role had been copied by clowns in all principal circuses.

by following the midget fire trucks afoot, carrying a bundle of clothes and a large sign reading "Fire Sale."

He introduced comedy to the wild west concert of the circus for the first time in 1914. Retaining his exaggerated Jewish characteristics in burlesque cowboy attire, and riding a stubborn donkey, Joseph imitated the cowboys in their rope spinning and rough riding stunts.

When the Volstead act was passed by congress, the Jewish clown came out with his "Home Brew and Hebrew" gag, parading the hippodrome track carrying a beer mug overflowing with suds.

With the end of the war, Jerome and Joseph resumed their partnership and in 1919 joined Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus the first season the two shows combined. In 1920 and 1922, they went with Sells-Floto Circus because of a flattering offer for their services. But in 1922, Charles Ringling induced them to return to the Ringling fold, and Joseph remained there until he quit the circus in 1933.

It was during the last season that Joseph took his cue for his greatest clown creation from newspaper headlines of the period.

The very popularity of the Jewish character he had created in the circus, caused its discard. With every rival circus producing numbers similar to those Joseph concocted and employing clowns in Hebrew makeup, there came a flood of letters of protest to circus managements from people of the Jewish faith, resentful of the caricaturing of the race in the arena.

So when Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus opened its annual engagement in Madison Square Garden, New York, in April, 1933, one clown stood out so sharply from the horde that his picture appeared in the newspapers and he was interviewed by many reporters.

The clown was none other than Herman Joseph, made up like and garbed in the well known wardrobe of Mohatma Gandhi, and leading a goat around the arena. The stunt captured the crowds' fancy with the clever burlesquing of the great Indian leader, and Joseph received the long delayed recognition as one of the outstanding artists of his profession.

Unsettled financial conditions at the depth of the depression caused Joseph to leave the Ringling show at the end of the 1933 season, with every intention of returning to the big tops ere long. His partner, Paul Jerome, remained, and still is a fixture in the show's clown alley with his clever neon-lighted heart and nose.

Going to his home in Goldsboro, the cigar company he has since represented, was quick to offer Joseph employment in public relations work and for 17 years he has remained there.

Since discarding his Hebrew character role, Joseph has made up as a comic rustic with linen duster and facial makeup somewhat reminiscent of the Dutch comedians of the old days of the burlesque show.

"I didn't intend to stay away when I left the circus," Joseph muses. "I hear from many circus fans throughout the country hoping I may go back some day."

And there is a peculiar glint in the veteran clown's eye as he reflects on the old days of trouping with the "rag bags."

Maybe, some day. . . . .

SIR HARRY LAUDER

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21)

were Evan Davies, Jock Lorimer, Jock Mills, Jock McGraw — a jocular group! Much later, another noted Scotch comedian, the late Will Fyffe, came along, but he was a man of original methods, who wrote his own songs instead of depending on Lauder's.

Harry Lauder's vogue in this country didn't begin on records until 1908, when Victor issued imported Black Label discs of seven of the comedian's favorite numbers. These, made from H. M. V. matrices, were so poorly recorded that within a few years Lauder remade them all. Victor's original announcement of the Lauder records said:

"The success of this popular Scotch comedian in America has been phenomenal, and he is declared to be one of the greatest entertainers now before the public. . . . The Victor now offers seven of his best numbers, including the famous laughing song, 'Stop Your Tickling, Jock'; the 'Bottle in the Morning,' with an extremely funny drunken speech, and a melodious little song about a bonnie Scotch lassie." In 1910, introducing a new series of Lauder records, Victor said: "Every one of these records is entirely new, being recently made by Mr. Lauder at the Victor's Camden Laboratory, and are so much superior to the old records that the hearer will be simply astonished. Every word and whisper which Lauder utters is absolutely distinct, and in his shivering rendition of 'Wearing Kilts,' you can even hear his teeth chatter!" The new records were Purple Label, instead of Black, and sold for 75 cents or $1.25, depending on size. In 1914, when Lauder, as "the highest salaried entertainer in the world," was receiving $5,000 a week, Victor commented: "Perhaps the best evidence of Lauder's value as an entertainer is the fact that he is, in vaudeville language, 'booked solid' for the next eight years! Every week of the 416 is positively contracted for at a salary which, previous to Lauder's entry, was never dreamed of by a vaudeville performer."

Edison also issued in 1908 a series of two-minute Lauder cylinders, recorded in London. One of the titles was the "Calligan" song which he used at the beginning of his career. A little later, the comedian made many four-minute Edison Amberol cylinders. In June, 1910, The New Phonogram said: "Harry Lauder records cannot be approached in quality of reproduction by any other records in our catalog. His voice lends itself so readily to phonograph reproduction and his enunciation is so delightfully distinct that not a syllable is misunderstood. Not one of those nice little inflections of tone for which he is famous, and which conveys a world of significance, is lost upon the listener." (Despite Lauder's distinct enunciation, Victor for years published in its catalogs a glossary of the Scotch words he used, so that the records would be more easily understood by the average American listener.) Lauder's Edison contract expired in April, 1912, and from then on his services appear to have been exclusive to Victor in this country and the Gramophone and Zonophone labels in England. A minor mystery is provided by a 1915 Edison Diamond Disc, on which one Alick Lauder sings two Scotch dialect numbers. Alick's photo looks exactly like Harry Lauder, but I have heard that he was Harry's brother. The songs, "Dingle Dangle" and "I Wish I Was," seem not to have been a part of Harry's repertoire.

In 1910, the Talking Machine News conducted a competition to determine the most popular recording artists of the day. Since the voting was restricted almost entirely to British record buyers, the popular American stars were not represented in the final results. An extremely popular tenor, the late Ernest Pike, took first place. Peter Dawson was second, and Lauder came third. The next thirteen in order were Billy Williams, Florrie Forde, Will Evans, Harry Fay, Stan-

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 27)

Bicycle Factory. The Schwinn family, starting with Ignatz Schwinn, had been collecting bicycles for nearly a century. It is housed in a large hall and is open to the public by invitation. Mr. Frank Schwinn has been very gracious in lending the originals and models for public events such as parades, exhibits and the Chicago Railroad Fair of 1948 and 49. He also has a fine collection of cyclana.

Walter Nilsson, the unicycle star of "Hells a Poppin," screen and television actor, has probably the largest private bicycle collection in the world. The number of bicycles has been estimated as over 5,000. A whole building at Closter, New Jersey, was required to house his collection. He has recently moved to Los Angeles where his equipment is available for the motion picture studios. One of the unique wheels in this collection is the Diamond Jim Brady-Lillian Russell tandem. It is gold plated and was studded with gems. Diamond Jim had this machine specially built for his bicycle queen and they rode it together down Broadway in New York.

Small bicycle collections are to be found in most historical museums throughout the United States. The Carson City, Nevada, Museum has some interesting bicycle items on display. In New York, a few old bicycles are on display at the Museum of the City of New York, at the New York Historical Society and the Richmond Museum in Staten Island.

Foremost among European bicycle museums is the Bartleet Museum in England. H. W. Bartleet, known as "Sammy," was one of England's racing high wheel cyclists. He had a complete collection of every type of bicycle made in England. The story of his unique museum has been published in the 186 page "Bartleet's Bicycle Book" by Ed. J. Burrow and Company, Ltd., of London. The volume is out of print but it may be had from book dealers. During the war the museum was moved to Coventry for safety.

The Science Museum at South Kensington, England, has 37 bicycles and 42 bicycle parts in its collection. It has an original "Hobby Horse" as patented in France by Baron von Drais in 1818. Although made of heavy iron and wood it only had a wheelbase of 39 inches and weighed but 38 pounds. It was lighter in weight and shorter than the standard American bicycle of today. Above this machine is an original old print dated 1819 showing the machine in action, traveling ten miles an hour. (Many of our heavyweight modern bicycles cannot keep up this speed.) The 1851 velocipede was used by H. R. H. Prince Consort and donated by H. M. King Edward VII in 1901. The 1881 Otto Dicycle was used by the Viscountess Sherbrooke and presented to the museum in 1901. The original 1885 Rover bicycle, invented by J. K. Starley, the first safety, was presented by Mr. J. K. Starley. Among the parts exhibits is the original Dunlop pneumatic tire lent by the inventor, Mr. J. B. Dunlop, in 1888. Collier's

Two Speed gear, invented in 1899, and the Sturmey-Archer Three Speed, invented and used in 1906, are on exhibit. This should settle the argument that speed gears for cycles are a new invention. Every collector should have a copy of the Catalog of the Collections in the Science Museum—Land Transport I, printed in London by His Majesty's Stationery Office.

Among German museums the Deutsches Museum in Munich stands out. Here in Room 94 (Before World War II) were found a complete story of the evolution of the bicycle in Germany starting with the original Baron Karl von Drais hobby horse. The writer spent a day in this museum in 1929. It was unique in that all the models could be worked and thus more readily understood.

In France one of the leading cycle collections is to be found in the Conservatoire National des Artes et Metiers at 292 Rue Saint-Martin in Paris. Post cards of every model may be secured by addressing the curator of the Cycle Collection.

For those who do not have room to collect bicycles, they may concentrate on photographs, books, catalogs and old prints from these museums.

—o—

SIR HARRY LAUDER

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23)

ley Kirkby, Harry Dearth, Harry Thornton, John McCormack, John Harrison, Fred Vernon, Billy Whitlock, Edna Thornton and Evan Williams. Had such a contest been held in this country, Billy Murray and Ada Jones probably would have far outdistanced all opposition, but it's likely that Harry Lauder would have finished among the top twelve or so.

The Edison Phonograph Monthly for June, 1913, contains some interesting observations about Lauder, whose four-minute records were being reissued as Blue Amberols:

"One must go back to the days of Albert Chevalier and his coster songs to find a parallel to the phenomenal success which Lauder has achieved. He started his career as a boy in a coal-pit and has won his way to the top of the ladder by sheer grit and talent. In September, 1908, he appeared before King Edward. . . In London he is, and has been for several years, the popular idol, and can fill two or three theaters in a single evening by merely appearing for 15 or 20 minutes in each. His vogue in the United States is hardly less marked. He has appeared in this country several times and has left the public humming his tuneful ditties with a warm spot in their hearts for 'the greatest living character singer.' His recent performances are said to constitute his farewell trip in America, for he has decided to retire from the stage."

Lauder's frequent "farewell appearances" became a standing theatrical joke. Only last year, at the age of 78, before he was stricken by the heart malady that eventually proved fatal, he was meditating one more "farewell trip."

The first World War, which began in 1914, brought about one of the greatest tragedies of Lauder's life. He was devoted to his only child, John, who helped write "Trixie From Dixie" and a few of the other Lauder songs. Captain John Lauder was killed in action in 1917. When Victor issued a new Lauder record, "I Love to Be a Sailor," in January, 1918, it was accompanied with this touching description:

"There is a new Harry Lauder come into our midst. Not less lovable than the old Harry Lauder, but touched by the finger of Destiny, so that he makes us to weep as well as to laugh. Ever since the loss of his son on the battle line in Flanders, Harry Lauder has been a changed man. His recent tour through this country proved this, and the invaluable work he has done in raising money for the Red Cross, Liberty Loan and similar funds is not less valuable than that he has done in bringing closer home to us the human side of the war—the personal loss, the personal sacrifice without which the war cannot be won. 'All the money in the world,' said Harry Lauder, speaking in aid of the Liberty Loan, 'would not bring my boy back home, and when I learned that he had been killed I sold every security I had and turned every dollar I possessed over to my government. And now you must be prepared to give your all if you want your boys to come back safe.' And when you listen to this record, you will reflect that Harry Lauder has himself given everything, and there can be no come-back for him—except the tears and laughter and gratitude of a million hearts. 'I Love to Be a Sailor' has all the old lilt and gaiety of Harry Lauder's best, but the humor is purer, richer, more human."

Until the war ended, Lauder worked tirelessly, entertaining troops and seeking to forget the heartbreak that had come to him and his idolized "Nannie." He wrote a book called "A Minstrel in France," which tells of his war-time experiences. King George knighted him for his services and he was probably the best loved man in the British Empire, although a few die-hard critics insisted that his character studies were "an insult to the Scottish race," and there was a bit of snobbish complaint about a "mere music hall comedian" having the right to be called Sir.

Then, in 1927, ten years after the death of his son, Lauder suffered perhaps a greater loss. His life story, "Roamin' in the Gloamin'," had just begun to appear in the Saturday Evening Post when Lady Lauder died. She had grown, probably from grief over the death of her son, to look much older than Harry, despite his baldness, which had begun early in life. The grief-stricken humorist, whose admirers insisted that "humanist" would better describe him, at first said that he could never sing again. But, in the spirit of one of his great favorites, "Keep On to the End of the Road," he thought it over and decided that he could best bear his loneliness by continuing to sing as long as his admirers wanted to hear him. A few years later he starred in a film depicting the story of his life.

It's doubtful, though, that his heart ever again was fully in his work, for he appears to have become careless and forgetful as the years went on. Some time around 1938, the following unsympathetic account of one of his appearances at a London music hall was written by a staff critic of Variety:

"Harry Lauder followed. . . No doubt Lauder is on the decline. His type of humor no longer appeals to moderns."

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 31)

Whaling Lore

"Stories of Whaling Adventures" were told recently by Miss Harriet Dorman, New York State, before the meeting of the Rochester Folklore Society at the Rochester, N. Y., Museum of Arts and Sciences.

Whaling stories which were handed down by an ancestor who was a captain on a whaling ship and have never been published were retold by Miss Dorman. She illustrated her stories with whaling treasures collected by the captain.

This interesting program was arranged by Mrs. Gladys Reid Holton, Rochester Museum historian, who invited visitors to bring their own collections of whaling treasures for this open meeting.

Briefs

The New York State Historical Association will hold its annual meeting in Rochester on September 7-9. Registration will be at the Sheraton Hotel on East Avenue.

The Genesee Country Historical Federation Bulletin reflects an active organization, alert to state-wide interest as well as local.

Dr. Blake McKelvey, historian of Rochester, N. Y., and Harold Rand, Rochester Commissioner of Commerce, have a Sunday afternoon program called "Know Your Rochester," which is on the air on Sunday afternoons from 5:15 to 5:30.

Gunston Hall, near Mount Vernon, Va., was opened as a state historic site recently. The property has a mansion built in 1758 by George Mason, author of the Virginia Bill of Rights. The property includes 550 acres of land, including colonial gardens. The late owner, Louis D. Hertle, who willed the property to the state, had extensively improved the house and grounds. The site is administered by the Colonial Dames of America.

The State Historical Society of Wisconsin, Madison, has scheduled an Institute for Local Historical Societies to be held in Madison on July 6-8. The institute will have sessions on collecting local historical materials.

Frank O. Spinney, for three years director of the Manchester, New Hampshire Historical Association, has been appointed curator of Old Sturbridge, Village Museum and Crafts Center, Sturbridge, Mass. The appointment fills the post left vacant two years ago by Malcolm Watkins, now associate curator in the department of ethnology at the Smithsonian Institution.

The University Museum, Philadelphia, has opened an exhibit, 4000 Years of Music, showing ancient and historical musical instruments. The instruments were selected from more than 5,000 items collected over many years from different parts of the world.

The Nelson Dewey House, home of the first governor of Wisconsin, Cassville, has been opened as a historic house museum, recently. The house has been partially restored by the State Historical Society of Wisconsin and the State Conservation Department.

A fire recently damaged the birthplace of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Portland, Maine. The dilapidated three story structure has long been the center of controversy. Citizens of Portland have demanded that the building be razed as they insist that it is only an eyesore in the downtown waterfront district. Longfellow admirers have asked that it be renovated as a shrine to the noted poet. The damage to the house was not estimated and the cause of the fire has not been determined.

SIR HARRY LAUDER

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27)

Idea of stage waits while he changes into his next character is shunned by present-day vaudeville habitués, and at a less sympathetic house he might have gotten the razz. Here the audience stood it very well. Lauder has acquired a habit of forgetting his lines, which also does not help. Had plenty of trouble with the orchestra, mostly his fault, as an act of his calibre should carry its own leader. Understood to be getting $2,000 per week and is in for two weeks, which is plenty."

Despite the Variety man's jeering attitude, Harry Lauder was by no means through. His type of humor still appealed to many "moderns," as was proved when the Second World War began. Once more the comedian, who had made another large fortune, forsook his palatial home at Strat-haven, where his niece, Miss Greta Lauder, kept house for him. Again he entertained the men in service, as he had done a quarter of a century before. And he always got a big response to his comic and sentimental songs, with their irresistible rolling rhythms. Assisted by his niece, he also organized shows and played in Scottish towns for the benefit of churches, schools, hospitals, clubs and community projects. He wanted to keep on entertaining even after he had his first serious heart attack. When the doctors told him to give up active work, he sadly remarked: "I suppose a man can't go on forever—though I'd be perfectly willing to." His condition became so bad that he was unconscious for weeks and was expected to die at any moment. However, a few months before his death, he improved remarkably and was believed to be almost well. Then his fatal relapse occurred.

A glance at the Victor and "His Master's Voice" catalogs seems to show that the popularity of Lauder's recorded work has held up better of recent years in the United States than abroad. The Victor list of his electrical recordings is fairly long, but the new 1949 H. M. V. catalog contains only two double-faced Lauder discs. One couples "To the End of the Road" and "The Road to the Isles" and the other is a medley of the refrains of his most popular songs. It may be that most of his British records are now on the cheaper Regal-Zonophone label—if it is still in existence.

Harry Lauder had one quality in common with such diverse personalities as Thomas A. Edison, Henry Ford, Franklin D. Roosevelt and Bernard Shaw, all of whom made such a deep impress on their times that while they were living one had it hard to imagine a world without them. Yet of this group only Shaw is still alive.

As for Harry MacLennan Lauder, few men can have given more wholesome pleasure to millions of other humans over a longer period than he, and few have served their fellow men more unselfishly and devotedly when there was need. The droll little Scot was one of the great personalities of his time. As long as his discs and cylinders survive, that warmly vibrant baritone voice and hearty chuckle will not be forgotten, and the one-time mill boy and mine drudge will be held in affectionate remembrance by a multitude of admirers who are grateful for the vast good he has done.

Farewell and sweet rest, Sir Harry Lauder!

Montgomery County, Pa., Dealers Form Club

A recent release tells of the banding together of the antiques dealers of Montgomery County, Pennsylvania. The present membership of the organization consists of thirty-seven dealers. The following members have been elected to serve the organization for the coming year:

President, A. H. Rihl, Trappe, Pa.; Vice President, Howard D. Finkle, North Wales, Pa.; Secretary, Miss Irma Schultz, Worcester, Pa.; Treasurer, Mrs. Ambra Buck, Skippack, Pa. Directors: Norman H. Detweiler, Lansdale, Pa.; Mrs. E. Renee Shourds, Whitmarsh, Pa.; Mrs. Hazel R. Schubert, Roslyn, Pa.

Monthly meetings will be held in order to help promote the antiques business in this vicinity.

Do You Remember?

By E. E. MEREDITH

When we saved "rennet" from the stomachs of calves and beeves when butchering and it was used to curdle milk for home-made cheese?

When we attended the county fair and paid 10 cents to hear a wax phonograph record through a runner hose which was attached to our cars?

When all sorts of herbs were tied to the rafters of the cabin to dry, including of course, boneset, pennyroyal, and hops to make yeast and hot poultices?

equipment for "microgroove" recording on long playing discs is far more expensive, far more difficult to operate and had best be left to professionals. With a good tape recorder one can make faithful copies of standard disc records. Since tape does not become worn through repeated plays, as all discs do, and since it requires so little storage space, it may well become the standard reproducing medium, supplanting even the LP disc. In any case, tape may prove to be the ideal way to preserve for the future the performances of the past which we now treasure in disc form. It is probably too soon to consider transferring one's entire disc collection to tape, but perhaps the time is not far off. Whether it be from tape or from some other method of recording sound for home reproduction, however, we may be sure that in the future we'll still be able to hear the voice of Caruso or the conducting of Toscanini.

What, then, is to become of our originals? Since, as has been pointed out, fewer people will be interested in them, their cash value is likely to decline, and hence their eventual fate is uncertain. It is my hope that they will be collected in huge quantities, by public libraries or by commercial organizations which could lend, rent or sell tape or some other kind of copy of any desired original recording to any interested person. It takes little imagination to see how greatly the boundaries of historical record collecting could be extended in this way. What an enormously rich and wide range of material there would be to choose from! So, if it's the music and/or the performance that you value, you have little to fear from the future and much to hope for. If, on the other hand, it's the record itself or its label that means most to you, well, what's to stop you from tacking it up on the wall just as you probably do now? If the walls crumble, and with them your records, you can always find something else equally satisfactory to collect. Who knows, maybe it'll even be reels of recorded tape!

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (twelve months rate.)

(Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

BERT WILLIAMS, A Thwarted Genius I

By JIM WALSH

"Bert Williams is a tremendous asset to the Negro race. The fact of his success aids the Negro many times more than he could have helped the race by merely contenting himself to whine about racial difficulties. The fact is that the American people are ready to honor any man who does something worth while, irrespective of color."

—Booker T. Washington.

The great Negro educator, the late Booker T. Washington, was born into slavery at Hale's Forge, in Franklin county, Virginia, 50 miles or so south of Roanoke, where the writer of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists lives. Dr. Washington made a distinguished name for himself in the face of vast difficulties and had the esteem of white and black alike. Under such circumstances, it was natural for him to take an optimistic view of American treatment of the Negro. And it probably was equally natural for the founder of Tuskegee Institute to assume that Bert Williams, one of the best known colored theatrical personalities of a generation ago, had been blessed with a rich and satisfying career. But that wasn't the way Williams himself felt about it.

True, the gravel-voiced comedian made plenty of money, and his popularity was undiminished during the more than a quarter of a century in which he appeared on the stage. But this brilliant performer, for whom I think "genius" is not too strong a term, felt thwarted in his higher ambitions. Tales about famous comedians who have longed to play Hamlet are centuries old. An equally long roster could be compiled of tragedians or opera singers who wished they could shine in comedy. As a rule, no matter how great an artist's success, he longs for the chance to reveal what he believes to be his even greater talents in some exactly opposite field of endeavor. Bert Williams may never have felt the urge to play Hamlet or even Othello, but he did believe that he could achieve a higher type of characterization than he was ever allowed to assay, and he thought that his being a Negro was used unfairly to keep him from realizing his full potentialities. The six-foot, two hundred pound comedian didn't talk much about his frustrated ambitions, and the crowds who applauded the tall man in his blackface make-up, or who faithfully bought the latest Bert Williams records, didn't suspect the way he felt. But, as will be shown, the comedian was unhappy because his having a small percentage of Negro blood restricted him to what he considered a lower form of entertainment. Conditions have changed somewhat for the better since Williams died in 1922, but it is still largely true that Negro entertainers are "typed," regardless of their own wishes.

PIPE ORGAN

Hand made throughout, over a century old, rosewood and pine case, 21x58" and 87" high. Single manual, 250 pipes, completely restored.

NICKELODEUMS

In perfect mechanical condition

Seeburg Eagles, with tambourine, xylophone, mandolin, castanets, triangle, uses G type rolls.

Seeburg Juniors, piano, mandolin, use A type rolls.

Engelhart, with xylophone and mandolin, uses A type rolls.

Extra rolls — type A and G

THE OLD MUSIC STORE

ESTHER SKERRITT SANDERS

Deansboro, New York

WANTED

COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INOCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

EDISON GRAND OPERA CYLINDERS:

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.

International Zonophone Company: Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophone by this artist, especially her Carmen arias on 40075.

Also catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT
West Falmouth,
Mass.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

MUSIC BOXES

Visit the famous

A. V. BORNAND

collection in our NEW ENLARGED showrooms at
139 Fourth Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y.

Send for list of choice items for sale.

We do complete restoring of all types of music boxes, entirely re-pin the cylinders, replace broken teeth and points, re-tune the combs, etc. All work guaranteed. Estimates and appraisals cheerfully given.

A. V. BORNAND CO. — 139 4th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y.

(Originally established in Switzerland in 1826)

RECORDS

FINE OLD RECORDS for sale: Classical, vocal, operatic, violin, piano, vaudeville, jazz, popular, Lauder, McCormack, reasonably priced. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. s3084

VICTOR RED SEAL Records, 10", 60c each, 12" 75c each. Complete selections by Kreisler, Zimbalist, Elman, Heifitz, Powell, Paderewski, McCormack, Gluck, Williams, Homer, Jeritza, Schipa, Werrenrath, Farrar, Gigli, Martinelli, Garrison, Zanelli, Johnson, Culp, Aida, Degoria, Schumannheink, Duets, others.—Martin, 11 Dooley, Brooklyn 35, N. Y. s3276

WANTED: Record catalogues, supplements, pamphlets, 1900-1939. Old phonograph and record advertisements; other phonographic material. State price and condition.—D. Miller, Box 392, Long Beach, California. s3614

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought.—E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o 126121

EIGHT THOUSAND different selections; vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. d126361

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. s3483

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. n3253

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895, 1925 (Moses). Price $3.75. American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, New York. f124201

MONTHLY AUCTION SALE: Old vocal operatic records. Free list.—Collectors' Haven, 118 Hancock St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. o 3272

Lehmann! Supervia! Tauber! Lili Kraus! Pagliughi! etc. 10,000 brand new Parlophones, some at auction, others at discounts to 70%! — 2327 Arthurs Street, Los Angeles 65, Calif. o 3846

FOR SALE: Regina, Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6084

MONTHLY AUCTION thousands classical vocal records. Free list.—S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colorado. s3272

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid.—Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

RARE OLD RECORDS: Monthly sales list. Classical, vocal, popular, collector's items. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. s6445

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening"; large, varied stock. Please state "wants", write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. n6829

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. o3084

FOR SALE: Record collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 15 first Ave., Newton Square, Penna. au122741

REGINA 15½" discs, $2 each, 1 free with purchase of 10.—Music Exchange, Sears Court, New Bedford, Mass. o 3882

In beginning the story of Bert Williams' theatrical and recording career, I'd like to make it clear that he was not an American-born Negro. Instead, the comedian, whose full name was Egbert Austin Williams (a name which he shortened with good reason for stage purposes), was born some time during 1876 at New Providence in the Bahama Islands. He was of mixed African and Spanish descent, with the white element predominating, and was so light of complexion that he used burnt cork for blackface make-up, as a white comedian would. His parents were Frederick and Sarah Williams. One of his grandfathers was white but had married an octoroon — an action that set the stage for the essential tragedy of his grandson's life.

When Bert was a small boy, his parents moved to California, where he attended Riverside High School. The elder Williams had great educational ambitions for his son, but the boy ended them by joining Martin and Seig's Mastodon Minstrels at the age of 17. That was in 1893. The troupe toured mining and lumber camps for two years.

In 1895 theatrical history was made when 19-year-old Bert met George W. Walker in San Francisco. Walker had been a song and dance man with a medicine show. Like Williams, he was a brilliant comedian. They formed a partnership and went into small-time vaudeville with an

RARE RECORDS! Unplayed mint electrical imports and cut-outs. Polydors, Telefunken, Swiss and Italian records. Little known discs by Erb, Supervia, Elizabeth Schumann, Huseh, Schusmus, Lehmann, Gerhardt, Schiatz, Bjorling, Kraus, Joyce, Capsir, Pagliughi, Pertile, Favero, Cigna, Merli, Tauber, etc. 2327 Arthurs St., Los Angeles 65, Calif. o 30801

MISCELLANEOUS

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid.—Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Catalog 10c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. je12407

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp, please.—"Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d6238

SWISS MUSIC Movements, assorted tunes, $1.80. Direct from importer. Stamped with year of manufacture, "1950".—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, N. Y. s4652

FOR SALE: Collectors' Prizes. Electric bar room type player pianos, with roll music. Circus air calliopes, with electric blowers, handplayed or automatic (roll music). These instruments restored, returned to like new condition.—Lee Company, 934 N. Lancaster, Dallas, Texas. s3426

MUST SELL, moving. Regina auto, 21x27", $250. Auto, playing banjo, $125. Two singing birds in cage, $100. Melodeon, 2 keyboards, $75. Violina, $75. Piano & organ combined, $150. Sell all much less, make your offer on any.—B. L. Williams, 8000 Coun Ave., Chevy Chase, Maryland, Close to Wash., Pa. s1234

MELODEONS and Melodeon-Organs restored like new. Also buy, sell.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids 6, Mich. n3882

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80 direct from importer.—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, New York. d4654

act that set the pattern for Moran and Mack, "The Two Black Crows" of a generation later, and many other blackface teams. Williams was, for stage purposes, slow and drawing and seemed a monstrosity of bewildered stupidity. As his straight man foil, Walker was sophisticated and alert — essentially he used the same formula that is followed today by Amos'n'Andy.

The young fellows drifted about California and other parts of the United States for a year, but by 1896 they were in New York. Their early career oddly patterned that of Billy Murray, who at the same time was wandering about the West with road shows and minstrel troupes and gaining the experience that was to help make him eventually the most popular of pioneer recording artists, Billy made his first cylinder records for Bacigalupi Brothers of San Francisco in 1898, the year that Williams and Walker came East.

The story of how the Negro Comedians were engaged to appear in Victor Herbert's operetta, "The Gold Bug," in the Casino Theatre of New York, is interesting. "The Gold Bug" was produced by Thomas Canary and George W. Lederer. While Canary was on holiday at French Lick Springs, Ind., he stopped to listen to a pair of comedians going through a routine in the hotel lobby. They were Williams and Walker. The next day he engaged them to go to New York and instructed Lederer to put them into the production as a specialty act. Their success was so great that Williams on occasion had to take twenty encores for his song, "Go 'Way Back and Sit Down." They were then booked for Koster and Bial's famous music hall, where they made many songs popular. Among these was "Good Morning, Carrie," which they were later to make as what has become one of the rarest of all old Victor records.

Within a comparatively short time, Williams and Walker were earning $40,000 a year — which probably would be equal to $150,000 today. After big successes in vaudeville, they were able to produce their own musical comedy, "In Dahomey," with words and music by Negro authors and composers, and in which all the players were Negroes. It was a big hit on Broadway and was taken to London, where it opened on May 16, 1903, at the Shaftesbury Theatre, and had a long run. On June 27, 1904, a

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosorik & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 183 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

command performance was given for King Edward VII at Buckingham Palace. The players were lavishly entertained by English admirers, but when they tried to present a shortened version of "In Dahomey" in the Deep South of the United States they ran into trouble.

But I've got a bit ahead of my story. Even before "In Dahomey" was produced, Bert Williams and George Walker had made their debut as recording artists. In the catalog of Victor (then seven-inch) and Monarch (10-inch) single-faced records issued by Eldridge R. Johnson in February, 1902, appears the announcement of the first Williams and Walker records. As I shall show, the records were already several months old and there must have been an even earlier announcement, but I haven't found it. Incidentally, since Victor began making 10-inch records only late in 1900 or early in 1901, it's astonishing that so large a catalog could have been compiled in such a short time. Sousa's Band alone had made more than 100 records, most of which could be had in either the seven or ten-inch style. The band was not conducted for recording engagements by its leader, John Phillip Sousa, but by his assistant, Arthur Pryor, who founded in 1904 an equally popular organization of his own. The Sousa band men, like the Haydn Quartet, must have worked day and night to build up such a large list.

The Williams and Walker series was short, was never added to and, for some reason, didn't stay in the catalog long. But it was announced with a splurge. On page 43, under the heading, "Williams and Walker," the following description appeared:

"The most popular songs of the day are the 'Rag Time' or 'Coon Songs.' The greatest recommendation a song of this kind can have is that it is sung by Williams & Walker, the 'Two Real Coons.' Their selections are always from the brightest and best songs with the most catchy and pleasing melodies.

"Although Williams & Walker have been engaged to make Records exclusively for us at the highest price ever paid in the history of the Talking Machine business, and although their Records are the finest thing ever produced, being absolutely the real thing, we add them to our regular Record list with no advance in price."

The discs cost 50 cents each for the seven-inch size and $1 for the 10-inch. They were made before the world-famous Victor dog was adopted as a trademark.

The list included three duets — "I Don't Like That Face You Wear," "My Little Zulu Babe" and the team's biggest hit, "Good Morning, Carrie," of which the catalog editor said: "William's side remarks and exclamations make this one of the funniest records we have ever produced."

Williams, as the acknowledged more popular member of the team, had the longer list of solos. They included: "If You Love Your Baby," "In My Castle on the River Nile," "The Phrenologist Coon," "Where Was Moses When the Light Went Out?" ("finishing with a very funny talk by Mr. Williams"); "All Going Out and Nothing Coming In" ("the cleverest coon song ever written"); "The Ghost of a Coon"; "The Fortune Telling Man"; and "She's Getting More Like the White Folks Every Day."

There were three solos by Walker — as far as I know, the only ones he ever made: "Junie," "Good Afternoon, Mr. Jenkins," and "Her Name's Miss Dinah Fair."

These were the only Williams and Walker records issued by Victor. And today they are among the rarest of the rare. Some—perhaps all—were originally listed in the 3,000 Monarch series (Victor's first 10-inch records), but after a few months the numbers were changed. Number 3616, "If You Love Your Baby," must be the rarest of all because it had already been discontinued when the numbers were changed. However, all these records are so scarce that I have never seen one and don't know of any other collector who has. Up to a decade or so ago, the master records of some were preserved in the Victor vaults at Camden, but they have probably been destroyed since. When I visited the RCA-Victor plant in September, 1948, the genial manager of record sales, Ed Forman, told me that "only a very few" masters of early Black Label records have been kept, and even many Red Seal masters have been destroyed.

Williams seems to have made a few cylinder records for English companies while he and Walker were appearing in London. During 1904-05, the British branches of the Columbia, Edison and Lambert companies issued cylinders by a comedian named Bert Williams. Judging by the titles — "It Wasn't His Turn to Laugh," "Bill's Whistle" and "Bertie in Love" — they were of an English type of comedy, different from anything he recorded in the States. At the conclusion of this series, I shall append what I hope is an approximately complete list of all the records made by Bert Williams, in the United States and abroad. Obviously, there's a remote possibility that he sang for some of the minor American companies before his 1901 engagement with Victor — possibly not under his own name. But it would be next to impossible to trace such records now.

With the success of "In Dahomey," Williams and Walker's career was clearly chartered. No matter how much they may have wanted to do other types of comedy, or even serious stage work, they settled into a well-paid but cramping groove as black-face comedians. There is abundant evidence that both wearied of their familiar roles. Walker, more outspoken than the quiet, studious and modest Williams, said something in an interview a few years before his death that hinted at his inward discontentment: "The one hope of the colored performer must be in making a radical departure from the old 'darker' style of singing and dancing . . . There is an artistic side to the black race, and if it could be properly developed on the stage I believe the theatergoing public would profit much by it." He also said: "My idea has always been to impersonate my race just as they are. The colored man has never successfully taken off his own humorous characteristics, and the white impersonator often overdoes the matter."

Williams and Walker were always careful not to stir antagonism against their people, but they were self-respecting performers and pioneers in the effort to obtain fair treatment for Negroes in the theatre. In 1909, when Walter C. Kelly, "The Virginian Judge," was featured in vaudeville in an act modeled on the police court sessions that the famous Judge John J. Crutchfield held for many years in Richmond, he refused to appear at Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre on the same bill with the comedians. Walker sensibly and moderately observed: "The man is foolish. The day is past that sort of thing. Both white men and black have a right to earn a living at whatever manner they find most congenial, provided they injure no one else."

But again we're getting ahead of the story. After Williams and Walker returned from London, they appeared in other all-Negro productions, such as "Abyssinia," "The Policy Players" and "Bandanna Land." These were written by a noted Negro composer, Will Marion Cook, who became almost as famous as the comedians.

It was while they were starring in "Abyssinia," the musical comedy into which Williams introduced his best known song, "Nobody," that Williams and Walker became exclusive Columbia recording artists. They did so, presumably, for fees far above those they had collected from Victor five years previously, even though, as we have seen, the earlier amounts were represented to be "the highest price ever paid in the history of the talking machine business" up to that time. Walker, whose voice probably didn't record well, soon dropped out of the Columbia picture, but Williams remained an exclusive artist until his death. However, I have an Edison Diamond Disc (No. 50976) of "Save a Little Dram for Me," sung by one Duke Rogers. It was made in 1920, but in accordance with Edison's peculiar policy of frequently holding records for long periods before putting them on the market, wasn't issued until late in 1922, after Williams had died. The style is so much like that of Bert Williams (with a few minor changes that might have been made purposely to throw investigators off the scent) that I have often wondered whether Williams, wanting to know how his voice would sound as recorded by Edison, made that one Diamond Disc under an assumed name. No other Edison record was listed by "Duke Rogers," who was certainly a marvelous imitator of Williams, if he wasn't the comedian himself.

Bert Williams's first Columbia record appears in the July, 1906, list, and is thus described:

"The Ethiopian baritone, Bert Williams, sings his big hit, Nobody —

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 36)

FLAX AND THE LOOM

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 31)

patterns were wrought in blue and white.

"Well have the botanists chosen for flax the scientific name Linum usitatissimum, which means, 'most useful.' As a source and aid to human progress it must be enumerated among the half dozen most important plants in all the world. Fortunately for mankind it seems to thrive under very wide variations of climate and is successfully grown from the tropics to well toward the northern limits of agriculture in Scandinavia and Manitoba. It is in the cooler climates, however, that it attains the highest quality of fiber. Its use is one of the old, old discoveries of the race. The Swiss Lake Dwellers passed so long ago that no archaeologist ventures to set their date in history; but dredging on the site of their homes brings up fragments of their fishing nets, and skilled microscopists establish the fact that these were made of the indispensable flax.

"The Mediterranean Basin was the cradle of civilization and there the flax plant everywhere found a home. It furnished the winding sheet for the kings of the men who piled up the pyramids, and the Assyrian and the Greek went clad in the same universal fiber that made the shirt and the kirtle of the American pioneer.

"Flax is the premier textile plant of the world. Other cheaper and far inferior vegetable fibers have very largely displaced it for the commonplace uses of life; but when men want strength and durability, when they want beauty, as in table linen and in altar cloths, then they turn back again to this imperial plant.

"Flax fiber when first prepared and spun and woven may be of varying colors, but always some soft and lovely shade of gray. Our grandmothers bleached it in the sun until it became almost white, practically without loss of strength. Modern bleaching with boiling and chemicals attains an almost snowy, gleaming whiteness but at the cost of durability. Compared with flax, cotton is at best weak and short-lived. Cotton fabrics grow rotten and weak with the passing years but linen literally survives the centuries. For sheer strength a slender thread of twisted flax fibers is incomparable. Woven alone and made into shirt or dress or sheet it made a fabric well-nigh indestructible — literally an heirloom to be handed down through the years. Used as warp to protect and hold the honest woolen woof, it made clothing that kept out the cold or bedding beneath which the pioneer in his rude cabin home might at least lie warm o' nights. Some day a great poet will arise who will be worthy to sing the Saga of the Flax.

"Less readily than wool did flax adapt itself to machine methods. The manufacture of wool slowly and by degrees passed out of the home to the factory, but in our state at least the handling of flax and the weaving of linen always remained a household handicraft and passed away with the coming of the machine age. So it has come at last that a crop, an art, a handicraft which less than a century ago, was well-nigh universal is today as forgotten as the quill pen or the tinder-box and flint and steel."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25)

10-in. disc No. 3423 — in an extremely funny way, the haunting melody being supported by the trombone and orchestra."

"Nobody" was issued as a cylinder in October. Also in July appeared the only Columbia duet record by Williams and Walker that I have found listed—No. 3410, "Pretty Desdamone." Columbia referred to the team as "The Ebony Emperors, William and Walker, whose typical coon harmony . . . is truly delectable," and added that both numbers "are selections from Williams and Walker's recent musical production, 'Abysinia,' which had a six week's run at the Majestic Theatre in New York. These Negro artists sing exclusively for the Columbia Phonograph Company."

In September, Williams was back with two more records. Their description:

"Here It Comes Again—10-in. disc. No. 3454—by the chief of Ethiopian comedians, who is now featuring it in 'Abysinia,' at the Grand Opera House, New York. A characteristic coon oddity, with orchestra accompaniment, unique and entertaining. Mr. Williams makes a tuneful plea for good old home cookery. In his song, 'I'm Tired of Eating in a Restaurant' — cylinder No. 32990 — with orchestra accompaniment. Both of these songs are original, being the compositions of this celebrated comedian and recorded by him exclusively for the Columbia Phonograph Company."

Williams was now an established Columbia favorite. The restaurant song (whose correct title was "I'm Tired of Eating in the Restaurants") appeared in disc form in December, 1906. At the same time one of the comedian's biggest hits, the catchy and comical "Let It Alone," which, like "Nobody," is still popular today, was listed three ways — as a disc; a two-minute cylinder; and as a longer playing six-inch cylinder made especially for use on a highly touted Columbia machine invented by Daniel Higham, of Boston. This device, called the Twentieth Century Sound Magnifying Graphophone, used an amber flywheel to exert pressure and amplify sound so that it could be heard a mile or more. Comparatively few of these stentorian instruments appear to be in existence now, although my friend, Harry Spencer, of Danville, Va., has one, and the six-inch cylinders, which couldn't be played on ordinary machines, are equally hard to find.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

AUTOMOBILE CARTOON COLLECTION

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29)

the title: "Making the 8:20 Local," shows a well-to-do commuter seated in his luxurious car which is being driven by a chauffeur while his cook is on a little platform in the rear making flapjacks. He is serenely eating his breakfast and evidently enjoying the sight of some fellow commuters hurrying on foot to catch the local. Under this cartoon appeared the caption, "The Suburbanite — There's nothing like having an inventive turn of mind. NOW I can enjoy my breakfast leisurely every morning." This cartoon was published in Puck on June 29, 1906.

The famous comic artist, F. Oppen, creator of Happy Hooligan, whose cartoons appeared in American publications over a period of more than half a century, comes up with a cartoon in Puck on October 26, 1897, entitled, "Electric," which he evidently believed to be the zenith in imaginary motoring. He pictured a number of incidents which he probably deemed to be humorous because they were so impossible — at that date. Yet all these incidents could and most of them have happened in the intervening years and are considered commonplace today.

There is a funeral, for instance, in which the mourners ride in electric driven "horseless buggies." Horses have long ago disappeared from our funeral processions. A keg-laden beer truck powered by electricity carries the daddy of today's front bumper pushing a slow wagon out of its path. The "brewer's big horses" have long ago passed into limbo — with the exception of a few show teams, and the brewer's big trucks are common sights on the streets today. A policeman taking a drunk to jail or the hospital in an electric driven "Police Ambulance Corps" car. A king passing in review in an electric brougham. Even an organ grinder and monkey on a motored car. About the only incident in the cartoon that was a bit far fetched was one showing a stage coach with electric motor power being attacked by Indians on bicycles. Today's motored bus would be the nearest thing to the stage coach, but Indians of the present era do not ride bicycles. Many of them ride big shiny convertibles purchased with some of their oil well profits.

There are of course the cartoons showing the horse rearing back in fear as a car speeds by, and the momentous advent of the "balloon tire." Many others could be listed were space to permit. The collection is one that would make a strong appeal to every motor car owner and driver in the country, together with the many thousands of persons who are interested in early Americana. They would get a big kick out of seeing the early contraptions that were the daddies of the Buick, Packard, Ford, Studebaker and other well-known makes of today, and would recall many familiar STROM listed in the foregoing.

WEIL, Hermann
(Baritone)

2570 Tannhauser—Lied an den Abend-stern
Bajazzo—Prolog

X..., Mme
Soprano of the Grand Opera, Paris
2572 Hamlet—Air de la folie
Romeo—Valse
2573 Huguenots—O beau pays
Rigoletto—Air de Gilda

THE END

NOTE: All discs 14-inch size unless otherwise specified.

WANTED

COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

EDISON GRAND OPERA

CYLINDERS:

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophone by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT
West Falmouth,
Mass.

Persons offering material not specified above,
or seeking information, are requested to enclose
a stamped envelope for reply. tfo

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

BERT WILLIAMS, A Thwarted Genius, II

By JIM WALSH

Except for a few double-faced records issued experimentally in 1904, all Columbia discs played on only one side until late in 1908. Then Columbia decided to issue its "popular" records in double-faced form, and Victor soon followed the Columbia example. When the double-faced catalog was inaugurated, several of Bert Williams' earlier recordings were given new numbers and included in the two-sided list. "I'm Tired of Eating in the Restaurants" was numbered A298 and paired with "The Yankee Doodle Boy," by Billy Murray; "Nobody" (A302) was coupled with "You Will Have to Read the Answer in the Stars," by Bob Roberts; and A305 was "Let It Alone," with "The Streets of New York"—Billy Murray again. In the twelve-inch list, "All In, and Down" (I've long wondered why Williams sang the song that way instead of in the more familiar version of "All In, Down and Out") was coupled with Billy Golden's immortal "Turkey in the Straw."

Some months later, the single-faced "Mississippi Stoker" was doubled with Collins and Harlan's "That Mesmerizing Mendelssohn Tune" to become A801. On A862, "Ragtime Bob" Roberts was again William's playmate, the latter singing "He's a Cousin of Mine," and Bob, "I Don't Know Where I'm Goin' But I'm On My Way."

In January, 1909, Columbia issued its last list of wax cylinders, although the unbreakable Indestructible cylinders were later sold for a time under the Columbia name.

Although "Nobody" was Williams' biggest hit and the song most closely associated with him, record A302 was dropped after being in the catalog a few months — possibly because the recording was none too good. It was issued in a re-made version in 1912, coupled with the comedian's recording of his famous Ziegfeld Follies number, "My Landlady." Williams had begun a new Columbia series in 1911 with A915, "Constantly" and

BERT WILLIAMS

"I'll Lend You Everything I've Got except My Wife," and from that time on, his records were not coupled with those of any other artist. By this time, too, his style was so unmistakable and so well established as to serve in effect as a trademark. One critic has said that Williams' songs were sung in "a rich, lugubrious bass." Actually, they weren't sung at all, but were half-spoken in a rasping, husky tone. They were more recitations than songs. My own belief is that if Williams had sung occasionally, instead of sticking to a rather monotonous recitative, his records would have been more consistently entertaining. In vocal equipment, he was by no means the equal of the late Harry Frankel, ("Singin' Sam"), who had a voice of similar quality and who often sang to excellent effect songs primarily identified with Bert Williams. And, as a singer, Bert was far below the standard of the "Boy From New Orleans," Al Bernard (like "Singin' Sam," a white man), who has a tenor voice of really beautiful quality.

At any rate, the pattern was now set for Williams' performances. For the rest of his life he was to pretend to be a stupid, lazy, melancholy victim of hard luck — bad luck too overwhelming for him to understand or to struggle against.

Just when Williams' talented partner, George Walker, died is a matter of uncertainty. Percy Hammond, writing in a New York newspaper shortly after Williams' death, said that Walker passed on in 1907 — an obvious misstatement since we have already seen that in 1909 Walter C. Kelly refused to appear on the same vaudeville bill with Williams and Walker. The Dictionary of American

MUSIC BOXES

Visit the famous

A. V. BORNAND

collection in our NEW ENLARGED showrooms at 139 Fourth Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y.

Send for list of choice items for sale.

We do complete restoring of all types of music boxes, entirely re-pin the cylinders, replace broken teeth and points, re-tune the combs, etc. All work guaranteed. Estimates and appraisals cheerfully given.

A. V. BORNAND CO. — 139 4th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y.

(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

RECORDS

FINE OLD RECORDS for sale: Classical, vocal, operatic, violin, piano, vaudeville, jazz, popular, Lauder, McCormack, reasonably priced. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. d3084

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. d3483

RARE OLD RECORDS: Monthly sales list. Classical, vocal, popular, collector's items. Write—Delang, 349 Lindenwald, Ambler, Penna. mh6445

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. — E. Hirschmann, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o 126121

EIGHT THOUSAND different selections; vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. d126351

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 109 North Third, Richmond, Va. n3253

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895, 1925 (Moses). Price $3.75. American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, New York. f124201

MONTHLY AUCTION SALE: Old vocal operatic records. Free list.—Collectors' Haven, 118 Hancock St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. o 3272

Lehmann! Supervia! Tauber! Lili Kraus! Pagliughi! etc. 10,000 brand new Parlophones, some at auction, others at discounts to 70%! — 2327 Arthurs Street, Los Angeles 65, Calif. o 3846

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs. — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6034

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening"; large, varied stock. Please state "wants". Write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. n6829

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. o3084

FOR SALE: Record collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 15 first Ave., Newton Square, Penna. au12741

REGINA 15½" discs, $2 each, 1 free with purchase of 10.—Music Exchange, Sears Court, New Bedford, Mass. o3882

RARE RECORDS! Unplayed mint electrical imports and cut-outs. Polydors, Telefunks, Swiss and Italian records. Little known discs by Erb, Supervia, Elizabeth Schumann, Husch, Schlusmus, Lehmann, Gerhardt, Schiatz, Bjorling, Kraus, Joyce, Capsir, Pagliughi, Pertile, Favero, Cigna, Merli, Tauber, etc. 2327 Arthurs St., Los Angeles 65, Calif. o 30801

Biography gives his death year as 1909, and that again is probably wrong, since in that year his biggest hit, "Bon Bon Buddy (The Chocolate Drop)" was a sensation. The 1909 Victor catalog lists a record of this song by Billy Murray, with the comment: "One of Walker's inimitable songs, from the great Williams and Walker production, Bandanna Land. Murray's imitation of Walker in this song is very clever."

Douglas Gilbert's book, "American Vaudeville: Its Life and Times," says Walker died in 1911, and that is probably correct, since I find no mention of him in record catalogs after that year. (He was not then making records, but there was occasional comment about other artists singing in his style.) Unlike the quiet and rather retiring Williams, Walker lived up to his conception of what a Broadway star should be by wearing diamond rings and flamboyant clothing and having his bedroom decorated in pale-blue satin. He died of paralysis, and had been ill about two years before his death.

Without his partner, Williams continued his brilliant success. But he still had occasional trouble because he was partly Negro. Florenz Ziegfeld engaged him for The Follies of 1910 and ordered that a feature part be written for him, but when the cast learned that a Negro was being included they threatened to strike. As a compromise, Ziegfeld took out the feature part Williams was to have had and substituted the comedian's vaudeville specialty. Bert was such a hit he stopped the show—and the cast consented to the feature act being restored. Theatrical people are usually extremely tolerant in matters of race and religion — so much so that it is surprising that anyone in the Follies should have objected to appearing with so distinguished a performer as Bert Williams. For the most part, the comedian was highly respected both as a man and as a performer, and he is said to have been the only Negro that the Keith circuit could book on a white bill in Washington, where "Jim Crow" practices have long been a sore spot.

(To be Continued)

MISCELLANEOUS

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Catalog 10c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. je12407

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp, please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d6238

MELODEON ORGAN: Walnut. Action, case, completely restored, cleaned, re-finished. New leather hinges, valves, felts, etc., $400.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids 6, Mich. d3483

FOR SALE: Music rolls for National Automatic Piano. Over 100 American tunes available. Send for list. Also want music rolls of all descriptions.—Russell Miller, 3274 Adriatic Ave., Long Beach 10, Calif. mh62511

FOR SALE: Music Box discs, Stella, 17½ and Symphonium, 14¾.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. d3272

SILVERED CORNET, original case & attachments. Manufactured for exhibition during the '60's.—Mrs. Robert Campbell, 65 Chestnut Lane, New Rochelle, N. Y. o1861

MELODEONS and Melodeon-Organ restored like new. Also buy, sell.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids 6, Mich. n3882

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80 direct from importer. —Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, New York. d4654

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues. — Elmer Moore, 1172 Franklin Street, Santa Monica, Calif. d3422

RECORDS—JAZZ

I HAVE 100,000 JAZZ and sweet records, collectors items. Send me your wants. I will also buy phonograph record collections, any size.—Jacob S. Schneider, 128 West 66th St., N. Y. C., New York. f6069

ATTENTION
Custom built wheels and parts for French clocks, German clocks, antique grandfather clocks and wood wheel Terry clocks. Music boxes rebuilt. We have one of the best equipped shops in the South. Free estimates, all work guaranteed. B. W. SETZER Washington, D. C. 4534 - 29th St. N.W. mh6

ERICH F. WITZEL

171-A Baldwin Avenue,
Jersey City 6, N. J.

ZITHER TREASURE

Extraordinary rich looking and beautiful old large ZITHER, like new, 31" long, 18" at widest point. Bone or Ivory carved trimmings with Grecian type and grape design holding post 12½" long on side. (Think Ivory). Ornate brass plate lug-holder at top. Inlaid Mother-of-Pearl leafy decoration in center. Even the string-holder buttons through bottom bone or Ivory etched plate have Mother-of-Pearl centers. Beautiful polished wood body. 36 strings. Made by Hartmann Bros. and Reinhard. Outside of old case, 33x18", needs working on, but inside is beautifully velvet and plush lined and fitted. Accessories. Former old owner says her music professor father bought it years ago at an unbelievably high figure. Write for large photo. 20c returnable. A find at $100. op

SAVE YOUR HOBBIES

WITH A BINDER

The wealth of information contained in every issue of HOBBIES is too valuable to be thrown around with the consequent danger of loss. This binder is covered with buckram, with the title printed in gold. Its appearance will compare favorably with the handsomest bound books in your library. It will be sent to you postpaid on receipt of $2.50 with a guarantee of perfect satisfaction or money refunded.

Holds 12 Issues

HOBBIES MAGAZINE

1006 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago 6, Illinois

cellence. The electrically recorded discs which followed—solos and some superb duets with Rethberg, Gigli, Martinelli, etc.—are perhaps not all quite so perfect vocally, but most are superb. If the voice occasionally sounds a little muffled and obscured, probably the microphone was to blame.

It is worth noting that in our HOBBIES Favorite Baritone contest, confined to acoustic recordings, De Luca received more votes than any of his rivals (I speak, perforce, from memory), with his Puritani among the most popular baritone discs. His arias from Don Carlos, William Tell, Favorita and Benvenuto Cellini are outstanding, too. Great as these operatic interpretations are, however, it is in such songs as Pastorale, Ultima Rose, Nuttata e Sentimento (especially this!) and even in God Bless You My Dear (in spite of the song) and the gay Marietta that De Luca's most individual and endearing vocalism be heard. Will any other baritone ever sing with such memorable beauty?

WANTED

COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.

EDISON GRAND OPERA
CYLINDERS:

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonofone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophone by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT
West Falmouth,
Mass.

Persons offering material not specified above,
or seeking information, are requested to enclose
a stamped envelope for reply. tfo

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Mosorjak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

BERT WILLIAMS, A Thwarted Genius, III

By JIM WALSH

Working as a "single," Williams continued to use blackface make-up, and he relied entirely on his songs and on pantomime with which he illustrated his stories. (For several summers he went to Europe and studied with the great pantomime specialist, Pietro, who, Williams said, "taught me that the entire aim of art in the theater is to achieve simplicity.") In this type of work, he was considered without an equal. Here is a typical snatch of Williams monolog — unfortunately without the accompanying pantomime:

"Where I'm living now is a nice place, but you have to go along a road between two graveyards to get to it. One night last week I was coming home kind of late, and I got about halfway home when I happened to look over my shoulder and saw a ghost following me. I started to run. I run till I was 'most ready to drop. And then I looked around. But I didn't see no ghost, so I sat down on the curb stone to rest. Then out of the corner of my eye I could see something white, and when I turned square around, there was that ghost sitting along side of me. The ghost says: 'That was a fine run we had. It was the best running I ever saw.' I says, 'Yes. And as soon as I get my breath you're going to see some more.'"

One of the most famous of these pantomime specialties was Williams' pretended playing of a poker game. The stage would be dark, with only a spot light focused on his head and shoulders. He would hold a poker hand near his face, while by gestures he went through the gamut of emotions felt by winners and losers alike. A noted Williams song was "The Darktown Poker Club," and I believe that this was the basis of a moving picture in which the comedian starred in 1916. Phil Harris, the dance band leader and radio star, who is perhaps the best-known of the latter-day imitators of Bert Williams, has recorded several Williams numbers, including "The Darktown Poker Club." When the Harris record was reviewed in Variety, the reviewer, a young man who apparently knew little or nothing about Williams, said in effect that the record was "disgusting" and that he was embarrassed at having played it before his Negro maid. The critic probably was one of those persons who consider all dialect work to be malicious, but the truth is that there is nothing about "The Darktown Poker Club" which should offend any sensible person, white or black. The reviewer also said he had the impression that Williams was a servile type of Negro. Such an impression is completely wrong. Bert Williams didn't carry a chip on his shoulder, but he was a self-respecting artist who made his way on his own merits. As has already been indicated, he felt a certain sense of frustration because of being compelled to go on doing the same sort of act season after season and, as will be seen later, he did sometimes refer thoughtfully, when talking intimately with friends, to the racial discrimination he experienced.

Although he occasionally appeared in vaudeville, Williams was chiefly active from 1910 to 1918 as the featured comedian of the Follies and received a salary running high into four figures. During this period he popularized many songs, such as "The Right Church But the Wrong Pew," "You're Gwine to Get Some-thin' What You Don't Expect," "The Jonah Man" and "That's Harmony." The famous producer, David Belasco, is said to have decided that Williams' greatest gifts, for character delineation not of the slapstick variety, weren't being used, and to have offered to star him, but the comedian refused, saying that he owed Ziegfeld a debt of gratitude and didn't think he should leave the Follies. Throughout this period his Columbia records kept appearing at fairly regular intervals.

But eventually Williams did give up appearing in the Ziegfeld shows. In 1919 and 1920 he starred in a production called the Broadway Brevities. After that he toured in what is said to have been one of his best shows, "Under the Bamboo Tree." He must have been inwardly dissatisfied, for he still spoke occasionally of his ambition "to stop doing piffle and interpret the REAL Negro on the stage." That ambition was never to be gratified, for he died after being stricken with pneumonia. There is something of uncertainty about the place of his death—just as there is about the year in which George Walker died. The Dictionary of American Biography says he died in New York City; "American Vaudeville" that he took pneumonia while in Detroit, on tour with "Under the Bamboo Tree," and died there. At any rate, the date of his death was March 4, 1922. He was survived by his wife, Charlotte Williams, a Negro performer whom he had married in 1900.

For several days after Bert Williams' death, the New York papers contained a great deal of comment about this life, personality and achievements. The Evening Post expressed regret that Williams had been subject to "the upswell of the tide of jazz in these later years" and remarked that "his admirable art was not for the orgiastic jazz, but for the plaintive humor of the blues that is now coming to the front."

And the late Percy Hammond, one of the foremost critics of the day, penned a revealing personality sketch which shows that Williams was essentially what I have called him—a thwarted genius. Here is an excerpt from the Hammond article:

"A reticent fellow, Mr. Williams seldom talked of himself save in modest reference to his work as a comedian. Yet he was the repository of a secret sorrow.

"There he was, unquestionably once a comic artist of the first rank, doomed for the rest of his career to an environment of songs and dances, with the doors of advancement closed against him. . . He could not with success aspire to make his genius an instrument of characterization in the more eminent realms of the theater. He humbly proceeded along his antic pathway, exciting the ephemeral admiration of the knowing, and remaining, in the delicate and not descriptive phraseology of the press agent, a 'distinguished colored comedian.'

"It was intimated above that Mr. Williams nursed this distressful circumstance as a private woe and was mute concerning it. While he did not give expression to his thwarted esthetic yearnings, he did at times hint his mild resentment at what he termed 'an American phase.' You may be surprised to hear that Mr. Williams described the frontier between him and his audience as 'an American phase,' yet those are the words he employed one evening in a somewhat reluctant exposition of his emotions in the matter. He talked well. Said he: 'This may sound snobbish, though it isn't. I am not a native of the United States, but a West Indian, and I must take solace from my philosophy as long as I earn my livelihood in this country. The rebellion is all out of me, for I know that it is up to me and that this is the only civilization in the world where a man's color makes a difference, other matters being regarded as equal. And you must admit that there's food for thought, not necessarily bitter, in the fact that in London I may sit in open lodge with a premier of Great Britain and be entertained in the home of a distinguished novelist, while here in the United States, which fought four years for certain principles, I am often treated with an air of personal condescension by the gentleman who sweeps out my dressing room or the gentleman whose duty it is to turn the spot light on me if the stage directions call upon him to do so.'

A story told by the noted New York specialist in old recordings, Joe Franklin, goes hand in hand with the foregoing quotations from Williams' own remarks. According to Joe, the Negro comedian once appeared in a benefit performance with Eddie Cartor, but had previously been refused admittance to the front entrance of the hotel where they were to appear. After the show, Williams is said to have remarked to Cantor: "You know, Eddie, nobody in the audience seemed to notice whether I was white or black when they applauded. They made me come out for seven encores."

Writing at about the same time as Percy Hammond, the late Heywood Broun made some interesting comments about Bert Williams in the New World World:

"Bert Williams found prosperity and success in the theater, but his high talents were largely wasted. His death merely marks the end of the tragedy. Color was a factor but not the only one in the circumstances which led to his downfall. There was much more white blood than black in Williams, but the Caucasian of America is customarily modest in such cases and by some illogical process has decided that any discernable strain, however slight, of Negro blood extraction outweighs all other lines. And so Bert Williams was a Negro.

"It would be quite fair to say that the theater discriminated against him on this account. Audiences applauded him generously and laughed heartily the moment he came before the footlights. There was only one restriction which limited him. Since he was a Negro, he must be a funny man. It did not seem to us that Williams was a great comedian and certainly he was not a great clown, but it was the role to which he was assigned season after season. Every round of laughter bound him more securely to his state as a merryman. Even indifferent work during the last few seasons was of no aid in freeing him from the thrall. Somehow or other laughing at Bert Williams came to be tied up in people's minds with liberalism, charity and the Thirteenth Amendment.

"To our mind Williams did have a gift in which he was supreme but was not exactly comic. No man in the theatre of our day could tell a story as well. He had in his repertoire at one time a story about a Negro parson and a haunted house. This was the story built about the refrain, 'We can't do nothin' till Martin comes.' You may remember that it was said by the first cat which came out of the fireplace and paused to eat the live coals. It was a little friendly cat. The next cat was the size of a St. Bernard dog, and after it had dined and spit out the sparks it asked, 'When are we gwine to begin?' 'We can't do nothin' till Martin comes,' was the reply of the first cat.

"The next one was as big as a Shetland pony and, like the others, it ate fire and inquired plaintively, 'When are we gwine begin?' and the answer came chorally, 'We can't do nothin' till Martin comes.'

"It was at this point that the Negro preacher rose (in the story, as we remember it, he was the father of Bert Williams) and said, 'When Martin comes you tell him I was here, but I'se GONE!'

"For all the humorous fantasy of instrument and the whiplike finish, Williams did not tell the story as a comic anecdote. By voice and pantomime he lifted it to the stature of a true ghost story. We could see the old Negro feverishly turning the pages of the Bible, the cats from the fireplace taking form before our eyes. Sparks dropped from their jaws and the wind howled outside the cabin. All this was built for us by a tall man, his face clownishly blackened with burnt cork, who stood still in the center of the stage and used no gesture which traveled more than six inches.

"The memory of the happening remains with us so vividly that sleeping in a haunted house is one of the all too numerous things which we are afraid to do. Of course we laughed at the message which was left for him, but it was more or less defensive laughter, because we knew in our hearts that the preacher in the story had outstayed us by at least one cat."

Mr. Broun's recollection of the classical Williams story was reasonably accurate, although in the comedian's record of it the cats come down the stairs, not out of the fireplace (but they do jump into the fire to wash with live coals); the second cat was the size of a Newfoundland dog, instead of a St. Bernard; the preacher is not identified as the narrator's father, and the catch phrase is "You Can't Do Nothin' Till Martin Gets Here!"

Columbia did not issue its mirth-provoking record of "You Can't Do Nothin' Till Martin Gets Here," which I consider one of the finest talking records ever made, until September, 1922—about six months after the comedian's death. It was coupled with another side-splitting monolog, "How? Fried!" which relates how an old Negro slave's miraculous memory kept him from becoming the property of the devil. The record ap-

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

MUSIC BOXES

All Types — Repaired

Bought and Sold

Swiss music boxes rebuilt to original condition. Only remaining source of supply of pins in the world for repinning cylinders. Broken teeth in combs replaced and properly tuned. All parts repaired or re-newed. All work guaranteed.

Large stock of fine music boxes for sale. SWISS boxes with from 1 to 12 cylinders. DISC boxes of all makes and sizes, Itelina, Mira, Stella, etc.

Many fine mechanical musical items, bird boxes, birds in cages, etc. Send for list, stating your requirements. Estimates and approvals cheerfully given.

A. V. BORNAND CO.

139 4th Ave.,

Pelham 65, N. Y.

(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

ne

RENOWNED PHILADELPHIA RECORD

SOCIETY ISSUES

Now Available!

LIMITED EDITIONS

ANSELM, G. - Luisa Miller, "Quando Lo Sero" (1 & 2) $2.10; DE LUCIA, F. "Aprile"/"Fineste Cho Lucive" $2.10; URLUS, Jacques - Die Walkure, "Ein Schwert/Rienzi, "Hohn Roma" $2.60; GARDEN, Mary - Louise, "Depuis Le Jour"/DELNA, Marie - Le Prophete, "Ah Mon Fils" $2.60; GILION, Mario - Siberia, "Ovide Steppe"/BASSI, Amadeo - Siberia, "T'Incontrai Per Via" $2.10; VIGNAS, P. - Le Prophete, "Sopra Berit"/GILION, M. - Le Prophete, "Beriam E Intorno" $2.10; MURATORE, L. - Monna Vanna "Ellie Est A Mol"/NOTE, J. - Guillaume Tell, "Sols Immobile" $2.10; DER- EYNE, Fely Manon, "Je Marche"/BRONSKAYA & FREEMAN - Lakme, "Sous Le Dome Epals" $2.60.

On red unbreakable Vinylite

No C. O. D. - Add 50c for Postage

ROSARIA D. PARISI

1433 S. 7th St.

Philadelphia 47, Pa.

ap

parently was not a good seller for it stayed in the catalog only a short time and is hard to find. I obtained my copy from a man in Roanoke who found it in a stack of old records in the basement of his home, and I had the good luck to get a duplicate for a confirmed Bert Williams admirer—Jack Via, of South Boston, Va.—from Russell Polay, of Denver. Williams made one other twelve-inch talking record that was a big seller, "Elder Eatmore's Sermon on Generosity" and "Elder Eatmore's Sermon on Throwing Stones." The latter side was electrically recorded by Charles E. Mack, one of the famous "Two Black Crows."

As electric recording took the place of acoustic, Bert Williams' records gradually disappeared from the Columbia catalog. But in 1940, when the comedian had been dead 18 years, some of them made a comeback. An album was issued, containing eight of the numbers he had recorded between 1919 and 1922. It proved popular and is still on sale. The orchestra accompaniments sound louder and clearer than on the original Blue Label issues, and give the impression of having been played by a larger ensemble. Possibly new accompaniments were dubbed in, as Victor has done in the case of some Red Seal records; or more likely the old records were subjected to some electrical amplification before being reissued. At any rate, they sound well by modern standards and are richly worth having as a souvenir of a man whom, in spite of Brown's dissent, I shall venture to term a great comedian.

And, although Bert Williams' life closed on a note of frustration, it might have been a comfort to him if he could have known that, nearly a generation later, he is still by no means forgotten; that some of his records still sell and that he is to this day one of the most imitated of comedians.

He also would have been gratified if he, could have foreseen an honor which was to come to him, as related in this excerpt from the July 5, 1944, issue of Variety:

The "Bert Williams," a Liberty ship named for the famed Negro comedian who died in 1922, will be built with Harlem war-bond subscriptions, it was announced by the Harlem Women's Division of the Fifth War Loan Drive. Williams, who was one of the top comedians and pantomimists at the turn of the century, starred in many Ziegfeld shows, being identified with such songs as "Nobody," "Woodman, Spare That Tree" and "We're Not Going to Play This Game According to Hoyle, We're Going to Play It According to Me." (This latter song was really "The Dark-town Poker Club."—J. W.)

Such things might have helped to reconcile Williams to his fate as a blackface antic, even though he might still have felt that sense of frustration at never having the chance of doing the higher type of art to which he believed his gifts entitled him.

Records by Bert A. Williams and George W. Walker

Victor and Monarch, issued in 1901. All these single-faced records were made in both 7-inch and 10-inch size, except M998, which was 10-inch only.

Bert Williams Solos

- 3616 If You Love Your Baby
3614 (reissued as 991) In My Castle on the River Nile
992 The Phrenologist Coon
993 Where Was Moses When the Light Went Out?
994 All Going Out and Nothing Coming In M998 The Ghost of a Coon
1083 The Fortune Telling Man
1085 She's Getting More Like the White Folks Every Day

RECORDS

FINE OLD RECORDS for sale: Classical, vocal, operatic, violin, piano, vaudeville, jazz, popular, Lauder, McCormack, reasonably priced. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. d3084

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. d3483

RARE OLD RECORDS: Monthly sales list. Classical, vocal, popular, collector's items. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. mh6446

WANTED: Record catalogues, supplements, pamphlets, 1900-1939. Old phonograph and record advertisements; other phonographic material. State price and condition. — D. Miller, Box 392, Long Beach, California. ja3614

EIGHT THOUSAND different selections; vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 16, Calif. d12681

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. n3253

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (Moses). Price $3.75. American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, New York f124201

MONTHLY AUCTION SALE: Old vocal operatic records. Free list.—Collectors' Haven, 148 Hancock St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ja3272

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 45 First Ave., New Town Square, Pennsylvania. o122741

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs. — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6084

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening"; large, varied stock. Please state "wants", write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. n6829

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. ja3084

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rareties. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. — E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan, Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

PHONOGRAPHS: Victor & Edison disc. Edison cylinder with flowered morning glory horn, like new. Others in fine condition. One table model disc with horn, Pat. 1901. One and James, 25 records, $15. One Edison 4 min. cylinder, built in horn, $12.50. 25 records with old machines. Write us your wants.—Karr Museum, Stanbury, Mo. n1234

George Walker Solos

- 995 Juni
996 Good Afternoon, Mr. Jenkins
3618 (999) Her Name's Miss Dinah Fair
Williams and Walker Duets

- 3619 (987) I Don't Like That Face You Wear
1086 My Little Zulu Babe
3617 (997) Good Morning, Carrie

Bert Williams Solos Made in England (Issued on cylinders in 1904-05)

Columbia 200986—It Wasn't His Turn to Laugh
Columbia 261030—Bill's Whistle
Lambert 5176—Bill's Whistle
Edison 13166—Bertie in Love

Columbia Records, made while Williams was under exclusive Columbia contract, from 1906 to 1922. Single-faced discs and cylinders:

- 3423 Nobody (10-inch disc)
33011 Nobody (two-minute cylinder)
3410 Pretty Desdamone (10-inch disc. Duet by Williams and Walker. All the following records are Williams solos).

MISCELLANEOUS

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Catalog 10c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 6, Colo. je12407

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp, please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d6238

MELODEON ORGAN: Walnut. Action, case, completely restored, cleaned, re-finished. New leather hinges, valves, felts, etc., $400.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids 6, Mich. d3483

FOR SALE: Music rolls for National Automatic Piano. Over 100 American tunes available. Send for list. Also want music rolls of all descriptions.—Russell Miller, 3274 Adriatic Ave., Long Beach 10, Calif. mh62511

FOR SALE: Music Box discs, Stella, 17 1/4 and Symphonion, 14 1/4.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. d3272

MELODEONS and Melodeon-Organ restored like new. Also buy, sell. — C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids 6, Mich. n3882

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80 direct from importer. — Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, New York. d4684

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues. — Elmer Moore, 1172 Franklin Street, Santa Monica, Calif. d3422

BRASS SOLOS by Krvl. Levy, Clarke, etc. Send for free auction list. Also several pamphlets on history of phonograph for sale.—Allen Debus, 4949 Pulaski, Chicago 30, Ill. n1422

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. ja3272

For Sale: Regina Music Box, oak cabinet, 30 new 15 1/2" records, mostly old familiar hymns. First $150 buys box and records. All in A-1 condition.—Dean M. Goode, Bloomfield, Iowa. n1063

RECORDS—JAZZ

I HAVE 100,000 JAZZ and sweet records, collectors items. Send me your wants. I will also buy phonograph record collections, any size.—Jacob S. Schneider, 128 West 66th St., N. Y. C., New York. f6069

- 3454 Here It Comes Again
 32990 I'm Tired of Eating in the Restaurants (two-minute cylinder)
 3515 I'm Tired of Eating in the Restaurants (disc)
 3504 Let It Alone (disc)
 BC85086 Let It Alone (Premier six-inch cylinder)
 33025 Let It Alone (two-minute cylinder)
 3526 He's a Cousin of Mine (disc)
 33053 He's a Cousin of Mine (two-minute cylinder)
 30039 All In, Out and Down (12-inch disc)
 3557 Mississippi Stoker (disc)
 3575 I've Such a Funny Feeling When I Look at You (disc)
 3593 Fare Thee! On Ma Way! Jes' Gone (disc)

Double-Faced Columbia Solo Records by Bert Williams

- A298 I'm Tired of Eating in the Restaurants with Yankee Doodle Boy (Billy Murray)
 A302 Nobody with You WHL Have to Read the Answer in the Stars (Bob Roberts)
 A305 Let It Alone with The Streets of New York—from The Red Mill (Billy Murray)
 A801 Mississippi Stoker with That Mesmerizing Mendelssohn Tune (Collins and Harlan)
 A862 He's a Cousin of Mine with I Don't Know Where I'm Goin' But I'm On My Way (Bob Roberts)
 A5031 (12-inch) All In, Out and Down with Turkey in the Straw (Billy Golden)
 (All the following records are 10-inch, double-faced Columbias, with solos by Williams on both sides)
 A915 Constantly and I'll Lend You Anything I've Got Except My Wife
 A929 Play That Barber Shop Chord and Something You Don't Expect
 A1289 Nobody (a re-make of the original) and My Landlady A1321 Woodman, Spare That Tree and I Certainly Was Going Some A1354 On the Right Road and Borrow From Me
 A1504 Darktown Poker Club and You Can't Get Away From It
 A1817 I'm Neutral and Indoor Sports
 A1853 Never Mo' and Purposos
 A1909 Everybody and Samuel
 A2078 The Lee Family and I'm Gone Before I Go
 A2438 Twenty Years and No Place Like Home
 A2652 O Death, Where is Thy Sting? and When I Return
 A2710 Bring Back Those Wonderful Days and Oh! Lawdy (Something's Done Got Between Ebacaneer and Me)
 A2750 Everybody Wants a Key to My Cellar and It's Nobody's Business But My Own
 A2849 Moon Shines on the Moonshine and Somebody
 A2877 Checkers (It's Your Move Now) and I'm Sorry I Aint Got It—You Could Have It If I Had It
 A2941 Ten Little Bottles and Unlucky Blues
 A2979 Save a Little Dram for Me and Lonesome Alimony Blues
 A3305 I Want to Know Where Tosti Went When He Said Goodby and Get Up!
 A3339 Eve Cost Adam Just one Bone and You'll Never Need a Doctor No Mo'
 A3356 I'm Gonna Quit Saturday and My Last Dollar
 A3508 Brother Low Down and Unexpectedly
 A3589 Not Lately and You Can't Trust Nobody

- Twelve-inch double-face Columbias
 A6141 Elder Eatmore's Sermon on Throwing Stones and Generosity
 A6216 You Can't Do Nothin' Till Martin Gets Here and How? Fried!

- Ten-inch records still available (Columbia Album Set C-25)
 35590 Moon Shines on the Moonshine and O Death, Where is Thy Sting?
 35591 Bring Back Those Wonderful Days and Everybody Wants a Key to My Cellar
 35592 Brother Low Down and Unlucky Blues
 35593 It's Getting So You Can't Trust Nobody and It's Nobody's Business But My Own

An Inexpensive Method of Storing Cylinder Records

By JIM WALSH

Many collectors believe there is no satisfactory way of cataloguing and storing cylinder records, aside from keeping them in cabinets or on specially built shelves. For their benefit I'd like to pass on briefly an idea which occurred to me when I noticed that the openings in wooden cases designed to hold 24 standard-sized soft drink bottles are just large enough to accommodate the boxes in which cylinders were always packed.

By placing a cylinder in each compartment, it is possible to store 24 records in one crate that takes up little space. "Unbreakable" cylinders, such as Edison Blue Amberol, Federal and U. S. Everlasting, will fit nicely into the individual slots regardless of whether they are in boxes. The fragile wax cylinders, however, should have the added protection of a box. It isn't hard to fit a box for a four-minute Edison Amberol record into the opening, but the two-minute boxes are larger and thicker and require a bit of squeezing and manipulating before they will go in. Once in, the two-minute boxes can't be removed by anything short of an Act of Congress. I learned by experience that, after you have compelled several hundred two-minute boxes to fit, the palms of your hands are good and sore. Some soft drink cases, such as those for 7-Up, have slightly smaller openings into which two-minute boxes won't go. It's best to reserve such cases for indestructible records.

And here's a word of caution. The cases, if wired or nailed together and given some means of support, can be stacked from baseboard to ceiling. Attractively painted, they look virtually the same as built-in shelves. But don't make the mistake that I made, of stacking one on top the other, to a considerable height, without having some means of holding them in place. Shortly after I thought my arrangements were complete, I discovered that I had omitted to put a Cal Stewart record in its right place. I stooped and pulled out the box into which the record should go. This caused the case on top of the stack—one which contained 24 Ada Jones records—to sway, then fall, striking me on the head and raising a large knot. I suppose I was lucky that my skull wasn't fractured. Although I have long admired the recorded work of Ada Jones, I had never before been so strongly impressed by it as when that box of records fell, smashing three or four rare wax cylinders and almost breaking my head.

Cost of the cases is little or nothing. Most bottling plants have large quantities of old ones which they are glad to give away or sell for a few cents each. Collectors who keep a card index of their cylinders will find they will never have to change a record's location. Each case should be given a number, and of course its slots are numbered from 1 to 24. Thus, if the record you are indexing is No. 18 in the fifth case, you would mark the card, 5-18, put a similar marking on the record box and have no trouble finding it. But collectors who, like the writer, prefer to keep their cylinders arranged alphabetically by artists will find it necessary to do periodic re-arranging as new records are added.

One more word of caution. Don't insert the box with a wax cylinder in it. First wedge the box into place; then insert the record with a gentle rotary motion until it goes all the way down. Finally, affix the top of the box. In removing a wax record, take it out in the same gentle, careful way. Sometimes it will be found that the box fits so tightly into its slot that its inside cloth wrapping must be removed before the cylinder will go down. Great care must be taken in inserting the "waxes" or some will be broken. I, myself broke several—in every instance, of course, something that I particularly treasured!

Two More Deaths of Recording Artists

Two more deaths of popular recording artists must be chronicled, even at this late date.

Mrs. Marie de Kyzer Cumming, known on Edison discs and cylinders as Marie Kaiser and Marie de Kyzer (she changed her recording name during World War I) died on January 23 in New York, aged 63. Her husband and two daughters survive.

The Edison Phonograph Monthly for December, 1914, carried Miss Kaiser's photo on the cover, with this comment on an inside page: "A Western girl, being born in the State of Kansas of Holland Dutch parentage, she is well known throughout the West, having sung in concerts in all the States clear to the coast. She first studied with Mrs. Jennie Schultz, of Kansas City, the best known singing teacher in the West. She is prominent also as an oratorio singer, having worked in this branch with Charles Baker of New York and Emil Mellenhauer, the eminent and well-known conductor and coach of Boston, Mass. In addition, Miss Kaiser is a soloist in the choir of Temple Bethel of New York, and of the Calvary Methodist Church of East Orange, N. J."

Miss Kaiser's recording activities ended shortly after the first World War, but she was also a pioneer radio singer and toured with the Boston and Minneapolis Symphony Orchestras.

Lee Roy ("Lasses") White, one of the best-known minstrel and vaudeville blackface comedians, died December 16 in Hollywood, of a blood ailment. He had been ill six months. White was born in Wills Point, Texas, and had toured with the Neil O'Brien, Al G. Field and other leading minstrel shows. He was particularly well known for his song, "Sweet Mama, Tree-Top Tall," which he recorded for Columbia in the early 1920's. Columbia also issued several records

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 23)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

"The Best John Bieling Days"

(AUTHOR'S NOTE: Since I don't have the time for sending individual letters to record collectors and other readers of HOBBIES who have asked me to "write and tell all about the party," I hope that this article will serve the same purpose, especially as I shall mention briefly a few of the other features of my recent visit to New York.—J. W.)

"The best John Bieling Day yet!"

That's what just about everybody is saying who attended the fifth annual get-together of pioneer recording artists and record collectors held Saturday, September 9, in the Elks Lodge at Hempstead, Long Island, New York. From the standpoints of spontaneity, warmth and mingling of artists with collectors, the party was an improvement even on the one in September, 1948, at the Garden City Hotel. And, of course, from the viewpoint of permitting a larger number of collectors to meet the singers and musicians whose recorded work has given them so much pleasure, it was better than the smaller affairs held in 1946, 1947 and 1949 in the home of the Bieling family—as delightful as were the coziness and intimacy of these restricted assemblies.

For reasons that I shall explain later, the number of collectors attending the 1950 party was smaller than that of two years before, but from the point of view of everybody having a good time the latest in the series of get-togethers originated by the late John H. Bieling set a standard that it will be hard for any future party to surpass. I doubt that any of the approximately 70 persons who were present will dispute that statement! . . . And now I'll do a "flashback," as the story writers call it, and tell a few of the incidents of my "trip North" that occurred before the party itself.

When I went to bed on Tuesday night, September 5, I followed my usual practice of scorning an alarm clock, and simply told myself to wake at half past four the next morning. Promptly at 4:35 I opened my sleepy eyes and groaningly prepared to take a bus from Vinton, Virginia, where I live, to Roanoke, three miles distant. I reached the Norfolk and Western passenger station just a few minutes before the 6:02 train pulled out, bound for Washington—but I was in time to get a seat.

My first act on arriving late that afternoon at the Pennsylvania station in New York was to dial the telephone number of Gladys Rice, one of my favorite recording sopranos and commediennes from whom I had received an attractive photograph only the day before. When a charming voice answered I was sure that I was speaking to Miss Rice herself. I thanked her for the photo and said I was sorry she couldn't come to the party and bring Rachael Grant with her. (Rachael Grant was one of the names used by Miss Rice in making records. I should also have mentioned her other recording name of Bettina Bergere!) She replied she would "give anything" to be present and meet many of her old friends whom she hadn't seen in years, but that she had to rehearse for a television program and simply would be unable to make it. Next year, though, Miss Rice said, she hoped it would be different.

A second phone call was to my old friend, Frazier Dickson, who works on the city desk of the New York Times. Frazier had attended a convention of the Elbeetian Legion of former Lone Scouts in Roanoke a few days before, and had asked me to come to see him while I was in New York. I walked to the Times building, where "Dick" arranged for me to be given a tour of the huge establishment in company with a likeable and painstaking young chap whom I recall only as "Al."

I was particularly interested in the Times' reference department and the huge "morgue," where innumerable drawers are full of information about persons and places all over the world. Some of the workers in that department learned that I was a record collector and was on my way to the John Bieling Day party. They urged me to stay in New York until midnight and appear on "Big Joe"

Rosenfield's program from WINS, to tell about the party and record collecting in general. This suggestion I reluctantly turned down, because I was tired out after a hard day's travel and didn't feel that I could keep awake that long.

I was told that every issue of the New York Times has been photographed on microfilm and was shown an enlarged view of the first page of the initial number. I was also told to name any well known person, and the appropriate reference envelope would be brought out of the morgue. Since I have long wanted to do a HOBBIES series on the soprano, Elizabeth Spencer, but need some additional information, I mentioned her. Unfortunately, we drew a blank, both under her professional name and her married name of Mrs. E. B. Southworth. Then I tried Billy Murray, and was surprised to find that the envelope contained only one clipping—an article published by Time in 1941 when Billy was making a comeback as a Bluebird recording artist. There was a laugh when I mentioned that I sold the article to Time!

I walked back to Penn station and was just in time to take a Long Island train to Hempstead, where Bryant Burke, president of Pioneer Recording Artists and Admirers, the non-profit organization that sponsors the annual party, had obtained a room for me in the home of one of his neighbors, a cheerful, active elderly lady, Mrs. Carrie Lefferts. The remainder of the evening was spent in a happy reunion with Bryant and members of the Bieling family.

Outstanding on my unplanned "agenda" for Thursday was the visit Bryant and I paid to a home which my friend had been passing for years, seeing an Edison Diamond Disc phonograph on a side porch and wondering what treasures, if any, the stack of records beside it contained. Although he had tried repeatedly, he never got anybody to the door. But this time luck was with us. We saw an old man working in a barn, and he and his son-in-law took us into the house where they brought out a bewildering display of old sheet music and many records—Edison discs and cylinders, a few Pathes and lots of lateral-cuts. Bryant was delighted to get the music to go with his 1894 brown wax cylinder of "Henrietta, Have You Met Her?" The cylinders were so badly spotted with mildew that they were worthless, and the discs were "run-of-the-mine." But at least our curiosity was satisfied, we bought a few records, and were told that there were more cylinders somewhere upstairs. Bryant is going back one of these days, hoping the other cylinders are in better condition, for he has reasons, best known to himself, for believing the house contains a copy of Cal Stewart's almost mythical 1899 Edison record, "Uncle Sam to George."

Friday morning, I took an early train from Hempstead to New York, where I went to the Taft Hotel and met Ed Manning, program director of CKCR, Kitchener, Ontario, Cana-

MUSIC BOXES

For Christmas

Large stock of fine antique SWISS MUSIC BOXES ready for delivery, all restored to new-like mechanical condition. Wide range of sizes and prices, 1 to 12 cylinders, playing 4 to 72 selections of music.

Fine assortment of DISC MUSIC BOXES for sale—Regina, Mira, Stella, etc. in all sizes and types, most of them sold with 25 assorted discs, among them some Christmas music. Beautiful bird boxes for sale, birds in cages, mechanical pieces, etc.

SEND FOR LIST STATING YOUR REQUIREMENTS.

All types of music boxes repaired, bought and sold. Estimates and appraisals cheerfully given. All work guaranteed.

A. V. BORNAND CO.

139 4th Ave.,

Pelham 65, N. Y.

(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

dc

da, and his pretty wife, Edith. Ed is secretary of Pioneer Recording Artists and Admirers and had the responsible job this year of writing to the artists and asking them to attend the party. (Other officers are Harry Selinger, of Oceanside, Long Island, vice-president, and George Bieling, of Hempstead, one of John Bieling's sons, treasurer. Without title, but always lending a helping hand and taking care of thousands of details are Mrs. John Bieling and her sister, Mrs. Katherine Moore.)

I had never seen Ed before, but I took a liking to him at first sight and was glad that he wanted to go with me to West Orange, New Jersey, to visit the Thomas A. Edison laboratory and meet my old friends there—Norman Speiden, the curator; Bill Hayes, veteran Edison recording expert; and Fred Rabenstein, an accountant who wrote the talent checks for artists in the days when Edison was making disc and cylinder records. I had been at the laboratory before, but Ed hadn't, and he was fascinated by the innumerable mementoes of the great inventor who used to perform so many miracles there. We even saw Edison's original 1877 phonograph.

Friday evening was spent pleasantly with the Bieling family. Charlie Hodgdon, of Newburyport, Mass., and his wife, Mary, who had come down for the next day's party, dropped in, and Charlie handed me a box of records he had got together for me. Several were rarities that I was very glad to get. This was also true of a box that Jimmy Martindale, of Brooklyn, brought me the next day.

And then came Saturday—the Big Day itself! In 1948, we were beset by heavy, persistent rain—the first that had fallen in six weeks—but this time the weather was perfect. As Bryant, Ed and I entered the beautiful Elks Lodge, I found myself wishing that more collectors could be present, instead of the restricted number we were expecting. Total attendance of both artists and collectors was around 70, as against more than 100 two years ago.

This is the reason for the decrease: It had at first been planned to give this year's party in the Garden City Hotel, but when the committee tried to reserve a room it found that the hotel was "booked solid" for September. The Elks Lodge was then chosen next best bet, but the committee was given to understand that only about 60 persons could be accommodated in the available space. That made it necessary to restrict collector attendance, as far as possible, to those who had taken part in the 1948 event, and that is why no advance publicity was given in HOBBIES or other publications. Actually, the room could have comfortably sheltered more persons than were present, but by the time this was found out it was too late to do anything about it. The room had splendid acoustics and was of convenient size, and this somehow added to the feeling of warmth and intimacy that characterized the party almost from the very first.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 23)

RECORDS

FINE OLD RECORDS for sale: Classical, vocal, operatic, violin, piano, vaudeville, jazz, popular, Lauder, McCormack, reasonably priced. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. d3084

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. d3483

RARE OLD RECORDS: Monthly sales list. Classical, vocal, popular, collector's items. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwald, Ambler, Penna. mh6445

WANTED: Record catalogues, supplements, pamphlets, 1900-1939. Old phonograph and record advertisements; other phonographic material. State price and condition. — D. Miller, Box 392, Long Beach, California. ja3614

EIGHT THOUSAND different selections; vocal operatic acoustical and electrical discs. 160 record catalogs. Monthly auction lists.—E. F. Prescott, 3045 Jackson, San Francisco 15, Calif. d126351

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (Moses). Price $3.75.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, New York. f124201

MONTHLY AUCTION SALE: Old vocal operatic records. Free list.—Collectors' Haven, 118 Hancock St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ja3272

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 15 First Ave., New Town Square, Pennsylvania. o122741

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6084

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid.—Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. ja3084

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan, Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

Record treasures of the World's great artists. Original G&Ts, Fonotipias, Zonophones, etc., Akte, Bellinioni, Boninsegna, Caruso, Carelli, De Lucia, Escalais, Fabbri, Giraltoni, Kurz, Litvinne, Pinto, Plancon, Figner, and other unique records of the greatest rarity. Send for auction lists, special lists. All correspondence confidential.—Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. f34431

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants." For information write or visit —Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., N. Y. 28, New York. n126581

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. f3253

MISCELLANEOUS

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid.—Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Catalog 10c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. je12407

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp, please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d6238

MELODEON ORGAN: Walnut. Action, case, completely restored, cleaned, re-finished. New leather hinges, valves, felts, etc., $400.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids 6, Mich. d3483

FOR SALE: Music rolls for National Automatic Piano. Over 100 American tunes available. Send for list. Also want music rolls of all descriptions.—Russell Miller, 3274 Adriatic Ave., Long Beach 10, Calif. mh62511

FOR SALE: Music Box discs, Stella, 17 1/2 and Symphonion, 14 1/2.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. d3272

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80 direct from importer. —Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, New York. d4654

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues. — Elmer Moore, 1172 Franklin Street, Santa Monica, Calif. d3422

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Jean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. ja3272

Piano: Lindeman-Sons Cycloid, 1860. Interested, write—Harriette Bell, 37 Francis, Holyoke, Mass. dx

SHONINGER REED ORGAN. Solid walnut case, handsome design, circa 1878. Contains 171 reeds and 30 bells, also vibrato. Inside action rebuilt; case refinished; A-1 playing condition. Price and details on request.—C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids 6, Michigan. dx

VIOLIN: Marked Anton Stradavarius, Germany. 2 bows and in a beautiful alligator case. Best offer takes it.—Leona Jones, Augusta, Ill. n1861d

WURLITZER NO. 125 Military Organ, (old merry-go-round organ) in good working condition, using paper rolls. Old coin operated orchestral piano, xylophone, mandolin att.; reconditioned. Rare mechanical dulcimer. Reginas, 15 1/2 & 27". Swiss Music boxes, some with drum & bells; one with 18 note organ. All priced right.—Ray Albertson, Box 23, Atlantic, Iowa. d1044

"A Friend Indeed"

That's what your collector friends will call you when they receive the gift card from us informing them that you have subscribed for HOBBIES in their name.

Each issue they receive will remind them of your friendship, because HOBBIES is a practical gift that will give them more pleasure in collecting.

Fill out the blank below and mail it with your remittance of $3.50 to HOBBIES, 1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

Please send a gift subscription to:

Name .....

Address .....

My name and address is:

face. The final correction of the edge of the gong was done by a workman who sat on the ground and used two hammers with short handles, one to strike with and other as an anvil. When he completed his work, another man took the gong, placed it on an anvil about eight inches square in the face, and with a round-faced short-handled hammer, which weighed about a pound, passed over the surface, systematically commencing at the center and proceeding by concentric rings to the outer edge. Traces of this last series of blows are generally apparent in the finished gongs although before leaving the factory they were scraped with steel tools, the scraping always moved from the center to the circle indicated.

The resonance of gongs varies materially, and the Chinese classed their tones as male or female; those which were subjected to the most careful and prolonged hammering produced the male tones.

—I. G.

OCCUPATIONAL SHAVING MUGS and Their Prices

—O—
By W. PORTER WARE
—O—

An authoritative treatise of valuable information for collectors and dealers in this popular subject.

A cloth-bound library book that will increase in value.

LIMITED EDITION

Illustrated profusely with the different groups, including fakes.

You can save the cost of the book in one purchase of a mug if you know the hobby and its various phases as portrayed by the author.

Price only $1.50

Postage Prepaid.

Lightner Publishing Corp.

1006 So. Michigan Avenue,
Chicago 5, Illinois

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23)

I believe the first artist to arrive was Fred Hager. Fred had a long and distinguished career in the phonograph world. He was the first man to make a commercial violin record, was the conductor of bands and orchestras for virtually all the pioneer companies and, still later, was a recording director for several others, including Keen-o-phone, Rex and Okeh. Fred had brought with him a batch of rare record catalogs that made my mouth water, as well as a dubbing of the first disc made for the Columbia company—a band record which Fred himself conducted.

It was amusing to hear Fred relate the efforts of Okeh and Gennett to break Victor's monopoly on the patents for making lateral cut records—an effort that succeeded in 1919. "Hill-and-Dale records," Fred said, "are better than lateral—there's no doubt about it. Our vertical cut Okeh record was better than the lateral record we turned out afterwards, but there was no use in making a better record without phonographs to play it. The majority of machines would play only lateral records, so we had to break Victor's stranglehold to stay in business. After our suit succeeded, there was a grand scramble of nearly all the companies which had been compelled to make only hill-and-dale records to get on the lateral band wagon. Only Edison stayed out."

Fred had hoped to discuss with me some ideas for a series of magazine articles, but as the tempo of the gathering stepped up there just wasn't time. Soon, as Long Island trains arrived, other artists were coming in—handsome Charles Harrison, the tenor, whom I hadn't seen since a visit to New York in October, 1940; Fred Van Eps, the banjoist whom I had never seen before, and meeting him was one of the big thrills of the party; John Young, the tenor ("Harry Anthony" of the famous old gospel hymn team of "Anthony and Harrison"), about whom the same thing may be said; jovial, radiantly happy Elsie Baker; Edna White, famous trumpet player; Billy Murray, with his inseparable pal, who is one of my best loved friends, Jimmy Martindale; Arthur Hall; Will Oakland; Harvey Hindermeyer; Grace Spencer, "The First Lady of the Phonograph," and her daughter, Mrs. Lewis M. Wilson—the procession soon became bewildering, and Ed Manning and Bryant Burke were kept busy operating a "shuttle service" with Ed's car to bring newly arrived artists from the Hempstead station to the Elks Lodge.

Soon, Harvey Aronson, an extremely friendly and likable reporter, arrived to get a story both for his paper, the Hempstead Newsday, and for the Associated Press. A photographer for the AP took several pictures, including one of Bryant Burke, George Bieling and me gathered around Bryant's famous Edison cylinder machine that serves as a photographic "prop" on every John Bieling day. George and Bryant look perfectly natural in the print, but I was caught just as I was turning to say something to Bryant and don't appear to advantage. The Associated Press story was printed the following Sunday morning in many newspapers throughout the United States and should prove valuable publicity for future John Bieling Days. It has brought me letters from Duluth, Minnesota, to Pascagoula, Mississippi.

I was soon having a hard time keeping up with all that was going on. Joe Laurie, Jr., the foremost authority on the history of vaudeville and one of the stars of the popular "Can You Top This?" radio program, arrived, complete with beaming smile and big cigar. Someone came up to me and I called him "Charlie," thinking I was speaking to Charles Harrison, with whom I had been talking only a few minutes before. I was smilingly informed that I was in the presence of my old friend, Al Frank, with whom I have been corresponding for more than twenty years and who has been operating a record importing business, the International Records Agency, for most of that time. Al has not been well, but he was looking fine and didn't seem a day older than when I had last met him ten years before. He said the same thing was true of me, except that he accused me of putting on weight—whereas I have lost a great deal during the past year.

I hustled about, taking photographs of artists. Ross Keegan, of Freeport, L. I., was doing the same thing, and Brevoort and Florence Odell, of Brooklyn, owners of probably the world's largest collection of cylinder phonographs and records, were equally busy, immortalizing the great pioneers on movie film. I tried to get autographs for a few of my collector friends, but soon had to give it up because there were too many other demands on my time. While all this was going on, records by famous artists, living and dead, were played on an electric phonograph provided by the Rev. Edward Vesper.

One of the high spots of the morning occurred when a man came in from the Elks Lodge office and said there was a long distance telephone call for Miss Elsie Baker, Mr. Jim Walsh or both. Elsie and I hurried to take the call, racking our brains in wonderment as to who would be calling us both, and why. The call proved to be from Dale Miller, a Long Beach, California, collector, who attended the 1948 party at Garden City and confidently expected to be at this one. Unfortunately, his plans had to be changed almost at the last minute and he couldn't come. But Dale just had to know how the party was going, and so he had asked for Miss Baker and me. We three had an animated conversation that I hope was some consolation to poor Dale, three thousand miles distant from the place where his heart was.

By the time lunch was served—and a delicious lunch it was—many more artists had arrived. I should have mentioned before now that 84-year-old Eugene Rose, and Mrs. Rose, were among the early arrivals. Frank Banta—may the Lord bless that boy for all the hard work he willingly put in at the piano!—had a joyous reunion with his old pal, Fred Van Eps. (Frank was for years Fred's accompanist and also played in the Van Eps Trio.) Jolly Walter Scanlan (some collectors prefer to call him by his earlier recording name—which happens to be his real name—of Walter Van Brunt) showed up with the good news that his voice was coming back, after a period of several years during which he has hardly been able to speak above a whisper. And also right on top, looking like the life of the party, although he's been something of an invalid for the past year because of a heart condition, was Irving Kaufman, one of the most magnetic personalities that the show business has known. The Edison laboratory's warm feeling for the party was shown by the fact that Norman Speiden, Bill Hayes and Fred Rabenstein were there, too, apparently having a wonderful time. Also very much among those present was Harry Hunting, son of the late Russell Hunting, Sr., who used to record the "Coney" monologs and later was a recording expert for phonograph companies in the United States, France and England. Harry frequently assisted his father when the elder Hunting was in charge of Pathe's American recording activities. Another notable personality was Wally Butterworth, who presents the popular program of old classical recordings, "Voices That Live," on the ABC network.

During the lunch, I sat at a table with Al Frank and two enthusiastic young record collectors from Syracuse, New York—Robert Engel and Mr. Gainsback. It was a treat to talk with Al, for he and I have had a great deal in common throughout the many years that we have been warm friends by correspondence. The discussion veered into the topic of why present-day electrical recording of the human voice is less faithful to the original than the best examples of acoustic recording. The boys from Syracuse listened with great interest as Al gave a technical explanation of how "peaks" of distortion occur regularly in electrical reproduction, whereas the best acoustic recording was without distortion throughout its range. Then, too, he pointed out, the sound engineers can play any sort of trick to make a weak voice sound like a strong one or change the characteristic tone quality of a voice into something that may sound better but is not necessarily like the original. I quoted one of John Bieling's favorite remarks, which I had also mentioned to the AP reporter: "In the old days nothing came out of that horn that we didn't put into it. Nowadays what an artist sounds like on the record may not have anything to do with the way he sounds in person."

I believe it was Wally Butterworth who remarked—but it may have been Al Frank—that people nowadays have acquired "a radio ear." In other words, the sound of the human voice, as it comes from the average radio, is false and inflated. It lacks the human quality that characterized the best acoustic recording. But because it's what the public is accustomed to, the average record buyer automatically looks for "radio tone," even though it is frequently a travesty of the real thing.

My impression had been that either Irving Kaufman, who did such a wonderful job as master of ceremonies two years ago, would emcee the afternoon program, or that Joe Laurie, Jr., would take over. But Irving said he didn't feel well enough, and Joe argued he didn't know enough about the artists, since he has always been primarily a vaudevillian and radio comedian instead of a recording artist. When Bryant Burke asked me if I would do the honors, I accepted only after I had tried to get either Joe or Irving, and Wally Butterworth also had refused because his specialty is Red Seal records and he didn't feel that he knew the popular artists well enough to introduce them. My only qualm about officiating was the fear that my "corn pone an' 'lasses" Virginia accent might be difficult for some of the listeners. But, as it turned out, nobody seemed to have any trouble understanding me. I prefaced my opening remarks with the statement that, although the assemblage looked something like a meeting of the United Nations, my name wasn't Malik. However, I added, an interpreter might be needed before I had talked very long. But, as it turned out, nobody seemed to have any trouble "translating" what I said.

Before I made my bow as "emcee," Wally Butterworth gave a talk that held his audience rapt. He praised the idea of having a get-together of recording artists and collectors once a year, and said he hoped the committee would give thought to his suggestion that the major recording companies should be asked to become sponsors of the event. Wally envisioned an annual party somewhere in New York City, at which present-day artists would mingle with the great pioneers. However, he made it clear that he prefers the vocal standards of the older artists to those of the present-day group, and remarked that, with the connivance of the microphone, the human voice nowadays is often made to sound anything but human.

He then introduced me as master of ceremonies. The first person on whom I called was Joe Laurie, Jr., because Joe had said that he would have to leave early. The dapper little gentleman kept his hearers in an uproar as he told humorous stories and expressed his pleasure at being able to attend the party. And Joe didn't leave early, after all. He stayed until every artist had been heard, and he had a good time, or I was badly fooled.

After Joe had spoken, I introduced the artists mostly in chronological order, depending on the year in which they first made records. Pride of place went to Eugene Rose, the veteran flute virtuoso, who made experimental records for Edison in 1889. "Gene" didn't play his flute, although he still teaches, and he pretended that he had stage fright, but nobody could have told it, as the spry young man of 84 recalled some of his early experiences.

Grace Spencer (Mrs. Willard Foster Doolittle) was next. This gifted soprano told of the days when she recorded under Thomas A. Edison's supervision, but explained that she said farewell to her musical career after her marriage. She showed deep emotion as she thanked those who had worked hard to stage the party and give artists and collectors an opportunity to enjoy one another's companionships.

An outstanding moment came when I later introduced Billy Murray, and "The Boss," after one of his characteristically witty talks, surprised everybody by announcing that, in honor of such a special occasion, he would do the first singing he had attempted since his severe heart attack of several years ago. His choice of a song, "'Twas Only an Irishman's Dream," is a number that he recorded for Bluebird in 1941. Frank Banta, who was seated in the audience, was addressed by Billy as "Junior," and asked to come up on the stage. This started Frank off on a series of trips to and from the "platform," as I occasionally called it, that lasted the remainder of the afternoon. Billy didn't have the music of the song, but Frank asked, "What key?" and was told "B flat." Then "Junior" (so called, because his father, Frank P. Banta, was an accompanist for all the phonograph companies prior to his death in 1904) began playing the introduction, and Billy sang sweetly in that incisive, sympathetic voice that used to make his records sell by the millions.

Perhaps his most thrilled hearers were Charlie and Mary Hodgdon. They had hoped fervently that Billy would sing, but I had told them there wasn't a chance of that. Charlie remarked afterwards that when Billy began the song "there was a lump in my throat as big as a duck egg." "The Denver Nightingale" was given an ovation as he left the stage.

Another great moment was when Fred Van Eps walked up, equipped with his faithful banjo, to do a couple of numbers. Fred said that, after more than 40 years of playing with one technique, he has changed his fingering method. It was a bit too technical for me to understand, but, whatever system he is using now, he is still the Fred Van Eps who was one of the greatest banjoists that ever lived. He had brought the music of two of his old-time favorites, "Infanta March" and "Coconut Dance," and, assisted by "Junior," played them to everybody's satisfaction. That was the last time Frank was to have the benefit of music, but give that Banta wizard the key in which a number is to be sung or played and he can go right along. Apparently he knows every song that has ever been written.

There were some interesting and entertaining reminiscences from Fred Hager, but when I called for John Young I was sorry to learn that he became ill after the luncheon and had decided to return home. Will Oakland told of the great pleasure he felt at attending the party, and sang one of his favorite numbers, "The Sunshine of Your Smile." Those who heard it felt that, they were listening to the same incomparable counter-tenor voice that was engraved on so many millions of records in the heyday of acoustic recording. Actually, Will's voice has more mellowness and depth now than in the days from 30 to 40 years ago when he was one of the most popular phonograph artists. He recalled in his spoken remarks that hearing John McCormack at the St. Louis World's Fair in 1904 was an important factor in turning him to a singing career.

One notable aspect of the program was the generosity of the artists in paying tribute to others who had helped them. Walter Scanlan recalled some interesting phases of his recording career, more especially the manner in which he happened to make his most popular Edison record, "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," but since I hope to write a HOBBIES article about Walter for publication next year I shall not quote him in detail. He told of Billy Murray's aid in getting him off to a good start as a recording artist and thanked Billy for having made him the recording partner of Ada Jones on records other than Victor and Edison.

Edna White, generally regarded as the foremost woman trumpet player, gave a dazzling rendition of "Carnival of Venice," spangled with bewildering variations. Miss White, who was making her first appearance at a John Bieling Day get-together, also told some amusing stories. She related how the Japanese found an old photograph showing her recording for the Edison company by the acoustic horn method and circulated it during World War II as evidence of the low scientific standards prevailing in America. In Japan, said the propaganda, all recording had been done for years with the latest electrical equipment, but in the benighted United States the old-fashioned horn system still prevailed!

Elsie Baker, probably the most popular contralto who ever recorded for the Victor black and blue labels, didn't sing, but spoke most entertainingly about her recording career. She mentioned that she was hardly more than a teen-age girl when she began making records for several companies. (On U. S. Indestructible cylinders she was always called by her full name—Miss Elsie West Baker.) One month she made $800 by free-lance recording and thought that she was on her way to becoming a millionaire. But Calvin Child, the director of Victor's artist and repertoire department, convinced her that she should sign up exclusively with Victor, and she never regretted the decision.

Harvey Hindermeyer, one of Edison's leading tenors, who also made records occasionally for several other companies, proved that the sweetness and charm of his voice are still there by singing "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms." Irving Kaufman had the onlookers in stitches as he gave me instructions in various dialects to move the piano half a dozen ways at once, so he could play his own accompaniment as he sang "Peg of My Heart." Irving mentioned that when he was a boy in Syracuse he listened to Will Oakland's records for hours at a time and wished that he could someday be as fine a singer as Will. Similarly, Fred Van Eps told me that he learned to play the banjo as a boy by buying and studying Vess Ossman's brown wax cylinders.

Another accomplished guest who didn't sing was Charles Harrison, but this fine artist gave a most graceful talk and promised that his lyric tenor notes will be heard on John Bieling Day next year. He introduced one of his pupils, Charles Pinto, who won a big hand for his excellent rendition of Toselli's "Serenade."

By this time Frank Banta, who had performed such yeoman service, was becoming a bit concerned. He whispered to me that he needed to get away as soon as possible to appear on a radio program in New York at 8 o'clock. However, there was still Arthur Hall to be heard from, and everybody was looking forward to hearing that favorite tenor of the old days sing a number which has almost come to be identified as his trade mark or theme song—Ernest R. Ball's beautiful ballad, "Here's Love and Success to You." Arthur said he was particularly glad to sing that number because it was a favorite of Mrs. Bieling's.

After Arthur had given us "Love and Success" in his own inimitable style, Frank started to leave. But as he prepared to step down from the stage, there went up a cry of "Solo! Solo!" So Frank said he would tarry just long enough to play "Nola." "Jim has reminded me," he told the audience, "that when I made a record of 'Nola' I played it 24 times before I turned out a master that Victor would accept. I had to go back three times before they got a satisfactory record—and then I played a wrong note at the very end of the accepted version!"

Frank concluded his solo and waved goodbye. Irving Kaufman called to me: "Jim, I think Frank deserves a round of applause!" I replied that he deserved a dozen rounds, and he really got a wonderful demonstration of appreciation for his unselfish work. I wished I could fire a salvo of cannon in his honor.

It was now almost 6 o'clock, and the party had been officially scheduled to end at 5. However, nobody seemed to mind having been kept overtime for such fine entertainment, and Grace Spencer suggested that we hear from the Edison representatives. But when I called out the names of Bill Hayes, Fred Rabenstein and Norman Speiden,

I learned that they had already started back to West Orange. I regretted afterwards that I didn't call on the committee who arranged the party to take a bow for their fine work, but it was so late I thought I should bring the program to a close. If I'm master of ceremonies again I'll make sure that the committee members get recognition by introducing them at the very beginning.

After the party proper broke up, many of the artists and collectors gathered at the Bieling home for several hours of reminiscing and good food of the kind that never fails to characterize a Bieling get-together. We were joined by two Newsway reporters—Harvey Aronson, who wrote the Associated Press story, and an attractive young lady, Beryl Howell, who had written a colorful before-the-party article the day before. When she left, Miss Howell said she had found the entire occasion so fascinating that she was going to become a record collector.

Of course, as in any affair of this sort, there were disappointments. One was my receiving a telegram from Madame Edith Helena, who was a general favorite in 1948, regretting that at the last minute she could not make the trip to be with us. We also missed several other artists who honored us with their presence two years ago—Frederic C. Freemantel, Olive Kline, Lucy Isabelle Marsh, Bob Miller, Dick Robertson, Carson Robison, Aileen Stanley and Reinald Werren-

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 38)

FOR SALE Beautiful Summer House on Secluded Vermont Hilltop

Magnificent three-quarter of the horizon view of Green Mountains. Not a re-modeled farmhouse but built for comfort and convenience. Nine bedrooms (3 double and one with fireplace). Spacious attic. Thirty foot living-room with fireplace. Twenty foot library with fireplace. Large kitchen. Attractive dining-room. Two bathrooms. Covered porch runs around three sides of house on ground floor and on one side of second floor. Town electricity. Telephone. Small cabin near house. Barn with hayloft at proper distance. Property covers about 80 acres of fields and woodland with valuable timber, maple groves, etc. One-half mile road frontage. Six miles from Montpelier and Barre, one mile from railroad station and airport. Low taxes. Will sell furnished, partly furnished or unfurnished.

(Full commission if sold by real estate broker). Additional information on request.

Price furnished $11,500.

STEPHEN FASSETT

West Falmouth,

Massachusetts

trx

When Moving . . .

It is essential in order to receive your magazines regularly that subscribers notify the circulation department three weeks before the date of issue. Write old and new address to HOBBIES, 1006 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

Photo by L. B. Odell

Will Oakland (left) shakes hands with Jim Walsh at fifth annual John Bieling Day party. In the background are Jimmy Martindale and Billy Murray.

Photo by L. B. Odell

A group of pioneer recording artists and record collectors at the fifth annual John Bieling Day party. Standing: Will Oakland, Harry Hunting, Charles Harrison, Jimmy Martindale, Billy Murray, Edna White, Elsie Baker, Harvey Hindermeyer, Eugene Rose, Fred Hager and Irving Kaufman. Stopping beside Bryant Burke's famous Edison cylinder phonograph: Fred Van Eps, John Young and Arthur and Arthur Hall.

SAPPHIRE NEEDLES

Pathé Type — $5.00 each

Edison Type — $5.00 each

These special sapphire needles are made for playing Pathé and Edison type disc records on modern electric phonographs. Simply insert in place of your regular needle.

JAMISON R. HARRISON
Bedford, Mass.

Swiss music box, 12 tunes, harp attachment. Box is inlaid, with handles on ends, one place on lid damaged, 29x11x8", plays beautifully. $100.00.

ETHEL B. MORROW

1327 S. Galeng Ave., Freeport, Ill.

MELODEONS - NICKELODIANS
MUSIC BOXES - PIPE ORGAN - HAND ORGANS
All in playing condition
Repair parts for nickelodians
SHEET MUSIC

THE OLD MUSIC STORE

ESTHER SKERRITT SANDERS

Deansboro, New York

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25)

rath. (Aileen, her husband, Bob Butenuth, and their protege, Aileen, Jr., had to go to Hollywood on a business trip just before the party.) We were likewise sorry that Mrs. Byron G. Harlan, who had planned to be present, was prevented from doing so. A good many other artists who had been invited also couldn't come. But in spite of those shortcomings, it was a wonderful occasion which amply repaid me for the long, hard trip I had made. I'm sure that Ed and Edith Manning, who had come much farther, felt the same way.

As for the artists, I think Eugene Rose summed up their sentiments when he remarked to Grace Spencer: "Isn't it nice to know that the older we get the more our friends think of us?"

The phonograph's First Lady agreed that indeed it was nice.

Early the next afternoon I checked my baggage at the Hempstead station, said goodbye to Bryant and Ed, and boarded the Long Island train for New York, on my way home to Virginia. Still on my agenda was a stop at Newark, to fill a supper date with Will Oakland.

As I stepped aboard the train, two phrases rang in my mind. One was the remark of my landlady, Mrs. Leferts, as we shook hands in parting. "You can tell everybody," she smilingly exclaimed, "that I said you've been a mighty good boy while you've stayed with me!" The other was the comment from dozens of artists and collectors: "This is the best party we've had yet!" Or, as Elsie Baker phrased it in a letter to me: "Didn't we all have a grand time? I was beaming all day Sunday!"

And truly I think the fifth annual John Bieling Day was the best of all, up to now. But we hope, and expect, to have an even better one in September, 1951.

GREETINGS

To All Collectors of Records

and All Recording

Artist of the Present

Who assure the future
of our hobby.

STEPHEN FASSETT & JIM WALSH

A Very Merry Christmas to All of You

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

CAL STEWART I

By JIM WALSH

Five years ago I listed in HOBBIES the pioneer recording artists whom I considered "the Supreme Fifteen." Biographical sketches of all 15 have now appeared, excepting one — Cal Stewart, who was famous as "Uncle Josh Weathersby," leading citizen of the mythical "Way down East" village of "Pumpkin Center." Several readers have complained because of my seeming reluctance to chronicle their favorite comedian's life story.

However, the late appearance of the Stewart series doesn't indicate that I think his records lack interest or that I have no admiration for the humorist whose droll monologs were favorites from the middle 1890's until electric recording was introduced a generation later, in 1925. The truth is that I have long wanted to write about "Uncle Josh," but have been determined to do an accurate, painstaking job. Unfortunately, I have met with more obstacles in seeking out the story of his life than in checking on the careers of any of the other members of the Supreme Fifteen.

Even now, although I know that Stewart was born in my native state of Virginia in 1856 and was 63 years of age when he died in Chicago on December 7, 1919, I have not learned just where in Virginia his birth occurred nor the exact date. The Virginia State Department of Health has twice checked its birth records for me without finding any mention of Calvin Edward Stewart.

A short time ago I thought the mystery was solved. I was standing on a street corner when a man came up and said, "Jim, I bought something the other day that you'd like

It is hard to believe that records can be so old and still be in such good shape. Send to me for oldies that you cannot get elsewhere. Watch for different lists of artists each month.

AL McREA, Sr.

Box 182, Westville, New Jersey to see. It was an old cylinder phonograph, with a lot of wax records by 'Uncle Josh' and the other old-timers."

"That's interesting," I replied. "I'm going to write a series for HOBBIES about 'Uncle Josh,' and I've been trying, off and on, for years to find out where he was born. I know it was somewhere in Virginia, but that's as far as I've been able to get."

Another man joined in. "I can tell you," he said. "Cal Stewart was born at, or near, Charlotte Court House. I've heard my grandfather mention it many a time."

It looked as if fate had brought us three together to give up at last its stubbornly held secret. But when I wrote to the county clerk at Charlotte Court House, the clerk, H. B. Cherm-side, replied that he was unable to find Stewart's name in his books or any record of his birth. However, vital statistics dating as far back as 1856 are meager in Virginia, and since Stewart himself said that he was born on a farm, it may well be that he came from the Charlotte Court House area and that his birth was never recorded. On the other hand, a reader of HOBBIES tells me that she remembers hearing her grandfather speak of Stewart and thinks he said the comedian was from Dinwiddie county in Eastern Virginia.

I have a photostatic copy of Stewart's death certificate, courteously sent to me by Michael J. Flynn, county clerk of Cook County, Illinois. It gives his father's name as William Stewart; his mother's maiden name as Helen Douglas, and says that William and Helen were natives of Scotland. The certificate also records Cal Stewart's age as 63 and gives his birthplace merely as Virginia. Since this information was obtained from Cal's widow, the late Rossini Waugh Stewart, it appears that not even she knew the precise day and place of her husband's birth.

The monologist wrote a brief autobiography, which appears in a collection of "Uncle Josh's Punkin Centre (sic) Stories," "by Cal Stewart, 'The Talking Machine Story Teller,'" published in 1903 by the Charles C. Thompson Company, of Chicago. The copyright of the book is now owned by a good friend of mine who was also one of Stewart's closest friends and business associates — Frederick W. Hager, of Northport, New York, one of the earliest conductors of phonograph bands and orchestras and the first professional musician to make commercial violin records. Mr. Hager, who controls the literary, radio, television, motion picture and theatrical rights to all of Stewart's original material, has kindly given me permission to quote from the comedian's book. It begins with this brief preface:

"To the Reader. The one particular object in writing this book is to furnish you with an occasional laugh, and the writer with an occasional dollar. If you get the laugh you have your equivalent, and the writer has his. In Uncle Josh Weathersby you have a purely imaginary character, yet one true to life. A character chuck full of sunshine and rural simplicity. Take him as you find him, and in his experiences you will observe there is a bright side to everything. Sincerely yours, Cal Stewart."

Next comes the "Life Sketch of Author":

"The author was born in Virginia, on a little patch of land, so poor we had to fertilize it to make brick. Our family, while having cast their fortunes with the South, was not a family ruined by the war; we did not have anything when the war commenced, and so we held our own. I secured a common school education, and at the age of twelve I left home, or rather home left me—things just petered out. I was slush cook on an Ohio River packet; check clerk in a stove and heading camp in the knobs of Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia; I helped lay the track of the M. K. & T. R. R. and was chambermaid in a livery stable. Made my first appearance on the stage at the National Theatre in Cincinnati, Ohio, and have since then chopped cord wood, worked in a coal mine, made cross ties (and walked them), worked on a farm, taught a district school (made love to the big girls), fed the machine and ran the engine. Have been a freight and passenger brakeman, fired and ran a locomotive; also a freight train conductor and check clerk in a freight house; worked on the section; have been a shot gun messenger for the Wells, Fargo Company. Have been with a circus, minstrels, farce comedy, burlesque and dramatic productions; have been with good shows, bad shows, medicine shows, and worse, and some shows where we had landlords singing in the chorus. Have played variety houses and vaudeville houses; have slept in a box car one night, and a swell hotel the next; have been a travelling salesman (could spin as many yarns as any of them.) For the past four years have

MUSIC BOXES

All Types — Repaired
Bought and Sold

Swiss music boxes rebuilt to original condition. Only remaining source of supply of pins in the world for repinning cylinders. Broken teeth in combs replaced and properly tuned. All parts repaired or renewed. All work guaranteed.

Large stock of fine music boxes for sale. SWISS boxes with from 1 to 12 cylinders. DISC boxes of all makes and sizes. Regina, Mira, Stella, etc.

Many fine mechanical musical items, bird boxes, birds in cages, etc. Send for list, stating your requirements. Estimates and approvals cheerfully given.

A. V. BORNAND CO.

139 4th Ave.,

Pelham 65, N. Y.

(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

jac

made the Uncle Josh stories for the talking machine. The Lord only knows what next!"

Being omniscient, the Lord presumably knew, even while Cal was writing, that the comedian's days of job experimentation were over, and that making records and filling theatrical engagements in the guise of Uncle Josh Weathersby would occupy the remainder of Cal Stewart's days.

The rest of the book is taken up with poems of a rustic flavor and with Punkin Center (I refuse to spell it Centre!) stories, such as "Uncle Josh in a Chinese Laundry" and "Uncle Josh on a Fifth Avenue Bus," which had already become comedy classics before the volume was printed. There are also some scattered bits of "Punkin Center Philosophy," which show that Uncle Josh, for all his seeming naivete and gullibility, was a shrewd observer of human nature. By permission of Mr. Hager, the following sayings are quoted:

"ADVICE — Advice is something the other fellow can't use, so he gives it to you."

"AMBITION—Something that has made one man a senator and another a convict."

"PARADOX—I can't describe it, but it looks to me like a tramp who once told me how to succeed in life."

"SUSPICION—Consisting mainly in thinking what we would do if we was in the other fellow's place."

"PROSPERITY—Consisting principally of contentment; for the man who is contented is prosperous, in his own way of thinking, though his neighbor may have a different opinion."

The following is quoted from a sketch concerning Stewart prepared by Fred Hager. It reveals some aspects of the colorful career of the Virginia-born impersonator of "Down East Yankees" that will surprise most of the comedian's admirers:

"CAL STEWART—what memories of youthful days the name brings up! Cal Stewart's stories have made millions laugh, for his phonograph records were among the best sellers year in and year out. It was said that where there was a library of but fifty records two of them were Cal Stewart's. A Virginian by birth, Cal Stewart spent his entire life making people forget their worries and care and enjoy a good laugh. In the farm houses of the country, in the palaces of the wealthy, out on the ranches, over in the army camps in France during the First World War, on the deserts and on the high seas, Uncle Josh has amused people, for his material was not buffoonery, but wholesome entertainment with goodly philosophy.

"After two years abroad for the Baldwin Locomotive Company, Mr. Stewart returned to the United States, and Thomas Edison asked him to go to Continental Europe and the Orient, to establish laboratories for sound recording. Through his interpreters, Mr. Stewart explained the process of recording and procured many valuable and interesting records, among them being Pope Leo the Thirteenth's Benediction to the

RECORDS

VICTOR RED SEAL records, 50c each. Thousands by Heifetz, Elman, Kreisler, Paderewski, Powell, Gluck, Homer, Alda, Wernanrath, Williams, Whitehill, Garrison, McCormack, others. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 628 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. mh3065

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. mh3004

RARE OLD RECORDS: Monthly sales list. Classical, vocal, popular, collector's items. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwald, Ambler, Penna. mh6445

WANTED: Record catalogues, supplements, pamphlets, 1900-1939. Old phonograph and record advertisements; other phonographic material. State price and condition. — D. Miller, Box 392, Long Beach, California. ja2614

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (Moses). Price $3.75.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, New York. f124201

MONTHLY AUCTION SALE: Old vocal operatic records. Free list.—Collectors' Haven, 148 Hancock St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ja3272

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-46. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 15 First Ave., New Town Square, Pennsylvania. o122741

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs. — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6084

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. ja3084

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. — E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan, Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

Record treasures of the World's great artists. Original G&Ts, Fonotipias, Zonophones, etc., Akte, Bellinioni, Boninsegna, Caruso, Carelli, De Lucia, Escalais, Fabbri, Giraldoni, Kurz, Litvinne, Pinto, Plancon, Figner, and other unique records of the greatest rarity. Send for auction lists, special lists. All correspondence confidential.—Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. f34431

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants". For information write or visit —Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., N. Y. 28, New York. n126581

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. f3253

Elizabeth Schumann Acoustics wanted. Also her Edisons. — 2327 Arthur St., Los Angeles 65, Calif. mh3063

MISCELLANEOUS

SWISS MUSICAL Movements, charming single tunes $1.95. Double tunes $2.95. Postpaid. — Wagner, 1433 York Ave., N. Y. C. ja124201

FOR SALE: Music rolls for National Automatic Piano. Over 100 American tunes available. Send for list. Also want music rolls of all descriptions.—Russell Miller, 3274 Adriatic Ave., Long Beach 10, Calif. mh62511

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Catalog 10c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. je12407

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Jean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. ja3272

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues. — Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. mh3422

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d124461

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

Edison and 20 cylinder records, $12.50. Criterion records, Roller Organ.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. ja1201

FOR SALE: Stella Music Box discs, 14".—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. ja1021

TABLE MODEL VICTROLA, built-in horn, lid missing, $8.50. Another complete, with record cabinet, holds 52 records, $17.50, 26 records each machine. Edison disc, large cabinet, walnut finish, $25. Only a limited number of Edison cylinder machines left, one Columbia. —Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. ja1253

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80 direct from importer. —Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, New York. mh3

RECORDS—JAZZ

I HAVE 100,000 JAZZ and sweet records, collectors items. Send me your wants. I will also buy phonograph record collections, any size.—Jacob S. Schneider, 128 West 66th St., N. Y. C., New York. f6069

FOR SALE

Swiss music box, dated 1816, in excellent playing condition, with 3 changeable 20" steel rolls, each playing approx. 12 tunes, has fast and slow lever with 3 dancing dolls and flying butterfly that are in working condition. Mahogany case with inlay lines, front has tulip and heart inlay. Case is 40" long, 18" deep, and 10 1/2" high, and a rare type in excellent condition. Very good tone. $475. Collector's item.

Symphony (Regina type) with approx. 12 13 1/2" steel discs, in excellent playing condition. 17" deep, 19" long, and 12" high. $475.00.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED

JONESTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

ROY E. DEAVEN

"A Friend Indeed"

That's what your collector friends will call you when they receive the gift card from us informing them that you have subscribed for HOBBIES in their name.

Each issue they receive will remind them of your friendship, because HOBBIES is a practical gift that will give them more pleasure in collecting.

Fill out the blank below and mail it with your remittance of $3.50 to HOBBIES, 1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

Please send a gift subscription to:

Name .....

Address .....

My name and address is:

Catholic People. . . . Opera records were made and Chinese stories, which sometimes took eight hundred records to complete, and it was a rich man indeed who owned a complete story.

"In London he was the guest of King Edward. He was also the guest of the Kaiser of Germany, the Czar of Russia, Khedive of Egypt, Shah of Persia, at Teheran, Prince of Siam at Bangkok, Emperor Franz Joseph of Austria, and the Empress Ti Ann invited him to the Imperial Seventh Garden, also the Grandee at Delhi, Calcutta and Rangoon.

"Many gifts were bestowed upon Mr. Stewart by Crowned Heads, but he valued them less than the vest given him by Denman Thompson, whom he understudied in 'The Old Homestead.' Mr. Thompson wore the vest and then presented it to his understudy, who always used it for his monologs. It was at a performance of 'The Old Homestead' that Thomas Edison, admiring Cal's voice, asked him to come to the laboratory and try a recording. Success was immediate, and soon after he made records for the Victor, Columbia and smaller companies, all on a royalty basis. His pen was prolific and his material inexhaustible.

"Mark Twain was an old friend and, later in life, Will Rogers. Uncle Josh's philosophy told in his own words was 'I'd sooner tell Pete on the last day about the laffs I've given folks on earth, than try to explain about giving them heart akes.' His name was a household word wherever the English language was spoken, and his life was a sublime example of what the world gives to the man who can do one thing supremely well. The world expressed grief that finis was written to a life that had given so much pleasure to others.

"Cal Stewart was the greatest humorist of his time."

The statement that Cal Stewart went abroad at the request of Mr. Edison to establish recording laboratories is open to question. Veteran employees of the Edison laboratory cannot recall Stewart's serving in that capacity. They say that Edison's foreign recording studios were set up by William A. ("Bill") Hayes, who is still living and is in charge of the company's repair department at West Orange. It may be that Stewart's work overseas was done for Columbia instead of Edison, since the comedian became an exclusive Columbia artist in the early 1900's and remained so until about 1907. Certainly, the record of Pope Leo the Thirteenth's Benediction to the Catholic People, made when the Pope was 93 (a fact which perhaps gives him the distinction of being the oldest recording artist in history), was issued by Columbia.

As a matter of historical interest, the Columbia Company's monthly magazine, The Columbia Record, for June, 1903, contains a photograph of the Pope and a description of his two recordings—one the Benediction and the other the Ave Maria. Stewart is not mentioned in the article, which says: "These records were made, at the Vatican, on February 5th, 1903, in the presence of his (Pope Leo's) nephew, Cardinal Pecci. . . . Though nothing remains of the great Pontiff, save an undying memory, his voice lives and he will continue to convey his benediction to thousands upon thousands, through the medium of the graphophone and these priceless records. . . . In confiding his benediction to a graphophone record, the Holy Father expressed a wish that he might be heard throughout the world, and that the faithful of even the most distant countries should hear his voice and receive his benediction. After hearing the reproduction he was so pleased with the distinct and natural tones that he intoned the Ave Maria also, his idea being that those who heard it, after he had passed away, would recite the beautiful prayer with him." The Pope died about five months after he made the records. They were available only on cylinders which sold for two dollars each and since the aged prelate's voice was low and indistinct, the sale was disappointingly small and they were soon discontinued.

Returning to Mr. Hager's statement, it is of course possible that his memory is perfectly accurate and that Stewart worked in other countries for Edison before his exclusive Columbia contract took effect.

Under the heading of "An Interview With Uncle Josh," the Portland (Maine) Advertiser published an interesting article in its issue of April 5, 1904, from which the following quotations are taken:

"By Mr. Cal Stewart, Columbia Record' are words which every person who has ever listened to a graphophone has heard spoken in a clear tone as the wax cylinder on the machine started on its whirl and turned out joke after joke. After the announcement that 'Mr. Cal Stewart' is to say something, everybody listens, and then follows that drawling, droll, measured voice known to millions in America, carrying with it a rollicking laugh, a fund of good nature and an irresistible humor.

"Millions have listened to Mr. Stewart's voice from a graphophone record, thousands have listened to it in the theatres of the country, and now patrons of The Portland in this little city in Maine are privileged to hear this emperor of rural comedians. . . . He might be taken for a farmer, even off the stage. Large framed, fleshy, fat-faced, good natured, with a big black felt hat surmounting these essential characteristics of the 'rube' comedian, Mr. Stewart presented a picture of the typical New England farmer. His conversational voice did not show that he was an impersonator of rural characters, but aside from the New England twang he had all the other ear marks which distinguished his act on the stage.

"I suppose I have talked into more records and had my voice repeated more times than any other man in the world," said Mr. Stewart, in opening the conversation. "When I last heard there had been 750,000 cylinders made with my stories; this number has since reached a million. . . . I've made private records for President McKinley, President Roosevelt and Secretary Shaw, besides other public men.' . . .

"Mr. Stewart gave a brief history of his start on the stage. 'You see, I was born in Virginia, and lived there during the earlier part of my life. I had always been a mimic, imitating all kinds of characters, and everything else. I made my first appearance in public when I was seven years old in a little pickaninny part in the Hidden Hand, then playing at the old Front street theater in Baltimore. I did black face for a little time in this way, and later impersonated every other kind of a dialectic character. Rural characters I particularly liked, and there used to be a lot of good men on the stage playing these parts. John E. Owens in Solon Shingle particularly appealed to me, so I resolved to devote my time in the future to farmer parts, and have now been doing them for over 20 years.

"I left Virginia in 1872, and in 1875 began my really professional career with B. F. McCauley, who was playing Uncle Daniel in The Messenger from Jarvis Section. I was the Village Boy, but understudied Mr. McCauley for several years. I have since devoted my time to old age characters and like them the best.

"During my life I have traveled over every part of the U.S. and seen and studied every kind of a farmer type, from the New Englander to the Westerner, but like the New Englander the best. Out in Indiana I found every type; some characters had a part of them all in one. Out there you can hear 'I reckon,' 'I calculate,' 'I suppose,' and all the other expressions of the farmer.

"The vaudeville life is an agreeable one," said Mr. Stewart. "The stage is much better than it used to be. The actors have improved, the theaters have grown larger and better, the expenses have increased, but so have the salaries. A man has to have brains to succeed on the stage nowadays. Sometimes it is hard work, but a performer has good wages, he sees all the world, has steady employment and acquires an invaluable experience." (Those, be it remembered, were the palmy days of vaudeville.)

And now, from the December, 1906, issue of the Columbia Record, I quote, for the sake of the picture it gives of the comedian's working methods, an account of a visit paid by Cal Stewart to a Columbia store in Indianapolis, Indiana. Incidentally, Stewart lived on a farm near Indianapolis during his later years:

"Recently Mr. Cal Stewart, of Uncle Josh fame, visited Indianapolis, where he was booked to appear in comedy parts at one of the theaters. Those who know him well know that it would be just about as hard for Mr. Stewart to visit a town in which there was a Columbia store and not visit that store, as it would be for 'Jim Lawson' to confine his potatoes known in business for his accomplishments as President of the Dayton Tool and Engineering Company, which established records during the war for high production and worker participation in community projects. He is a member of the National Board of Americans for Democratic Action.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 35)

As Assistant Director, Burton Cumming will bring to the Federation a Harvard graduate school training in the fine arts plus experience as a teacher of art at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y. For over a year he worked at the Albany Institute of History and Art as an assistant director. In Milwaukee where he has been as Director of the Art Institute for five years, four of them since the war, Mr. Cumming has gained a reputation for winning the support and sponsorship of art exhibitions by business and industry. He organized one national conference on "Business and Art" in 1948 and another on "Industrial Design" in 1950. In accepting the position Cumming stated that "this is the best opportunity in the field of American art today."

The American Federation of Arts was founded in 1909 as a nonprofit national art association and has a continuous history of over forty years growth through the voluntary services of art leaders, institutions, and philanthropic foundations in all parts of the country. Early leaders of the organization were the Hon. Elihu Root; Charles L. Hutchinson, president of the Art Institute of Chicago; Robert W. de Forest, president of the Metropolitan Museum of Art; and more recently, Juliana Force, the Director of the Whitney Museum of American Art. Today the Federation, with offices in Washington and New York, numbers approximately 500 Chapter and institutional members consisting of the major art museums and associations, university art departments and schools, as well as art clubs and groups in smaller cities and towns. It has over 13,000 individual members and subscribers. Its Board of Trustees, is at present composed of men and women prominent in many professions and regions of the country. Included among the thirty names are ten art museum directors and officials, two lawyers, three heads of university art departments, three artists, one architect, two authors, two department store executives, one movie actor, one Wall Street broker, and the head of one national foundation. All are avid collectors of art. The present Officers and Trustees of the American Federation of Arts are: Philip R. Adams; Lee A. Ault; Richard F. Bach, First Vice-President; Alfred H. Barr, Jr.; Sidney Berkowitz; Robert Woods Bliss, Honorary President; Leslie Cheek, Jr.; Ralph Colin; Russell Cowles; Sumner McK. Crosby; Daniel S. Defenbacher; Rene d'Harnoncourt; Lloyd Goodrich; Bartlett H. Hayes, Jr.; Henry R. Hope; Earle Ludgin; H. Stanley Marcus; Grace L. McCann Morley, Second Vice-President; William M. Milliken; Elizabeth S. Navas; Roy R. Neuberger, Treasurer; Vincent Price; Thomas Brown Rudd; Charles H. Sawyer; Eloise Spaeth, Third Vice-President; L. M. C. Smith, President; James Thrall Soby; Francis H. Taylor; Emily Hall Tremain and Hudson D. Walker.

The Federation has built up a number of activities over the years and is now engaged in offering them as major services in the cause of art in America.

—o—

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 22)

to the town pump. . . . It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that Mr. Stewart was not long in the Hoosier capital before he found his way into our Indianapolis store, and, while there, sent away customer after customer, supremely happy in the possession of a real, live, genuine Uncle Josh record, such as Cal Stewart, and Cal Stewart only, knows how to make. Commenting on record making by Mr. Stewart, the manager of our Indianapolis store says: 'Mr. Stewart worked in his shirt sleeves. Between records he enjoyed a dry smoke. We were prepared to see him make records easily, even to giving them the necessary touch of local color without effort, but his ability to extemporize, which he did delightfully on several occasions, was nothing short of a revelation to us.'

Observant readers may have detected a number of discrepancies in these several quotations. They will be considered later. Meanwhile, it is time to consider the beginning of Cal Stewart's recording career.

(To be Continued)

—o—

Death of Frederic C. Freemantle

I have learned belatedly of the death of the distinguished tenor, Frederic Charles Freemantle.

The sad news comes from the singer's widow, who wrote, to thank me for a note I had sent to Dr. Freemantle, saying that the December issue of HOBBIES would be mailed to him so that he could read about the recent John Bieling Day observance at Hempstead, N. Y. She wrote:

"Your card to Dr. Freemantle was very thoughtful and I will be most happy to receive the HOBBIES article. You will be surprised to learn that my beloved husband passed on suddenly November 21, 1949. I am carrying on the business with a very capable staff, but the loss is great and sometimes seems more than I can endure."

Mrs. Freemantle, who prefers to spell the name in its original form, also sent me a copy of the November 27, 1949, bulletin of the Salem Reformed Church of Campbelltown, Pa., near which she and her husband had their summer home. I quote the following:

"Dr. Frederic C. Freemantle of New York City was laid to rest in Salem Cemetery on Friday, November 25. Dr. Freemantle was known in musical circles as 'The Favorite Pioneer Recording Artist.' In connection with his musical career he had traveled all over the world as tenor soloist in cathedrals and churches. For many years Dr. Freemantle served as chorus master and musical director of the Ocean Grove, N. J., Music Festivals. He was interested in religious music and his chief interest was in hymn singing. He had deep appreciation for the life and works of Beethoven.

Dr. Freemantle was born in London, England, April 20, 1873, and passed away November 21, 1949. He is survived by his widow, the former Miss Lillian Gingrich, of this community."

Mr. and Mrs. Freemantle attended the John Bieling Day party held September 10, 1948, at Garden City, New York, where his genial manner and handsome appearance evoked deep interest. Many of those present termed him the most striking personality of all in attendance. He is the third artist who attended the Garden City party to die, having been preceded by Al Bernard and Joe Belmont. A biographical sketch of Dr. Freemantle appeared in the Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists department for July, 1948.

—J. W.

—o—

Music Box Collectors 2nd Annual Meeting

The recently formed club, Musical Box Hobbyists, met in Indianapolis, Indiana, at the home of Perry Ghere for their second annual affair. This organization was formed last year primarily for the perpetuation of rare old music boxes, and to disseminate knowledge about existing music boxes, and the long lost craft of their manufacture.

Enthusiastic collectors attended from all parts of the United States, and this year several inquiries were received from European collectors also. Mr. Perry Ghere's private collection is one of the most outstanding in this country, consisting of one of almost every disc box ever made, and a large number of the Swiss boxes, organ boxes of all types, and a great many mechanical pieces.

Other members spoke of interesting items in their own collections, and several papers were read about the history of music boxes, their repair, and their care.

Officers for the current year were elected. Dr. Byron P. Merrick of Berlin Heights, Ohio, is acting as President for a second term; Lloyd G. Kelley of Hanover, Mass., is Vice-President for a second term, Mrs. Adrian V. Bornand of Pelham, N. Y. is Secretary, and Mr. Clarence Fabel of Lockport, N. Y., was elected Treasurer.

The Swiss Watchmaker's Association, and other Swiss agencies, have expressed approval of and interest in the aims and purposes of the Musical Box Hobbyists. In this country, the organization of Watch and Clock Collectors has offered kindly encouragement, as these two fields have a similar purpose and objective.

ant musical performances that will probably never be transferred to LP. I repeat, my article was not an attack on the 78-RPM disc; it was written to point out the dangers the future may hold in store for 78-RPM discs and to make collectors think of ways and means to preserve the performances on 78's so that no matter what happens to the records themselves the music thereon will not become inaccessible or entirely lost.

Incidentally, since my article was written a trend has started in the phonograph equipment industry that should do much for the cause of the 78-RPM disc, particularly those made in the early years of this century. I refer to turntable motors that will not merely run at any one or all of the three current speeds, but at any speed from 10 to 100. Zenith's new "Cobra-matic" record changer, for example, can easily and quickly be adjusted to run anywhere from 10 to 85 RPM, a feature which puts this company's machines ahead of all others for those who like to reproduce their old vocals at the correct pitch and tempo . . . those old discs which require speeds ranging from 70 or lower to well over 80. Unfortunately the "Cobra-matic" changer is not available as a separate unit, but perhaps it will be soon. For those who can afford it, Rek-O Kut has a new motor and turntable unit of the highest quality which will operate at not only the three current speeds but also anywhere from 25 to 100 RPM . . . the answer to a collectors dream.

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

CAL STEWART II

By JIM WALSH

Just as I don't know exactly when and where Cal Stewart was born, I haven't learned precisely when his first records were made. In his Pun-kin Center book, Stewart said he had been telling stories into the phonograph for the preceding four years. Since the book was copyrighted in 1903, that would seem to indicate his beginning year as 1899, but the manuscript may have been, and probably was, written several years before it was printed. The comedian's recording activities certainly were under way well prior to 1899.

A few years before the death of one of the earliest artists to make records, Dan W. Quinn, I asked for any information he had about Stewart. Dan replied: "Seems to me that Cal Stewart started over in Jersey along about 1893 or '94, then when we all went over to Columbia. . . . Cal made records right along and they sure did sell." (This "migration" to Columbia occurred a year or so before 1900—probably in 1898—when the competing company in New Jersey went out of business.)

The firm making records "over in Jersey" was the United States phonograph Company, whose laboratories were at 87-91 Orange street, in Newark. It turned out "New Jersey" cylinders, and the manager was Victor H. Emerson, who later became a Columbia recording expert. In 1916 he founded the Emerson Phonograph Company. The United States catalog dated March 1, 1894, contains long lists of records by Quinn and several other artists, but Stewart is not represented. Those were the days before permanent masters, and it may be that Cal had already done some recording but had left on one of his trips and the supply had run out before the catalog was printed. This statement likewise should be noted: "In addition to the records listed in this catalog, we can also furnish an endless variety of vocal, instrumental and miscellaneous records, of which no catalog can be made." Possibly, but not probably, some of the Uncle Josh cylinders were included in this "catch-all." Russell Hunting's "Casey" records are the only monologs offered in the 1894 United States list.

Stewart is not included in the complete Columbia catalog for 1896, and he is still missing in 1897. But the 1898 Columbia list includes ten of the "Uncle Josh Weathersby Series," described as "Laughing Stories by Cal Stewart." Most of the names will be familiar to collectors who have seen them on records of later issue. They are numbered from 14000 to 14010, with 14006 omitted, and the titles are: Uncle Josh's Arrival at New York; Uncle Josh on a Street Car; Uncle Josh at the Opera; Uncle Josh at Coney Island; Uncle Josh in a Department Store; Uncle Josh at a Baseball Game; Uncle Josh's Troubles at a Hotel; Uncle Josh on a Fifth Avenue Bus; Uncle Josh at the Stock Exchange, and Uncle Josh's Invitation to Visit Him On His Farm.

The 1898 Edison cylinder catalog went Columbia five better. It contained 15 "Funny Talks, by the Popular Yankee Comedian, Mr. Cal Stewart." Numbered consecutively from 3875, they included: Uncle Josh's Arrival in New York; Uncle Josh in a Street Car; Uncle Josh at the Opera; Uncle Josh's Trip to Coney Island; Uncle Josh's Visit to a Department Store; Uncle Josh's Trip Home to His Farm; Uncle Josh Playing a Game of Baseball; Uncle Josh on the Signs of New York; Uncle Josh rides on a Bus on Fifth Avenue, New York (a long-winded way of listing the favorite record usually known as Uncle Josh on a Fifth Avenue Bus); Uncle Josh at a "Raines Law" Hotel; Uncle Josh's Trip to Boston; Uncle Josh's Troubles in a Hotel; and Uncle Josh at the Stock Exchange.

The Fifth Avenue Bus record seems to have been particularly well liked. The late Rex Beach, in his novel, "Goin' Some," which was dramatized and became a hit on the stage, chose for the locale of the story a ranch of the 1890's. The greatest pride of the cowboys was an "Echo" phonograph, playing wax cylinders which were

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

MUSIC BOXES

All Types — Repaired
Bought and Sold

Swiss music boxes rebuilt to original condition. Only remaining source of supply of pins in the world for repinning cylinders. Broken teeth in combs replaced and properly tuned. All parts repaired or renewed. All work guaranteed.

Large stock of fine music boxes for sale. SWISS boxes with from 1 to 12 cylinders. DISC boxes of all makes and sizes. Regina, Mira, Stella, etc.

Many fine mechanical musical items, bird boxes, birds in cages, etc. Send for list, stating your requirements. Estimates and approvals cheerfully given.

A. V. BORNAND CO.

139 4th Ave.,

Pelham 65, N. Y.

(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

"Clear As a Bell" and were announced as being made for "The Echo Phonograph Company, of New York and Paris." This was a thin disguise for the old Columbia cylinders, which (after the company moved its headquarters from Washington, D. C.) carried the New York and Paris announcement, and were represented to be "as clear as a bell." (This is a claim that was made for Sonora phonographs many years later.) One of the cowboy's favorite records was "Silas On a Fifth Avenue Bus," which introduced some foolery about a woman who "opened her valise and took out her purse and opened her purse and closed her purse," that always convulsed the ranchmen. "Silas," of course, is Uncle Josh, and the lines about the purse being opened and closed are used in the "Fifth Avenue Bus" record.

Cal was soon recording for all the companies, and if he always worked on a royalty basis, he was probably the first recording artist to have such a contract. He made seven-inch discs for Emile Berliner, as well as improved records of the same size for Eldridge R. Johnson, and the February, 1902, Victor catalog contains 14 of his specialties. These include some titles not already mentioned, such as A Meeting of the School House Directors, Jim Lawson's "Hoss Trade" With Deacon Witherspoon, Daily paper at Pumpkin Center, and the laughing song, "I'm Old But I'm Awfully Tough," which gives some biographical information concerning Uncle Josh. "Uncle Josh" recorded for Zonophone, too, and sometimes not in his Punkin (or Pumpkin) Center capa-

WANTED

COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS
WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK
AND SILVER LABELS.
EDISON GRAND OPERA
CYLINDERS:

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with
MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
International Zonophone Company:
Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone
by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophone by
this artist, especially her Carmen
arias on 40075.

Also catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old
advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT
West Falmouth,
Mass.

Persons offering material not specified above,
or seeking information, are requested to enclose
a stamped envelope for reply. tfo

RECORDS

VICTOR RED SEAL records, 50c each.
Thousands by Heifetz, Elman, Kreisler,
Faderewski, Powell, Gluck, Homer, Alda, Werranrath, Williams, Whitehill, Garrison, McCormack, others. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St.,
Brooklyn 18, N. Y. mh3066

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J.
mh3004

RARE OLD RECORDS: Monthly sales list. Classical, vocal, popular, collector's items. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwald,
Ambler, Penna. mh6446

BOOK OF McCORMACK'S, $10; other books, mixed classics, $10, each.—C. M.
Horton, West Sand Lake, N. Y. f1001

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American
Recordings, 1895-1925 (Moses). Price
$3.75.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 325 Seventh Ave., New York 19,
New York. f124201

MONTHLY AUCTION SALE: Old
vocal operatic records. Free list.—Collectors' Haven, 148 Hancock St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ap3882

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items.
Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45.
Special wants are requested.—Cath. V.
O'Brien, 10 First Ave., New Town
Square, Pennsylvania. o122741

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium,
Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
f6084

REGULAR AUCTIONS classical vocal records. Free lists.—S. J. Mitchell, 1280
Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. ap3422

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rareties. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought.
—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan, Ave.,
Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

Record treasures of the World's great artists. Original G&Ts. Fonotapias, Zonophones, etc., Akte, Bellin-cioni, Boninsegni, Caruso, Carelli,
De Lucia, Escalais, Fabbri, Giraldoni,
Kurz, Litvinne, Pinto, Plancon, Figner, and other unique records of the greatest rarity. Send for auction lists, special lists. All correspondence confidential.—Record Treasures, 740
E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y.
f34431

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening."
Large, varied stock. Please state
"wants." For information write or visit —Record Collectors Service, 502 East
88th St., N. Y. 28, New York. n126581

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent,
100 North Third, Richmond, Va. f3263

Elizabeth Schumann Acoustics
wanted. Also her Edisons. —2327
Arthur St., Los Angeles 65, Calif.
mh3063

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR SALE: Music rolls for National Automatic Piano. Over 100 American tunes available. Send for list. Also want music rolls of all descriptions.—Russell
Miller, 3274 Adriatic Ave., Long Beach
10, Calif. mh62511

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues. —Elmer Moore, 1035
17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. mh3422

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists.
Stamp please. —"Pastonow" Records,
211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d124461

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac"
McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—
Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

WANTED: Old Music Books for my personal collection. Also old Hymnals.
Send description, title and publication date.—Van Sciver Miller, South Boulevard, Nyack, N. Y. ap3004

WANTED: Old Merry-Go-Round Organ.—J. L. Carver, Fair Forest, S. C.
f1001

VIOLINS FOR SALE: Mattio Albani, brilliant tone, Bolzano; also Chanot
(French), guitar-shaped (reversed scroll).
Address—W. Ladd, 1362 Perry Place,
Washington 10, D. C. f1861

CYLINDER EDISON with 20 records,
$12.50; Mandolina roller organ with paper roll, case good, needs minor repair, $12.50.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn.
f1671

TEN-TUNE SWISS music box; 2 teeth broken, $25. Edison cylinder phonograph, large horn and 50 records, $13. Express extra. —N. Dullman, Colfax, N. Dak.
f1002

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850.
Everything. Write your wants.—Fore's,
3151 High, Denver 5, Col. je12407

EDISON OR COLUMBIA cylinder phonograph: morning glory horn and stand. Table model Edison disc; extra reproducer for playing other records.
Player piano rolls, 150 old disc records in almost new condition. Mostly Victor, 15c each. Express or postage extra. —
Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. f1443

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80 direct from importer.
—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York
7, New York. mh3

RECORDS—JAZZ

I HAVE 100,000 JAZZ and sweet records, collectors items. Send me your wants. I will also buy phonograph record collections, any size.—Jacob S.
Schneider, 128 West 66th St., N. Y. C.
New York. f6069

The Old Music Store Deansboro, New York

PIPE ORGAN, C. 1837:
Hand-made throughout, rosewood and pine case, single manual, 54 keys, two stops, 108 pipes, 27x58x87" high, restored and electrified. A very choice item.
$2,950.

COIN OPERATED PIANOS, cleaned and restored:
Seeburg Eagle: Tamborine, xylophone, mandolin, castagnets, triangle, with ten-tune roll. $500.
Seeburg Junior—Mandolin, piano, with ten-tune roll.
$400.
Seeburg Calliope: Mandolin, piano, plus lively cal-lope, with ten-tune roll. Rare instrument. $600.
Link: Mandolin, xylophone, piano, with fifteen-tune folded paper roll. $600.
Wurlitzer: Smaller machine, much older than the others.

MELODEONS, cleaned and restored.
Princo: Four octaves, rosewood case, 30x16x29" high, removable lyre shaped lens. $175.
Carhart: Circa 1846, folding legs, plain rosewood case. $150.

We also have several fine old Regina and Swiss music boxes, Edison phonographs, roller organs, and discs, rolls, records and sheet music.

Esther Skeritt Sanders

Violins: Mischa Elman, Fritz Kreisler, J. Heifetz, Maud Powell and many others both on American and foreign labels.
Pianos: Paderewski, DePachman, Harold Bauer,
Rachmaninoff, Conroy and hundreds of others.

The great bands of yesterday: John Phillip Sousa,
Arthur Pryor, Conways, Vessellies, Victor Military, Princes on Columbia. All the way back to 1895 and do they sound good today.

Taking some of the great names on records of the olden days I have, Ada and Billy Jones, James Harrison, Charles Hart, Jim McGool, Billy Murray,
Charles Harrison, American, Peerless, Stellar, Avon,
Orpheus, Quartettes, Sterling trio, Browns Saxophone Sextette, Vess Osman, Fred Van Dpps on Banjo, and thousands of others.

PLEASE NOTE:
These are not worn out, unplayable records but in excellent condition. In fact, many are just like new and to those who know, better than some of the latest records just out.

As all these facts are guaranteed why not try and see if I can get music that you like to you.

P. O. Box 182, AL MOREA, SR. Westville, N. J.

Cal Stewart, as "Uncle Josh," the "Cracker Barrel Philosopher," in front of the Punkin Center General Store. Reproduced by permission of the copyright owner, Fred W. Hager.

city. An Iowa record collector has told me of finding a Zonophone record of "The Arkansaw Traveler," a comic monolog usually considered sacred to Len Spencer, but which in this instance was recorded by Cal Stewart. More recently, a Maine collector has obtained a brown wax Columbia cylinder of the "Traveler" monolog, spoken by Len's brother, Harry, who seems to have made a good many more records than I believed when I was writing the Len Spencer series. (Incidentally, I was wrong when I said that Harry and Len were twins. Len was the elder.) But the great Leonard Garfield Spencer more or less evened things up when he made a Columbia record in 1902 of "Uncle Josh's Huskin' Bee." Perhaps Stewart was out of the country on one of his trips abroad when the impish Len engaged in this act of lese majesty.

The Stewart record list had grown to 31 by the time the Edison catalog, dated October, 1899, came out. Most of the titles are still familiar, but one, "There Ain't A Word," is now unknown—at least to me.

Cal had two more offerings in the Edison list for November 20, 1899. One was "The Daily Paper at Pumpkin Center." (Whether the name was spelled pumpkin or Punkin appears to have depended on the preference of the individual company.) The other, which sounds particularly interesting, although I've never heard it, was "Uncle Sam to George." Here is the description: "The sailors of Admiral Dewey's fleet were entertained Saturday night, September 30, at a 'smoker' at the Waldorf-Astoria. The Admiral was there. Cal Stewart delivered this stirring patriotic poem in his quaint Yankee dialect." The cylinder soon disappeared from the catalog, and I don't know of anyone who has a copy. However, the fact that Stewart was called on to entertain at the testimonial dinner to the hero of the Spanish-American War shows that he had already made for himself a wide reputation and gained a large following.

Even before the new century arrived, the comedian, whose nasal back country drawl and hearty laugh are unjustly dismissed by many present-day listeners as "corny" and "crude," had duplicated, on a minor scale, the feats of Shakespeare and Dickens in creating imaginary worlds of their own. The boy with his first recollections centering around a poverty-stricken farm somewhere in Virginia had grown up to become recognized as the archetype of the "hayseed" from the stony and sterile farms of New England.

Record buyers in other English-speaking countries were not certain what part of the United States the garrulous Uncle Joshua Weathersby hailed from. A writer in an English publication, the Talking Machine News, referred to his "quaint Western drawl." It is true that Stewart was fascinated by the rural types of the Middle West, particularly those of Indiana, where he made his home for some years before his death, but evidence can be adduced to prove that he always conceived of Uncle Josh and the other Punkin Center folks as New Englanders. Even so, a friend of mine in Decatur, Illinois, has told me that a certain outlying area there is known as "Punkin Center," because of the resemblance of its farm types to those in the Stewart records.

I think there is no doubt that our Uncle Josh was suggested by Uncle Josh Whitcomb, the beloved character whom Denman Thompson portrayed for so many years in "The Old Homestead." There is the similarity of names, for one thing, and, for another, the fact that Stewart gained valuable experience as Thompson's understudy. Thanks to a letter from Frank E. Hatch, of Boston, in a 1932 issue of The Billboard, we can trace the genesis of Thompson's original Uncle Josh. Wrote Mr. Hatch:

"It is related that on one occasion when Denman Thompson played Uncle Josh in a rural New Hampshire town, the audience demanded their money back because the character was one they could see every day without paying anything. It may be of interest to know that the character of Uncle Josh was the prototype of one Joshua Holbrook, a farmer who lived in West Swanzy, New Hampshire, where Denman Thompson was brought up and where he maintained a home up to the time of his death." So Joshua Holbrook became Joshua Whitcomb and Joshua Whitcomb in turn was transformed into Joshua Weathersby!

Cal Stewart was not the only member of the "Old Homestead" troupe to make records. I don't believe that Thompson ever did, but, as has already been told in HOBBIES, Richard José, the countertenor, was with the Homesteaders for several seasons, and afterwards became a popular Victor artist. The Old Homestead Double Quartet made several Victor records in 1904, and the late Fred East, who sang in that ensemble for three years, was engaged by Edison as a bass soloist many years later.

The Virginia-born Stewart did not slavishly imitate New Hampshire's Denman Thompson. Rather, through his powers of imagination, observation and impersonation, he gradually made the buyers of fragile wax cylinders and scratchy discs familiar with a host of men and women who existed only in his mind, but seemed living beings, so typical were they of the New England country characters of that now remote era.

This appears to be a good point at which to quote some comments made by Stanley L. Johnston, of Lansing, Michigan. Mr. Johnston, a HOBBIES reader and Uncle Josh enthusiast, has been of unwearied help to me in trying to track down—unfortunately, without complete success—some of the more obscure details of Stewart's life. He has also made a thorough study of the Punkin Center series, as witness these thoughtful observations, taken from his letters to me:

"Herein lives my interest in Cal Stewart: The early phonograph was ignored by big name artists. Less known entertainers accepted the small fees offered and endeavored to make good records. In proportion to their success, plus mechanical improvements in both phonograph and recording, the phonograph gained popularity. Better known artists appeared and competed with the earlier artists. Some fell by the way, unable to hold out against superior talent. A few held on—people like Billy Murray and Henry Burr. Through the years, starting on early wax cylinders and with mediocre artists' competition, Cal Stewart held his own, even when the world's greatest artists were on records, with fortunes spent to advertise their names.

"His records provide a history of the recording art. First, the fuzzy, blurred wax cylinders, also the rough surfaced discs and, continuing through to the last, you will find a good study in mechanical improvements in record making. I don't pretend to like all his records, but I think many were fine.

"I think it would have to be conceded that Stewart never attempted anything beyond giving his hearers some laughs. His talks were short. If drawn out they might have been monotonous. They were short, amusing interludes, designed as a change from the more serious offerings. Stewart never stooped to drag in smut nor told sexy stories. His favorite by word was 'by gosh!' His strongest exclamation was 'thunderation!' In some earlier records 'Josh' was often foolish to the point of being a half-wit, but gradually this element disappeared and he became a fun-loving character, unlearned but not a fool. (This same transformation of character is revealed gradually in the hero of Dickens' 'Pickwick Papers,' the initially gullible but finally lovable Samuel Pickwick.—J. W.) He sometimes pokes fun at religious demonstrations, yet in 'Christmas at Punkin Center' he himself joins with the Peerless Quartet to sing 'Ring the Bells of Heaven,' doing a passable job, too."

Mr. Johnston calls attention to some seeming discrepancies in Stewart's account of his life in the book and interviews already quoted—discrepancies which probably can never be reconciled, since Mrs. Stewart is dead, the couple had no children, and none of the members of the comedian's family are living.

"If," says Mr. Johnston, "Stewart was 63 when he died it follows he must have been born about 1856. Stewart says he first appeared in 'The Hidden Hand' when he was seven years old. The only play by the name of 'The Hidden Hand' that I have found any record of was rewritten from a French play and first appeared in England in 1867. Stewart says he was born in Virginia and when he was 12 years old he left home, yet at 7 he was in Baltimore playing in 'The Hidden Hand.' Perhaps that 7 should be 17!

"Again," says Stewart, 'made my first appearance on the stage at the National Theater in Cincinnati, Ohio.' After that he had many different jobs. The statements seem to clash."

Stanley Johnston rather wistfully continues:

"If there was one time, like 1870, '80 or '90 that you could pin him down and definitely know he lived at such and such a place, it would be fairly simple to get something on him. The census bureau could furnish a copy, for a fee, of any census report prior to 1900. (For a copy of a census report later than 1900, you must be a very close relative of the person you are interested in.) The Civil War would ruin chances of finding him in the 1860 census, plus the fact that it is necessary to furnish the exact place of residence at the time the census was taken. That is also true of 1870-80-90.

"Stewart says he helped lay steel on the M., K. and T. Railroad. The first 786 miles of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas lines were built during the years 1869 to 1873. Many miles were added in later years, and it now has 3,188. It seems likely he worked at a later date—still, he may have started work young."

A cartoonist's conception of one of the most popular Cal Stewart records, "Uncle Josh on a Bicycle." Reproduced by permission of the copyright owner, Fred W. Hager.

Mr. Johnston tried to check on Cal's statement that he had been an express messenger in the Far West, by writing to Miss Irene Simpson, historian in the Museum of the Wells, Fargo Bank in San Francisco. She replied that records of the early period of the company's history had been destroyed by fire, but added: "As a rule, a Wells, Fargo messenger sat beside the driver, shotgun in hand, to guard the shipment of gold bullion being sent by the express company."

The Michigan investigator comments: "It is hard to think of the fun-making Stewart in this capacity, isn't it." And he sums up his perplexity by saying: "I am beginning to think Uncle Josh is the reality and Stewart the fantasy. I know more about Josh than I do of Cal!"

That mysterious production of "The Hidden Hand" receives mention in the following paragraph which appeared in the Columbia record supplement for September, 1919:

"Cal Stewart is a native of Virginia. His father and mother were Scotch (which accounts for his real name, Calvin). Stewart's first professional appearance was in a Baltimore theater as a pickaninny servant character in a play called 'The Hidden Hand.' Stewart once remarked he had had what he called a Huckleberry Finn career. He has been a stage coach driver, a locomotive engineer, a minstrel star and an express company messenger."

Somewhat similar statements were made in Columbia's supplement for December, 1919, the month in which Stewart died:

"Cal Stewart, the author and maker of the 'Uncle Josh Punkin Center' stories, is a native of Virginia and descended from good old Scotch ancestors. His early career was connected with the old minstrels, the school which produced many of our best loved comedians. Stewart's knowledge of life, which he so humorously portrays in his Columbia records, comes from his various experiences as a stage coach driver, a locomotive engineer and an actor. 'Cal', as he is familiarly known to his thousands of admirers from coast to coast, writes as well as recites his own monologs and, naturally, records his own Columbia records."

Since beginning this series, I have played many of my Uncle Josh records. It would be fairly easy to compile from them a "Spoon River Anthology" of the population of Punkin Center. And there would be a resemblance to Cal Stewart's own life story in the fact that the details do not always hang together.

From "I'm Old But I'm Awfully Tough" we learn that Uncle Josh considers himself "a jolly old fellow from back in New England, where apples and peaches and punkins do grow." He admits that he likes to wink at "the purty gals" and gives his age as "near 73"—somewhat older than I have imagined him, but Cal certainly should have known how long his hero had been around. Uncle Josh also admits having an eye for the girls when, in "The County Fair at Punkin Center," he tells of attending a side show featuring "the Dance of the Seven Veils," in which the lovely performers appeared to have absent-mindedly forgotten most of their gossamer.

Joshua shows his naive qualities on his visits to New York. He tries to mail a letter in a fire alarm box, then sees a postman opening a mail box, takes him for a thief and struggles to arrest him, only to learn that he has assaulted "one of the postmasters of New York City." In this record Josh reveals that he was formerly postmaster of Punkin Center. Naivete is shown again when he says that he always stays at the Astor House because he likes "Mrs. Astor's" cooking. At home, he keeps on the mantel a "gold brick" that some sharper sold him, and he was "buncoed" by a lightning rod agent.

When the Punkin Center series begins, Uncle Josh is a widower, but we have no information concerning his late wife. As far as I have been able to determine, Uncle Josh, as was Cal Stewart himself, is without children but is well supplied with nieces and nephews. He begins to show more than a casual interest in the much-married "Aunt Nancy Smith," who had accompanied him on a sight-seeing trip to New York and become frightened when she saw a man's wagon running without any horses. Aunt Nancy is a widow, and one record is devoted to the old couple's courtship.

In the records made during the early 1900's the part of Aunt Nancy is taken by Mrs. Cal Stewart herself. Mrs. Stewart was a Tipton, Indiana, girl, Rossini Waugh, who is described by Fred Hager as a talented violinist. She traveled with the troupe which Stewart formed to give entertainments based on the Punkin Center characters. Her brother, James W. Waugh, was also a member of the group, which Mr. Hager says was a great favorite in the Middle West.

Mrs. Stewart's conception of Aunt Nancy was that of a cheerful, rather foolish old lady who giggled incessantly, just as Uncle Josh was addicted to constant explosions of mirth as he told his anecdotes. Some listeners criticize this recurring chuckle on the ground that Stewart is "laughing at his own jokes," but I think the criticism is unjustified. Anybody who has watched an old-fashioned story teller knows that it is part of his technique to interrupt his yarn regularly with hearty laughs, usually slapping his legs as he does so. When Stewart laughs he is only giving added fidelity to his portrayal of the typical rustic. On the other hand, I agree that the incessant laughing of such comedians as Harry Lauder and Billy Williams, the old-time English music hall comedian, is unnecessary and irritating.

After Ada Jones came into popularity, Mrs. Stewart ceased to take part in the records probably because Ada's versatility and powers of mimicry were greater than her own. In the famous comedienne's capable hands, Aunt Nancy develops an acidulous streak absent from Mrs. Stewart's depiction. Some collectors have the impression that records labeled as by "Mr. and Mrs. Cal Stewart" were actually made by Stewart and Ada Jones, and even that they were married to each other, but this is wrong. However, I have been told that Cal and Ada did fill some Chautauqua engagements, in which they portrayed Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy.

The record of "Uncle Josh at the Chautauqua" may have been suggested by some of their experiences.

"Uncle Josh's Courtship" was followed, in 1907, by "The Wedding of Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy." In the Victor record Mr. and Mrs. Stewart have the assistance of the Haydn Quartet; in the Columbia, the Peerless, with Bill Hooley and Frank Stanley, respectively, taking the part of the officiating minister. The quartet, referred to as "the Punkin Center Sympathy Quartet" ("it has the sympathy of the hull village when it tries to sing") is asked to render something appropriate and obliges with "She May Have Seen Better Days." Uncle Josh remarks that he doesn't think "that's too doggone appropriate," and the minister shows his sentiments by waiving the privilege of kissing the bride. Uncle Josh tries to find out how many times Aunt Nancy has been married previously, but doesn't succeed.

However, in one of the best of the sketches, "Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy Put Up the Kitchen Stove," made a few months before Stewart's death, Josh remarks that Nancy doesn't need a stove, "because all the cookin' you know how to do, you can do on a fire-place." Nancy replies that "I cooked for three dif'rent men before I married you!" and this elicits the retort: "Yes, and they're all dead now!" Then Nancy says something that justifies our suspecting Uncle Josh, like many New Englanders, is "a leetle closefisted." She snaps: "I know another one that's dead, only he's too stingy to have a funeral!"

Mr. Johnston remarks that Mr. Weathersby's strongest expression was "thunderaton!" but he must have forgotten "Uncle Josh's New Year's Pledge." Of course Stewart didn't use profanity on records, but in this one he tells of how Joshua took a pledge to "quit cussin'" only to break it when he fell down the cellar stairs. I can't recall that Uncle Josh smoked or drank anything harder than cider, but in "Uncle Josh Keeps House" a series of calamities included his dropping his chewing tobacco into the chubn

It is true that Josh poked good-natured fun at some aspects of backwoods religion. In "Uncle Josh at a Camp Meeting" his imitation of the pious brother who intoned "Yea, verily!" is a masterpiece of unctuous humor. But devotions at bedtime appear to have been a regular part of life in Uncle Josh's home. Mr. Johnston called attention to the singing of "Ring the Bells of Heaven" in "Christmas Time at Punkin Center." He might have mentioned that in the Columbia record of "Evening Times at Punkin Center," made in 1903, Uncle Josh leads the family circle in singing "On Jordan's Stormy Banks I Stand." This record was discontinued some years later, but was re-made and reissued under a new number in 1919. In the later, improved version the concluding hymn is "Sweet Hour of Prayer." A touch of topicality resulting from World War One is given by a mention that "Reuben" (apparently one of Aunt Nancy's children by a former husband) is in France and has never seen his baby son. I may mention here that when Columbia cut out an Uncle Josh record, Cal usually re-made it a few years later and saw it acquire renewed popularity. He does not seem to have followed this re-making process with any other company.

We don't know the population of Punkin Center, but it had a newspaper, the weekly Bugle. (There was also a short-lived daily.) When a touring chiropractor (in "Train Time at Punkin Center") asks what is the population, Uncle Josh answers, "Principally fruit." Told that the visitor wants to know how many persons live there, Josh replies: "Git out an' count 'em! They're all here at train time!" In another record, it is said that a train comes to Punkin Center only once a week. No wonder Uncle Josh referred to himself in one of his songs as "a durned old rube from a high-grass town!"

Since Stewart was born on a Virginia farm and grew up there in reconstruction days, he probably was a Democrat, if his early environment counted for much. He looked so much like William Jennings Bryan that he was frequently mistaken for the Democrats' perennial presidential nominee. However, Punkin Center was staunchly Republican. We learn, by hearing the Edison cylinder, "Uncle Josh's Letter From Home" that there were only ten voters in the village and that Punkin Center would have gone Republican by a majority of ten if Ezra Hoskins hadn't been cross-eyed and mistakenly placed his mark in the Democratic part of the ballot.

This same record mentions the only death I can recall of a Punkin Center character, but Uncle Josh doesn't seem to expect us to take it seriously. He says that Reuben Hendricks was on the top floor of the rubber factory when it caught fire. To save himself, Reuben encased his person in so much rubber that he started bouncing when he jumped and hit the sidewalk. He bounced for four days, "and then we had to shoot the durn fool to keep him from starvin' to death." Of course, nobody really believes this whopper, which Josh also tells Aunt Nancy in "Uncle Josh's Courtship." Anyway, what would Punkin Center be doing with a rubber factory?

Ranking next to Josh and Nancy probably is Jim Lawson, a wooden-legged Civil War veteran, who seems to be the hamlet's official sot, liar and horse trader. Even so, Jim has his better qualities. He must have been gifted with a good voice, for ordinarily he sang in the church choir. His singing ended for a while after he had a misadventure with a skunk, which is related in the 1903 Columbia record, "Ground Hog Day at Punkin Center." As Uncle Josh hilariously tells it: "We used to give Jim a dollar a Sunday to sing in the choir down to the church but now they're givin' him a dollar every Sunday to stay away!" At best, Mr. Lawson's spiritual development was low. In "The Revival at Punkin Center," Uncle Josh quotes the revivalist as saying that hell's full of champagne, fast-stepping race horses and beautiful women, and the rapturous exclamation that Jim shouted broke up the meeting.

On one occasion, Uncle Josh was summoned to the county seat as a court witness, and Jim went with him. They stayed in a hotel known as the Bug House, because it was operated by a man named Bug. At the end, when Josh is ready to go home, after being rejected as a witness on the ground that he had "just got out of the bug house," the sheriff has Jim in tow and says that, judging by the way Mr. Lawson has been carrying on, he intends to keep him "in the bug house."

Other well known Punkin Center folks, in addition to many minor characters, are Si Pettingill, the grocer; Lige Willitt; Deacon Witherspoon; Ezra Hoskins, the tavern keeper; Hank Weaver and Cynthia Lawson, Jim's wife. All are portrayed in a way that makes their personalities and peculiarities easily understood, even though we usually see them only through the eyes of Uncle Josh. Summed up, the Punkin Center records constitute a truthful picture of the humorous side of the typical Yankee village of two or three generations ago.

(To be Continued)

What to Look for When Purchasing a Music Box

By GLENN P. HECKERT

Music boxes were made in a good many different grades, and the case is often a good guide to the quality of the works. The earliest boxes were in plain walnut, mahogany, or any other wood cases, without any inside cover glass, and were key wound. Although the tunes were not chosen for American trade, the arrangement was good. Later the cases had inlaid covers and stained or grained boxes.

The Program Card is of considerable value because the memory of some of the older titles has almost entirely disappeared. The selection of the airs was often a strange combination of popular classics, hymns, patriotic, operas, etc. These features, combined with the grade and condition of the works, determines its value to the ultimate owner.

It is necessary to balance these features, one against another, when deciding whether or not to purchase a box. The use a box has had determines the cost of restoring it. So it is necessary to examine the works from that standpoint. A box may be worn out from constant use. Some have had lots of oil put in, usually in the wrong place and on top of the dirt. I refer to the pinion leaves, pivots, and worm of the governor. Almost never do you find oil in the mainspring. If the owner has oiled the cylinder pins, he has usually preserved the most vital part, although the cylinder in this case is usually black with hardened oil and dust. There is a way to clean this all off without injury — except verdigris spots. Also, this type of dirt gathers under the points of the teeth and deadens the tone. After prolonged soaking, this dirt can all be cleaned away and the clear ringing tone that is found only in a music box, will be restored. But if the box has had lots of use and no oil on the pins, the pins become rounded on the ends. Also, the points of the teeth become rounded and the dampers break off, too.

Since the pins do not wear down evenly, it is necessary to grind the tops down in a lathe enough to even them up. This gets rid of the clicking and snapping noise. So when you examine a box, examine the condition of the pins first. If there are many bent and broken, it is a long, slow job to straighten up the bent ones and replace the broken ones. This must be done before grinding the pins. Also, the points of the teeth must be lapped on a surface plate until all roundness disappears, the dampers reshaped and the broken ones replaced. Like the cylinder pins, the comb points do not wear down evenly. The most active ones become shortest. Particularly this is true of the bass notes which are stiffer.

If there are too many broken points and teeth, I would not advise anyone to buy it because it indicates general misuse. With modern wafer-thin grinding wheels, the broken points of teeth can be replaced. The disk makes a perfect slot without first detempering the tooth. Great care must be used in setting the points and finishing them up. The replacement of a tooth is a slow, painstaking job. We see very few new teeth that have been put into a comb that are well finished and properly tuned. Look for missing dampers and see that the lead weights under the lower teeth are not corroded and eaten away from exposure to dampness. If they are reduced in weight, the tone will be high and tinny. The weights must be replaced with ones that are too heavy by soldering on new ones. Of course, if they are not too far gone, they can be cleaned and some soft solder added until they are properly tuned. It is quite an art to tune a whole comb. But it is not so serious to retune an individual tooth here and there.

If the box will run, listen how it plays. Other points to consider are the mainspring and ratched pawls and ratched wheels. Cautiously try the winding for this. Look to see if the stop works are broken or missing. See if the governor turns freely. If not, this is usually an indication of wear in the pivots, escape wheel, and thread of the screw. It requires great care and practice to regrind or polish a cut worm. The jewel may be cut, too. These I usually replace with flat back garnets, taken from an old garnet brooch. The pivot holes frequently need bushing. The barrel arbor bearings frequently need to be polished and the barrel holes bushed. Frequently, the mainsprings are found to be too strong and will run the box too fast. Weaker springs should be put in to run the box at the proper speed and to save wear. Worn wheel teeth can be recut, or the wheel should be replaced.

Sometimes a music box has stopped from some minor cause or obscure factory error, and has been set away in an attic or cellar for many years. These boxes are seldom worn and will often restore like new. Sometimes boxes have been tinkered with by an inexperienced person. You must be alert about this, for music boxes are often sold after someone has made a futile attempt to repair them and the damage does not show.

I own a box, the case of which is practically ruined from rotting at the bottom, but the works are good. Some day, I expect to find a good case into which these works will fit.

Cut up screw slots indicate tinkering, so examine the box well for hidden defects. If the box has been exposed to heat, the cement in the cylinder may all be on one side. In this condition, the cylinder will not slide on its shaft. If so, recementing is necessary. Ruined boxes are not worth restoring, but can often be bought cheaply and kept for parts for repairing other boxes. The screws are all metric, and any replacements of screws must either be hand made or taken from old boxes. Considering that most boxes have never been thoroughly cleaned, 60 or 70 years of dirt is quite a matter to remove. The mainspring should be removed, cleaned, and coated with coarse graphite flakes in vaseline. Large boxes often can be purchased at proportionally more reasonable prices than small boxes because the modern homes do not allow room to display them. Fine quality small or medium size boxes are rare today, because there weren't many of them made. There are many cheap boxes in stained cases on the market, but the selection of tunes and the playing is not too good, and the workmanship in concealed places is poor and rough. In the miniature boxes, about the same rule applies.

LINCOLNIANA IN 1950

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 18)

Reluctant Contemporary, Abraham Lincoln,"

A committee appointed by Governor Adlai Stevenson of Illinois is trying to raise funds for the purchase of the Barrett collection of Lincolniana to be presented to the Illinois Historical Society. Much progress has been made, but more contributions are needed. Please send them to George Bettinghaus, Treasurer, Marine Bank, Springfield, Illinois.

The Fellowship Groups are active throughout the country. Washington rangements for a hearing of this record.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 27)

12620 DOPO (Tosti). (40123A) 10", orch. acc. Interpretation very much in keeping with the spirit of the song. Sincerely done.

12621 GOOD-BYE (TOSTI). 10", orch. acc., in English. The singer is apparently uncomfortable in the English text and the performance suffers accordingly. Also unwarranted liberties are taken with the melodic line.

12622 MIGNON: STYRIENNE. 10", orch. acc. This record, which is labelled "Yo conosco un garzonel", gives us good proof that Mantelli—when the occasion demanded it—could display dark mezzo tones of the finest timbre. The interpretations seems to lack sparkle and lightness, although the laughing passage, since unforced, sounds natural.

13272 ME LLAMAM LA PRIMOROSA (Nieto y Ciminez). (d/s 24002). 12", orch. acc. This difficult piece gives Mantelli ample opportunity to show to advantage the extent of her technical resources, despite the fact that at times the voice now sounds well worn.

13273 LOS OJOS NEGROS (Alvarez), (d/s 24001). 12", orch. acc. This selection reveals the suggestion that Mantelli's voice was not always free from a strident, even acid, quality. Obviously recorded during this singer's vocal decline.

ROMEO ET JULIETTE: CANZONE STEPHANO. 12", orch. acc. Only a white label test of this record has been reported and heard. The voice is light and well under control.

SAMSON ET DALILA: PRINTEMPS QUI COMMENCE. 10". Writer unable to make arrangements for a hearing of this record. No number, no details have been reported. But it is certain the record was made and issued.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

CAL STEWART III

By JIM WALSH

After nearly a decade of free-lancing, Cal Stewart became one of the few pioneer recording artists under contract to only one company when he signed up exclusively with Columbia late in 1903. The February, 1904, issue of Columbia Record said: "Mr. Cal Stewart has . . . entered into an exclusive contract with the Columbia Company. His unique work is held in high esteem by record users everywhere. There is nothing more entertaining than Uncle Josh's monologs. Mr. Stewart's quiet humor and infectious laugh are as a ray of sunshine on a dismal day."

An unusual record in which Stewart took part soon after his exclusive contract began was the cylinder of "Deacon Coopley's Chicken Raid," in which he joined forces with Len Spencer and Bob Roberts. Spencer's name came first, then Stewart's, with Roberts' last. As might be expected, the sketch was written by the unfailingly ingenious Mr. Spencer. The brief supplement description was: "Dark night, everything still, Deacon Coopley and Brother Pinch on the raid—all asleep except Towser. Farmer Skinner finds 'not a feather left.'"

Stewart himself sometimes wrote sketches, and even songs, that were recorded by other artists. In July,

1905, Columbia issued a cylinder sung by Bob Roberts of a song I have never heard, which was obviously a "plug" for the Columbia machine. Its title was "I want a Graphophone." The description says that it was "composed by Cal Stewart (Uncle Josh Weathersby) and termed it 'a decided hit, sure to please all owners of graphophones or other talking machines.'"

Stewart also wrote a Negro dialect sketch, "A Meeting of the Hen Roost Club," which the Peerless Quartet recorded for virtually all the companies. He likewise was responsible for the 12 inch Columbia disc of "A 'Possum Supper at Darktown Church." The record label says that the artists are "Cal Stewart and Company," but I cannot detect a voice that can be identified as Cal's.

Even as late as 1919, when Stewart and his business associate, Fred Hager, were operating a music publishing company, he turned out a presumably serious ballad, "Where the Wabash Waters Flow." This was recorded by the Peerless for Columbia, but was never issued.

Victor, with its permanent metal disc masters, was not greatly inconvenienced by Stewart's becoming an exclusive Columbia Artist. It continued to list the records he had already made, but of course could not offer the comedian's new songs and sketches. Edison's problem was different. By the gold moulded system of making cylinders, the master record was destroyed in preparing working moulds. A large number of moulds could be stored, from which many thousand of commercial records were taken, but eventually the moulds wore out. That meant that if the original artist was no longer working for Edison the records either had to be discontinued or remade by somebody else.

For a while, after mould defects were found, Edison ceased to list Uncle Josh records. But in December, 1905, the company offered a recording of "I'm Old But I'm Awfully Tough," by a newcomer, Andrew Keefe, with this explanation:

"Since circumstances made it impossible to supply the trade with this record and later made it necessary to eliminate it from our catalog, we have probably had more requests for this selection than any other. In making it over, we shall, beyond question, be pleasing thousands of present and prospective owners of phonographs, and we anticipate that until the trade is again supplied there will be a great demand for it. In Mr. Keefe we have found an artist who has done this song full justice and we believe that this record of it will equal in popularity any one previously made."

Keefe had another imitation of Stewart, "Uncle Josh in a Department Store," in the Edison list for February, 1906. Even before the

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

MUSIC BOXES

All Types — Repaired
Bought and Sold

Swiss music boxes rebuilt to original condition. Only remaining source of supply of pins in the world for replugging cylinders. Broken teeth in combs replaced and properly tuned. All parts repaired or renewed. All work guaranteed.

Large stock of fine music boxes for sale. SWISS boxes with from 1 to 12 cylinders. DISC boxes of all makes and sizes. Regina, Mira, Stella, etc.

Many fine mechanical musical items, bird boxes, birds in cages, etc. Send for list, stating your requirements. Estimates and approvals cheerfully given.

A. V. BORNAND CO.

139 4th Ave.,

Pelham 65, N. Y.

(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

"Uncle Josh" Objects to Imitators

Most conclusive proof of the popularity of the "Uncle Josh Weathersby" series of cylinder records is that competitors of the Columbia Phonograph Company are endeavoring to imitate them. Cal Stewart, the originator of all the "Uncle Josh" records, is under exclusive contract with the Columbia Phonograph Company. The "Uncle Josh" records are original, unique, clean and wholesome. Insist on getting the genuine, to be had ONLY from COLUMBIA AGENCIES and duly authorized dealers. In this connection, an open letter to the trade, signed by Cal Stewart, Uncle Josh is interesting.

To all Dealers in Talking Machine Goods:

I am under exclusive contract with the Columbia Phonograph Company, for my services in the making of the "Uncle Josh Weathersby" series of records. Other records bearing the title of Uncle Josh or sold as Uncle Josh records are not genuine as I am the originator of all the "Uncle Josh Weathersby" records.

Sincerely yours,

CAL STEWART.

Cal Stewart did not like imitators, as this broadside indicates.

first of these records appeared, Stewart must have got wind of his impersonator's engagement, for the September, 1905, Columbia Record contained photographs of the Pumpkin Center originator, both as himself and as Uncle Josh, followed by a large heading which read, "Uncle Josh Objects to Imitators," and the statement:

"Most conclusive proof of the popularity of the 'Uncle Josh Weathersby' series of cylinder records is that competitors of the Columbia Phonograph Company are endeavoring to imitate them. Cal Stewart, the originator of all the 'Uncle Josh' records are original, unique, clean and wholesome. Insist on getting the genuine, to be had ONLY from COLUMBIA AGENCIES and duly authorized dealers." Then followed a letter from Stewart:

"To all Dealers in Talking Machine Goods. I am under exclusive contract with the Columbia Phonograph Company for my services in the making of the 'Uncle Josh Weathersby' series of records. Other records bearing the title of Uncle Josh or sold as Uncle Josh records are not genuine, as I am the originator of all the 'Uncle Josh Weathersby' records. Sincerely yours, Cal Stewart."

Stewart may have had reason to be annoyed, but there was no cause to be alarmed, by the prospect of competition from Andrew Keefe. The reason for this is explained in a letter from a veteran Edison employee, who prefers not to be identified but has been with the company almost 50 years and overflows with reminiscences of the early recording days:

"I came here about 1902, but it seemed Cal had got sore about something and would not record for Edison. It was quite a few years before he came around again. We tried to get somebody else to do 'rube' dialect stories, but no good results.

"There was a fellow came in from Albany and he could imitate Cal's voice on the records, but he was hard to make understand what was needed. Once he started to do the Chinese Laundry record of Cal's. I wrote it out on the typewriter, and in places where the Chinaman answered Uncle Josh, I could not write Chinese and wrote in, 'Fake Chinese talk.' The imitator, when he got to this line, always said, 'Fake Chinese talk.' Frank Cronkhite, the recording director, tried to explain by voice what was required, but the fellow always went back to his 'Fake Chinese talk.' Well, he went back to Albany with no regrets. He did make a record or two, I can't recall if they were ever listed. They were cylinders, made between 1904 and 1908."

This quotation doesn't do absolute justice to Keefe, since, in spite of being slow about learning to "fake Chinese talk," he did eventually succeed in recording that particular skit. His third, and last, cylinder, "Uncle Josh in a Chinese Laundry," appeared in the Edison list for February, 1907.

Andrew Keefe must have been a character. He was the subject of the following article, which probably was not especially accurate, in the Talking Machine News for October 15, 1906:

"LAUGHING SONGS — SOMETHING ABOUT THE MAN WHO MAKES THEM IN THE STATES.—Ha, ha, ha, ha,—a, ha, ha, ha,—I am old but I'm awfully tough! To sing this and other laughing songs, the selling agent for talking machines hunted high and low, over the whole United States. There may have been another man capable of singing these songs, but after a search of months and after trying some of the most talented performers on the vaudeville stage, the right man was found in the person of Andrew Keefe, once a junk dealer, and now conducting a retail stove store. Possessing a hearty laugh that is infectious; a voice that is musical and versatile, capable of imitating the female voice, from contralto to soprano range, or the male from baritone to tenor, Mr. Keefe also tells 'Casey' stories into the phonograph. The discovery of Keefe was quite accidental. While a phonograph traveling man was visiting a talking machine store . . . Keefe came strolling in. 'Say, I want to make a phonograph record for you,' said Keefe. At the time a record was being played, sung by Miss Ada Jones. 'Say,' said Keefe, 'I can sing like that.'

"Now, to anybody acquainted with the phonograph, this sounded like a boast, for he it known that Miss Jones is simply in a class by herself. However, Keefe sprang a surprise. Twisting his mouth into a peculiar shape, he started in on 'Just Plain Folks.' It was Miss Jones' voice almost perfect.

"However, it was in his own natural laughing songs that Keefe made his hit. He was instructed to sing in his own way a song accompanied by a piano. The experts agreed that they had found a star performer. Keefe was told to return to the laboratory three days later, when they would start making some of his records, with band accompaniment.

"He did not know what was in store for him when he arrived at the laboratory at the time specified to begin making his records for the largest audience a singer can ever have — the phonograph audience. Andy Keefe's songs, when he sung then and there in the phonograph, are now being sung through that instrument in over a million homes."

As a means of romanticizing and glamourizing the erstwhile junk dealer, that article does a pretty good job, but I doubt that there are many grains of truth in it. Keefe may have had facile powers of imitation, but his slowness to understand instructions cut short his career as an imitator of "Uncle Josh." And incidentally, I don't think he made any "Casey" records. The Talking Machine News writer must have confused him with John Kaiser, who carried on Edison's "Casey" series which had been started by Russell Hunting. Kaiser was the original announcer for the Zonophone Company.

Although they do not strictly belong in this place, my Edison friend gave some other side lights on Cal Stewart's personality and working methods which perhaps I may as well quote now:

"I remember a show Cal appeared in at the Orange Opera House years ago. It was some special performance and mostly Edison artists appeared. Cal was in a skit. I don't recall the plot but it was a steamboat scene, and Cal was supposed to dive or jump over the rail—I think, to rescue someone—and land on a mattress or heavy padding, and a stage hand was to splash water to make it realistic. Well, Cal dived, but somebody had moved the mattress and instead of a splash there was a sound of BUMP! with some loud words. Cal was not badly hurt, but he was sore, bodily and mentally. The culprit was not revealed, but legend blamed Arthur Collins.

"When Cal came in to record he usually had the stories written in long hand, each enough for about 20 minutes. Cal would go over it and when he had cut it properly for a four-minute record, I would typewrite it for him. He asked me once what I thought of one of the stories and I told him it didn't sound like much. He agreed, but added that when he put his personality in the material it would sound better. IT DID.

"I believe it was in May or June the year Cal died, he was in the recording studio and was telling me of the special car he had bought. It belonged to some magician and was on a siding at Asbury Park. Cal was going to use it for traveling about on his tours, but he did not live to do it. I looked up the car when I was at Asbury, and it was a fine one. If I remember, it had a back platform with an awning."

The veteran Edisonian comments as follows on Stewart's singing ability, or—to be frank—his lack of ability to vocalize:

"Someone wrote in, saying he doubted that Cal made singing records, but Cal did make a laughing song, 'I'm Old But I'm awfully Tough,' and several rube songs. You might call it singing, but not according to operatic standards. In fact, I recall he made a record of a song about Skowhegan, Maine, and he got a letter from a record buyer. The man said he wouldn't want to

RECORDS

VICTOR RED SEAL records, 50c each. Thousands by Helfetz, Elman, Kreisler, Paderewski, Powell, Gluck, Homer, Alda, Werranath, Williams, Whitehill, Garrison, McCormack, others. Write wants or visit—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. mh3065

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. mh3004

RARE OLD RECORDS: Monthly sales list. Classical, vocal, popular, collector's items. Write:—Delano, 349 Lindenwald, Ambler, Penna. mh6445

MONTHLY AUCTION SALE: Old vocal operatic records. Free list.—Collectors' Haven, 148 Hancock St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ap3882

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 10 First Ave., New Town Square, Pennsylvania. o12741

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6084

REGULAR AUCTIONS classical vocal records. Free lists.—S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. ap3422

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rareties. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

Rare Records! Our March catalogue features Batistini, Caruso, McCormack, Slezak, Ivogun, Galvany, Kurz, Boninsegna, Zenatello, Patti, 200 others! Bargain Prices! Reserve your copy now! —2327 Arthur St., Los Angeles 65, Calif. my3027

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. my3084

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants". For information write or visit —Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., N. Y. 28, New York. n126581

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. my3252

Elizabeth Schumann Acoustics wanted. Also her Edisons. —2327 Arthur St., Los Angeles 65, Calif. mh3063

WANTED: YVETTE GUILBERT records (except domestic Columbias) —Edward Jahes, 1617 Jaynes St., Berkeley 3, California. mh1211

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (Moses). Price $3.75.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, New York. my3253

FOREIGN DELETIONS: Ansseau, Chaliapin, Cortis, Hislop, Lilli Lehmann, Gerhardt, Husch, Panzera, others, for sale.—Rosaria Parisi, 1433 South 7th St., Philadelphia 47, Penna. mh1002

WILL BUY used phonograph records, collections or dealer's stock, any amount, made before 1940, $15 to $30 per hundred.—Jacob S. Schneider, 128 W. 66th St., New York 23, New York. au68801

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR SALE: Music rolls for National Automatic Piano. Over 100 American tunes available. Send for list. Also want music rolls of all descriptions.—Russell Miller, 3274 Adriatic Ave., Long Beach 10, Calif. mh62511

EDISON CYLINDER phonographs for sale. One table model disc machine.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. mh1211

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues. —Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. mh3422

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp please. —"Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d124461

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

WANTED: Old Music Books for my personal collection. Also old Hymnals. Send description, title and publication date.—Van Sciver Miller, South Boulevard, Nyack, N. Y. ap3004

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80 direct from importer.—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York 7, New York. mh3

WANTED: Hurdy Gurdy in good working order. Describe fully, with price.—Dwight J. Wilson, 300 Bitting Building, Wichita 2, Kansas. my3023

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 103 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. my3272

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Everything. Catalog 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. je12407

FOR SALE: 1 DUBOIS & Stodart piano (spinnet) circa 1824; rosewood, curly maple,rotch mahogany. Pure ivory keyboard, iron pin block for greater strength; keymaker's name written on one key; 2 folding music racks, 1 inside of piano when opened. Price, $450. One Aster and Horwood dainty spinet piano, circa 1813. Price, $350. Both are collectors' items. More information concerning these items if so desired. Write:—Mrs. Henry Lickel, The Five Antique Shop, 347 Amsterdam Ave., New York 23, N. Y. my36501

MELODEONS, Melodeon organs. Beautiful restored instruments for sale. Will buy instruments needing repairs. Expert repairing service.—C-sharp Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich.

In addition to Music ads in this department (see page 41)

WANTED

COLUMBIA

GRAND OPERA RECORDS

By the Following Singers:

- ★ MARCELLA SEMBRICH
- ★ EDOUARD de RESZKE
- ★ SCHUMANN-HEINK
- ★ CAMPANARI
- ★ SUZANNE ADAMS
- ★ ANTONIO SCOTTI
- ★ CHARLES GILBERT

TEEN-INCH, SINGLE-FACED RECORDS WITH RED AND GOLD OR BLACK AND SILVER LABELS.

EDISON GRAND OPERA CYLINDERS:

Victor: Red Seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels. International Zonophone Company: Disco Zonophone, Disque Zonophone by great singers.

Eugenia Mantelli: Any Zonophone by this artist, especially her Carmen arias on 40075.

ALSO catalogs, supplements, pamphlets and old advertisements of records and phonographs.

STEPHEN FASSETT

318 W. 102nd St.,

New York (25) New York

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply. tfo know Cal and become a friend of his, because 'you might insist on singing at my funeral and that would be too much to suffer'."

Among Stewart's other "singing" records were "Monkey on a String," "Ticklish Reuben," "And Then I Laughed," and "I Laughed at the Wrong Time." One of his four-minute Edison cylinders combined the inevitable "I'm Old" with "Three Little Owls and the Naughty Little Mice," the only record I know in which the comedian tries to sing with the Scotch accent of his forefathers, pronouncing "barn" as "bar-run" and "warm" as "war-rum." The catchy little tune sounds as if it may be a traditional Scotch song, which Stewart learned as a tot at his Virginia farm home from his Scottish parents. The combination of Yankee dialect with a pseudo-Scotch accent is genuinely amusing.

Returning now to Stewart's career as an exclusive Columbia artist, that company's 1906 disc record catalog contains 37 of his specialties, and the cylinder catalog probably listed at least that many. One which is not well known today is "A Political Meeting at Pumpkin Center," in which "Joshua Weathersby of Pumpkin Center is presented as a candidate for the legislature. The County Band renders stirring national airs in honor of the occasion, which is also graced by the Pumpkin Center Glee Club." I regret that I am without information as to whether Uncle Josh was elected.

After a few years, the "Pumpkin Center Man" must have decided that it would be more profitable to record his specialties for all the companies than to restrict himself to Columbia. The February, 1907, Victor supplement announced that Stewart was once more a Victor artist by saying: "Everyone will be glad to know that genial Cal Stewart has returned after extensive travels that took him over a great part of this world." It looks as if the supplement writer were trying to give the impression that Stewart's absence from the Victor lists for the past several years had been caused by his being abroad rather than by his having an exclusive Columbia contract. Presumably the travels referred to are those he had taken several years before, as related in the first installment of this series.

Stewart's first records, after returning to Victor, were 4979, "Uncle Josh and the Labor Unions," and 4980, "Uncle Josh's Second Visit to the Metropolis." These were soon followed by 4999, "Ground Hog Day at Punkin Center," which was already a favorite on Columbia. Within a few months Mr and Mrs. Stewart, with the assistance of the Hayden Quartet, had made the record of "The Wedding of Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy," already mentioned, as well as a follow-up, "Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy Go to Housekeeping."

If Cal really was "mad with Edison," that feeling doesn't seem to have been shared by the editor of the company little monthly magazine,

The New Phonogram. Probably the humorist's long absence from the Edison lists had caused the impression in many places that he was dead. The issue for November, 1904, contained an inquiry from "J. B.," in remote New South Wales, as to whether Stewart was still living, and it elicited this reply: "We are glad to say that Mr. Stewart is living and, so far as we know, enjoying good health."

Whatever the comedian's former sentiments may have been, he was represented in the Edison record list for December, 1908, with two new two-minute offerings, "Uncle Josh's Arrival in New York City" and "The Last Day of School at Punkin Center," as well as a four-minute Amberol, "The County Fair at Punkin Center."

"Uncle Josh's New Year Pledge" was issued in January, 1909, and a picture of Stewart was published in that month's issue of the Phonogram. Edison's comment on the comedian's "home coming" was downright jubilant: "Now that the inimitable Cal Stewart has returned to the ranks of Edison artists there will be no let-up until every selection in his repertoire has been reproduced on Edison records . . . It is with much pleasure that we print the photograph of the genial Cal Stewart. His return to the ranks of Edison artists has been received with great delight by thousands of phonograph owners. There is but one Cal Stewart and his Uncle Josh records will probably never be any more successfully imitated than was Joseph Jefferson's 'Rip Van Winkle.' We shall continue to issue Mr. Stewart's records every month." (That remark about the possibility of imitating Stewart may have been a backhanded slap at poor Mr. Andrew Keefe!)

In May, 1909, Edison issued "Uncle Josh at the Dentist's," with Len Spencer taking the part of the tooth-drawer. A little later the pair teamed up in "Uncle Josh at Coney Island." Len also assisted Stewart in recording the dentist sketch for Columbia and appears to have done so on the Victor version, although he gets no catalog or label credit. (A flagrant example of lese majesty, indeed!) Shortly before he died, Cal remade his Columbia record, with Harry C. Browne taking the dentist role.

During this period, Stewart also was making U. S. Everlasting cylinders. The catalog of this company, founded by Albert Benzlar and other artists and officials who left Edison to start their own business, said of the comedian that "His famous 'Uncle Josh' sketches have made the whole world laugh. His best impersonations are found on U. S. records. They are without doubt among the best talking records ever put out." Among these were a coupling of "I'm Old" and "The Three Little Owls" and a monolog that no other company seems to have recorded, "Uncle Josh and the Osteopath." Mrs. Stewart, who hadn't made records for several years, joined Cal in "Uncle Josh and Nancy's Courtship."

The cheery old gentleman from Punkin Center even was represented in the barely more than mythical hill-and-dale records, played with a sapphire point, which the fledgling Sonora company advertised in 1910-11. I have never seen one of these records, and don't know anyone who has, but they were probably manufactured in minute quantities for Sonora by the Keen-o-Phone (later, Rex) Record Company of Philadelphia, with which Fred Hager was for a time associated. The trademark showed three cherubs, one playing a violin. Although the records were double-faced, each side had its separate number. No. 5003, "Uncle Josh in a Chinese Laundry," Again, on 5005, there was "Uncle Josh in a Department Store," with 5009, "Uncle Josh's Second Visit to New York." On 5010 we have "Uncle Josh at the Dentist's," by (can this be possible?) "Stewart and Alexander," doubled with 5007 "Uncle Josh and the Sailor."

It is almost unbelievable, but "Stewart and Alexander" seems to indicate that in making the Sonora record of Uncle Josh's trials with the dentist, Stewart had the assistance of the fabulous George Alexander, who is best remembered today by his recordings of patriotic songs, hymns and standard concert numbers for Columbia, although he sang a little at one time or other for Victor, Edison and Zonophone. Nowhere else have I seen any indication that Alexander ever undertook a comedy role. And until this record came to my attention I had believed, because of a statement once made to me by a Columbia official, that Alexander died some time around 1908, just before double-faced records became a permanent feature of the Columbia catalog. He remains a "mystery man"—just as it is still a mystery how Cal Stewart, born on an impoverished Virginia farm, could have been taking "pickaninny parts" on the stage in Baltimore at the age of seven!

Alexander also appears in the 1912 U. S. Everlasting catalog, so the report of his earlier death must have been "exaggerated."

In issuing "Uncle Josh at the Dentist's," the Edison company took the drastic step of rating Stewart a notch above his partner for the occasion, Len Spencer, in the making of comic records. The heretical supplement annotation—surely one of the most flagrant examples of lese majesty in the history of recorded music was:

"Another of Mr. Stewart's original Rube sketches. Mr. Stewart has no rival in records of this kind, but Mr. Spencer is a close second in making successful talking records. Together they made a great combination."

One wonders if Leonard Garfield Spencer ever read those three sentences, and, if so, what he thought and said. Since "The First Genius of the Phonograph" wasn't in the habit of considering himself second to anybody in any kind of recorded work, his remarks probably would have been more stimulating than edifying. Probably he didn't read the supplement, for he kept on making Edison records.

It's unlikely that those flattering phases had anything to do with Stewart's decision to give up free-lancing and once more become an exclusive artist—this time for Edison. In the New Phonogram for November, 1911, was listed a four-minute record of "I Laughed at the Wrong Time," and Edison patrons were given this glad news:

"From now on, Cal Stewart ('Uncle Josh Weathersby') will make records too the Edison Company exclusively. His friends, who are legion, will be glad to learn that he is to be with us regularly. This month he sings an original laughing song reminiscent of his boyhood days. His recital of the bitter experiences which resulted from his propensity to break forth into mirthful laughter at the most inopportune moments must be heard to be appreciated. His laugh, which is introduced all through the Record, is simply irresistible."

A separate note says:

"CAL STEWART NOW EXCLUSIVE. Cal Stewart, known all over the civilized world as 'Uncle Josh Weathersby', has signed a contract with the Edison Company for the exclusive use of his talents in record-making over a period of five years. His record of 'I Laughed at the Wrong Time,' . . . is the first under the new contract and will be eagerly bought by his host of friends."

The April, 1914, catalog of Edison Blue Amberol cylinders listed twelve records, with this comment:

"There is but one Uncle Josh and his fame is eternal. Cal Stewart, as the originator of this clever series of stories, has gained a world-wide reputation as a character comedian and dispenser of hearty laughs. The rustic gentleman has been found in almost every conceivable predicament, but his experiences never fail to produce some new cause for mirth. 'Uncle Josh's hearty laugh is always contagious, his characterizations flawless, and his originality limitless."

If the exclusive Edison contract actually ran for five years, it must have been signed considerably before Stewart was represented in the Victor supplement for September, 1915, with one of his most popular records, "War Talk at Punkin Center" and "Uncle Josh in a Barber Shop." Mystifying, Catalog Editor Sam Rous began with almost exactly the same statement that he had made eight years before, when the comedian's Columbia contract expired:

"Everyone will be glad to note that genial Cal Stewart has returned after extensive travels that took him over a great portion of the world. He brings back a new stock of Yankee stories, two of which are now offered—a timely talk on a subject much in the public eye, which has now all been settled by the 'arm-chair strategists' in the Punkin Center grocery; and an amusing account of Uncle Josh's experience with a talkative barber. 'Uncle Josh' is certain of a warm welcome from the great Victor family."

Perhaps Stewart had been out of the country, and had purposely signed up exclusively with Edison, knowing it would be a long time before he would again be available to make his free-lancing rounds. Yet the fact that virtually the same explanation of his previous absence was given in 1907 as in 1915 seems to indicate that "out of the country" was Victor's stock explanation for issuing no Stewart records while he was "sewed up" by another company.

I wonder if, while making his "War Talk" record, Cal thought about having made a cylinder of "Uncle Josh's Remarks on the Spanish Question," dealing with the Spanish-American War, 17 years before? Whether he did or not, "War Talk at Punkin Center," with its hilarious little song, "Gosh, I Wish I Was a Belgian!" is one of Stewart's best records.

In November, 1915, Victor issued what may have been the biggest selling Cal Stewart record. It combined "The Village Gossips," by Stewart and Byron G. Harlan (a skit which he had previously done for Edison with Steve Porter) with "Uncle Josh Buys an Automobile." My copy of this record is a 26-Q pressing, which indicates that about half a million copies had been made at the time this one was turned out.

(To Be Concluded)

Another Record by Bert Williams

Allen G. Debus, of Bloomington, Ind., calls attention to one record that was inadvertently omitted from the Bert Williams list in the November issue of HOBBIES. It is Columbia No. A303, "He's a Cousin of Mine," coupled with "McGinty at the Living Pictures," by Edward M. Favor. After being in the catalog only a little more than a year, this record was discontinued but the Williams half was reissued as one side of No. A862.

I might also point out the likelihood that some of the Columbia records made by Williams from 1915 to 1920 or a little later may have been dubbed onto the single-face, 5½ inch Little Wonder records that were sold for ten cents each. Only the first half of a standard sized record was used in making Little Wonders, but most of the popular Columbia records of their period were copied for the smaller discs. For instance, I have "Back to the Carolina You Love," sung by Al Jolson on a Little Wonder.

It should also be borne in mind that Columbias were issued under many other labels, such as United, Standard, Royal, Harmony, Aretino and Consolidated. The numbers and couplings were the same as on the regular Columbia records, but names of artists were frequently omitted and sometimes changed. For instance, Prince's Band became "Standard Band" and the Columbia (Peerless) Quartet was "Standard Male Quartet." Climax records, on which artists were seldom, if ever, identified, also were made by Columbia, but with different couplings and numbers. Thus some of Williams' records may be found on these off-brands, perhaps with his identity hidden under the generic term of "Baritone."

—J. W.

OCCUPATIONAL SHAVING MUGS

and Their Prices

By W. PORTER WARE

An authoritative treatise of valuable information for collectors and dealers in this popular subject.

A cloth-bound library book that will increase in value.

LIMITED EDITION

Illustrated profusely with the different groups, including fakes.

You can save the cost of the book in one purchase of a mug if you know the hobby and its various phases as portrayed by the author.

Price only $1.50

Postage Prepaid.

Lightner Publishing Corp.

1006 So. Michigan Avenue,
Chicago 5, Illinois

Your Local Museum and Library are worthy of your whole-hearted support and encouragement

Check and double check and if they have not yet subscribed to HOBBIES, a gift subscription would make an ideal remembrance of the season.

Keep in mind that HOBBIES already has a large circulation among this group, so please check first.

H O B B I E S
1006 S. Michigan, Chicago

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

CAL STEWART IV

By JIM WALSH

Cal Stewart seems to have made no records during the two years, 1917-18, that the United States was directly involved in the first World War. I am not certain whether Stewart kept up his theatrical work, or whether, being of independent means, he simply "sat it out for the duration" on the farm he owned near Tipton, Indiana, but although there were no new Uncle Josh records, the old ones, as Fred Hager has pointed out, continued to entertain not only the ordinary Americans at home but the fighting men in uniforms.

While the war was going on, the phonograph companies were handicapped, as they were in World War Two, by a shortage of materials. In addition, their plants were partly converted to making war equipment. Most of the "popular" records of the time were war songs. But when something like normal conditions returned, Victor, Columbia, Edison, Pathé, Emerson and others were glad to add new Uncle Josh offerings to their catalogs, and it was not long before Stewart once more was paying his welcome visits to virtually all the recordings concerns.

Most of the companies recorded him so extensively they acquired a backlog of masters that allowed them to go on issuing new Punkin Center records for several years after his death.

In October, 1919, Victor announced one of its best known Uncle Josh discs: No. 18595, "Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy Put Up the Kitchen Stove," by Stewart and Ada Jones, and "Train Time at Pun'kin Centre," by Cal and the American Quartet. (Both the needless apostrophe and "Centre" were Victor's own system of punctuation and spelling!) Here is the supplement description by Victor's catalog editor of that period, James Edward Richardson, who was widely recognized before his death in 1928 as one of the most graceful and entertaining writers of his era.

"Everybody by this time knows the Pun'kin Centre folks. The whole population turns out to see that the train gets in and out of town; it is left wondering at the occupation of the chiropractor who gets off to stretch his legs and to bandy words with the town wit. After the train whistle dies out, hear Aunt Nancy sing. She is carolling away cheerfully of Jordan's strand, when Uncle Josh decides to go fishing. He is induced to put up the kitchen stove—which operation calls for three hands on the part of Aunt Nancy—one to steady the ladder, one to hold the stove-pipe and a third to hand up the hammer. She, Uncle Josh and the stove pipe descend together."

Both these numbers were extensively recorded by other companies, although Columbia apparently didn't make "Train Time" and its version of the kitchen stove catastrophe wasn't placed on sale until December, 1920 . . . almost a year after Stewart's death. A 1920 Edison release combined "Train Time" with "A Darcy's Oration on Women," a blackface sketch by Billy Golden and James Marlowe. (The second side was an old one, for Marlowe had died in January, 1917.) The "Kitchen Stove" teamed up with the mirth-provoking "Uncle Josh and the Honey Bees." Here is the Edison description of "Train Time," obviously written after Stewart's death:

"Cal Stewart wore the mantle of Denman Thompson as a master of rural characterization. In 'Train Time' at Punkin Center, he gave us another prize of 'hayseed humor.' The scene is the railroad station, where all the town gathers to see what is going on and hear the news. Uncle Josh, played by Cal Stewart, is the leading citizen of Punkin Center, and his wit keeps the villagers (and us) in a state of hilarity. Steve Porter plays the part of Jim Lawson, Josh's particular friend. Billy Murray is Ezra Hoskins and Edward Meeker is the tourist who wants to know ins and outs. The Premier Quartet furnishes the harmony." (The Premier Quartet, of course, was the same group that sang for Victor as the American Quartet. When it assisted Stewart on his Pathé record of "Train Time," it was called the Premier-American Quartet.

In the guise of Uncle Josh, Stewart wrote the following remarks to go with his disc of "Kitchen Stove" and "Honey Bees."

"When I told you folks about me and Nancy puttin' up the kitchen stove, I didn't suppose you folks was goin' to play it on your Re-Creation machine and let the hull world know about it. But Nancy says she is right glad of it, 'cause now everyone will know just what a shiftless, no 'count old critter I am. I told Nancy it wa'n't nothin' to be ashamed of, givin' people a good, hearty laff, and that was why I told you folks the story in the first place, and that I'd sooner tell Peter on the last Day about the laffs I had given folks on Earth than try to explain to him about givin' them heart akes. Yoors Trooly, (Signed) Cal Stewart."

As for the honey bees:

"Now, folks, the moral of this story is, in all bizness transactions with bees and mules—conduct them at the head end. Deacon Witherspoon says when you lose a bee's confidence, he won't ever trust you again. I lost my bees' confidence. I tried crossin' my bees like Jim Lawson said he did his'n. And it worked first rate. They was the crossiest bees I ever seen the last time I seen them—just afore I jumped into the river. I haint seen them since. Gosh, they won't let me git close enuff to see them. I've talked kindly to them, I've carried honeysuckle to them and tried to give them sweetened water but they won't have a darn thing to do with me. Say, folks, I'm a-wondering if they ain't Bull-sheviki bees. Yoors trooly, (signed) Cal Stewart."

Billy Murray told me some years ago of a pathetic incident associated with "Train Time at Punkin Center." Billy said that Stewart and the quartet were recording the sketch for one of the companies . . . he thought it was Victor, but wasn't sure . . . when he saw that Cal looked ill. He nudged the quartet basso, Donald Chalmers, as a signal to watch Cal, and they were on the alert when "the old man," as Billy referred to him, lost his balance and lurched forward. Murray and Chambers caught him just in time to keep him from toppling against the recording horn. They learned later that Stewart had suffered a light stroke of paralysis. But, after lying down for a while, he returned to the studio, and a successful record was made. This was the foreshadowing of the illness that took his life a few months later.

Seeking more details concerning this incident, Stanley Johnston, of Lansing, Michigan, my fellow research worker in preparing this series, wrote to John Young, who, except for Billy Murray, is the only surviving member of the 1919 American Quartet, and asked what he remembered about the happening. Mr. Young replied that he couldn't ever recall having ever made records with Stewart . . . that, in fact, he couldn't even remember having heard the comedian's name.

I imagine the solution is this: Young was no comedian, so his place in the quartet was taken for the Uncle Josh series by somebody accustomed to humorous roles. Edward Meeker was the traveling chiropractor in the Edison record, and the character sounds almost precisely the same in the Victor. "Meek," as an Edison staff employee, was supposed to work for only that company, but since he was not identified on the label, he may have been allowed to help make the sketch for other companies.

Just a few days before Stewart's death, and while he was lying hopelessly ill in a hospital, Columbia issued its re-made versions, mentioned in an earlier installment, of "Christmas Time" and "Evening Time at Punkin Center," by Stewart, Ada Jones and the Peerless Quartet. Then, on December 7th, the well-loved originator of Uncle Josh and the other Punkin Center characters, died after an illness of several weeks. Probably only a few of his friends knew he was ill, so the shock and sadness of his going must have been great.

The theatrical department of the New York Public Library has only meager information in its files concerning Stewart, but was kind enough to copy for me a brief obituary notice which appeared in the January 9, 1920, issue of Variety. The notice said that Stewart died on December 7, 1919, in the County Hospital, and that when he died he had been connected with the stage about 40 years, first playing pickaninny parts at the old Ford Theater at the age of 15. It also said that for many years he ran an engine on the Wabash Road, being known as the youngest engineer in the West, and known as "Darl Devil Cal" among his associates.

Here we run into more discrepancies. Variety has Stewart taking pickaninny parts at the old Ford Theatre (presumably the one in Washington, where Abraham Lincoln was shot) at the age of fifteen, instead of the Front Street Theater in Baltimore when he was seven. And considering all the varied activities he crowded into his 63 years, he could not, as "Dare Devil Cal," have run an engine "for many years" on the Wabash railroad.

This Variety "obit" not only baffled me but set me off on more than one wrong trail. I assumed that the County Hospital must be in, or near, New York City. Otherwise Variety would have said WHAT county. So I wrote to the New York Times and asked for a copy of Stewart's death notice, but was told that the paper hadn't published one. I paid to have the records of the City of New York Department checked for the humorist's death certificate, only to be notified that there was nothing in the files concerning him.

Finally, I mentioned my perplexity in a letter to Fred Hager, whose address I obtained from Mrs. Byron G. Harlan, and who, as you will remember, was Stewart's partner in a music publishing venture and today owns the performing rights to all the "Uncle Josh" material. Mr. Hager has high hopes that, with rural themes returning to favor, the Punkin Center folks will yet entertain large numbers of movie and television watchers. He helped me wonderfully when he revealed that Stewart died in Chicago. He was unable, however, to give me Stewart's birth date or reveal just where in Virginia the comedian was born. The genial Mr. Hager wrote:

"I have been trying for over a year to get the age of Cal from the executor of his estate, but up to date have not been able to get any response on this. His wife, Rossini W. Stewart, . . . passed away in New York City, November 25, 1943.

"I understand that Cal was on his way from Montana to his home, Dipton, Indiana, where he is buried. He was taken sick on the train and was moved to Cook County Hospital, Chicago, where he passed away. He had no living relatives except his wife. His mother, father and only sister had died before him."

It now became evident that Variety had either omitted "Cook" from the name of the hospital, through a typographical error, or that the New York Public Library had done so in copying the death notice. I thought that I was at last on my way to ascertain the hitherto elusive facts. My hopes were high when I wrote to the Cook County Hospital, but those hopes fell when I received this letter, dated November 15, 1949, from Miss Stella Ford Walker, of the hospital's medical record library:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: With reference to your letter of November 8th, I wish to inform you that all of our records before the year 1925 have been destroyed by fire; therefore, our information on Calvin Stewart is very limited. Mr. Stewart was admitted to Cook County Hospital on November 6, 1919, and died here on December 7, 1919. He was 63 years of age. The address given was Briggs House, Chicago, and occupation was listed as 'performer.' He was transferred here from the American Hospital, Chicago, Illinois."

I then wrote to the American Hospital, with the result that I received some charmingly friendly and painstaking letters from the Records Librarian, Miss Alberta Cannon. On November 22, Miss Cannon wrote:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: I am terribly sorry

RECORDS

WILL PAY TOP CASH for old record players with horns. Also want cylinder records.—C. A. Duncan, 347 E. Redondo Beach Blvd., Gardena, Calif. ap3483

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. je3004

RECORD COLLECTIONS bought, any amount, any type. Write or call.—Howard Goldberg, 112 Tudor Place, Bronx 52, New York. ap1441

MONTHLY AUCTION SALE: Old vocal operatic records. Free list.—Collectors' Haven, 148 Hancock St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ap3882

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 1st First Ave., New Town Square, Pennsylvania. ol22741

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6476

REGULAR AUCTIONS classical vocal records. Free lists.—S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. ap3422

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types.—Lowly priced.—Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan, Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. ol26121

Rare Records! Our March catalogue features Batistini, Caruso, McCormack, Slezak, Ivogun, Galvany, Kurz, Boninsegna, Zenatello, Patti, 200 others! Bargain Prices! Reserve your copy now! — 2327 Arthur St., Los Angeles 65, Calif. my3027

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. my3084

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants." For information write or visit —Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., N. Y. 28, New York. n126581

OLD COLUMBIA phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. my3252

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (Moses). Price $3.75.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, New York. my3253

WILL BUY used phonograph records, collections or dealer's stock, any amount, made before 1940, $15 to $30 per hundred.—Jacob S. Schneider, 128 W. 66th St., New York 23, New York. au68301

Record treasures of the World's great artists. Original G&Ts, Fonotipias, Zonophones, etc., Akte, Bellinioni, Boninsegna, Caruso, Carelli, De Lucia, Escalais, Fabbri, Giraltoni, Kurz, Litvinne, Pinto, Plancon, Figner, and other unique records of the greatest rarity. Send for auction lists, special lists. All correspondence confidential.—Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. je34431

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d124461

ENGLISH AND EUROPEAN records and books on music, etc. Current and cut-out collector's rarities. Lists free. Inquiries welcomed. — Renton, Maldon Road, Tiptree, Colchester, Essex, England. je3004

RECORDS: Collector's items, opera, vocal, classical, semi-classical, piano, violin, orchestra. A photographic reproduction of a famous singer, complimentary, with each list. — Toby's Record Outlet, 2426 Jackson Ave., Kansas City, Missouri. ap1462

MISCELLANEOUS

WANT TO BUY: Old hilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

WANTED: Old Music Books for my personal collection. Also old Hymnals. Send description, title and publication date.—Van Sciver Miller, South Boulevard, Nyack, N. Y. ap3004

WANTED: Hurdy Gurdy in good working order. Describe fully, with price. — Dwight J. Wilson, 300 Bitting Building, Wichita 2, Kansas. my3023

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. my3272

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Everything. Catalog 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 6, Colorado. je12407

FOR SALE: 1 DUBOIS & Stodart piano (spinnet) circa 1824; rosewood, curly maple, crotch mahogany. Pure ivory keyboard, iron pin block for greater strength; keymaker's name written on one key; 2 folding music racks, 1 inside of piano when opened. Price, $460. One Aster and Horwood dainty spinet piano, circa 1813. Price, $350. Both are collectors' items. More information concerning these items if so desired. Write:—Mrs. Henry Lickel, The Five Antique Shop, 347 Amsterdam Ave., New York 23, N. Y. my36501

MEL DEONS, Melodeon organs. Beautiful restored instruments for sale. Will buy instruments needing repairs. Expert repairing service.—C-sharp Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Violins, Antonious, Stradivarius, Cremonensis, Faciosi Anno 17, Hopf, good condition, highest offer, write —Mrs. Victor Elchert, 385 Circular, Tiffin, Ohio. ap3084

FOR SALE: Concert zither, Bavarian, 18th century. Pearl and silver inlay. Leather carrying case with legs & music rack which folds into case like suitcase. $25, plus crating and transportation.—Carolyn M. Ramis, 175 Woodside Rd., Riverside, Ill. ap1842

FOR SALE: Complete vocal scores, DeKoven's "Robin Hood", "Foxy Quiller", Herbert's "The Serenade", $5 ea. Write for list, best sellers (fiction) of 50 years ago.—Clarence H. Knapp, 376 Broadway, Saratoga Springs, N. Y. ap1842

FOR SALE: Collection of sheet music, 101 copies, some very rare; numbers from 1837 to 1918. Strong in Jenny Lind. Make offer. All in good condition.—Thos. Burnett, 621 N. Ninth St., Camden 2, N. J. ap1272

EDISON & COLUMBIA cylinder phonographs. Victor disc with morning glory horn. All in good condition.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. ap1251

WANTED TO BUY: A small Mathushek piano.—Everett Sulzberger, Ottawa, Ill. je3002

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues. — Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. s6844

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

to disappoint you in reference to the place of birth or any of the living relatives of Calvin Stewart. Mr. Stewart entered the American Hospital on October the 14th, 1921, and was discharged to the County Hospital November 4, 1921. He came to the hospital suffering from an incurable brain disease, and was operated on by Dr. Max Thorek to alleviate his suffering, but this was only temporarily successful. Mr. Stewart lived at that time in New York City. No doubt he was here only on business when he was stricken. The hospital records give his complete address as Cal Stewart, Briggs House, 79 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York. There is nothing to indicate whether or not he has any relatives or where he was born. This, I feel sure, was because he was very critically ill and for the most part delirious.

"Dr. Max Thorek, who founded this hospital, first named it the Actor's Hospital. He is still the Surgeon in Chief and it is very easy to understand why Calvin Edward Stewart would be one of his patients. 'A Surgeon's World,' written by Dr. Thorek, gives many amusing and tragic incidents of the lives of some of our older artists of the legitimate stage. These incidents deal mostly on their hospitalization here. I searched this book for mention of Calvin Stewart but was unable to find his name. So, I repeat, I am truly sorry that I have nothing more to offer."

A day or so later I had another letter from Miss Cannon, correcting the statement that Stewart was admitted to the hospital and died there in 1921 . . . instead of 1919, the correct year. And here I should point out that the hospital records from which she quoted are confused. They give his New York address as the Briggs Hotel, 79 Fifth Avenue. Actually, the Briggs Hotel was the place at which his wife stayed in Chicago during Stewart's fatal illness, and 79 Fifth Avenue was the address of the Edison Company's New York recording studios. That looks as if Cal had not only long since overcome his ancient grudge against Edison but was using its New York headquarters for his business address while he traveled.

A gratifying upshot of my friendly correspondence with Miss Cannon was her having Dr. Thorek send me an autographed copy of his fascinating book of reminiscences. The distinguished surgeon has an engaging and entertaining style all his own, as well as one of the most distinctive handwritings I have ever been privileged to see.

Meanwhile, Fred Hager has recalled that two members of Mrs. Stewart's family are still living . . . her sister, Marjorie, and her younger brother, James W. Waugh, who used to travel with the "Uncle Josh" troupe. Mr. Hager suggested that I write to Waugh at Tipton. He said that Cal and the younger man had roomed together on their tours and that Stewart might have mentioned to his brother-in-law just when and where he was born. So I wrote, but the Tipton post office returned the letter with a notation that Mr. Waugh had moved without leaving a forwarding address.

About this time I received a copy of Stewart's death certificate from the Cook County Bureau of Vital Statistics. My hopes took another tumble when I read the photostat. It said Stewart was survived by his wife, Rossini Stewart; that the date of his birth was unknown but he was 68 and an actor; that he was born in Virginia, but without locality being specified; that his parents were William and Helen Douglas Stewart, natives of Scotland; and Mr. Stewart's address was given as the Briggs House, at Randolph and Wells Street. The cause of death was recorded as a brain tumor, which had been detected through an ophthalmic examination. The name of the undertaker was J. W. Bradley, and the date of burial, December 8. The certificate was signed by Dr. P. W. Whiteley, of the Cook County Hospital Staff.

At this point I virtually gave up. Obviously, if Mrs. Stewart hadn't known her husband's exact birth date and place of birth, there was no need of seeking further to question her brother.

But there was one possibility left. Although Virginia's birth records for the years before the Civil War are meager, there was a faint chance that the Virginia State Department of Health might find something in its files concerning Stewart. So I wrote to the State Registrar, Miss Estelle Marks. On February 10, 1950, she replied:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: We have your letter of January 30th in reference to the marriage record and birth record of Calvin Edward Stewart. Our records have been carefully checked and rechecked for the years 1853 through 1869, but we find no record for this birth. We are sorry we cannot help you locate the birth record."

At that point, I decided that further effort was useless . . . until, as I related in the first installment, I talked with the man who said that he had been told that Stewart was born in, or near, Charlotte Court House, Virginia. But that "lead" also got me nowhere. Today, there seems little reason to believe that we shall ever know the exact date and place of Cal Stewart's birth.

In the early months of 1950, my voluntary research assistant, Stanley Johnston, sought new light on Stewart through a variety of approaches. He went to the Michigan State Library in Lansing and searched the December, 1919 files of the Chicago Tribune, but the self-styled "World's Greatest Newspaper" appears to have paid no attention to the comedian's passing.

Mr. Johnston wrote to the American Actors' Equity Guild, but was told that Stewart never was an equity member. A letter to the Congressional Library brought a reply that the library had no information on the creator of Uncle Josh. My Michigan friend told me something I hadn't previously known—that the Walter H. Baker Company of Boston, published a book of Punkin Center stories, containing different material than the one from which I have quoted. The book includes a play called "Fiddled Out of House and Home," apparently written just after the end of fighting in World War One. Its leading woman plays a violin, and Uncle Josh is the postmaster. In sorting letters, he finds one from a soldier who has been in a hospital "ever since the war." And Josh remarks: "Any mail cummin' from our boys is going to be special delivery in this post office. We're not goin' to forget 'em and what they done for us, if your uncle has his way." This seems to indicate that Stewart and his troupe may have done theatrical performances with a topical flavor both during and after the war. Mr. Johnston wrote to the Baker Company, but it replied that it had no personal knowledge of Stewart. A letter to George C. D. O'Dell, author and compiler of "Annals of the New York Stage," arrived, ironically, the day after Mr. O'Dell's death.

At the State Library, Johnston examined encyclopedias, sets of biographical information and books dealing with the stage and music, but without finding a mention of Stewart. A letter to a collector of old show bills brought no results. Mr. Johnston had hoped that F. J. Williams, who operated a theater in Lansing in the 1890's, might have first-hand knowledge of Stewart, but the result again was failure. The Michiganian wrote to Dr. N. Bryllion Fagin, director of the Playshop at Baltimore's John Hopkins University, asking for information on "The Hidden Hand," but Dr. Fagin replied: "From the enclosed clipping you will know that I have not been able to give you the information you need. I gave your letter to the drama critic of the Baltimore Sun, but he wasn't anymore successful than I. Finally, he printed your request in his Sunday column. So far, no answer. Sorry."

I admit to feeling depressed, knowing that in spite of the best efforts of Stanley Johnston and myself, the gaps in jovial Cal Stewart's life story probably will remain unbridged . . . and even more saddened at the thought of the fun-maker, whose mission was to give his fellow humans "laffs instead of heart akes," spending his last weeks in the throes of an agonizing, incurable brain malady.

That said, about all that remains to be done before bringing the story of Cal Stewart's life to its close is to mention the Uncle Josh records that were issued after his death.

Columbia appears to have had a larger reserve of posthumously issued "Josh" recordings than any other company . . . nearly all, reissues of sketches that had already appeared in the Columbia catalog. In February, 1920, were announced re-makes of two old favorites: "Uncle Josh and the Fire Department," by Stewart alone, and "The Courtship of Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy," with Ada Jones.

The April Columbia supplement included a picture of the portly comedian making a record, and reissues of "Uncle Josh in a Cafeteria" and "Uncle Josh and the Sailor." The annotator said:

"Nothing 'Uncle Josh' ever says is anything but funny. Cal Stewart was a man who could not only create the natural, spontaneous humor of his own sketches, but could 'give' them as no other character actor on any stage. It is the clean, natural fun of all the Uncle Josh records that make them so widely enjoyed."

In July came re-makes of "Ticklish

Reuben" and "I Laughed at the Wrong Time," and in December were announced "Uncle Josh at the Dentist's," in a new version by Stewart and Harry C. Browne, and the classic "Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy Put Up the Kitchen Stove," with Ada Jones.

In April, 1922, "Josh's" fans were given new versions of "The Opera at Pumpkin Center" and "Uncle Josh Buys an Automobile," said the catalog editor, who probably was George Clarence Jell:

"Uncle Josh" is a character dearly loved by all phonograph owners. The comedy of Cal Stewart in his role of the bluff, hearty country squire, with his laughter-provoking stories, has always been clean and wholesome. Mr. Stewart has passed on. His records remain as a fitting memorial to continue his work of spreading the gospel of sunshine and good cheer."

September brought new records of "A Camp Meeting at Pumpkin Center" and "Last Day of School at Pumpkin Center," with this comment:

"Everyone knows 'Uncle Josh,' the lovable rural character created by Cal Stewart. Everyone has laughed times without number when he has pictured the difficulties attached to putting up the kitchen stove or trying to run his new automobile. His home is in Pumpkin Center, but his humorous shots and his hearty laughter are heard 'round the world."

Stewart's Columbia series ended in February, 1924, with new versions of "Ground Hog Day at Pumpkin Center," which the comedian had first made for Columbia in 1903, and "Uncle Josh at the Circus." The supplement remarked:

"Laugh and the world laughs with you" is the key to Cal Stewart's grip on the hearts of fun lovers the world over. . . . worries in a good, old-fashioned chortle."

Victor issued only two double-faced "Josh" records after Stewart's death. The supplement for February, 1921, showed a photograph of Cal, perhaps made after his paralytic stroke, for he looks elderly and carries a cane. The titles were "Uncle Josh in a Cafeteria" and "Uncle Josh and the Honey Bees." Editor James Richardson penned a bit of discerning character analysis when he said:

"Even to the last, the late Cal Stewart could laugh with his audiences. And in every laugh there was an immense charity for the foibles and the weaknesses of humanity. If there was one thing more than another, though, which ought to entitle 'Uncle Josh,' as a character, to a high place among surviving mortals, it was his power to laugh at himself. It takes a pretty big man to do that. As a rule, the joke has to be on the other fellow."

In the October issue (which devoted a two-page spread to announcing the death of Enrico Caruso), appeared a record Stewart obviously wasn't asked to make for any other company, "Uncle Josh Buys a Victrola," coupled with "Opera at Pumpkin Centre." Mr. Richardson wrote:

"Uncle Josh, with excellent good sense, buys a 'Victrola-Victrol,' and the first side of the record recites its adventures at Pumpkin Centre. Neighbors crowd in, hear themselves and wonder—all except Cynthia Lawson, who gets madder than a wet hen. Tears and laughter are mingled in the record, as they are mingled about its history, for of the jovial old comedian, now passed into the Great Beyond, there remains nothing but a voice and a memory."

Edison also had a reserve of Uncle Josh records, issued between 1919 and 1925. Those not already mentioned, in the order of their appearance, were 50581, "Opera at Punkin Center" and "Uncle Josh in a Cafeteria"; 50689 "Ragtime at Punkin Center" and "Uncle Josh's Birthday"; 50719, "Uncle Josh and the Soldier," doubled with "Dinnie Donohue on Prohibition," by William Cahill; 50844, "Uncle Josh at the Chautauqua," with "The Laughing Girl Has Her Picture Took," by Ethel C. Olson; 50876, "Uncle Josh Takes the Census," with a comic Irish song, "Clancy's Wooden Wedding," by Edward Meeker; 50896, "County Fair at Punkin Center," with "The Life Insurance Policy," by Billy Golden and Joe Hughes; 50942, "Uncle Josh and the Sailor" and "The Larson Kids Go Bathing," another by Miss Olson, a talented singer who also told laughing stories in a Norwegian accent. Finally came 51448, "Moving Day at Punkin Center," with "Sister Sorrowful Entertains the Minister," an amusing monolog by another successful impersonator of "Down East" characters, Charles Ross Taggart. The coupling of "Uncle Josh's Birthday" and "Ragtime at Punkin Center" shows that Uncle Josh's village was becoming more modern. Besides doing the old square dances, the younger generation "walked the dog" and "balled the jack." And the hamlet was so ragtime crazy that when Jim Lawson, who was a skilled pianist as well as a choir singer, played a wedding march he beat it out in ragtime. The school children even marched to and from classes to a tune called "The Education Rag."

The last six Uncle Josh records issued by Edison give a convincing picture of Stewart's enduring popularity after his death. All after 50689 contain one side by Stewart and another by other artists—an obvious effort to stretch the supply of "Josh" records as far as possible. The company must have believed that any record would sell backed with something by Cal Stewart.

Further evidence of Stewart's continuing appeal was contained in an attractive booklet, "Edison Records of Music That Lives," issued around 1924 or 1925. It contained a description of the 300 most popular Edison Diamond Discs. Nine of Stewart's specialties were included among the best selling titles—"Uncle Josh Takes the Census"; "Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy Put Up the Kitchen Stove" and "Uncle Josh and the Honey Bees" (doubled on one record); "Uncle Josh in a Barber Shop" and "Uncle Josh Buys an Automobile" (doubled); and "The Village Gossips," by Stewart and Porter, and "Fourth of July at Punkin Center"—also on one record. It seems the Edison patrons preferred double helpings when it came to Uncle Josh!

Emerson also listed some posthumous Stewart records. And not only that, but one list makes the astonishing statement that both sides of Emerson record No. 10291, combining "Uncle Josh's Birthday" and "The Mocking Bird—Whistling Specialty" were made by—Billy Golden! I have never seen or heard this record, but I think something is wrong here. It is even harder to imagine Billy Golden, who always did blackface comedy, trying to imitate the nasal Yankee tones of Uncle Josh than it is to depict George Alexander helping out in the ubiquitous "Uncle Josh at the Dentist's." I imagine the first side was by Stewart, with Golden following in his famous whistling performance, and that Cal's name was left out of the listing by mistake.

In 1922, the late Byron G. Harlan, best known as the singing partner of Arthur Collins, began to make Uncle Josh records for some of the companies whose catalogs did not contain Stewart's offerings. Brunswick was just preparing to go into the record business when Stewart became ill, so he didn't record for it. Harlan made at least two double-faced Uncle Josh records for Brunswick: "Uncle Josh at the Circus" and "Uncle Josh Buys an Automobile," for one, and another combining a new monolog, probably written by Fred Hager, "Uncle Josh on the Aeroplane," and "Uncle Josh Playing Golf." Harlan, like Stewart, was a business associate of Hager's, and the latter recalls:

"Byron Harlan was a great character. I have some very good records of him on Columbia. Victor, Okeh and others that he made of my novelty songs and skits and some good publicity that I had Andy White write on Byron's work he made a record of 'Uncle Josh on the Radio' for me, as well as a few other Uncle Josh records."

Mr. Hager was at that time a recording expert for Okeh, and some of the Harlan records of Uncle Josh material were issued by that company. One was "Uncle Josh at the Dentist's" (again!) in which Harlan had the assistance of Ernest Hare—probably the only time they ever worked together.

Byron Harlan was a great comedian, but he was not a successful impersonator of Uncle Josh. He made no effort to sound like Cal Stewart, but used the high-pitched falsetto tones and cackling laugh that had served him in making one or two Edison cylinders under the assumed name of "Cyrus Pippin." Through his voice, Uncle Josh took on a half-witted air, and there was nothing of the warmth and geniality that made lovable the great original.

A record that puzzles me is "Uncle

Josh and Aunt Nancy Put Up the Kitchen Stove" and "Uncle Josh at the Cafeteria," issued on the Super-Tone brand sold in the 1920's by Sears, Roebuck and probably made by Gennett. Names of the artists on the first side are given as "Holland and Wolf," while the second is by "Byron Holland." "Holland," of course, is a transparent disguise for Harlan. The voice is unmistakably his. But I can't identify "Wolf," the woman who takes the part of Aunt Nancy. Ada Jones died before this record was made, and the voice isn't at all like hers. In fact, it doesn't sound like that of any other feminine recording artist with whose work I am familiar.

Another puzzler is "Duncan Jones," who made several Josh monologs on the cheap Grey Gull and Radiex records. I have the Dentist (!) skit by "Jones" and an unidentified man with a deeper voice. If this record actually is by someone impersonating Stewart, the resemblance to the Old Master's tones and inflections is uncanny. (surely Andrew Keefe could not have been resurrected and called back into action under another name!) I wonder if "Duncan Jones" could have been Billy Jones, doing an amazingly successful impersonation, with his partner, Ernest Hare, helping out. I doubt it. Or had Grey Gull obtained some genuine Cal Stewart masters from a bankrupt record company or through some other source, and issued them under a false name? I doubt that we shall ever know the answer to this mystery, either. I do know that the voice of Duncan Jones sounds exactly like that of the authentic Uncle Josh.

And I know, too—or at least I am reasonably sure—that as long as human nature remains unchanged, the amusing aspect of life in Punkin Center, "corny" and dated as it may seem to sophisticates, will have a certain charm for anyone willing to listen carefully to Cal Stewart's records and give them a fair trial. I have no doubt that this appeal would be equally strong in the films, on radio and in television. A public that grows increasingly fond of "hill-billy" music and square dancing would hardly be immune to the appeal of Stewart's homey comedy. Fred Hager may yet discover that in the Punkin Center material he owns a gold mine.

Cal Stewart did vast good, both during his lifetime and after it, and, in his individual way, he was a great artist. And now that we have come to the end of his life story, I feel that we cannot bid farewell to our old friend more appropriately than by quoting this paraphrase of Oliver Wendell Holmes' poem, "The Boys," which appeared in the Columbia record list for September, 1922:

"You hear old Josh laughing— you think he's all fun;
But the angels laugh, too, at the good he has done;
The children laugh loud as they troop to his call,
And the poor man that knows him laughs loudest of all."

Deaths of Marguerite Farrell and Eddie Morton "The Singing Policeman"

I had been hoping to get in touch with the charming comedienne, Marguerite E. Farrell, and invite her to attend next September's John Bieling Day party, but was unable to learn where she was living. Consequently, it was a shock when I discovered that the singer died January 26 in Buffalo, New York.

Miss Farrell, who was 62. in private life was Mrs. Marguerite Wheeler. She was a woman of culture as well as an accomplished singer and dancer. As a very young performer she appeared in "The Rogers Brothers in Ireland" and in vaudeville with the "Four College Girls" act. After singing in 29 operas produced by Oscar Hammerstein in one season, she decided that she preferred musical comedy and sang in "Miss Princess," "American Maid" and "Step This Way." Later, she was a vaudeville partner of Clara Inge. Miss Farrell retired after marrying, but went to work for the Erie County Social Welfare Bureau in Buffalo after the death of her husband four years ago. Her last musical comedy appearance was in "Up She Goes," produced in the 1920's. She had also acted in Shakespearean productions.

Marguerite Farrell made a large number of Victor and Columbia records in 1916 and 1917, of which "If I Knock the L Out of Kelly," "Come On Baby Me" and "Naughty, Naughty, Naughty" were especially popular. In 1921-22 she recorded for Edison, and made some remarkably clever comedy records, including "I Certainly Must Be In Love," "To the Strains of That Wedding March," and "I've Got the Traveling Choo-Choo Blues." She is survived by a daughter and a sister, Mrs. Marie Farrell Schmidt.

I am now able to reveal that the mystery of what had become of Eddie Morton, "The Singing Policeman," who was a popular recording artist from 1907 through 1915, is a mystery no longer. It is with sadness that I report I have learned that Morton, to my perception one of the finest comedians who ever made records, died in his home city of Philadelphia on April 11, 1938. Details of his later days are obscure, but I hope to get enough information to write a biographical sketch about him for HOBBIES at some future date.

—J. W.

Refinishing Music Boxes

By MARGUERITE FABEL

The first consideration in refinishing a music box cabinet is, how much needs to be done? Oftentimes the case is in fair condition, but the lid isn't, so you can just refinish the lid, in such cases. You will find refinishing much easier if you take the cabinet apart, remove hinges, locks and handles, and, of course, the musical unit.

In refinishing it is important to have a clean surface, some cases are veneered and have inlays, others are just a "grained" case. The veneered are the nicest to do, the graining is rather difficult; for these I developed a method that I prefer and will explain it later.

The first step in refinishing is to take off the old finish, and to do this use paint and varnish remover; the paste form is better, in case you only want to do a certain surface, the paste form stays where you put it, the liquid runs where it shouldn't. Apply remover according to directions, or if you prefer, you can use a scraper and scrape off the finish. After finish is removed, wipe with turpentine to kill action of remover, and sand lightly.

Now, if any inlay or veneer is missing, fit this in. This type of material can be obtained from: Albert Constantine & Son, Inc., 797 E. 135th St., New York, 54, N. Y.; they have a catalogue which lists all types of wood and inlays, the price of the catalogue is 25c, and it contains many helpful hints.

The missing inlay or veneer can be glued to the cabinet with a good grade of glue, duco cement or weldwood glue, and clamps applied to the piece until it is set; overnight is long enough. I usually make a paper pattern if the part is intricate, and soften the wood in water before attempting to cut it out—use a sharp knife for cutting out inlay. If you don't want to fit in wood, you can put in plastic wood, and color it with oil colors; this works very well, but does not sand down as nicely as the wood. In replacing brass inlay, you can buy strip brass from most any large wholesale hardware, the thickness varies, but .025 is a good average thickness. Cut the brass into strips, or if a design, saw out with a jeweler's saw, and finish off with small Swiss Pattern Files. I usually make a paper pattern for the brass inlays. Cement the brass in place with duco cement, and clamp overnight.

When the repair work is completed, sand surface, then soak the surface with boiled linseed oil and turpentine; apply this with a rag or brush; until the wood will not absorb any more of the mixture. No special proportion is required, but half and half is good, the turpentine drives the oil into the wood. This mixture will bring the color back into the wood; we had one box that was a light tan, and we thought it was rosewood—after I applied the linseed oil, it

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

FRANK COOMBS AND WILLIAM H. THOMPSON

By JIM WALSH

A few months before my first HOBBIES article appeared in January, 1942, I received a letter from Keith Moyer, a well-known record collector of Everett, Washington. Mr. Moyer wrote that he had become acquainted with Frank Coombs, an accomplished countertenor who was a popular recording artist for several years, beginning in 1910. He gave me considerable information about the then elderly singer who had become known to Pacific Coast radio audiences as "Uncle Frank."

I replied, telling Mr. Moyer that Coombs had been one of my favorite singers during my childhood, and recalling that when my brother Chad—now Dr. Chad Walsh, associate professor of English at Beloit College, Beloit, Wisconsin—was four or five years of age he had an invariable bedtime ritual. After he was tucked in, he would insist on my playing half a dozen record sides for him. A Victor record combined "Wanted—A Harp Like the Angels Play," by Henry Burr, with "It's Time to Close Your Drowsy Eyes and Sleep," by Walter Van Brunt and John Bieling. The remaining favorites were four Coombs solos on double-faced Uniteds, made by Columbia: "Hard Times, Come Again No More" and "Chiming Bells of Long Ago" on one, and "I Used to Believe in Fairies" and "The Cottage By the Sea" on the other. Hearing these, my younger brother would go contentedly to sleep.

After receiving my letter, Mr. Moyer paid a second visit to Coombs, but was obliged to write me the sad news that the tenor died only three days after this meeting. He also sent me newspaper clippings giving some of the facts of Coombs' life, but omitting any reference to his having been a popular recording artist. Having this material available, ever since my HOBBIES series began I have intended doing an article about Coombs, but have postponed it because, in spite of his merits as a singer, there were many other performers whose careers on discs and cylinders were longer and whose popularity was greater and more enduring. Now, however, since he has been dead almost ten years, I feel that the time has come to pay a tribute to "Uncle Frank," combining with it some information concerning William H. Thompson, a baritone with whom he made a fairly large number of duets. Coombs and Thompson are alike in the respect that they were accomplished artists, but are rather infrequently mentioned by collectors today. Too, I cannot recall hearing any of my recording friends speak of knowing them, although the late Albert Campbell made a number of duets with Thompson, as did the still living Will Oakland.

I quote now from Keith Moyer's letter of September 21, 1941:

"I believe you would be interested in knowing about my visit with Frank Coombs yesterday. . . . He has been on the radio in Seattle for 15 years. He is not well now and is only able to handle the 'children's hour' on Saturday afternoons. When he is not able to get there his wife substitutes. He is known to everybody as 'Uncle Frank.'"

"I happened to be driving yesterday up in the mountains and while passing around Lake Roesiger, I noticed the name 'Uncle Frank' on a sign in front of his summer home. I noticed smoke pouring from the chimney and thought I would make myself acquainted. He was standing on the porch with a cane in his hand. . . . He invited me in and I met his charming wife who was a former actress."

"Coombs was born in Bedford, Iowa, on July 26, 1871. He was not very talkative and it was only through his wife that I got any information. . . . I think he is well off, as he has his Seattle home as well as this lovely summer home."

"Mrs. Coombs told me he never studied singing, but while serving as a Seattle postman obtained a leave of absence to try out with a minstrel company in Illinois. If he failed, he could have his job back, but he stayed with the minstrels and went with other companies. She named a long list of shows he appeared in, including, I believe, 'The Only Girl,' 'Going Up,' and some very lavish productions in New York. She also told me about his engagement with Oscar Hammerstein's last season in New York. She said he sang opera-buffo roles and was the only member of the company not an opera singer."

"When she married Frank they toured together in Keith-Orpheum vaudeville from coast to coast. She did not sing, as they put on some sort of skit. He does not possess any of his records, and does not even have a scrapbook of his career. He still can sing a little, though he cannot reach the higher notes that he was so famous for. One of his biggest successes was his imitation of Caruso in 'Pagliacci' in one of the big shows."

"I did not get much dope on his recordings, but he said he made his first records, cylinders, around 1900 for slot machines. He said he made many records, but did not make Edisons. He toured in a show with Ernest Aldwell one season, and made duets with Aldwell for Columbia. Aldwell died in 1917, aged 27."

After receiving my letter, Mr. Moyer wrote on November 9, 1941, about his second visit to Mr and Mrs. Coombs:

"When I went to the door Mrs. Coombs . . . invited me in, and Mr. Coombs was sitting in a corner of the living room with the blinds down."

. . . I found your letter of such interest that I took the liberty to show it to him. He seemed very pleased and chuckled when he read your mention of the song, 'I Used to Believe in Fairies.' He suffered very much from his illness but never complained, and his voice had that kind, sympathetic quality that one finds in his records. He recollected about his recording experiences during his sessions with Columbia in 1911 when (Mary) Garden and (Lillian) Nordica were making records. He said he would come down to the studio from his Long Island home and Nordica would be making records. She had so much trouble recording that she would hold down the studio for days, and he would go home and come back the next day and hang around and Nordica would still be trying to make records. He said she had trouble due to her singing off-key and the fact that she used her full voice, as on the stage."

"Coombs never recorded under any other name than his own and had only one session with Victor. He said he made more than the two published records but they probably were never issued. He said he also made disc records with William Thompson, but that Thompson's baritone voice was too heavy for his light tenor. . . . He also made Emersons. I think they were seven-inch."

"He went upstairs and brought down a picture of himself in 'Hans, the Flute Player,' with the leading feminine star. . . . A photo of Coombs in this very same costume can be found in a group picture in Theater magazine on page 138, Vol XI, 1910. I asked to see a photo of Mrs. Coombs, and she brought her only picture down. . . . It was a most stunning picture of her when she was a leading actress. They said they had so many pictures taken during their careers that they were not interested enough to have any more made. They left them all back in New York. Mr. Coombs was too old and feeble to write, but I have a written note from him that I enclose for you, which is at least a memento of him."

"Now for the sad news. Frank Coombs is dead! I took your lovely letter down to him on Tuesday and on Friday he was dead. It was the strangest coincidence that he should read your letter and realize that he was not forgotten, then pass on. I first heard of his death in a broadcast news item. He was to give his 'children's program' the following Saturday and everything had been ar-

WANTED:

Old hymn books with music dated anywhere from 1760 to 1840.

State binding, condition, and date.

J. D. HARTZLER — Wellman, Iowa

Jlyc

ranged, but in its place an announcer gave a tribute to Mr. Coombs' memory. The people on KJR said they never realized in all his eleven years with them that he had such a distinguished career. He was always so modest that he never spoke of his career. He was in the original production of (Victor) Herbert's "The Only Girl."

"I went down to his funeral the Tuesday after I visited with him. A large crowd attended, but I don't think the theatrical world was represented, as it seemed to consist mostly of Spanish War veterans and many children. I sent flowers, and only wish I had come to know them much sooner than I did."

Mr. Moyer sent me clippings from two Seattle newspapers, telling of Frank Coombs' death. Unfortunately, the clippings are not identified so that I can give proper credit. One, headed "UNCLE FRANK COOMBS, RADIO FAVORITE DIES," appeared the day after the tenor's death on October 31, 1941:

"Frank M. Coombs, who saw the passing of one era of entertainment and the birth of another, and found success in both is dead.

"In the halcyon days of vaudeville he worked with many of vaudeville's greatest name—Weber and Fields, Lew Dockstader, the Primrose Minstrels. He appeared in Victor Herbert's productions and knew the great composer well. And in his later years he returned to his home town of Seattle and found happiness in working in the new field—radio. For fifteen years he has been broadcasting a weekly show of child talent—Uncle Frank's Children's Matinee—four years over KOL and for the past eleven years over KJR.

"Mr. Coombs, 70, died in Columbia Hospital two hours after he was taken there. Funeral services for him will be at 1 o'clock Tuesday in Butterworth's Chapel. Burial in Washelli Cemetery will be under the auspices of Fortson-Thygesen Camp No. 2 of the Spanish War Veterans, of which he was a past commander.

"Mrs. Coombs said yesterday that among the songs introduced by her

RECORDS

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. S6008

REGULAR AUCTIONS classical vocal records. Free lists.—S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. jly3652

RARE OLD RECORDS: Monthly sales list. Classical, vocal, popular, collector's items. Write.—Delano, 349 Lindenwald, Ambler, Penna. jly3272

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-46. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 15 First Ave., New Town Square, Pennsylvania. o122741

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6476

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan, Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

Rare Records! Our March catalogue features Batistini, Caruso, McCormack, Slezak, Ivogun, Galvany, Kurz, Boninsegna, Zenatello, Patti, 200 others! Bargain Prices! Reserve your copy now! — 2327 Arthur St., Los Angeles 65, Calif. my3027

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. my3084

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants". For information write or visit —Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., N. Y. 28, New York. n126581

OLD CYLINDER phonographs, records, music boxes, discs, mechanical birds, organs, parts, catalogues, literature, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 100 North Third, Richmond, Va. my3252

COLLECTORS' GUIDE to American Recordings, 1895-1926 (Moses). Price $3.75.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, New York. my3253

WILL BUY used phonograph records, collections or dealer's stock, any amount, made before 1940, $15 to $30 per hundred.—Jacob S. Schneider, 128 W. 66th St., New York 23, New York. au88801

Record treasures of the World's great artists. Original G&Ts, Fonoplas, Zonophones, etc., Akte, Bellinioni, Boninsegna, Caruso, Carelli, De Lucia, Escalais, Fabbri, Giraltoni, Kurz, Litvinne, Pinto, Plancon, Figner, and other unique records of the greatest rarity. Send for auction lists, special lists. All correspondence confidential.—Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. je34431

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp please.—"Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d124461

ENGLISH AND EUROPEAN records and books on music, etc. Current and cut-out collector's rarities. Lists free. Inquiries welcomed.—Renton, Maldon Road, Tiptree, Colchester, Essex, England. je3004

RECORDS: Collector's items, opera, vocal, classical, semi-classical, piano, violin, orchestra. A photographic reproduction of a famous singer, complimentary, with each list.—Toby's Record Outlet, 2126 Jackson Ave., Kansas City, Missouri. je3325

MISCELLANEOUS

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, et.—Royal Carney, 617 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

WANTED: Vaudeville and Opera Programs prior 1925. Record catalogs prior 1915.—Ronald Slaughter, 8919 Gibson St., Los Angeles 34, Calif. jly3603

WANTED: Hurdy Gurdy in good working order. Describe fully, with price.—Dwight J. Wilson, 300 Bitting Building, Wichita 2, Kansas. my3023

OLD POPULAR MUSIC. I buy, sell, trade.—Dean Snyder, 102 So. Main St., Los Angeles 12, Calif. my3272

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Everything. Catalog 10c.—Pore's, 3161 High, Denver 5, Colorado. je12407

FOR SALE: 1 DUBOIS & Stodart piano (spinnet) circa 1824; rosewood, curly maple, crotch mahogany. Pure ivory keyboard, iron pin block for greater strength; keymaker's name written on one key; 2 folding music racks, 1 inside of piano when opened. Price, $450. One Aster and Horwood dainty spinet piano, circa 1813. Price, $350. Both are collectors' items. More information concerning these items if so desired. Write:—Mrs. Henry Lokel, The Five Antique Shop, 347 Amsterdam Ave., New York 23, N. Y. my36501

MEL DEONS, Alelodeon organs. Beautiful restored instruments for sale. Will buy instruments needing repairs. Expert repairing service.—C-sharp Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich.

ROSEWOOD MUSIC BOX in fine condition. Cabinet, 20x27", 37" high. 189 17 1/4" German silver discs. Brevete, SGOG, British patent. D. R. Patente, H. G. Muster, Swiss made, $700. Shipping extra.—Hempstead Trading Post, 1024 Front St., Hempstead, N. Y. je3066

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80 direct from importer, 41 Park Row, New York 7, N. Y. jly3272

OLD TIME RECORDS. Operatic, instrumental, popular. All your favorite artists represented. Priced reasonably. Records bought. Write wants or visit.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. jly3844

MRS WESLEY STEPPAN, 322 N. W. 1st Street, Fairbault, Minn.—60 old time dance orchestra tunes (all parts). Whistling Rufus, two step; They go Wild, Simply Wild Over Me; Rustling Silks; Pretzel Pete; Happy Heinie; Moon Winks, 3 step; After the Ball & Annie Rooney, etc.; Buffalo Gals, quadrille; Chicken Reel. Others, similar, sell for 25c per copy. Ebony Boehm system flute, silver keys, morocco covered case, marked H. Bettoney, Boston. Ed. Worlitzer. Price $50. my1825

WANTED TO BUY: A small Mathushak piano.—Everett Sulzberger, Ottawa, Ill. je3002

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues.—Elmer Moore, 1036 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. se844

WANTED: Edison phonographs, Opera model, battery type, Concert (large diameter cylinder). Also cylindrical Nipper-elodeons, especially Multiphone, cylinder phonograph catalogues, literature. State price, condition.—Ted Bowers, 6039 W. 76th St., Los Angeles 45, Calif. jly3674

FOR SALE: Grand Piano; reasonable.—Baptist Hill Antiques, Fox Lake, Wis. my188

OLD MUSIC: Sheet, books, orchestrations. List.—Alberta Anderson, Rt. 1, Box 373 D. Bothell, Wash. my1041

CLOSING OUT all phonographs. State your wants.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Missouri. my188

SAVE YOUR HOBBIES WITH A BINDER

The wealth of information contained in every issue of HOBBIES is too valuable to be thrown around with the consequent danger of loss. This binder is covered with buckram, with the title printed in gold. Its appearance will compare favorably with the handsomest bound books in your library. It will be sent to you postpaid on receipt of $2.50 with a guarantee of perfect satisfaction or money refunded.

Holds 12 Issues

HOBBIES MAGAZINE

1006 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago 6, Illinois

husband were such famous ones as 'In My Merry Oldsmobile,' 'Love Me and the World is Mine' and 'Can't Yo' Heah Me Callin', Caroline?'"

"August Twellner, who served with him in the Philippines, related yesterday that Mr. Coombs came to Seattle in 1889, after the Seattle fire, and became one of the city's first letter carriers. He was interested in the early operas here and in bicycle racing. He served in the Philippines as a sergeant, returned later to letter carrying in Seattle and later entered vaudeville. Surviving, besides Mrs. Coombs, is a brother, Lafe, of Seattle, and nieces and nephews."

Another newspaper story said, in part:

"Mr. Coombs. . . . had been in poor health for several years. Yesterday he felt ill when he arrived at his home, 175 West 58th Street. He was taken to Columbia Hospital at 8:30 o'clock last night and died two hours later.

"Mr. Coombs born in the Midwest, felt the lure of Broadway while still a youngster. He went to New York in 1902 and from then until 1926 had a varied experience in minstrels, vaudeville, musical comedy and opera.

The veteran entertainer's stage experience included a season with Oscar Hammerstein at the Manhattan Opera House; a season under Victor Herbert in the musical comedy, 'The Only Girl'; three seasons on the road in the same production; five seasons with Lew Dockstader and other famous minstrels, and many seasons with Keith-Orpheum and other vaudeville circuits. Mr. Coombs had played in every large city in the United States, as well as in most cities of Japan, the Philippine Islands and Hawaii.

"Mr. Coombs was a former commander of Fortson-Thygesen Camp No. 2, United Spanish War Veterans. He once won a medal as 'the best drilled soldier in the State of Washington.' Mr. Coombs had made his home in Seattle the past 52 years. He was a sergeant in Company D, First Washington Volunteer Infantry, during the Spanish-American War. He also was a member of the Friars Club, New York City."

The "souvenir," in Mr. Coombs handwriting, which Mr. Moyer sent me, reads: "Lake Roesiger, Sept. 21, 1941. A nice visit from two nice boys, Keith Moyer and Al Blackmore. Come again some time. Yours, Frank Coombs, 'Uncle Frank,' KOMO-KJR." The writing is shaky and is evidently that of an infirm elderly man, but I prize it as a memento of a fine artist with whom I unfortunately never had any direct association.

Frank Coombs' recording career is not one that need be covered in extensive detail. To begin, I have no information about the cylinder records that he told Keith Moyer he made around 1900. I have never seen any old cylinders listed under the name of Frank Coombs, but if he is quoted as saying he never used any other name. We also have his statement that he never recorded for Edison. The cylinders probably were made for some small, short-lived concern that specialized in supplying slot machines.

I also have found no trace of the records that Coombs said he made for Emerson. Victor Emerson, one of Columbia's top recording experts left Columbia in 1916 to found the Emerson Phonograph Company, which began by making double-faced seven-inch records that sold for 25 cents each. They were unusual in that they could be played either laterally or vertically. They sounded better in the lateral position, but were pretty bad either way. Emerson also had for a short time a five-inch, single-faced record that sold for only 10 cents—a rival to Columbia's "Little Wonder." Many Columbia artists went with Emerson to his new company, but I found no Coombs records in a 1917 Emerson catalog. Neither does his name appear in any list I have seen of nine or ten-inch Emersons. The records may have been made but never issued.

As far as present-day collectors are concerned, Frank Coombs' recording career began in 1910 when he made his first Columbia—a double-faced disc, No. A885, combining "Silver Threads Among the Gold" and "Nellie Was a Lady." This was also the most popular record he ever made, and for many years was one of the standard Columbia best "sellers." His sweet high counter-tenor voice—perhaps a bit higher than Richard Jose's, but not quite so high as Will Oakland's—was ideally suited to these songs. As a matter of fact, "Silver Threads" was, and is, a sure-fire number for counter-tenor voice. Jose's 1903 version was the most popular Victor record for several years, and Oakland's renditions for the different companies were always in strong demand.

There is an interesting comment in the November, 1913, Columbia catalog: "FRANK COOMBS, counter-tenor. Another of the singers first introduced to the record-buying public by the Columbia is Mr. Frank Coombs, the counter-tenor, well known as having 'the sweetest voice in vaudeville.' All of Mr. Coombs' Columbia records are extremely popular, his 'Silver Threads Among the Gold' especially so."

Coombs' Columbia list at that time included twenty solos; two numbers done with the assistance of the Brunswick quartet, and five duets with William H. Thompson. Current popular music was unrepresented in the solos, unless "I Used to Believe in Fairies" from the Chauncey Olcott production, "Ragged Robbin," be considered in that classification. (Incidentally, Coombs pronounced "fairies" as "fay-ries"). The duets with Thompson, however, were all "popular," the titles being "Driving Home the Cows From Pasture," "Harbor of Love," "The Hour That Gave Me You," "In All My Dreams I Dream of You" and "Mine." The solos included, besides titles already mentioned, such sentimental, old-time favorites as "Bell Brandon," "Ben Bolt," "Do They Think of Me at Home?" "Her Bright Smile Haunts Me Still." "Lorena," "Mollie Darling" and "The Vacant Chair." One or two, among them "I Know the Place Where We Will Rest" and "No One to Love," are less familiar to present-day listeners. In his recording, Coombs stuck closely and wisely, to the good old-fashioned minstrel counter-tenor repertoire. His Columbia list was not materially added to after 1913, but his famous version of "Caroline" was issued in July, 1914, and his two duets with Ernest Aldwell, "Sweet Kentucky Lady, Dry Your Eyes" and "There's a Little Spark of Love Still Burning," came out in March and April, 1915, respectively.

The only Coombs records ever issued under the Victor imprint were announced in December, 1912. One was a twelve-inch version of an old-time ballad, "Beautiful Isle of the Sea," coupled with an excellent rendition of "Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold," by the English baritone, Alan Turner. The supplement comment was brief: "To accompany the Turner solo, a pleasing record of an old ballad favorite is offered, sung by that popular minstrel tenor, Frank Coombs."

Also listed was a ten-inch record "Afterwards," coupled with "By the Old Cathedral Door," by the Peerless Quartet. Again Coombs drew the "B" side, and the comment: "On the reverse is the second record by that sweet-voiced tenor, Frank Coombs, who revives a familiar song of bygone years."

Coombs is most often thought of as a Columbia artist, but he probably made more records, from 1910 to 1913, for the U. S. Everlasting Record Company than he did for Columbia. These consisted mostly of solos, but there were also a fairly large number of duets with Thompson, the baritone. The U. S. concern, operated by Albert Benzler and other musicians and recording experts who had left Edison to found their own company, considered Coombs and Thompson among its leading stars.

The May, 1911, issue of the Talking Machine World contains photos and brief "blurbs" for both. The same treatment was given in that advertisement to Cal Stewart and Murry (misspelled Murray) K. Hill, two of the leading monologists of the day. Until U. S. Records ceased to be issued, Coombs contributed steadily to both the two and four-minute cylinder lists. It is rather remarkable, considering the popularity of counter-tenor records, that he did not sing for Edison. But Edison, as well as Victor, may have considered that Will Oakland filled all counter-tenor needs. Victor also seems to have considered Coombs only a "tenor."

And now we come to Frank Coombs' singing associate, WILLIAM H. THOMPSON, the baritone whose voice Coombs considered to heavy for his own light counter-tenor. Like Coombs, Thompson was primarily a ballad singer, but one whose vocal gifts sometimes brought him into association with notables of opera. Just as Coombs had a tenor role in "Hans, the Flute Player," so Thompson sang for a considerable time with the distinguished contralto, Ernestine Schumann-Heink.

Unfortunately, I have been able to obtain only meager biographical details of Will Thompson. The following appeared in a 1945 issue of Variety:

"William H. Thompson, 72, former musical comedy and vaudeville singer, died, July 24, in Chicago following a heart attack. For 12 years he and his wife, Jean, and his son, William H., Jr., appeared in vaudeville as Thompson and Berri. Among the musical comedies in which Thompson played before retiring in 1925 were 'The Tenderfoot' & 'Coming Through the Rye.'"

The foregoing makes it appear that Thompson was born in 1873, but gives no information concerning his birthplace. His career as a recording artist began around the turn of the century, possibly in the days of brown wax cylinders, and by the end of 1902 he was well established as one of the Edison group. In the list for July, 1902, issued shortly after gold moulded cylinders were introduced, the baritone was represented by the following: 8037, "Sadie, Say You Won't Say Nay"; 8044, "In the Moonlight With the Girl You Love"; 8050, "The Meaning of U. S. A.," and 8052, Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Let Me Dream Again" a number that Thompson seems to have particularly liked.

During the next several months, Thompson sang many other now forgotten sentimental and serio-comic songs. However, these records for July, 1902, are the earliest I have been able to trace and they may mark the beginning of his Edison career. He appears to have been well liked by record buyers because of his pleasant baritone voice and clear enunciation, although there seems to have been nothing particularly distinctive or outstanding about his style. In 1903 he also made several discs for Victor, including "Let Me Dream Again." As far as I know, he did not record for Columbia or Zon-o-phone in this early period, and I have not found his name in any Edison list prior to 1902.

An interesting item appeared in Edison's New Phonogram for January, 1905:

"8875. 'Sweet Thoughts of Home.' Written by Stanislaus Stange and Julian Edwards and sung by Madame Schumann-Heink in 'Love's Lottery.' This is perhaps the most enjoyed musical number sung by the Madame in this successful comic opera. Mr. Thompson, who sings it for our record, is a member of the 'Love's Lottery' company, playing one of the principal parts. Listening to this song nightly Mr. Thompson has caught the secret of Madame Schumann-Heink's irresistible rendition and has placed it upon our record in a manner second only to that of the great singer herself." ("The Madame" herself, as the annotator had elegantly called Schumann-Heink, meanwhile had recorded "Sweet Thoughts of Home" on Victor Red Seal record No. 85092.)

The October, 1904, Victor supplement contained a record by a Miss Quinn and a Mr. Thompson of the Whitney Opera Company, giving a scene from the musical production, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home." It was called "Swanee River," and depicted "a proud Southern beauty" singing the old Foster song in her room while a lover with an agreeable baritone voice stood beneath her window, serenading her with a blending melody. As I have previously remarked in HOBBIES, this may have been the first recorded scene from a musical play. I have no idea who Miss Quinn was, but imagine (for no reason!) her name to have been Frances. "Thompson" sounds like William H. Thompson, but it seems unlikely that he would have been playing leading roles concurrently in "Love's Lottery" and "When Johnny Comes Marching Home." (Sometimes I wish the ancient supplement writers hadn't striven so gently to avoid the use of first names in listing recording "talent.")

After this, Thompson's name ceases to appear in Victor lists, and there was a fairly long period during which he was not singing for Edison. Occasionally a reader would write to the New Phonogram and ask "Will William H. Thompson sing for you again?" and receive a reply like "We do not know" or "impossible to say." His two-minute cylinder, No. 9560, of "It's a Long Way Back to Dear Old Mother's Knee," was issued in May, 1907, after which he seems to have been unheard of in Edison circles until April, 1910. Perhaps he was too busy with stage work during these years to take time to record; perhaps, like many other artists, he had his occasional salary disputes with Edison.

But in April, 1910, the following annotation appeared: "Amberol, 409, 'My Love is Greater Than the World.' Mr. Thompson's return to Edison ranks will be welcomed by the thousands of Edison owners who recall the pleasure his splendid baritone voice gave them a few years ago. Among his contributions at present in our catalog are 'The Rosary' (No. 8214) and 'Handful of Earth From Mother's Grave.' (No. 8531) . . . . Mr. Thompson not only possesses a fine voice, but he knows how to use it artistically, and his enunciation is refreshingly clear."

Thompson's word received more praise in succeeding issues. The number for July, 1910, contained his photograph and this description of his two-minute record of "Just One Word From you": "Charming sentiment is breathed in the lines of this exquisite little gem of melody and it finds a suitable vehicle in Mr. Thompson's pure and finely modulated voice. He sings the number simply and naturally, as it should be rendered, without the labored attempt to gain 'expression' which so frequently mars the rendition of sentimental ballads."

In December, 1910, Edison issued a counter-tenor and baritone duet of the ever popular "My Wild Irish Rose" by Oakland and Thompson, with the statement: "The success of the first record made by these two artists was so instantaneous and emphatic as to leave no room for doubt that the public would welcome more of the same character." (The preceding Oakland-Thompson number was 503, "If This Rose Told You All It Knows," a pretty ballad by Theodore Morse.) In July, 1911, Thompson renewed the partnership he had formed with Albert Campbell more than eight years before, and they recorded a duet version of "a charming love song of a refined type," "The Vale of Dreams." One duet by Campbell and Thompson, "It's the Man in the Soldier Suit," had been listed in the April, 1903, Edison catalog of two-minute cylinders, and several others were issued the same year. They did not sing together long, however, and apparently their partnership came to a final end with "The Vale of Dreams."

Thompson's Edison duets with Oakland probably were made because Coombs did not work for the great inventor's company. However, the baritone made duets with Oakland, as well as Coombs, for U. S. Everlasting. He also recorded a large number of solos for the U. S. company. I can trace only four Columbia solos by Thompson. They were issued in 1910 on two double-faced records. No. 938 combined "Sweet Thoughts of Home," the Schumann-Heink song which he had sung five years before for Edison, with "Love Dreams." On No. 955 he sang, and sang well, two popular ballads, "All That I Ask of Love" and "You Are the Ideal of My Dreams."

The baritone's recording career seems to have ended abruptly after 1912 or 1913. He does not appear to have made any Edison Blue Amberol cylinders nor were any of his wax Amberols carried over into the Blue Amberol list. He also made no Edison Diamond Discs—at least none was issued. In fact, the wind-up of the U. S. Company in 1913 appears to have marked the end of Thompson's career as a recording artist. He probably was too busy with his stage appearances to cultivate recording work as intensively as did those singers who made phonograph activity their profession and, like Frank Coombs, he gradually drifted away from it.

But, while we may concede that there is a certain something lacking about the recorded performances of Coombs and Thompson that give unending glamour to such vivid personalities as Ada Jones, Len Spencer, Billy Murray, Henry Burr, Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, the fact remains that they were both accomplished, sincere artists whose abilities won them the esteem of myriads of record buyers. If not in the foremost rank of popularity, they nevertheless have a secure niche of their own in the galaxy of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists. To Coombs especially I shall always be grateful for the manner in which his dulcet rendition of "I Used to Believe in Fairies" would put my wide-awake "kid brother" to sleep after all other measures, remedies and stratagems failed!

Next Month — MANUEL ROMAIN

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

NAT M. WILLS, "The Happy Tramp"

By JIM WALSH

Nat M. Wills, in his famous vaudeville of "The Happy Tramp"

The winter of 1917-18 has become legendary in the Eastern United States as perhaps the coldest within living memory. Sunday, December 9, was especially cold. If it had not been, Nat M. Wills, the dapper and popular little "Happy Tramp" comedian of vaudeville, musical comedy and recording fame, might still be alive instead of having met a tragic accidental death at the early age of 44.

Wherever actors gathered on Broadway on December 10, 1917, there was a buzz of conversation in which excitement and shock were mingled, as the discussion centered on an article that appeared on page 15 of that morning's New York Times. The headline read "NAT M. WILLIS DIES IN GAS ACCIDENT," and the sub-heads continued the story: "Dazed by Fumes in His Garage, Actor Succumbs in Effort to Escape. Had Been Fixing His Auto. Wife and Neighbor Batter Down Locked Door and Find His Body."

Here is the news story that caused so much concern:

"Nat M. Wills, at whose stage presentations of the comic side of tramp life a generation and more of theatergoers had laughed, was found dead yesterday. Penned in his own garage. Mr. Wills was overcome by the fumes of gas from the running engine of his automobile and was dead when his wife and neighbors battered down the doors. Mrs. Wills was near collapse as the result of her experience and was in hysterics last night at the family home, 2 Thirty-first Street, Woodcliff, N. J.

"Mr. and Mrs. Wills were to have attended a dinner party in Manhattan last night. Wills, whose hobby was automobiles and gas engines, went to the garage back of his home in the afternoon to tinker the engine of his car. Two weeks ago thieves who broke into the garage smashed two top bolts which held the heavy doors shut when they were not held by the ordinary patent lock. Because of the cold, Wills locked himself in the garage so the doors would stay shut while he worked. He lifted the hood of the car, started the engine racing idly and crawled underneath to make adjustments.

"The tight little garage soon began to fill with the deadly fumes of partially consumed gasoline. Wills must have realized the danger, for he crawled from under the car and, not even stopping to halt the engine, struggled to the doors. If he cried out, no one heard him.

"In the house, Mrs. Wills, well knowing her husband's fondness for fussing with his car, paid little attention to his absence till the time came to start for New York. Then she sent the maid to remind him they should be off. The maid came back to say she could hear the car running, but had knocked on the door and got no answer from the actor.

"Only faintly alarmed, Mrs. Wills herself went to the garage. Her efforts, too, were vain. The two women shook and rattled the heavy doors. The engine ran on, and there was no answer from within. Thoroughly aroused now, Mrs. Wills called Marcus Donnelly, a neighbor. With whatever came to hand, the three battered at the big doors till at last they crashed in. The lifeless body of Wills tumbled out, the key of the door still clutched in his hand. The three carried the body into the house and sent calls for the police and for neighboring physicians. The comedian had been dead some time.

"Wills' present wife was May Day, an actress when he married her. The couple have one daughter, Natalie 3 years old. He was married four times. His first two wives died. His third, the equestrienne known on the stage as La Belle Titcomb, divorced him, and the two had much litigation over alimony.

"Wills, whose real name is said to have been Louis Magrath Wills, was born in Fredericksburg, Va., on July 11, 1873. His first stage appearance was at the historic Ford's Opera House in Washington with Minnie Palmer in a play called 'My Sweetheart'. It was by accident that he first assumed the role of a tramp. He was playing the part of a juvenile with a stock company at the old Globe Theatre, Washington. In the play, 'A Block Game' one of the principal characters was that of a tramp. At the dress rehearsal, a drop fell from the 'fly gallery' seriously injuring the actor who had been playing the hobo role. Wills stepped into the breach with such success that tramp parts became his dramatic allotment from that time on. For eight years he was a vaudeville attraction in the B. F. Keith and Orpheum circuit of theaters, and was a member of Ziegfeld's Follies for one season.

"For the past three seasons he had been under the management of Charles Dillingham at the Hippodrome."

And that is the New York Times' account of the tragic death of Nat M. Wills. Three days later, on December 13, the Times published the following brief account of the comedian's funeral:

"Funeral services for Nat M. Wills were held yesterday morning at Campbell Funeral Home, Broadway and Sixty-sixth Street, and later in the day the body was taken to a mausoleum in Woodlawn Cemetery. The services at the Funeral Church were attended by many well-known theatrical people, among whom were delegations from the Lambs, Friars, Players and Green Rooms clubs and from the Hippodrome.

"A Masonic service, read by the Right Worshipful George Loesch, was held under the auspices of St. Cecile Lodge, and a brief eulogy was spoken by Fred Niblo."

When I decided to write a biographical sketch of Wills, I was eager to get as much background information as possible, not only because he has long been one of my favorite comedians but because he, like me, was a Virginian by birth. However, my efforts have not been successful. The county clerk's office at Fredericksburg reports that it had no record of his birth or the names of his parents, and a similar reply was obtained when I asked for information from the vital statistics bureau of the Virginia State Department of Health.

Even so, there appears no reason to doubt that Wills was born in Fredericksburg. The following biographical sketch in an Edison Blue Amberol record catalog for 1914 substantiates some of the statements made in the already quoted obituary notice:

"NAT M. WILLIS. . . . This well-known and very popular comedian was born in Fredericksburg, Virginia, on July 11, 1873. He first appeared on the stage when a child, with Nell Burgess in a play called 'Vim.' (There is a contradiction here with the Times statement that Wills first appeared with Minnie Palmer in 'My Sweetheart.'—J. W.) He secured a good theatrical training as a member of the stock company at the famous Grand Opera House of San Francisco, which was afterwards destroyed by the earthquake. About this time Mr. Wills originated the tramp character that he has since made famous the world over. As this 'gentlemanly tramp,' he starred in three plays, 'A Son of Rest,' 'The Duke of Duluth' and 'A Lucky Dog.' He then entered vaudeville as a headliner, playing all the leading houses of the United States."

Some old-timers, who cherish unfading memories of Wills' vaudeville "turn," insist that he had the funniest opening ever used by any act. The curtain went up, showing a store front, and a "clerk" came out and rolled down the awning. Then, to everybody's howling delight, Wills, attired in his rumpled, ragged tramp costume, tumbled out of the awning in which he presumably had spent the night, and proceeded to tell funny stories and sing parodies in a loud, penetrating voice—some of his jealous rivals called it a "bellow"—that no one else could successfully imitate. He was acknowledged the greatest master of parody writing and singing of his day.

Aside from what I have already quoted, little seems to be on record concerning Nat Wills' earlier life. It is known that during the 1890's he was end man of the Ideal Minstrels in Washington, but by 1900 he was well established as a vaudeville favorite. Although a born comedian, Wills was a man with a serious streak. When vaudeville performers, tired of being cheated and otherwise ill-treated by many theater managers and booking agents, organized a protective union, the White Rats of America, in 1900, the 27-year-old Wills was one of the leaders. He delivered a fiery address at an overflow meeting in a fraternal hall situated above Koster and Bail's museum. After he spoke, the air was filled with the shout of "One for All and All for One!" which has been for so many years the shibboleth of Equity, the theatrical organization that stems from the original White Rats.

Some interesting statements about Wills' career are made in the late Douglas Gilbert's fascinating book, "American Vaudeville." Gilbert described Wills' tramp as "a happy bum, a genial outwitting character, in high favor with audiences." His costume, says Gilbert, was the usual thing for a "tramp get-up"—patches, blacked-out teeth and a scrubby beard. The book pays the comedian a compliment by saying he was "an honest worker, who bought his gags." It also says that at the beginning of his vaudeville career Wills worked with a partner, an "unbelievably thin" man known as "Bony Dave Halpin," in an act called "The Tramp and the Policeman." Wills ended the partnership around 1900, and began doing his tramp "single" in which he kept abreast of current events and made topical references. For several years he hired the song writer, Vincent Bryan to write special material, paying Bryan $100 a week.

According to Gilbert, Wills appeared for a time in vaudeville with his first wife, "Madame Loretto," and after her death he married May Harrison, who died in 1909. A year after that he married "La Belle Titcomb," whose real name was Nellie McNierney, although she was billed as a Frenchwoman, when she came over from Europe to do an act at Hammerstein's, in which she rode a white horse and sang grand opera arias. Wills took her into his act, but legend has it that they didn't get along too well, and that on one occasion the statuesque "La Belle" picked up the comparatively fragile Nat and hurled him through the door of his dressing room. The legend further continues that somebody passed by just in time to see Nat rub his head and mutter, "I should have married the horse!" However, the story is suspected to be apocryphal, although Wills sometimes used a line about "marrying the horse" in his act. As we have already seen from the New York Times quotation, "La Belle Titcomb" divorced Wills and they had alimony squabbles.

And now we have arrived at the time when Nat (or Louis Magrath) Wills began his highly successful, if comparatively brief, career as a recording comedian, using excerpts from his material that had been so successful on the stage.

Wills appears to have recorded first for Victor, and his initial batch of records came out in 1909. The first was No. 5612, "No News," or "What Killed the Dog." It was also the most popular record he ever made, and undoubtedly one of the most consistently popular talking numbers ever recorded by anybody. The monologue details, with a wealth of dry humor, the sad story of an ailing rich man who was ordered to go away from home for a rest. When he returned, he asked his tactful Negro servant for the news and was told there wasn't any, "except yo' dawg done died." Further questioning revealed that the dog died from eating burnt horseflesh, that all the rich man's horses and cows died in a fire that destroyed his barn; the barn caught fire from sparks of the conflagration that leveled his home; the fire in the home was caused by candles around a coffin setting fire to curtains; the coffin contained the body of his mother-in-law; and the mother-in-law had died of shock because the man's wife had run away with his chauffeur. "But outside ub dat, sir," the servant summed up in a peculiarly unctuous tone, "dere ain't no news!"

Some years ago, my brother, Dr. Chad Walsh, who is a professor at Beloit College in Wisconsin, discovered that Wills' "No News" story apparently was lifted from an anecdote at which ancient Greeks laughed thousands of years ago. A book of Greek stories which my brother happened to read contained one that was almost identical in structure with "No News," and some of the details were the same. There is no knowing whether Wills had heard of the Greek story or just happened to strike on a similar idea, but the resemblance is so marked that coincidence must have been working overtime if he really did not simply take the old "yarn" and transpose it to a modern setting.

Regardless of that, "No News" was a remarkable record for longevity. After four successful years in single-face, it was combined in 1913 as double-faced record No. 17221 with "The Three Trees," a diverting monologue recited by Tom McNaughton, who was a member of "The Spring Maids" musical comedy cast. McNaughton was also the husband of Alice Lloyd, the veteran English hall comedienne who died in 1950. The double-faced record stayed in the Victor catalogue until 1927, when it was remade by the electric process with the late Frank Crumit doing both sides. It then remained a popular seller for several additional years.

Here is how Victor announced its engagement of Wills:

"No entertainer on the American stage today is more popular with the public than Nat Wills. His familiar impersonation of a tramp is unique and always amusing, without a touch of offensiveness or vulgarity. His stories and monologues are witty and laugh-compelling that one suspects they are written, like his parodies, by himself—and he never fails to make the most of them.

"The Victor, with its usual enterprise, has secured the exclusive services of Mr. Wills for this work, and will present each month one or more of his delightfully funny talks and parodies. The fact that such fine records by so celebrated an entertainer are to be offered to the public at regular prices should be highly gratifying to record-buyers."

Another of Wills' early Victor records was 5613, "Are You Sincere?"—Parody, in which he begins by commenting on a foot race that had recently occurred in London, at which "a young fellow named Hayes," an American, had been the winner. Then follows a crack or two at William Jennings Bryan, who shortly before had made his third unsuccessful try for the presidency. After that, Wills sings a parody on the then popular song, "Are You Sincere?" which he twists around to fit the case of a policeman who suspects burglars were up to no good in a bank. Being afraid to enter, he called the burglars up on the phone and tremblingly asked, "Are youse in here?" They replied that they were not, and so, his conscience relieved, the far from intrepid officer went away satisfied.

Wills' third ten-inch Victor record, "B. P. O. E.—The Elks' Song" was thus described by the Victor supplement editor, Sam Rous—our S. H. Dudley, as record collectors prefer to call him:

"Many thousands of theater-goers have enjoyed this amusing and good-natured fling at the Brotherhood of Elks, especially the Elks themselves. The first verse soberly and correctly tells of the great order and the good it has done; but in the second and the third the order is exposed in a most shameless fashion, especially when it is considered that Mr. Wills is supposed to be a good Elk himself!"

Also included in Wills' first batch of Victors were a comic song, "Our Boarding House," which is best appreciated by listeners with strong stomachs, for the comedian's description of the boarding house's lack of sanitation could be revolting under certain conditions, and a twelve-inch "burlesque military ballad," "The Flag He Loved So Well."

In July, 1909, two more Wills records were issued, a twelve-inch humorous monologue, "Reformed Love," which I have never heard, and a ten-inch mock ballad, "Saving Up Cou-

COLLECTOR'S HARPSICHORD

- Of rosewood, near perfect condition.
  - Mother-of-Pearl keys and inlay.
  - Elaborate carved detailing, beaded & scroll design.
- Auction by mail to highest bidder
Bids closing in 60 days
WRITE TO:

MRS. A. B. GRIFFIN
110 Gum Street, Marlon, Kentucky

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Masoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF
MUSIC BOXES

242 PAGES — 133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Makes checks payable to
Lightner Publishing Corp.
ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

pons for Mother," which I am inclined to consider the funniest of all the comedian's efforts.

Here is Mr. Rous' comment: "The 'Happy Tramp' gives us this month two very funny numbers—the first being a rambling talk on various matters delivered in the dry manner which makes Wills' monologues so amusing; and the second a burlesque ballad, which takes for its theme the present day craze for the collection of trading stamps and coupons of various kinds. The tale of the coupon-collecting little boy is most pathetically told by Mr. Wills, but there is no danger of anyone shedding tears—except perhaps through an excess of laughter!"

To the foregoing I might add that "Saving Up Coupons" is a strong sermon against the tobacco habit, because Wills' pathetic boy hero smoked himself to death trying to get enough coupons "to purchase a tombstone for pa." His last words were "Tell mother I died like a hero while smoking a Cremo cigar!" Wills apparently took the tune for this touching composition from Paul Dresser's old "tear-jerker, "Just Tell Them That You Saw Me." The record really is a hilarious affair, but it must not have been popular (or perhaps the tobacco companies complained against the satire), for it stayed in the catalog only a couple of years.

Victor's announcement said that Wills had been engaged exclusively, but this must have meant exclusive only to disc records, for he appeared in the Edison list for August, 1909. Victor and Edison seem to have agreed quite often to an arrangement whereby artists under exclusive contract to the one company's discs were allowed to make the other's cylinders and vice versa. Billy Murray and Sousa's Band were among those having this "joint contract."

The August, 1909, issue of Edison's publication, The New Phonogram, contained a photo of Wills in tramp garb, and the following description of his first record, No. 10178, Parody on "Down in Jungle Town":

"In making his initial appearance in the ranks of Edison record-makers, Mr. Wills has chosen for his first selection a parody on 'Down in Jungle Town.' The words, however, treat of the (Theodore) Roosevelt hunting trip to Africa in a facetious way. Mr. Wills is one of the best known artists on the vaudeville stage. He makes an unusually clear record and in this role will make as great a hit as he does upon the stage." The same supplement also contained a four-minute Wills cylinder, No. 176, Flag He Loved So Well, which had already been issued by Victor, in addition to the following brief sketch:

"Few stars on the vaudeville stage are better known and more popular than Nat M. Wills. He is the headline attraction of every performance in which he takes part. His tramp sketch is everywhere hailed with delight. He gains the attention of his audience at once and keeps them in laughter to the close of the act. Mr. Wills is not only a clever vaudeville performer, but he also makes a splendid record. As a rule, people successful in vaudeville are not equally successful in making talking machine records. Mr. Wills is an exception, for his voice reproduces as perfectly as any one who had been making records for years. We offer his records to the public with the full belief that they will score a great success."

The peculiar adaptability of Wills strong, rather strident, voice was commented on in the Victor catalog for November, 1914, in which Editor Rous wrote:

"Mr. Wills may be said to have a voice created for record-making, so powerful and resonant is his rich baritone; and the distinctness with which he gives every syllable of his talks and songs is of course known to everyone. The records which we offer are remarkable in every respect, and so natural that it would be impossible to distinguish between the reproduction and his actual voice."

The foregoing statement is "remarkable" for being probably the first time in which an unqualified "no difference" claim was made for any artist's recording. Conceivably, this gave Thomas A. Edison the idea of having his artists sing in public with the Edison Diamond Disc, to prove that even the most musically cultured listeners couldn't distinguish between the actual tones and those that were reproduced. Victor made no such public comparison with Wills or any other artist, and after Edison began to give successful demonstrations of what it called "the acid test of direct comparison," the Victor claim that Wills' voice was reproduced perfectly disappeared from the catalogue, just as Columbia ceased to "guarantee" that no other record sold at any price had better tone quality than Columbia's.

All the Edison cylinders by Wills were issued in 1909, but two, "Burlesque Opera" and "B. P. O. E.," were reissued several years later in the unbreakable Blue Amberol form. (Incidentally, what is hoped to be an approximately complete list of Wills' records is included with this article.) Oddly, he didn't record "No News" for Edison.

In 1910, Victor issued two more Wills records—"Old Oaken Bucket" Parody, in which the comedian, still in his guise of a tramp, told how he managed to hornswoggle a bartender into giving him an oversized glass of whisky for three cents, and "The Song of the English Chappie," in which he demonstrated change of pace by pretending to be an English "willie-boy."

Wills must have been "on the road" pretty steadily for the next three years, for there were no new Victor records by him until December, 1913—a year which some commentators, including Douglas Gilbert, believe marked a permanent downward trend in the humorist's career. As I shall show, I think this idea is completely erroneous. At any rate, the December Victor supplement showed a photo of Wills as a Broadway habitue instead of a tramp, and announced two new numbers from the Ziegfeld "Follies of 1913," in which he was then appearing. The songs were "If a Table at Rector's Could Talk" and "New York, What's the Matter With You?" Said the supplement:

"The greatest success Mr. Wills has achieved in years has been with the new Ziegfeld production of 'Follies of 1913,' in which he temporarily forsakes his tramp garb and appears as a dapper man-about-town, singing a number of effective songs. Two of the best of these have been recorded by the comedian for the Victor. No one who is familiar with Mr. Wills' other Victor numbers needs to be told what a fine record he makes."

Notice that the Victor writer says Wills was then, in 1913, making his greatest success in years. Yet there is a legend that his "heart was broken" because of something that happened that same year, before his Ziegfeld engagement, on a program at the historic Palace Theater. As Douglas Gilbert tells it, the Palace had only recently been opened. Wills followed the immortal French actress, Sarah Bernhardt, who had received great applause at her curtain call and "finally was forced by weariness to return to her dressing room." Wills then entered to a big hand. As he stood bowing, an usher came down the aisle with an enormous bouquet for Bernhardt, and somebody in a stage box yelled, "Give 'em to Wills—he's dying!"

We are asked to believe that Wills was crushed by this bit of wise-crackery, and there have even been whispers that he brooded over the taunt so much that his death in that fumed-filled garage was not inadvertent. Even Gilbert's "American Theater" says: "Four years later he did die of carbon monoxide poisoning in his New Jersey garage. That Palace crack at Wills unnerved him so he was scarcely able to go on. He never felt that he was precisely through—but performers worry."

To me this whole business seems far-fetched and silly. Wills may have been momentarily put out, but there is nothing to show he felt that he was in a decline or that his "future had passed." And there is certainly nothing to indicate that his death was other than accidental.

It was in 1913, too, that Wills made his first Columbia record. The double-faced disc appeared in the September, 1913, supplement under the heading of "NAT M. WILLS RECORDS TWO OF HIS FUNNIEST NUMBERS." The titles were "The Drink Cure" and "Comic Medley Song" (why, I wonder, wasn't it "Comic Song Medley"?), and the annotator remarked:

"If any other American comedian has made more people laugh than Nat M. Wills, the 'Musical Tramp,' it is probably because he has been longer on the stage. Wills' mission in life is frankly to give people enough genial nonsense of one kind or another to make them forget their troubles at least temporarily, and in this he has few superiors. He has appeared all over the world as a vaudeville and variety star and his name on a program invariably fills the house. On one side of his new Columbia disc Wills tells a story of a man whose trip on the water wagon ended in a manner as unexpected as it was ludicrous. On the other side is a song that is a little bit of everything, with comedy in every line."

Wills' only other Columbia appearance was in July, 1915, when he favored Victor's great rival with his familiar version of the famous "No News" and on the other side told

"Two Darcy Stories: (a) The Head Waiter (b) The Colored Social Club." The editor remarked that "Nat M. Wills, the most popular 'tramp' on the American stage, tells some of the best present day jokes in that peculiarly biased voice, which makes the best of a joke by refusing to admit it as a joke. All lovers of laughter will want this record." Today, 36 years later, "No News" remains as fresh and amusing as the day it was spoken, but although the other side may have been emanant to be genially amusing, there appears an overtone of venom in the stories that Wills tells about Negroes that spoil them for me. If such a record were issued today it would draw a concerted protest from Members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Wills, who little suspected that he had less than two years of life remaining, was back in the Victor list for January, 1916. One side of his new double-faced record contained "Parody on Eight Familiar Songs," virtually the same thing as his Columbia "Comic Medley Song" of three years before. It is a screamingly funny story of rambling adventures, set to the tunes of well known songs. On the other side, entitled "A Father of Thirty Six," was "the funny talk he used to give his vaudeville audiences when they insisted on more encores. At the end of this speech Mr. Wills tells one of his best stories, 'A Father of Thirty-Six,' which always brings down the house." A few months later Victor issued "A New Cure for Drinking," the same rather gruesome but funny story which Wills had recited for Columbia the year before. It was coupled with a parody on "Asleep in the Deep," sung by the late Al Jolson, who had been an exclusive Columbia artist since 1913. Victor must have had the master record for several years before deciding to put this mediocre Jolson offering on the market.

Wills made his appearance in a new record company's list in 1916. This occurred when a Columbia recording expert, Victor H. Emerson, left Columbia to found his own Emerson company, which started out by making double-faced seven-inch records to sell for a quarter, and single-faced six-inch ones for a dime. Any Columbia artists followed Emerson into his new business, and Wills was among them. Once more he dusted off "No News" and gave a condensed version of "Hortense at the Skating Rink," a monologue that had been popular on a twelve-inch Victor.

The last Nat M. Wills record to be issued by anybody appeared in Victor's list for February, 1917, and by one of those ironies with which our life is filled it was an "Automobile Parody." Just ten months later Wills was to die because of those fumes from his own automobile, but there was no note of impending doom in the rib-tickling account he gave of his imaginary adventures in a motor vehicle. The other side was a rural monologue, "The Pineville School Board," by Charles Ross Taggart, a comedian who specialized in impersonations of "Down East" characters. Edward Richardson, who by this time had succeeded Sam Rous as the Victor catalog annotator, remarked concerning Wills' side of the disc:

"Nat M. Wills has a little automobile dream all to himself in which he travels with miscellaneous adventures through parodies of "Toreador Song"—"Marching Through Georgia"—"Dixie"—"Ben Bolt"—"Out on the Deep"—"Reuben Reuben"—"Rosary"—"John Brown's Body"—"Auld Lang Syne." The Rosary parody is particularly touching: 'Each bolt, each nut, each screw, each tack, I took them out, I put them back' are lines that will surely evoke painful memories in every car-owner." Today they also appear painfully prophetic of the way in which Wills was to meet his death, but no one thinks much of that when the Automobile Parody is played. It is one big laugh throughout.

And now we have reached the end of Nat Wills' life. But there is one final, bitter taste of irony remaining before the story is closed—the pathetic fate of his beautiful young widow, May, who was only 23 when the comedian was found dead in 1917. May Wills lived until 1944, when she died at the early age of 50. One of the issues of Variety for that year told of her having been brutally beaten in a night club. Not long afterward, the "Bible of Show Business" contained an article by Ed Barry, headed "NAT M. WILLS' WIDOW DIES A SHABBY END." Here are some excerpts from the pathetic story related by Barry in Variety's typical journalese:

"When death claimed May Wills, 50, widow of the late Nat M. Wills . . . it was the culmination of a precarious existence the former 'Ziegfield Follies' beauty had suffered for practically a double decade after the death of her comedian husband in 1917, three years after their marriage. Death pointed to a cerebral hemorrhage, shown by subsequent coroner's autopsy, in a 'borrowed flop' in the room of a friend, Richard Kennedy, who said he took her into his room in a midtown hotel after she had told him she hadn't had a place to sleep for days. Kennedy told police he had left the former Broadway butterfly in his room Saturday night and upon arriving home Sunday morning had found her in semi-conscious condition lying on the floor. He summoned police, who called an ambulance, but she was dead upon arrival at the Roosevelt hospital. . .

"It was an ignominious finish for the former May Day, who had been a toast of the town in the 1913 edition of the 'Follies' at the age of 19. Her remarkable brunette beauty . . . intrigued Nat Wills, star of the show. . . Marriage followed shortly afterward. She left the show the following season, to bear their only daughter, Natalie, named after her father.

"Wills, who had earned top salaries as, vaudeville headliner prior to the 'Follies,' was in the $2,000—$3,000 weekly category as 'The Happy Tramp' over a period of years. . . He had left his widow and daughter comfortably fixed. In addition to special trust funds for his infant daughter he had left his widow around $100,000 in liquid assets in addition to insurance for a like sum.

"Close friends of the former beauty say the money went to her head and that she dissipated her fortune through lavish entertaining and other squandering on Broadway leeches who knew her when; but didn't want to know her when she was rubbing shoulders with adversity. She spent her inheritance within five years after getting it. Her daughter had been away through most of these years, being educated from her inheritance money, and getting the principal after reaching her majority in 1932. After graduating from college the daughter was appointed to a Government position in Washington, where she . . . married. . .

"The daughter had provided for her mother throughout the years of adversity, but most of it went for pub spending, according to those who knew her well. Despite this, the girl, who loved her mother, forgave her frailties and had been taking care of her at time of death. Upon the shabbily dressed remains of Mrs. Wills was a letter from her daughter, couched in affectionate terms and the usual 'P. S.—Enclosed find check.' . . . She planned to New York and took charge of burial. Services were held at Walter B. Cooke funeral chapel, with remains interred with her late husband. Few of the fair weather friends came to pay their respects, for she had not been able to entertain them for years."

So ends the sad story not only of Nat Wills, but of his unfortunate once-young wife—a story brightened only in part by the devotion of the couple's daughter to her mother. It is well that "The Happy Tramp" could not foresee the end to which his wife would come as he struggled to free himself from the garage that had been turned into a death trap. But, had he been capable of coherent thought, there might have been some consolation to the tortured man in the knowledge that he would be remembered for more than a generation as one of the greatest entertainers of his time, and that his songs and humor would still be enjoyed by thousands of record lovers for many years after the body of Nat M. Wills had been committed back to earth.

Next Month — MANUEL ROMAIN

—O—

Records by Nat M. Wills

- 10-Inch Victor single-faced (1909-1910)
5612 "No News" or "What Killed the Dog?"
5613 Are You Sincere?—Parody
5614 B. P. O. E.—Elks' Song.
.616 Our Boarding House
5695 Jungle Town Parody
5700 Saving Up Coupons for Mother — Mock Ballad
5725 Traveling Man
12-Inch Victor single-faced (1909)
31720 The Flag He Loved So Well (burlesque military ballad)
3 736 Reformed Love (humorous monologue)
10-Inch Victor double-faced (1910-1916)
16661 Old Oaken Bucket—Parody with The Darcy and the Boys (Edwin M. Whitney)
16687 Song of the English Chapple with Stop! Stop! Stop! (Bilda Morris)
17222 "No News" with The Three Trees (Tom McNaughton)
17461 New York, What's the Matter With You? with If a Table at Rector's Could Talk.
17768 Too Much Dog with Darcy Stories (comic monologues)
17894 Parodies on Eight Familiar Songs with A Father of 36
17915 A New Cure for Drinking with Asleep in the Deep—Parody (Al Jolson)
12-Inch Victor double-faced (1909-1917)
35079 At the Comic Opera with That's the Doctor, Bill! (Eddie Morton)
35093 Hortense at Sea with the Tale of the Cheese (Murray K. Hill)
35156 Hortense at the Skating Rink with Uncle Josh Keeps House (Cal Stewart)
35601 Automobile Parody with Pineville

RECORDS

RECORDS: Collector's items, opera, vocal, classical, semi-classical, piano, violin, orchestra. A photographic reproduction of a famous singer, complimentary, with each list. — Toby's Record Outlet, 2425 Jackson Ave., Kansas City, Missouri. je3825

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. S6008

REGULAR AUCTIONS classical vocal records. Free lists.—S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. jly3652

RARE OLD RECORDS: Monthly sales list. Classical, vocal, popular, collector's items. Write.—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. jly3272

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 15 First Ave., New Town Square, Pennsylvania. o122741

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs. — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6476

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought. — E. Hirschenman, 100 Duncan, Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

THOUSANDS OF RECORDS: Columbia, Victor, Decca etc., all over 20 years old. Classical & popular, 20 assorted, good condition, $1.25, postpaid. 100 assorted, $8, plus postage.—Curio Shop, 106A Court St., Brooklyn 2, N. Y. n60201

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. au3023

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants." For information write or visit.—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., N. Y. 28, New York. n126581

WILL BUY used phonograph records, collections or dealer's stock, any amount, made before 1940, $15 to $30 per hundred.—Jacob S. Schneider, 128 W. 66th St., New York 23, New York. au68401

Record treasures of the World's great artists. Original G&Ts, Fonotipias, Zonophones, etc., Akte, Bellinioni, Boninsegna, Caruso, Carelli, De Lucia, Escalais, Fabbri, Giraldoni, Kurz, Litvinne, Pinto, Plancon, Figner, and other unique records of the greatest rarity. Send for auction lists, special lists. All correspondence confidential.—Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. je34431

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d124461

ENGLISH AND EUROPEAN records and books on music, etc. Current and cut-out collector's rarities. Lists free. Inquiries welcomed. — Renton, Maldon Road, Tiptree, Colchester, Essex, England. je3004

School Board (Charles Ross Taggart)

Edison two-minute cylinders (1909)
10178 Parody on "Down in Jungle Town"
10211 Parody on "There Never Was a Girl Like You"
10227 Parody on "The Old Oaken Bucket"
Edison four-minute cylinders (1909)
176 The Flag He Loved So Well
212 Our Boarding House
223 B. P. O. E.—Elks' Song
236 Burlesque Opera
Edison Blue Amberol cylinders
2099 Burlesque Opera
2320 B. P. O. E.—Elks' Song
Double-faced 10-inch Columbia records (1913-1915)
A1352 Comic Medley Song with Drink Cure
A1765 Two Dinky Stories—Colored Social Club and The Head Waiter with No News, or What Killed the Dog?
Double-faced seven-inch Emerson records (1916)
7171 No News, or What Killed the Dog? with The Tale of the Goat (Joe Browning and Joe Hughes)
7193 Hortense at the Skating Rink with To Europe on a Cattle Boat

MISCELLANEOUS

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

WANTED: Vaudeville and Opera Programs prior 1925. Record catalogs prior 1915.—Ronald Slaughter, 3919 Gibson St., Los Angeles 34, Calif. jly3603

WANTED: music rolls for a Mills Company violana virtuoso (two violins and piano combination)—and a western coin-operated electric piano. Box Z. L. M. c/o HOBBIES. aux.

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Everything. Catalog 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. je12407

I HAVE JUST bought absolutely new condition old Victor & Columbia records including Columbia demonstration records by Henry Burr and others. These include Billy Murrays, Ada Jones, Cal Stewarts, Munroe Silver, Joe Hayman, Al Jolson, Noah Bayes, Bert Williams Van & Schenk, Avon Comedy Four, and others. Also red seal instrumental and vocals. Send for lists and I will mail.—Al McRea, Sr. Rare Phonograph Records, P. O. Box 182, Westville, New Jersey. je1065c

MEL DEONS, Melodeon organs. Beautiful restored instruments for sale. Will buy instruments needing repairs. Expert repairing service. C-sharp Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich.

ROSEWOOD MUSIC BOX in fine condition. Cabinet, 20x27", 37" high. 169 174" German silver discs. Brevete, SGOG, British patent. D. R. Patente, H. G. Muster, Swiss made, $700. Shipping extra.—Hempstead Trading Post, 1024 Front St., Hempstead N. Y. je3066

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80 direct from importer, 41 Park Row, New York 7, N. Y. jly3272

OLD TIME RECORDS. Operatic, instrumental, popular. All your favorite artists represented. Priced reasonably. Records bought. Write wants or visit.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. jly3844

MRS WESLEY STEPPAN, 322 N. W. 1st Street, Fairbault, Minn.—60 old time dance orchestra tunes (all parts). Whistling Rufus, two step; They go Wild, Simply Wild Over Me; Rustling Silks; Pretzel Pete; Happy Heinie; Moon Winks, 3 step; after the Ball & Annie Rooney, etc.; Buffalo Gals, quadrille; Chicken Reel. Others, similar, sell for 25c per copy. Ebony Boehm system flute, silver keys, morocco covered case, marked H. Bettoney, Boston. Ed. Worlitzer. Price $50. my1825

WANTED TO BUY: A small Mathushek piano.—Everett Sulzberger, Ottawa, Ill. je3002

Information Wanted
About
William F. Myers

Arthur Hand, of Route 2, Robinson, Ill., is an ardent admirer of William F. Myers, who sang "Asleep in the Deep" as one side of Edison Diamond Disc—No. 50300, one of the 300 most popular Edison records. Mr. Hand would like to know whether Myers ever recorded for any other company, and the names of any other records by him. I have never heard of any.

The Edison catalog said that Myers was known as "the American Basso Profundo Extraordinaire," and was born in California in 1888. It added: "He studied principally in Germany, and is perhaps even better known abroad than in his native country. After hearing him sing 'Asleep in the Deep,' you will probably agree that whoever gave him his descriptive title was at least conservative."

By some research of his own, Mr. Hand discovered the following obituary notice in the San Francisco Chronicle of March 5, 1922:

"William F. Myers, the young basso of this city, who died on February 22 after an illness of three days, was one of the most gifted and promising vocalists that California has produced. He was born in Placerville and received his early musical education in this state. With the encouragement of Paul Steindorff, he went to Europe for training, studying with King Clark in Berlin for five years. He had been engaged to sing the roles of Fafnir in Siegfried and Hunding in Die Walkure at Bayreuth, when the outbreak of the war interrupted his career. Returning to New York, he

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 35)

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues. — Elmer Moore, 1035 15th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. s8844

WANTED: Edison phonographs, Opera model, battery type, Concert (large diameter cylinder). Also cylindrical Nick-elodeons, especially Multiphone, cylinder phonograph catalogues, literature. State price, condition.—Ted Bowers, 8039 W. 76th St., Los Angeles 45, Calif. jly3674

Wanted: Miniature pianos and organs. — Mrs. Tufts, 9051 Riverview Road, Washington 20, D. C. au3633

MUST PART with 100 year's old family heirloom. Diminutive rosewood Dann-reuther upright piano. Carved mahogany trim, ivory keys, graceful brass candle holders above music rack. Easily restored to playing condition. Principal piano displayed Wisconsin Centennial Exhibition, Milwaukee. Best offer. — Mrs. Carl Schenk, Potosi, Wis. je1253

PHONOGRAPHS: Only one Victor with horn left, $15, Edison cylinder and discs at all times.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Missouri. je1251

SWISS MUSIC BOX, in family 65 to 70 years, 17" long, 7½" wide, 5½" high, 10 tunes. Absolutely perfect condition. —Mrs. A. P. Kissinger, 420 Wrightwood Ave., Apt. 216, Chicago 14, Ill. Phone: Diversey 8-4800. je1462

REGINA MUSIC BOX and cylinder Edison phonograph. — Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. jex

45 15½" REGINA RECORDS, each $2. —Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. jex

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

MANUEL ROMAIN

By JIM WALSH

Some years ago, when I lived in Marion, Virginia, I met a man, now dead, named James D. Winne. Mr. Winne, known to his friends as "Cousin Jim," had been a drummer with the Ringling Brothers Circus Band and had also played in the orchestras of several large minstrel shows. He said he was proud to count such men as Will Oakland and Al Jolson, with whom he had traveled, as among his friends. But his greatest love was the fabulous minstrel tenor, Manuel Romain, and when he learned that my collection contained many recordings by Romain he came to see me.

With Mr. Winne at ease in my living room, I went into an adjoining room and put Romain's Edison Diamond Disc of "My Sunshine Jane" on the phonograph. As soon as the first notes of the singer's voice were heard, the emotional "Cousin Jim" burst into tears. "Yes, that's him—that's Mannie!" he exclaimed. A little later, he added: "If you hadn't told me it was a machine, I'd have sworn you had Mannie himself in there singing to me—if I didn't know he was dead!"

When "Sunshine Jane" ended, I played another Diamond Disc, "I Wish I Had My Old Gal Back Again." Mr. Winne spoke up. "This record," he said, "was made several years before the one you just played. I can tell the difference in Mannie's voice!" "No," I replied, "Sunshine Jane" was made in 1917, and this one not until 1926." "Then," said Cousin Jim, "he was feeling better the day he made this record than he did when he sang 'Sunshine Jane.' Just listen to how much stronger his voice is."

"Oh," I explained, "that's because I put the phonograph cover down when I played the first record and left it up for the second. As far as I can tell, Romain's voice never changed in the least at any time during his career."

A few minutes later I started one of Romain's Columbia records, but Mr. Winne, a man of strong likes and dislikes, would have none of it. "That," he said, "positively, is not Mannie singing. It's just some other fellow trying to sound like him!" I insisted that the singing actually had been done by Manuel Romain, but Cousin Jim wanted nothing to do with Columbia's recording of his favorite tenor's voice. He paid a tribute to the amazing fidelity of the Edison method by insisting on hearing nothing but Diamond Discs, and we went through "Mannie's" entire Edison repertoire. As he left, he said, "I just can't get over Mannie's sounding so clear and strong in those last records he made. He sounded just like he did when I knew him back around 1906."

Had I known then what I have since learned, I could have surprised and affected Mr. Winne even more by telling him that Romain's 1926 records were made during the last months of the tenor's life, when he was a desperately ill man, suffering from acute anemia and an internal cancer. How a man in such a condition could produce such ringing high notes and record perfectly without benefit of microphone is something almost impossible to understand.

Manuel Romain died on December 22, 1926, in a Quincy, Massachusetts, hospital, but although he has been gone virtually a quarter of a century the memory of his superb balladry is still treasured by millions of old-time minstrel and vaudeville patrons, as well as by thousands of record collectors, many of whom place him near the top, or at the very top, of their list of favorite singers. For years I have been requested to do an article on Romain, and I have at length decided to oblige, even though some of the details of the singer's earlier life are obscure. However, the circumstances of his recording career can be set down without much trouble, and it may be that I shall later discover more information concerning his younger days.

The tenor was born in 1870, but just where seems a debatable question. One informant says he was born in Boston, and it is true that he made his home there or in nearby Quincy for most of his life. Another maintains he was a native of Gibraltar, while Spain also is mentioned as his birthplace. He obviously was of Spanish extraction, and old-timers at the Thomas A. Edison laboratory still talk about the way his black eyes would flash if anything went wrong during a recording session and how fluently he expressed himself in the most colloquial hair-raising Spanish.

In April, 1946, my friend Glen H. ("Curly") Crossett, of Flint, Michigan, who has made a study of the life of Romain, wrote me an interest-letter, from which I quote:

"My own personal opinion of Manuel Romain is that he was, without doubt, the sweetest singer of sentimental songs this world has ever known. . . I have got a lot of help from an old-timer who was an intimate friend of Manuel's fifty years ago, and who sent me a picture of Romain on an old sheet of music, entitled 'Ever the Same,' published in 1898. Romain at that time was with Primrose and Dockstader's Minstrels and looks much the same as in his later years. He died at Quincy on December 22, 1926, at the age of 56 years. Death was caused by hemorrhage and acute anemia from cancer of the bladder."

"Manuel was born in Spain but came to this country at an early age, and worked in a jewelry shop until he discovered that he had a voice. He started singing at the old Palace Theater (a dime show), then joined up with Primrose and Dockstader's Minstrels. He sang for some time under the name of Jerry Severe, later changing to Romaine, and made a big hit as a ballad singer. He was not a versatile singer but as a singer of sentimental songs he had no equal and soon became a favorite with all who heard his grand voice."

In November, 1946, "Curly" Crossett wrote:

"Did I tell you that Romain's family name was Xavier? He was Spanish. Romain was in vaudeville as well as in minstrel shows. He had a production called 'Down in Music Row' that met with great success for about two years in vaudeville."

Notice that Mr. Crossett's letter gives the impression that Romain was a name assumed for stage purposes. Yet here we run into another contradiction, for a reader of Edison's New Phonogram asked in the June, 1910 issue, "Is Manuel Romain a nom de plume?" and received "No," as the answer.

The January 5, 1927, issue of Variety contained a notice of Romain's death. The typewritten copy which Editor Abel Green had made for me is headed "ROMAINE, MANUELO," and Romain is spelled throughout with a final "e":

"Manuel Romaine, 56, singer, phonograph recorder and minstrel, died in a Quincy, Mass., hospital last week after a long illness."

"For many years Romaine was featured with minstrel shows, including Primrose and Dockstader's. Since 1908 he had been in vaudeville. Owing to ill health his only professional work in 1926 was recording for the Edison Phonograph Phonograph."

"Romaine's first professional appearance was as featured soloist at Keith's theatre, Boston, more than 30 years ago,

PAILLARD MUSIC BOX

48x20", 15" high; table, 58x31", 28" high. Four rolls, 10 pieces to each roll. Automatic change 1 to 10. Drums, bells, castanets, nickleled throughout. Very fine working condition. Made by C. Paillard & Company, Switzerland, London, and New York.

Price: $1200.00 — F.O.B. St. Louis

J. GOLD

4239 Olive Street,

St. Louis, Missouri

353

he having been signed for the engagement by the late Sam K. Hodgdon.

"His widow, Mrs. Johanna Hutchinson Romain, and two sons survive.

This information may be supplemented by the following, from the Edison Phonograph Monthly of April, 1916:

"Until 1893 Mr. Romain confined himself to church and concert work, while studying assiduously under Professor H. T. Metz. Then he went into the minstrel field, appearing with Primrose and West, W. S. Cleveland, Primrose and Dockstader's Minstrels — covering in all fifteen seasons. In 1906 he made his vaudeville debut and scored a tremendous 'hit' with some of his original compositions. He is known to Edison owners chiefly as a singer of sentimental ballads, and in that capacity has made himself a great favorite." A 1914 Edison catalog termed him "a boy tenor" who made good. The average infant phenomenon," it added, "Passes gently into oblivion in a short time, but a genuine love of music and a real vocal ability enabled Manuel Romain to escape the usual fate and to forge steadily ahead."

In the hope of doing away with some of the mystery surrounding Romain's birthplace, family name and early career I wrote to all the Boston newspapers, asking for copies of their death notices concerning him, but those that replied said their files contained nothing about the tenor. Two letters to the Quincy Patriot-Ledger brought no response. Hence, being stalemated for the time being, perhaps we may as well advance to consideration of Romain's recording career, even though we must stifle a sigh of regret at not knowing something about those "original compositions" as well as his experiences as an "infant phenomenon."

Unless he had recorded earlier under another name, Romain's first record was a two-minute Edison cylinder, No. 9628, "When the Blue Birds Nest Again, Sweet Nellie Gray," issued in September, 1907, when he was 37. The Edison supplement termed it "a descriptive song of the kind that is always liked. It is sung by a new tenor who has not before made a record for us. We predict that he will become a great favorite on account of his clear, rich voice, which is heard to great advantage in his first selection."

That first song struck the keynote of the work that Romain did throughout his recording career. Perhaps there never was a singer who stayed more consistently in one groove. His strong point, as he well knew, was the old-fashioned sentimental ballad, characterized by nostalgia for happy days of the past and hope for better times to be. Usually the hero hoped to wed the girl of his choice at some sweetly poetic future time, such as "When the Bloom is on the Cotton, Dixie Lee" or "When the Evening Bells are Chiming Songs of Auld Lang Syne." "When" was an important word in the Romain musical vocabulary, as was "you." In the "You" songs the singer dreamed of some lovely lady or assured her that she had attained a state of perfection somewhat higher than that of the angels. Unfortunately, as was the wont of most of the love songs of that earlier day, the hero's hopes usually were blighted because the girl died in the second stanza. Or if he married her, as in "She Was Bred in Old Kentucky," she died before the end of the song and left him mourning his past felicity.

It is interesting to run down the alphabet list of Manuel Romain's two-cylinders in the August, 1909, Edison catalog and observe the titles that he had recorded in a little less than two years. Included were "I Lost My Heart When I Saw Your Eyes," "I'm Starving for One Sight of You," "I Wish I Had a Girl" (a record about which I shall have an interesting story to tell when I write the biography of Walter Van Brunt), "Just One Sweet Girl," "Just Someone," "Let Me Crown You Queen of May With Orange Blossoms," "Meet Me, Sweet Kathleen, in Honeysuckle Time," "No One Knows," "Only an Old-Fashioned Cottage," "Somebody Just like You," "Somebody That I Know and You Know, Too," "What Might Have Been," "When Darling Bess First Whispered Yes," "When It's Moonlight, Mary Darling, 'Neath the Old Grape Arbor Shade," "When Summer Tells Autumn Goodbye," "When the Blue Birds Nest Again," "When the Sheep Are in the Fold, Jennie Dear," "When the Springtime Brings the Roses, Jessie Dear," "When We Listened to the Chiming of the Old Church Bell," "Won't You Even say Hello?" and "You Have Changed the Winter in My Heart to Glad Springtime." (You probably have observed the unusual length of many of the Romain titles, as well as the recurring pattern involving hoped-for marriage to "Sweet Kathleen," "Mary Darling," "Jennie Dear" or "Jessie Dear"!)

The four-minute Amberol cylinders had been on the market for only a few months when this catalog was issued, but Romain was represented with "Ask Mammy" (a song in Negro dialect—something that he seldom attempted), "As the Years Roll On," "Belle Brandon," "If You've Won the Only One in All the World You Want to Win," "Just to Remind You," "Roses Bring Dreams of You" and "To the End of the World With You."

Throughout his recording career, Romain was more intimately associated with Edison than with any other company, and during the nearly twenty years in which he made records he adhered to the same type of material. As Mr. Crossett remarked, although a fine artist, he was not versatile. I don't think he ever made a duet with any other singer and he never took part in male quartet or other ensemble work. It was a rarity when he had the assistance of a male or mixed chorus, although most other popular Edison singers were "backed" by such groups on four-minute cylinders and Diamond Discs more often than not. Perhaps his style was considered too distinctive to blend well with that of anyone else. At any rate, Romain was, like another popular tenor, Richard José, emphatically a recording "lone wolf" — not meaning the term, of course, in an uncomplimentary sense.

This may be a good place, too, for mentioning some of the peculiarities of Romain's singing style and enunciation. He did not "sound like a foreigner," but a careful listener detects oddities of pronunciation. "Day," for instance, sounds more like "die" when he sings it, and "way" almost becomes "Y." Words such as "years" receive a final "uh" sound, much like "yuhs" or, in the case of "tears," "tyuhs." He also had a characteristic habit of "pinching" the long e sound and slightly nasalizing it. Thus "Seem," a word that occurred repeatedly in his songs, receives a treatment from him unlike that from any other singer I can think of, and so does "dreams," and other words of a similar type. Yet the overall effect of these individual mannerisms goes far to give him what the Edison supplement writer once called "incomparable tenderness of expression." I can't recall any other singer of popular music who infused his style with quite so much seemingly sincere ardor.

Something of this apparent sincerity seems to have overflowed into his private life. I remember Mr. Winne's describing "Mannie" as a quietly companionable fellow, who was happiest when "sitting around in the hotel lobbies and swapping yarns after the show."

It's interesting to read of the references to Romain in Edison publications, as the tenor consistently gained popularity with the millions of persons throughout the world who were cylinder record buyers forty-odd years ago. When Edison made a splurge with the first four-minute Amberola, Romain was the first singer to be honored. Number 1 was "William Tell Overture," by the Edison Concert Band. On its heels came Romain's rendition of the Herbert Ingraham ballad, "Roses Bring Dreams of You," described as:

"An exquisite love ballad. The Amberol record makes it possible for Mr. Romain to sing with the utmost freedom of expression, just as he would do on the stage. The singer's host of admirers will agree he has never been heard to such good advantage."

The accompanying thumbnail cut showed the tenor to be a handsome, black-haired, dark-eyed young man, wearing a high white collar and a black bow tie.

Amberol No. 27 was "Belle Brandon":

"There are traces of tears in Romain's voice as he sings of 'Little Beauty, Belle Brandon, who sleeps 'neath the old arbor tree.' He is simply immense in this grand old love ballad. Admirers of the sweet-singing minstrel tenor who fail to secure this record will miss the best song that Mr. Romain has yet given us."

When the two-minute cylinder of "I Wish I Had a Girl" came out in February, 1909, the supplement remarked:

"Mr. Romain, who by the way has become one of the best selling Edison artists and therefore one of the most popular, sings the selection in a very attractive manner."

Here we find another oddity. Romain undoubtedly was one of the most popular Edison artists. Yet when the company issued, on September 15, 1910, a special list of 500

"slow selling" cylinders, which dealers were allowed to dispose of for 20 cents each to clear them out of stock, a far higher percentage of the slow movers were by Romain than by any other singer. Probably the explanation is that most of his records sold well when first issued, but that the public tended to neglect his older numbers as newer, sweetly sentimental effusions were brought out. The poor selling records were all discontinued on September 15, 1911 — about a year before Edison quit making wax cylinders to concentrate on Blue Amberols.

In April, 1909, "J. G. P." of Augusta, Kansas, asked three questions: "Where does Manuel Romain live? Is he a native of this country? Isn't he considered your best tenor?" The reply:

"His city of residence is Boston, Mass. He is a native of the United States. We would not attempt to say which of our tenors are the best. It is a question largely of individual preference. Some artists excel in one kind of work, others in another. To try and compare them is like comparing apples and pears."

This same set of questions, through some mix-up, was reprinted in the November New Phonograph, with the answer to the third given in a slightly different form: "We would not attempt to say which one of our tenors is the best. It is a matter of individual preference, which each must decide for himself."

In the September Phonogram, F. W. Moore, of Aledo, Illinois, wrote:

"In a number of your descriptions . . . of Manuel Romain's records you mention that he was Dockstader's leading tenor. I have witnessed Dockstader's Minstrels a number of times, but did not find Romain's name in the program. Reese Prosser was his leading tenor on those occasions. I have a number of Romain's records and his voice is very similar to that of Prosser's. I think they are one and the same. Will you kindly tell me if I am right?" The answer was: "Manuel Romain had been Dockstader's leading tenor for several years, but since the season of 1908 he has branched out in vaudeville. Mr. Prosser is not the same party." (Prosser, by the way, was one of Jim Winne's great admirations. He died a few years ago, without, I believe, ever making records).

These published comments may now be appropriately supplemented by the reminiscences of one of my faithful friends at the Edison laboratory:

"I knew Manuel Romain, but he was not a frequent visitor to the studio. He was away on the road most of the time and after he completed one of the circuits he would arrange to record — that is, if he had a lay-off period. He lived around Boston . . . and after a trip he was always anxious to get home again. He was a very popular singer with us. Musicians remarked that he didn't sing according to the rules and that he did what they called 'scooping' the notes, but they added that it was this habit that put the proper pathos in some of the 'sob-songs' he recorded. . . We would have done more recording by him except for the conditions above explained."

"Romain was in the studio just before his death. He mentioned that he wasn't feeling too good and thought when he got back home he would take a good rest and maybe get a check-up from the doctor. It was only a short time afterward that Mr. Cronkhite (the late Frank Cronkhite, Edison recording director) received word that Romain had been operated on and had passed away. He usually spoke very little about anything except some experience on the road or some old minstrel man he had met who had known Mr. Cronkhite in the old days. I believe Cronkhite got acquainted with Romain in the minstrel days. They used to reminisce about Dick José, J. Aldrich Libby, etc., when they got together."

"In one of his vaudeville skits Romain used an Edison disc phonograph. The scene was a music store and someone would come on the scene and ask for Mr. Romain. The clerk explained he had just stepped out for a few minutes. The customer said he was disappointed as he would have liked to hear Romain sing. Then the clerk suggested they could play a recording of his voice. A record was put on and Romain's voice was heard. When played about half through the clerk saw Romain coming in the door. Romain then picked up the song and the clerk shut off the phonograph. Then the customer showed surprise when Romain appeared before them, singing. It was really on the order of the 'Tone Tests.' After using this skit for a couple of years he changed it. The machine had been loaned to him by the Edison Company and was specially made for the act. It was a table model, mahogany, and it had a 'belt' drive."

Up to late 1909 Manuel Romain had made records only for Edison, but then he recorded the first of the only three discs ever sung by him for Victor. It was a pretty J. Fred Helf ballad, "When We Listened to the Chiming of the Old Church Bell," coupled with Walter Van Brunt's rendition of "When I Dream in the Gloaming of You," a song with an almost startling resemblance to "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now," which came out about the same time. Several months later, Victor's second Romain record, "When the Sheep Are in the Fold, Jennie Dear," was issued, with "Where the Ivy's Cling Dearie 'Round an Old Oak Tree, by the Haydn Quartet, on the other side."

The third Victor record by Romain is so scarce and so little known that most collectors believe he made only the two already mentioned. However, he also sang a twelve-inch version, No. 35083, of a song with an Irish flavor, "I Long to See the Girl I Left Behind." (Incidentally, one of the tenor's enunciation peculiarities is that he makes the word "girl" sound almost like "gal" or "gel"). It was coupled with a pathetic recitation, "The Blind Boy in the Gallery," by the noted actor, Digby Bell, who died in 1917, and—perhaps because most listeners didn't care for the Bell side—was a poor seller and stayed in the catalog only about a year. The recording of all the Victor Romain records is very good with the twelve-inch perhaps the best. Their chief defect is the somewhat mechanical quality that seems inseparable from all lateral cut acoustic recording, and the fact that, perhaps because of a deficiency in overtones, Romain sounds like an elderly man instead of one just approaching forty. The voice lacks the youthful freshness and vibrance captured by vertical recording, but the quality nevertheless is good — better than in any of Romain's later Columbia records that I have heard. Romain's may have been one of the voices that simply could not be recorded with complete adequacy on needle-out discs. Elizabeth Spencer's was one of this type, and Christine Miller has never concealed her opinion that her lateral-cut records are bad. The prize example, however, is the late George Wilton Ballard, an accomplished singer with a notably beautiful tenor voice on Edison records but who sounded so terrible on other kinds that it's a wonder he ever agreed to their being issued.

After singing the three songs for Victor, Romain signed a contract making him an exclusive Edison artist. In January, 1910, he revived James L. Thornton's charming ballad, "When You Were Sweet Sixteen," which was a big hit when it was introduced in 1898 and has been almost a greater one during the past half dozen years. The catalog editor described it as "a number that requires for its proper rendition a voice of unusual sweetness, range and power, such a nature has favored Mr. Romain with." That same month, Romain was the contributor of a two-minute cylinder, "Sweetheart's a Pretty Name When It is Y-O-U," and the annotator commented:

"Sentimental ballads are the particular forte of this famous singer, and the popularity of his records is due to the fact that they are distinguished for volume, clearness of enunciation and sweetness of tone. This selection is meritorious in composition and tuneably pleasing, while Romain gives it the full benefit of his remarkable voice and artistic style." "Mannie" also sang "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now" in the same list.

If the most typical Romain record had to be chosen it probably would be "When the Bloom is On the Cotton, Dixie Lee," another of the ballads that J. Fred Helf turned out profusely in those days. Issued in February, 1910, the Amberol cylinder received this rather touching critique:

"Sentimental, with a note of sadness, is this pretty ballad, which tells of farewells spoken and lovers' vows plighted under the romantic spell of a Southern twilight, and of their failure or consummation because of the death of 'Dixie Lee.' The air harmonizes pleasingly with the theme, and Mr. Romain sings the ballad with incomparable tenderness of expression." The tenor's two-minute cylinder for February was "When I Dream in the Gloaming of You." In that issue of the Phonogram someone in Meridian, Mississippi, asked if Romain were married and was told "yes."

In May, 1910, Romain sang two songs, for which Irving Berlin has probably forgotten that he wrote the words while Ted Snyder did the music. One was Amberol No. 414, "I Wish That You Was My Gal, Molly," in which "a rough but manly young fellow voices his regret that the girl whom he loves has given her heart to another. The style of composition and melody are a little different from those of the usual sentimental ballad — sufficiently so to give the song a certain distinctiveness which is pleasing." Romain's two-minute record was "Christmas Time Seems Years and Years Away." Its theme was "the impatience of an ardent lover because the day which will mark the consummation of his happiness 'seems years and years away.'"

A month later, Romain sang "a live-

